10,129. I understand that the bulk of them are near this place?—They are just within a mile of you.

10,130. I am speaking solely of the district within a mile of this. Would a reduced number of crofters thrive better where they are than the present number?—Certainly, they would like themselves to add to the holdings where they are, but they find it very difficult under the present conditions.

10,131. Under the present conditions you would have no available land to give them?—None whatever.

10,132. And the only way of making these crofters more prosperous would be to remove some of them?—We do not wish to remove them; they are fairly prosperous at present. I don't say they are not prosperous; they are doing very well.

10,133. You consider they are doing well?—They make no complaint, and they pay their rents.

10,134. The Chairman.—You have no complaint to make against them?—None whatever.

10,135. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do I understand that the whole extension of the forest since 1883 was due to the impossibility of letting the land as sheep farms?—That is mainly so.

10,136. Mr Sutherland.—You began, Mr Grant, by referring to evidence regarding The Chisholm estate that was led before Lord Napier's Commission?—I am not sure but I took it from the Report of Lord Napier's Commission.

10,137. You are aware, of course, that Lord Napier's Commission reported, recommending that the afforestment of land should cease?—There was some remark of that kind.

10,138. A definite recommendation?—I am not aware of the terms of it.

10,139. You are aware that there was a recommendation to that effect?—I have heard it stated.

10,140. And you have admitted in your evidence that since that date 28,000 acres of The Chisholm estate have been made into deer forest?—Yes.

10,141. Would we be justified, then, in supposing that the recommendations of Lord Napier's Commission were departed from in this case?—I am not prepared to admit that it was a recommendation to us.

10,142. It was a general recommendation and condemnation?—We did nothing in defiance of any recommendation to us.

10,143. But to the legislature?—I am not aware to the legislature.

Beauly.

John Brown Grant.

10,144. You stated also, I think, that certain lands on The Chisholm estate were not in possession of crofters within the present century?—Yes, that is so.

10,145. Is the whole of The Chisholm property under the Crofters Act?—Yes.

10,146. Are you aware that the placing of it under the Crofters Act depends upon its being in possession of crofters within eighty years?—Well, in the county, of course.

10,147. Every parish is judged by itself?—But we do not occupy the whole of one parish.

10,148. But you occupy, perhaps, several parishes—more than one?—Yes, we do. There are a great many tenants more than ourselves.

10,149. That would otherwise have made them crofting parishes?—Certainly.

10,150. So you think it is not the fact that they were crofters?—Not in our ground.

10,151. So that you think that within this century there were no crofters on The Chisholm estate, or the part you refer to?—Yes, the part I refer to; I refer to Knockfin particularly.

10,152. And what were the places you exclude from it?—Knockfin alone. I don't know what you would call crofters; of course in the other parts they were paying over £30 of rent.

10,153. There would be no general ground upon which the Commission would decide whether they were crofters or not. Then you gave us some statistics as to the number of tenants on the estate from 1800 down to the present time, which showed that in 1800 there were on The Chisholm estate eleven tenants?—That is on the present deer forest ground.

10,154. And that The Chisholm estate at present has eighty-nine tenants?—Eighty-nine or ninety-nine, was it not?

10,155. So that there has been an increase from eleven to eighty-nine tenants?—No, that is not a fair comparison; I say on the whole estate now. The former figure refers to the deer forest part, and the second to the whole estate. But you have the grounds for a comparison, because I gave you figures applicable to the whole estate at the earlier period as well.

10,156. You refer at one time to the area under deer, and the next time to the area altogether?—Quite so.

10,157. That makes it impossible to follow out the comparison?—No, you can compare the areas.

10,158. I must pass then altogether away from that, which is an important point?—It will be cleared up when you come to read my statement.

10,159. I would like to clear it up now; this is the important place to clear it up?—Very well. I said that the rent roll of 1687 showed that the whole estate of Chisholm was let in fifteen separate holdings.

10,160. Well, that will do for my present purpose. That refers to the whole of The Chisholm estate?—Yes.

10,161. And at the present moment the number is eighty-nine?—Yes.

10,162. Which shows that the tenancy has increased from fifteen in 1687 to eighty-nine in 1893?—The tenancy, from my information in the rent-rolls, has increased from fifteen separate tenancies in 1687 to ninety-nine in the present year, with eighty-six different tenants.

10,163. What I wish to know is whether these fifteen tenancies represent all the families on The Chisholm estate in 1687?—I can give you the document.

10,164. What is your opinion?—My opinion is that it was not so at all. My opinion is that it was let to tacksmen who had sub-tenants.

10,165. So that it does not give us any indication of the number of families that lived there at that time?—No, it simply shows the system of letting the estate.

10,166. Then you quoted Mr Macculloch. Do you know anything about Mr Macculloch?—He is dead a long time.

10,167. Was he a farmer?—I don't know.

10,168. Was he a Highlander?—It looks like it, having a 'Mac' to his name.

Beauly.

John Brown Grant.

10,169. Is that all you know about his being a Highlander?—I read his book.

10,170. And you quoted it very largely. But you do not know whether he had any practical knowledge of agriculture or not?—I cannot speak as to the extent of his knowledge.

10,171. He told you that sheep could be 'cultivated,' did he not?—I forget, really.

10,172. That was the quotation from him that you gave us?—That sheep would do better than the system in existence at the present day.

10,173. I don't lay great stress on it, but as you are quoting him I wish to point that out to you. You quoted upon his authority that sheep farmers were introduced with the necessary skill and capital; he recommended that that should be done?—Yes.

10,174. They were introduced?—Yes.

10,175. We need not go into the circumstances under which they were introduced, but what is the result?—There are a good many of them who have made fortunes.

10,176. And are they making fortunes now, do you think?—No.

10,177. That is a test of Mr Macculloch's skill as a political economist?—He was perfectly right, for a time.

10,178. But he is wrong now?—Yes.

10,179. So that is a good test?—He may be right again.

10,180. Possibly; but he is being superseded now as an effete authority?—There is nothing effete about it. He was an authority in every way.

10,181. Will you take the Report of Lord Napier's Commission as a test?—As to the value of sheep? Well, I am not familiar with the whole of its contents.

10,182. It made certain recommendations, you know, upon which followed the Crofters Act, which was an attempt to go back upon the policy advocated by Mr Macculloch?—That may be so; I don't know.

10,183. Then with regard to the stocks of sheep farms. I think we had it yesterday in evidence that Mr Winans was a sheep farmer to begin with?—Sometimes he was.

10,184. And the admission was that he failed, and therefore changed it into a deer forest?—He cleared the sheep away.

10,185. He ceased to be a sheep farmer, and became a sportsman?—Yes.

10,186. That is another evidence in your opinion, is it not, that the sheep farming is a failure?—I have already said that at the present moment sheep farming does not pay.

10,187. Then with regard to this particular case of Mr Winans, you gave in evidence which a little surprized me, but I have no doubt you are right that the sheep grazing rent, plus the sporting rent, is after all the rent that you get for the deer forest?—Yes, but at the present we are unable to let sheep grazing at any rent, on a large scale.

10,188. But in the places where sheep farms are now, you have got a grazing rent plus a sporting rent?—In the places which are let as sheep farms, yes.

10,189. And they paid rent to the same amount as you get from the subjects as a deer forest?—Yes.

10,190. So that to the landlord there is no increase in the annual value?—But it follows that when these places go out of lease we cannot let them as sheep farms. I refer to the rent which has been paid.

10,191. Are you aware then if that applies to other places as well as to The Chisholm estate?—I have no doubt that localities similarly situated may find the same difficulties.

10,192. You referred also to the standard of comfort?—Yes.

10,193. I understand you stated that for the purpose of making a comparison between what was the case then and what would be likely to happen now?—Quite so.

10,194. But of course you are perfectly willing now to make allowance for changed conditions; if the conditions were different, the result might be rationally expected to be somewhat different?—I simply wished to show that there has been no great injury caused to the individual as far as our part of the country is concerned.

10,195. But do you attribute the increase in the prosperity and the raising of the standard of comfort in any way to the fact that deer foresting was introduced?—I do, to some extent: it has raised wages.

10,196. In Beauly, for instance?—In Beauly it has done a great deal of good. You will find the men in Beauly quite ready to say that they derive a great part of their income from deer forests, and would be very sorry to see them put down.

10,197. And do you think that with a sub-division of land more than we have at present that would be increased to a greater extent?—No, they will tell you the very reverse.

10,198. Supposing, instead of Mr Winans and his dependents, there were thirty or forty crofters' families such as you see down here, don't you think that the trade of Beauly would be very largely increased?—It would be the exact opposite.

10,199. It depends more upon the wealth of one individual customer to the shopkeepers than upon the productive wealth of thirty or forty?—No, Mr Winans distributes his wealth to his dependents, and they in turn distribute it to the shopkeepers.

10,200. And how many of his dependents are there?—I should say that on that particular ground we have been referring to on Mrs Chisholm's estate, Mr Winans will employ regularly, at the wages I have mentioned, between thirty and forty men from year's end to year's end, some of them with families, and all occupying good houses. They are very respectable men indeed.

10,201. And you think that the number that are there now should not be increased?—I have told you what I thought could be planted there as crofters occupying it.

10,202. And do you think that the inhabitants of the surrounding towns would not benefit proportionally?—There need be no great increase in the population; these men would have to be displaced; they would either have to go away or you may turn them into crofters, but they would be no better off.

10,203. Therefore it is better for a man to be a labourer to another than a farmer for himself?—It depends on how much he gets.

10,204. But we are supposing he is put into a position with a reasonably fair prospect of success?—Taking the place as it stands, I say he is better off just now getting 18s. to 35s. a week and getting the whole croft, than being dependent on the croft solely.

10,205. Are you of opinion that any of your small holders would have a bank account?—No doubt.

10,206. Do you know any labourers that have bank accounts?—Yes.

10,207. On Mr Winans' estate?—Yes; I am not very sure; I could not tell you.

10,208. You also spoke of the destitution in 1817?—I found that from the report on the estate.

10,209. Do you know what the general state of Scotland was in 1817?—No.

10,210. Are you aware that there was a famine all over Scotland at that time?—Very probably.

10,211. So that the case of this glen would not be very different from other parts of Scotland at that time?—If you say so, I am quite willing to believe it.

10,212. I may mention that I was quite recently reading of it in Fraser-Tytler's History of Scotland, which speaks of the distress being general and reaching as far as Ayr. The report which you have referred to is one which was written by a factor?—I think so. He appears to have been acting as agent for the trustee.

10,213. Granting him to have had the best motives in the world, do you think he was likely to be quite unprejudiced?—He was quite unprejudiced.

10,214. What succeeded his report? Was that about the time people were being cleared off generally?—I am not sure.

10,215. Is that not the date at which sheep farming tenants were introduced into Scotland?—No, sheep farming was introduced before.

10,216. It may have been different here, but I am sure that in other parts of the Highlands my recollection is that it was about that time that sheep farming was introduced. You also quoted Mr Skene. He is undoubtedly a high authority, and I think, you say, he has stated with regard to this locality that it is fit only for hunting and for the nurture of a warlike people?—Yes.

10,217. They served an apprenticeship there; and do you think they are very warlike now, those who are there?—Oh, I don't know; they will defend their own rights, I daresay, if you come to attack them.

10,218. But I suppose you would not like them to cultivate any sort of warlike spirit now. We live in different times. Then with regard to the crops there, you heard the statements that were made regarding meal mills used?—Yes.

10,219. Have you any reason to doubt the truth of that statement?—Not the least.

10,220. Would they erect a mill if there was nothing for it to do, do you think?—This mill has been in existence from time immemorial, and it is the best in the whole countryside; and it is still there.

10,221. And a reasonable inference is that there was some corn to grind?—There was, of course; it was kept employed.

10,222. But your remarks must apply to a much wider area than Glencannich?—It applies to the tract lying east and west of it.

10,223. And notwithstanding that we had evidence of the existence of seven mills in Strathglass?—My remarks apply to the present deer forest tract; you do not find a mill in that at all.

10,224. Were there mills, do you know, in the olden time?—No, there is no evidence to show that. There was no mill in Glencannich nor in Glen Affaric.

10,225. You also referred to the sweeping away of bridges. I have no doubt bridges were swept away there, but you are aware that in 1892 Bonar-Bridge was swept away?—That is the one year I referred to.

10,226. And several other bridges that had stood for nearly a century were swept away?—Yes.

10,227. So that the sweeping away of the bridges proves no more there than in other places?—Well, I had just finished rebuilding the bridges in Glencannich when they were swept away again.

10,228. The greater part of them are wooden bridges?—Yes; there are some stone bridges, but the most of them are wooden.

10,229. You would not say that floods there are more frequent than in other parts of the Highlands?—Yes, I should say floods in Glencannich are more frequent than any place that I am acquainted with in the Highlands.

10,230. You also said that the people round about here were interested in the maintaining of deer forests, and you advanced a proof of that which is a very concrete one, viz., that they had returned yourself to the County Council. But might they not have returned you on your personal merits, quite apart from your connection with deer forests?—It may be so.

10,231. So that it is possible it might not be an argument at all of theirs in favour of deer forests?—I never used it as any argument.

10,232. Then the question of the agricultural rent has been gone into already. You referred to the £1740 paid in rates?—Yes.

10,233. But you are aware upon what ground rates are paid; rates are not paid by individuals?—We pay that amount, I know.

10,234. It is not heads that are assessed, but subjects?—We pay that upon our rental.

10,235. I don't doubt it. But why do you claim as a virtue that which you do under compulsion of a statute?—There is this to be said about it. If you destroy that rental, you are bound to increase the rating on the other parts of the district.

10,236. The rating is on value, not on rental?—You must increase the rate per £ on the other parts of the district if you take away our rental.

10,237. But the intention is to increase the value by putting the land to the best possible use?—Well, I have expressed the opinion that you could not possibly increase the value by destroying the deer forest.

10,238. But the intention is not to take away value, but to increase it, and in that case part of your objection would be overcome?—Oh, certainly, if that is possible.

10,239. Would you not admit that the occupation of the land by small crofters would produce higher rents than one sporting tenant pays?—No, I would not admit that.

10,240. Do you know the nature of the ground upon which these people were planted when they were taken away out of these glens?—I know that James Sutherland Chisholm, when he came from America, found some of them away,—some may have been his own relations,—and they had been away for some time. They made an appeal to him that they should come back to their native glens; he was one of the most kind-hearted men alive, and he just planted them there. It was partly from personal grounds, and partly from his sympathetic nature that he made the experiment.

10,241. Taking the case of the Highlands all over, you are aware, no doubt, from your own observation, that they were planted down upon land which was of very little value, and that their industry made it what it is worth to-day?—This particular land was the very best in Glencannich, land that a witness yesterday described as a sort of garden. I don't say it was good land at all, but it was the best available.

10,242. The point was as to the £1740 paid in rates; and what I wish to ask you is, that whoever possessed the land would have to pay that?—It would be spread over the whole parish, of course. Supposing anybody possessed land at no rent at all, of course the other ratepayers in the parish would have to make up the difference.

10,243. You understand that rates are levied upon value?—But if you destroy value of one part, you put the rates more heavily on the remainder.

10,244. Just so, if you destroy the value; but if you increase the value?—Of course, if you increase the value, it is just the reverse; but that is a supposition.

10,245. It is a supposition on your part that we will decrease it?—I am not supposing anything at all.

10,246. Then you said Mrs Chisholm spent over £1900 last year in improving the agricultural value of the estate?—Yes.

10,247. That is simply adding to her capital account?—But she gets no return for that expenditure.

10,248. But it is her own property?—Yes, putting it into buildings.

10,249. So she is simply investing so much money for the benefit of her own capital account?—Yes, but for the benefit of the existing tenants.

10,250. Granted, but a banker does the same for the benefit of his customers?—A banker expects some interest; we get none.

10,251. You also referred to the shooting industry, and the deer forest industry, and the sporting industry; in what sense do you claim it to be an industry?—I claim any occupation to be an industry in which you find a large number of men engaged in employment which affords them regular wages.

10,252. Is it a very industrious occupation to go out and shoot?—Well, the sportsman's job is to do the work.

10,253. It is the part of the men who attend that I am referring to?—It is the men's part that I refer to as an industry.

10,254. Then they are the industrious people?—Yes.

10,255. You said that the native Highlander took kindly to that state of things?—Yes.

10,256. And you said that when the pastoral industry failed, and when the agricultural industry failed, they took to hunting. You did not mean that the people took to hunting themselves?—I said they found a very profitable employment; they earned their wages at it. I did not mean for a moment that they took to hunting for themselves.

Beauly. John Brown Grant.

10,257. I thought you tried to connect the past with the present. So you think they went out in the past to hunt as gillies?—I have no knowledge of the past beyond reading from books.

10,258. I thought you said they were addicted to hunting?—So they were; the gillie takes a very intense delight in his share of the sport.

10,259. I thought you referred to their qualities in the olden time?—It is the fact that they have that instinct and partly that training about them that makes them valuable.

10,260. But the instinct is got by indulging in sport in a very different way; the conditions are very much changed?—In some respects; but we find exactly the same kind of thing in the present day—great hunting in Mar and great hunting in Glen-Strathfarrar.

10,261. That is previous to the advent of the modern sportsman and the Game Laws?—We don't know very much about Game Laws in this part of the country.

10,262. You also expressed the fear that sub-division might take place?—I am not aware: did I express a fear?

10,263. I have no doubt that was a slip of memory on your part; you are aware that sub-division is strictly prohibited, and that the prohibition is quite effectually carried out at present?—I think it was a quotation that I introduced.

10,264. You are aware that it is prevented?—There was always an attempt made to prevent it, but yet it goes on.

10,265. You do not mean to say that the Crofters Commission allows it to take place now? I could bring instances before you in which very drastic efforts were made to prevent it?—Mr Mackintosh, the factor on Lord Macdonald's property, tells me that in spite of everything he can do it takes place.

10,266. We have now a legal machinery to prevent it?—The machinery always existed, but the difficulty was to put it into operation.

10,267. But you do not contemplate that the present tribunal is to carry it out?—You had quite efficient machinery before; you have just as much difficulty in putting the present machinery into operation as you had in the olden time. You would have as much odium attaching to an eviction now as before.

10,268. But don't you see it is a very different thing when a man has a direct pecuniary interest in not carrying it out and as compared with an impartial tribunal?—I think we saw the operation before in the same way.

10,269. But do you know of your own knowledge that it has been violated since 1886?—Oh, we do not permit it on this estate.

10,270. But since 1886 do you know of it?—No, I do not, of my own knowledge.

10,271. I was very much struck by the attitude you seemed to take up. You generally deny that agriculture was carried on under favourable conditions or with favourable results while the people were in these glens?—Yes.

10,272. And yet you made the amount of land they cultivated the criterion of the suitability of the land for present occupation: do you see anything contradictory in that?—I do not admit any suitability for present occupation: I say it is not suitable for present occupation.

10,273. But you admit that it was under cultivation before?—It shows signs of cultivation.

10,274. And you have the benefit of your own sight, have you not?—Certainly.

10,275. And you see the marks there still?—To the extent I have mentioned.

10,276. And is the land made more suitable in your opinion in any way by the existence of these places?—I have said, of course, that these green spots add to the value for sheep, and also for deer.

10,277. And if more were made so, it would still more increase the value?—I have no doubt every spot available would do so.

10,278. Did you ever know a sheep farmer to reclaim land?—Yes.

10,279. Where?—In Sutherlandshire; at Bighouse, for instance, the sheep farmer reclaimed a great deal of land.

10,280. With the landlord's money?—Very likely.

10,281. But did you know crofters reclaim land without any landlord's money?—Oh yes.

10,282. They are the parties really who do it,—I am talking generally?—They did at one time; you find nothing now in the way of reclaiming land.

10,283. But if you planted them there again they would likely go over the same process?—They would not now, because it does not pay anybody now to reclaim land.

10,284. But I see it going on at the present day?—You do not see very much of it going on.

10,285. We saw it as the result of the Crofters Act?—Look round this part of the country where they did once reclaim land, and you will find very little now.

10,286. But if the inducements were given to encourage them to reclaim land, don't you think it is in human nature to do as much as possible in that way?—There is only a very limited amount of land available for reclamation under any possible conditions. This is a deep, narrow valley, with steep mountains on each side, and they cannot go up the hillside.

10,287. But you do not doubt the bona fides of the people who gave evidence here yesterday?—Not in the slightest.

10,288. Then I think you said in reply to a question by Mr Shaw-Stewart that they could not cultivate the land to profit. That is one of the conditions?—They could not.

10,289. And pay any rent?—No.

10,290. But I take it that that reference was made to cultivation, and cultivation only, because you have used the word 'cultivate.' Is that so? But you see we have as an alternative that they could 'otherwise advantage-'ously occupy' such land.—I am not aware of the terms.

10,291. But could these lands be 'otherwise advantage-'ously occupied' by crofters or other small tenants?—No, I do not think so.

10,292. As grazing farms?—I do not think so. Judging from the past, we find that that class of tenant has invariably not succeeded.

10,293. Taking the same area, if a large farmer can make it pay why should not an aggregation of small farms make it pay?—I could give a great many reasons for it. The management of a sheep stock has never been successfully conducted by a small farmer.

10,294. Take the case of a club farm?—We don't know them in this part of the country; we have none in this part of the country. A small farmer has, of course, all the work to do upon a small farm that a big farmer does upon a big farm; it is like one man turning out goods at the rate of 100,000 a day and another man trying to do it at the rate of 10 a day. There is far more labour in proportion to the amount of capital and stock.

10,295. But was not the system of consolidation that you are advocating at the present time carried on for nearly a century?—I say that if there is any profit to be made at all, the large farmer will make it where the small farmer would fail.

10,296. The logical inference from that is that you maintain that what is called the small farmer must fail where the large farmer has failed?—Upon that class of ground.

10,297. And the only alternative is a deer forest?—Quite so.

10,298. You cannot assist us by showing us land in your management that would be fit for our purpose?—I shall be very pleased to show you all the land, but you must judge for yourself as to its suitability.

10,299. Mr Forsyth.—You mentioned that there were some places in Glencannich that you thought might possibly be occupied by small tenants in future. Can you give me any idea as to the expense of house-building, as the locality appears to be rather out of the way and difficult of access, and it is a very important point?—We are building houses for small tenants up here; the Commissioners could go and see them.

10,300. Where?—On the crofting place up here, Rhindown. They cost us from £160 to £170 in cash, and we supply some home-grown timber besides, which we don't charge for. The accommodation is the very least that a man can put up with nowadays.

10,301. What is that?—On the ground floor, two rooms with a small closet between, and upstairs, two attics.

10,302. Attics with storm windows?—Yes.

10,303. Could not a cheaper house be got up?—I tried and got plans, and found that was the cheapest house we could get which would satisfy them under modern conditions.

10,304. But if the tenants assisted, a house could be put up for less?—I would be very pleased if anybody would give me the plan of a house costing less that would satisfy them.

10,305. Then I think I gathered from your previous evidence that you consider that on the whole the land about Glencannich would be most profitably occupied at any rate by grazing rather than by agriculture?—That is so.

10,306. You say that in that glen cropping would have to be a very secondary consideration as a source of profit?—Quite secondary.

10,307-8. It has also been elicited from you in evidence that sheep farming can scarcely be called a paying industry just now?—No, it is not, just now.

10,309. Then don't you see some difficulty in the way of planting tenants here where the success of the arable venture would be very doubtful, and where the sheep farming does not come in as a paying part of the concern?—I made no suggestion about planting tenants; you might put them down, but I say they would not succeed.

10,310. I want to get your opinion as to that. You are of opinion that they would not be able to live and thrive there?—No, they would not.

10,311. Not even with a carefully managed club stock?—Of course I have no knowledge of the club farm system; I do not understand how it is done.

10,312. The land is hardly suitable for wintering sheep?—Not young sheep.

10,313. The hoggs and the weaker year-olds would have to be sent away?—Yes.

10,314. And, on the whole, you consider the profits would be very small or nil?—Yes.

10,315. Mr Gordon.—A good deal of stress seems to be put upon this question of population, and I would like to make it a little clearer. In addition to the houses presently occupied by tenants on your rent-roll, there are houses occupied by others, possibly a few cottars, are there?—Yes.

10,316. Are they all on your rent-roll?—No.

10,317. There would be also houses occupied by these foresters?—Yes.

10,318. And the occupants of these would, of course, add considerably to the population?—Yes.

10,319. That is in addition to those upon your rent-roll?—Yes.

10,320. Therefore the basis of calculation that I proposed would not be exactly correct unless you added these?—Quite so, it would be against the numbers.

10,321. It would show a much greater decrease of population than is actually the case?—Yes.

10,322. Now with regard to the fall of rental: you quoted, I think, from Dr Macculloch?—Yes, from Macculloch.

10,323. What time did he write?—Between 1811 and 1821.

10,324. And after his book was published there was a very considerable rise in rents?—Oh yes.

10,325. And the profits of farming were general all over Scotland?—Yes.

Beauly. John Brown Grant.

10,326. More especially, I think, between the years 1852 and 1876 or 1878?—Yes, I fancy that was the prosperous time.

10,327. You quoted 1872 as the maximum year; now 1873 was the maximum year in which both beef and cattle were highest, and wool was highest. After that year there was a gradual decline, culminating up to the present time almost, in the value of stock?—Yes.

10,328. You state, and I have no doubt correctly, that the comfort of the small tenants down here in Rhindown is fully over the average of their class throughout the country?—Yes.

10,329. Would it be fair to compare the climate of Rhindown with that of Glencannich?—I am not comparing it now.

10,330. The climate would be the main obstacle?—It would be one of the obstacles.

10,331. In the way of successful cultivation?—Yes.

10,332. Now we heard from the first witness yesterday, that in proposing a policy of reinstatement of a number of these tenants in the glens, he suggested in the first place that the expense of buildings should be borne by proprietors?—Yes, I heard that.

10,333. And afterwards he said that the lion's share of the expense of stocking the ground (that is the phrase he used) should be borne by the proprietor. Now is it customary in this country for a proprietor to advance money to stock holdings?—No, I am not aware of it.

10,334. There is not such a thing known in this part of the country?—No.

10,335. Then there is another thing I would like you to make more plain, in regard to the rates. What would be the effect in the parish of Kilmorack in the event of the deer forests being wholly done away with? How would the rental be derived, supposing the deer forests were done away with and the whole ground was under sheep?—The rental of Kilmorack is about £17,000 or £18,000 a year.

10,336. But take the ground under deer?—Well, there must be at least £10,000 of that.

10,337. Swept off?—Yes.

10,338. Now I assume that the public and parochial burdens are only levied so far as necessary, and have nothing to do with the rental?—Yes.

10,339. Can you tell us roughly what the amount of the present public and parochial burdens are in the parish, how much per £?—The poor rate, I think, is 1s. per £, or 1s. 6d.

10,340. Do they amount to 3s. altogether, or 2s., or what are the public and parochial burdens for poor, education, road and other rates?—As a general calculation we make it 4s. in the £.

10,341. Well, is it your opinion that if the deer forests were done away with, and the ground put under sheep again, or bigger or lesser holdings, these public burdens would be increased or lowered?—Increased, certainly.

10,342. That is to say, the number of poor would be increased?—No, they would be increased if the population was crowded, of course. But with the present population the rate would simply be increased.

10,343. But I want to know, first of all, what your opinion is. Would a population of crofters and grazing farmers be more or less likely to increase the rates?—It would be likely to increase the rates.

10,344. Therefore you would have to draw an increased amount of rates from a greatly decreased rental?—That is so, exactly.

10,345. That is the effect it would have, in your opinion.

10,346. Mr Sutherland wishes you to state again, assuming that this is done, what would be the amount of the decrease?—I am going without the Valuation Roll. I think roughly that out of the rental of £18,000 in the parish of Kilmorack £10,000 is derived from deer forests.

10,347. How much would be the decrease?—I could scarcely tell; you might get no rent at all if you attempted to let that as large sheep farms.

10,348. I am not prepared to accept that from you.—We tried to let the farms, and could not get an offer. Beauly. John Brown Grant.

10,349. Mr Sutherland.—Give us an idea with regard to The Chisholm estate.—We could not hope to get more than half, at the very extreme limit, by letting to large sheep farmers.

10,350. What would that amount to?—£5000.

10,351. Mr Gordon.—Therefore the probability would be that you would have an increased demand in the form of public and parochial burdens, while your rental would be decreased from £18,000 to £13,000?—Yes.

10,352. Is that so?—Yes, in the parish.

10,353. I am talking of the parish of Kilmorack alone?—Yes.

10,354. How can you explain about the unprofitable nature of sheep raising now—sheep farms?—Well, the price of wool has a great deal to do with it; and we have had a series of very bad seasons,—cold, wet seasons, when the sheep do not thrive. The price of wintering also has increased; and we have to deal with an enormons competition from New Zealand and Australia in carcases. One ship may bring over as many as 80,000 carcases.

10,355. Do you believe that the large importation of foreign meat into this country has a great deal to do with the lessened value of home produce?—Yes.

10,356. The same as in the case of grain?—Yes.

10,357. That accounts for the fall in the rental too?—It does.

10,358. And such a state of matters could not have been anticipated at the time this author wrote his book?—No, certainly not.

10,359. Now you have said that you don't think any part of this ground could be cultivated to profit in small holdings?—Yes.

10,360. If you talk of specific parts of the property that may be correct, but I think in some parts of this country, talking of the Highlands generally, I would put it to you again whether you would not modify your opinion somewhat?—I am only referring to the 80,000 acres I speak to; I am not presuming to say anything about the other parts of the country.

10,361. But you are an intelligent man, and we would like to get some information from you?—Thank you very much.

10,362. What is the smallest size of holding that you think a man can profitably cultivate, either as a crofter or as a grazier?—You see the size of holding has not very much to do with it. Five acres down at Beauly here would keep a man very comfortably.

10,363. I did not make my question complete. The smallest size of holding that a man can cultivate to profit, and live on from the produce of his holding?—I think it depends very much on where the holding is situated. If you get 5 acres of carse land down here, and give it to a man at a reasonable rent, he could occupy his whole time in cultivating it, and live upon it comfortably.

10,364. On 5 acres?—On 5 acres.

10,365. Your answer would lead to the next question—Do you think it would be more advisable to make the crofters' holdings down in the laigh rather than in the high lands?—Certainly, it would be better for the crofter.

10,366. Mr Maccallum.—We have had evidence as to the way in which deer forests came to be formed,—first, that the small tenants were removed for the formation of large sheep farms, and then that large sheep farms were converted into deer forests; that is the process?—I think——

10,367. We have had a good deal of evidence that that is so.—I heard that evidence given.

10,368. Now do you seriously say that the native Highlanders take kindly to that process?—They do; I say so. They take kindly to the hunting business I said.

10,369. And to the changes that have occurred?—I did not say anything about that.

10,370. The removal first of the small tenants, then the conversion of the sheep farms into deer forests, do you say that the crofter, the native Highlander, takes kindly to that?—Of course that is a matter affecting each individual looking at it from his own point of view. If he was favoured by the change he would approve of it.

Beauly. John Brown Grant.

10,371. You spoke of the native Highlanders as a body?—I confined myself to hunting.

10,372. That the native Highlanders took kindly to he changes?—I said the native Highlanders took kindly to hunting.

10,373. 'To the changed condition of things' is the note that I have?—I said he was only too pleased to have a congenial occupation. I said after the pastoral industry fails, after the agricultural industry fails, he goes kindly back to hunting.

10,374. Mr Sutherland.—I have taken this note 'The majority of the people are interested in maintain-'ing the present system.'—Yes.

10,375. Mr Maccallum.—Well, as a whole, then, you do not now say that the Highlanders take kindly to this change?—I say in the districts in which this pursuit is carried on they take quite kindly to it.

10,376. These changes, you see, first of all necessitate the removal of the native Highlander, for you also made this statement, that no sportsman would take a forest with crofters on it?—In it.

10,377. Yes, in it; on the land. So that first of all the change necessitates the removal?—Well, I do not know, because you don't make deer forests where there are crofters.

10,378. But going back, they first were removed?—Not by the sportsman.

10,379. But there were in former times small tenants, and they had to be removed?—Well, they might have been converted into shepherds to begin with, and then when the sheep business stopped they would be converted into foresters.

10,380. Don't you admit that crofting and deer forests do not go well together?—That is quite true.

10,381. Because they had to be fenced away from it. Now do you think there is any similarity between that condition of things and the condition of things to which you referred in olden times; were they fenced out before?—No, they did not go in for agriculture at all, therefore fences were not required. It is the crofter that complains, therefore, not so much the other way.

10,382. Now is this process going on?—I would not approve of the process going on except in ground such as Glencannich and Glen Affaric, peculiarly suited for it. I am entirely of the sportsman's mind—that it should not be done at the expense of any individual.

10,383. Do you think then there is any room for the process going on any further?—I am not acquainted with the whole ground in the Highlands, but there must be some places just as well adapted as Glen Affaric, where there are sheep, and it does not pay. You hurt no man by simply taking off the sheep and putting on deer.

10,384. You spoke of deer forests as an industry; you do not mean this, that it is an industry that should be extended, do you?—Wherever you find ground suitable, and wherever you hurt nobody, it should be extended.

10,385. Do you think it can be extended without hurting anybody?—It cannot be extended in Scotland very much further; there is no ground suitable.

10,386. Are you aware that that opinion was given by an eminent authority (Mr Malcolm, Glengarry), in 1883, that there was no more suitable ground, or there was very little suitable ground?—I think perhaps I did read Mr Malcolm's evidence.

10,387. This was the reply he made to a question that was put to him:—'I do not think it is possible 'to carry it' that is, the system of deer forests, 'much 'further, for I do not think there is much more land in 'the Highlands to be taken up by deer forest.'—I agree with that.

10,388. But how has that been found reliable? Has there not been a great deal of extension of the area under deer since then?—There has been some extension, no doubt.

10,389. On the estate you represent, have there been 28,000 acres added?—Very likely.

10,390. Is not that a great extension?—On that estate, of course.

10,391. In ten years?—Yes.

10,392. You had 58,000 acres at that time, and 28,000 have been added since?—Yes.

10,393. Would you still extend the system wherever there is suitable land?—Yes, where we could put the land to no other use.

10,394. Would you extend it in every case in which the proprietor could thereby get a higher rent?—Not exactly; no.

10,395. Why not?—The rent is not a criterion in the matter; it is a matter between no rent at all and a sporting rent. If we could let the land for sheep farms we might take a lower rent.

10,396. Would you approve of taking a lower rent for a sheep farm?—It depends upon the place entirely.

10,397. Why?—If the ground is not very high ground we should attempt to let it as a sheep farm, because it never makes a satisfactory deer forest.

10,398. Don't they require low land also?—They require low land for wintering, but you require a tremendous range of altitude.

10,399. But supposing the proprietor could get a higher rent for a place as a deer forest, should he take that?—The proprietor is like every other man, he depends upon his rent, and is quite entitled to let his land to the greatest advantage.

10,400. And you quite approve of that?—I quite approve of it, reserving that he does not injure any individual in the process.

10,401. This is the point I wish to get cleared. Would you approve of the proprietor letting it as a deer forest if he could thus get a higher rent for his land?—I must ask what property you mean. Do you mean Rhindown here?

10,402. I mean any land that he has to let. If he could get a higher rent for it as a deer forest would you approve of his turning it under deer?—The question covers the whole ground all round, while I say there is only part suitable.

10,403. If the land were not suitable, there is no likelihood he would get a higher rent for it?—Well, quite so. But I am not going to say that a proprietor should let all his land for the highest rent. I say in the case of Rhindown, for instance, the proprietor should not let it as a deer forest.

10,404. Why not?—Because we would have to turn out the people, and would have to do a lot of things we had no right to do; so we would not let that as a deer forest.

10,405. Then you think that land suitable for occupation should not be let as a deer forest; would you admit that?—Land suitable for occupation?

10,406. Yes, land suitable for occupation?—Well, I don't know, I am sure.

10,407. The Chairman.—You must say yes or no to that?—Land suitable for what—to live upon?

10,408. Mr Maccallum.—For occupation by small tenants?—I will say so. It should not be let as a deer forest.

10,409. Then when you speak of deer forests as an industry, did you look to the products of the deer forest? What are the products of this industry?—The products are—I don't know that there is any great production, except venison.

10,410. Does it tend to make the gillies industrious? Is it a suitable occupation for them?—They seem to like it very much; they enjoy it rather.

10,411. Does it give them constant occupation all the year round?—Yes, a large number.

10,412. Ay, but for the gillies?—You would distinguish between gillies and foresters?

10,413. Yes?—Well, of course, the regular men are occupied all the year round; the gillies have a temporary occupation.

10,414. Is there not some danger of habits of

Beauly.

John Brown Grant.

indolence being formed by these people who have no constant occupation?—They have steady occupation here, and they may go down to the low country or they may be employed as labourers on the estate. We send so many into the forest as gillies in the shooting season, and take them back as labourers after the shooting season is over.

10,415. Foresters are employed all the year round, but for the greater part of the season they have not much to do?—Their labours may not be heavy.

10,416. Therefore is there not a tendency to produce habits of idleness?—They are all active, able men.

10,417. You seem to look at deer foresting from this point of view, that it produces a warlike people?—I only quoted from Skene.

10,418. But you quoted for the purpose of bringing out that it produces a warlike people. Do you wish the Highlanders to become a warlike people?—I don't know. I wish them to be able to defend their rights, if attacked.

10,419. And you say it gives them a distaste to agriculture?—I say they never had a taste for agriculture.

10,420. But you increase their distaste by this sort of occupation, don't you?—I don't know.

10,421. You say that they take very kindly to this sort of occupation; don't you think that increases their distaste for agriculture?—I don't see that it does; they did not have much of a taste, and it does not tend to give them much of a taste for it.

10,422. Then as to the producing of a warlike people, we had evidence that from Glencannich in the memory of Mr Colin Chisholm there were seventeen officers in the army?—But I don't admit that.

10,423. But this is the thing: can you disprove it?—No, I cannot disprove it, and he cannot prove it.

10,424. Mr Sutherland.—The Army List proves it?—It will not prove where they were born. I have no doubt a number of men went from Glencannich and from all the glens.

10,425. Do you really doubt his evidence on that point?—I do.

10,426. Mr Maccallum.—And you do not believe that the officers he names were born there?—There may have been some, but not the number he states, or anything like it.

10,427. What reason have you to believe that he is wrong?—I have very good reason indeed.

10,428. Well, let us have it?—I simply say that I do not believe it.

10,429. That is no evidence at all, one way or the other. However, he says that was the case. Can you tell me do members of the keepers' families go to the army?—Neither the keepers' families nor the crofters' families, nor any other families in the Highlands can be induced to enter the army in the present day.

10,430. So you don't think they are a warlike people?—We are not fighting anywhere, at present.

10,431. You have not officers now, as you had before?—We have competitive examination now.

10,432. Does it not seem to have broken their spirit?—No, there are very apparent reasons now for the officers not being drawn from the same class as they used to be.

10,433. Then you expressed the opinion that Glencannich could not now be advantageously occupied by small tenants?—Yes.

10,434. Do you think that it was advantageously occupied formerly, when there were so many distinguished men from that district?—You see I don't admit the distinguished men in the first place, and then I say from the rent-rolls those that were there were not in very good circumstances.

10,435. But you find times of famine in every place?—I find here serious arrears, and other things which enable me to say that they could not have been in very good circumstances.

10,436. But you admit that there were tenants there?—Oh yes, certainly.

10,437. And we have evidence that these were able to train members of their families so that they were able to take up positions of distinction in the army and the church?—That is your evidence.

Beauly.

John Brown Grant.

10,438. Would it not be desirable to have such a state of things back again?—I don't admit its existence, of course, and therefore I cannot say.

10,439. But would it not be very desirable that there should be such a state of things?—If you create a nursery for army officers, of course that would be a very desirable state of things.

10,440. And we have also had evidence as to church dignitaries; would it not be very desirable that such a state of things should be got at?—I do not know quite what the state of things was, but if what you intend is that a nursery of army officers should be brought back, I have said that would be a desirable thing.

10,441. And that people would be there who could be able to train them?—A sort of military college.

10,442. I do not speak of a military college: I simply speak of there being Highlanders who could rear up their children to take positions of distinction?—We do not find them anywhere in the Highlands.

10,443. Don't you find them in the Island of Skye?—We do not find those from the crofting class taking positions of distinction in the University.

10,444. I spoke of positions of distinction generally?—There is no reason why from the crofting class as able a man should not come as from any other class.

10,445. What we find, as a matter of fact, is that they do?—They do, in very many cases.

10,446. And it would be a desirable thing to have such a state of matters in Glencannich, of course?—It would be very desirable, of course, to have such a state of matters anywhere.

10,447. And then, do not the agricultural farmers find great difficulty in getting reliable workers for the farms?—Oh yes; the labour question has become a very serious one indeed for the agricultural farmer; it adds to the other difficulties that farmers have to contend with at present.

10,448. Would not a district that is let to small tenants be just a nursery for reliable workmen?—No, I would not admit that.

10,449. Why not?—Because the crofter himself is not a reliable workman for the large agricultural farmer: he is engaged on his own croft during the most important seasons of the year.

10,450. But I look to this, that the crofter would have a family, and that the children would be trained to work on the land, and that they would thus make very good workmen on an agricultural farm?—We have a great difficulty in drawing them from that source. They will go to the towns, to the railway, or the police, but not to farm work.

10,451. Have you had such experience?—I have.

10,452. And they do not make good workmen?—They make capital workmen, but they won't go to agricultural work.

10,453. Is that not because they get something better to go to?—No doubt.

10,454. They are very much run after as servants?—They make very good servants. They won't work in agricultural farms; that is my experience. They won't become farm servants if they can help it.

10,455. But they would suit very well for that?—If they would go, yes certainly.

10,456. You also spoke of the danger that the rates would be greatly increased if the deer forests were broken up?—Yes.

10,457. But don't you think that there would be a sporting rent after all; supposing the land were to be put under small tenants, would there not be a sporting rent?—I gravely doubt that. I don't think anybody would give a sporting rent for the ground as a deer forest under small tenants.

10,458. Why not?—It would require some explanation; of course the crofter and he would come into conflict in a great many ways.

10,459. I thought it would be the crofter's interest to live on good terms with the sportsman, because he would get work and wages?—You may imagine that.

auly.
hn Brown
ant.

10,460. Why should he quarrel with his bread and butter?—That is very true, why should he? But in practice we find it different.

10,461. You have no practice of it; you have cleared them?—Yes.

10,462. How can you have practice of it if you have cleared them?—We had some practice; and with the people on the margin of the forests and with the sheep farmer we know what it is.

10,463. The deer would be there?—There might be some deer there.

10,464. Don't you say it is a place very well suited for deer, and that places are named after deer?—That is so.

10,465. Why would not the sportsman then take such ground?—Just because he would not. He would go somewhere else where he could enjoy his sport under more congenial surroundings.

10,466. And you think 'more congenial surroundings' is to have the people all away?—In the particular part where his sporting is he does not want the people.

10,467. Would it not be far better for him to have his sport and allow the people to live?—No, he would go somewhere else.

10,468. Where would he go?—He might go to Norway, or to the Rocky Mountains, or some such place, or do without sport altogether.

10,469. Mr Sutherland.—Could he get a deer forest in Norway?—Yes.

10,470. Mr Maccallum.—Do you find this then, that people will not take grouse shootings if the land is pastured?—Grouse shootings are different; there is no great objection to crofters or anybody else on grouse shootings. The best grouse shooting we have is occupied by crofters.

10,471. And would some of the ground under deer suit as grouse shootings?—No, not any part of the 80,000 acres; no part of it would suit for grouse.

10,472. Are there no grouse on it?—A few at the lower end, but it would not suit.

10,473. I wish you would make it clear really why it is that the sportsman would not take to such a condition of things; there would be plenty of deer, you admit?—I would require to go through the whole theory of sport before that could be made plain; I mention the fact that he would not do it, and I could mention a good many more facts.

10,474. So that you hold that wherever a deer forest is, the crofters must give way at once?—No, I say the forest should not be where the crofters are at all. But I say if you put crofters upon the forest the sportsman goes out.

10,475. Then as to the extension of the system: you are not for extending it any further,—you go that length, I think?—There may be cases that I am not aware of where the land is suitable and available, and where it would injure nobody.

10,476. You don't know any land that could be made into a deer forest?—Not at the present time.

10,477. There is no intention of making any further extension in this neighbourhood?—I am not aware of any.

10,478. And you think there is a final stop now?—I don't know that at all.

10,479. But in this neighbourhood?—I don't know of any in this immediate neighbourhood.

10,480. There is no more suitable land here?—No.

10,481. Mr Munro.—Are you a Highlander yourself?—Well, I don't know; my father was born on the Braes of Glenlivet, in Banffshire, and he was the son of a crofter.

10,482. Where were you born?—I was born in Morayshire, at Elgin.

10,483. You do not speak the Gaelic language, I think you said?—Not much.

10,484. How long have you been in Glencannich?—I have not been in Glencannich; I have been at Erchless for eight years.

10,485. I understand that you have had a very considerable experience in the management of Highland property?—I have had some experience.

10,486. And as the result of that experience I presume I may say that you can readily determine the best uses to which lands could be put, particularly those under your management?—I have, of course, been endeavouring to do that. Beauly. John Brown Grant.

10,487. Now, following up that answer, let me ask you to suppose for a moment that you were unable to obtain a tenant for your deer forest, to what uses would you say these lands should be put, speaking as a practical man?—Supposing we were not able to obtain a tenant? I have been considering that question; we would have to go back to sheep.

10,488. You would let the land either in sheep farms or to small tenants?—I don't know that we could let it; we could put it under sheep, and try to make some commercial profit.

10,489. But you would be disposed to let it to small tenants on the best terms possible?—No, I say sheep would be the best alternative.

10,490. But small tenants could have sheep on the club farm system?—No, I would let the ground in large tracts.

10,491. You would let them for the best rent you could get?—Certainly.

10,492. Now, from the opinions you have favoured the Commission with, I presume I judge rightly in saying that you very naturally, from your calling, look upon the letting of land solely from the landlord's point of view, and that you would allow no consideration to stand between you and the obtaining of the highest possible rents?—I have said already that I would not let deer forests in unsuitable places for any rent at all. We do not look at the matter from a purely commercial point of view.

10,493. But you have told us already that the lands with which you are concerned are only adapted for deer forest purposes?—Not the whole of them; part of them I mentioned.

10,494. Now do you consider that you or your employers are justified in excluding from your consideration the prejudicial effect which the letting of lands for deer forest suitable for crops or sheep may have on other interests?—I do not quite understand what prejudicial effect you refer to.

10,495. I will come to that afterwards?—But I cannot answer the question all at one go.

10,496. It is publicly stated, and no doubt you are quite familiar with the statement, that the letting of deer forests has a very prejudicial effect upon other interests in this country?—I deny that.

10,497. Such as the agricultural interests?—I deny that.

10,498. And the mercantile interests?—You see I dispute the beginning of the statement, and therefore I cannot answer the rest of the question.

10,499. You do not admit that deer forests have any prejudicial effect upon any interests whatever?—Quite so.

10,500. I suppose you are quite prepared to admit that the ownership of land involves some responsibility on the part of the landlord towards the country?—Very good; certainly.

10,501. Now we come to the economic aspect of the question of deer forests. You say that you do not admit that any interests are prejudicially affected by the letting of land for deer forests?—That is a general statement.

10,502. Now is there not a loss to the nation in the first place in the reduced production of beef, mutton, wool, and grain?—It is perfectly inappreciable.

10,503. Then you mean to tell me that the letting of 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 acres of land quite capable of sustaining sheep is an inappreciable loss to the nation?—Yes.

10,504. How many sheep, might I ask you, could you rear on that extent of land?—Supposing it was all the very best class of grazing land, you might have a million of sheep, and the produce from that might be perhaps 100,000 sheep per year.

10,505. You say that 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 acres of land would sustain 1,000,000 of sheep?—Yes.

10,506. And do you mean seriously to tell us that the extinction of 1,000,000 sheep involves no appreciable loss to the nation?—Not appreciable. You do not eat these sheep every year.

10,507. I am perfectly sensible of that?—You only eat about 100,000, which is about a ship's cargo.

10,508. But if we do away with these 1,000,000 sheep, does it not follow that we would have to import beef and mutton and wool to fill up the vacuum?—We do that anyhow.

10,509. But does not that imply a very serious loss to the nation?—It may be a gain to the nation.

10,510. How could that be?—It may cost more to grow than to buy.

10,511. But as a matter of fact you must allow, I think, that if these 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 acres of land are capable of sustaining 1,000,000 of sheep, there must be some loss to the nation surely?—There may be; as a matter of fact, in Scotland, we find sheep increasing, taking the whole country together.

10,512. We do not owe that to the existence of deer forests?—Perhaps not.

10,513. Now there is another aspect of this question. Is there not some loss involved in the creation of deer forests, in the decrease of the population of the country?—Well, in converting a sheep farm into a deer forest, it is rather the other way about; there are more men employed, as a rule, in a deer forest than on a sheep farm.

10,514. Do you mean to tell us that the rural population of the Highland counties has increased since the afforestment commenced?—That is another question altogether; the rural population of the Highland counties has decreased; and in the remainder of Scotland and in England too.

10,515. Do you attribute any proportion of that decrease to the introduction of deer forests?—I am not prepared to admit that.

10,516. The question has been discussed here yesterday regarding the loss which towns sustain in consequence of the extinguishing of a large number of farms to make way for a deer forest. Do you allow that towns have sustained any such loss?—Not in the neighbourhood of deer forests; they have rather benefited.

10,517. Is it not a natural thing to suppose that if there were a large number of farmers living in a neighbourhood with their families they must draw their supplies from the neighbouring towns?—But you are supposing a state of things that does not exist in this neighbourhood. I hold that Beauly has benefited greatly by this deer forest business, and you can get the people of Beauly to come here and say so.

10,518. Will you get any number of people in Beauly to sustain you in that contention?—Yes, I am sure I would.

10,519. How does it follow now that the few can benefit Beauly more than the many?—I don't admit the 'few,' I say there are as many of a population employed about a deer forest as on a sheep farm, the other population remaining the same, barring the natural drifting towards towns, and so on.

10,520. Now there is another point of loss. You know that the farmers have complained for some time past, the lowland farmers, that they have suffered very material loss in consequence of the withdrawal of a large demand for the wintering of sheep?—I don't admit that.

10,521. Does it not follow from your statement that if there were a million of sheep upon a certain area of land, and you extinguished that million of sheep, there must be a decrease of the demand for wintering?—It may be quite natural to think so, but it is not the case, and I will explain why. The agricultural farmer who used to let wintering has been in difficulties with the agricultural part of his farm for a number of years past, and instead of having all his eggs in one basket and depending solely on agriculture, he has taken to keeping sheep himself, and the consequence is that he has no wintering to let. There has been a change in the condition of the people who used to let wintering, and the result is that the wintering is now as dear as before.

10,522. You mean to say that the cost of wintering is dearer to-day than it was before deer forests began?—As dear, or dearer.

10,523. And you actually seriously contend that the lessened area under sheep has increased the value of the wintering?—That is the tendency, but it may not have any appreciable effect.

10,524. Mr Sutherland.—Where does he summer them?—He simply keeps them at home and winters them himself and sells them. He has gone into the sheep farming business himself, and that makes it dearer for the man that has to go to the market for his wintering.

10,525. Mr Munro.—You have something to do, I think, with the Comar sheep farm?—Yes.

10,526. And at present I understand that you contemplate removing the tenant of the farm?—No, we do not.

10,527. Wait one moment, and substitute deer for sheep?—Of course we discuss these things sometimes.

10,528. Is it not the case?—We have not done anything of the kind.

10,529. But do you contemplate doing that?—I do not know what we may do.

10,530. Is it not a fact that at this moment you have arranged to deprive Mr Robertson, Comar, of the sheep farm?—No, no. We have taken his sheep; he gave us notice a year ago.

10,531. But you induced him to give notice?—Not at all. We would have been very pleased if he had kept on.

10,532. Is it not a perfectly fair question to ask you what you intend to do with the farm?—We may keep the sheep on the farm, or we may clear it for deer. We cannot get a tenant for it.

10,533. In point of fact if you can get it to pay better under deer than under sheep you will convert it into a deer forest?—Certainly.

10,534. Let us take this as a concrete example of what we are speaking about. At present the farm sustains 7500 sheep?—I don't know; we got 7000 odds the other day.

10,535. Very well, let it be 7000 sheep. It sustains 7000 sheep; can you point to a single advantage that the nation would get by the substitution of deer for sheep? that is putting the matter into as narrow a form as I can.—As a sheep farm we would get no rent for it; as a deer forest we will get rent. That rent is spent in the various payments I mentioned to you, such as labour, rates, taxes, &c. That all benefits the community round about us; it is money coming into this district and spent there, which benefits the people; otherwise there would be none.

10,536. But in the meantime you solely look at this question from the landlord's point of view?—The landlord is the only man that is concerned in this question, that I can see.

10,537. You think so. You think the letting of that land has nothing to do with the nation?—You cannot compel a landlord to keep sheep for the benefit of the nation.

10,538. Then the only consideration you take into account is the utmost that the landlord can make out of Comar Farm?—The landlord has to consider his interest, of course, irrespective of the nation.

10,539. You have not succeeded in pointing to any advantage that the nation obtains by the conversion of this farm into a deer forest?—I have pointed out this distribution of wealth.

10,540. But the national wealth is not increased?—Yes, the national wealth is increased by that distribution.

10,541. I think you will be prepared to admit that the national wealth is rather diminished by the withdrawal of one article which is of value and the substitution of another article that is of no value?—That is a very abtruse and economic question, which I do not feel called on to offer any opinion upon.

10,542. Now pass to Lord Napier's Report. I do not think you were a witness before that Commission?—No, I was not.

10,543. A question was raised by Mr Maccallum as to the increase of deer forests since the issuing of Lord Napier's Report?—Yes.

10,544. Do you know to what extent land has been added to deer forests since 1883?—I could not answer that for the whole of the Highlands.

10,545. Do you know what the Report of the Royal Commission was with reference to the increase of deer forests?—I have read the Report.

10,546. I will refresh your memory by one or two excerpts from it. In the Report it is stated:—'It 'has been stated to us in evidence that most of the 'land specially adapted by its natural features and by 'the habits of the deer for this purpose, and which 'can, without substantial injustice to other interests, be 'thus applied, is now appropriated, and that the forma-'tion of other forests, to any great extent, is not likely 'to take place.' Then the Report goes on to say:—'No one could contemplate the conversion of the 'whole extent of good pasture land, and of possible 'arable land at a moderate elevation in the Highlands, 'into forest, without alarm and reprobation, and it is 'scarcely necessary to say that any serious movement 'towards such an issue would be arrested by the force 'of public opinion, attended with an amount of irrita-'tion much to be deprecated. We do not anticipate, 'with any degree of certainty, that the contingency to 'which we have adverted would arise, but considering 'the diversity of opinion expressed, the possibility of unfortunate results, and the prevailing excitement in connection with this question, we may well consider 'whether Your Majesty's Government and Parliament 'may not contemplate such legislative restrictions as 'would restrain the progressive and immoderate afforest-'ment of land, and allay the apprehensions which are 'widely felt upon the subject.' Do you agree with that recommendation?—The whole thing there turns upon moderate elevation. That is all contingent upon an attempt being made to turn land at a moderate elevation into a deer forest, and of course I agree with it.

10,547. What would you consider a moderate elevation?—Taking the average of the whole forest, levelling down everything, I would say from 500 to 800 feet.

10,548. Then you never heard of corn ripening at an elevation of 1200 feet?—That again depends on the situation. If you get corn to grow on a southern exposure, you may find it ripen, as in the Braes of Mar, at a height of 1300 feet. But in the deepness of a valley where you have mountains that form a high wall, it will not ripen at a third of that.

10,549. But returning to this question of Lord Napier's Report, are you aware what extent of land has been added to deer forests since that recommendation was made?—No, I do not know.

10,550. Do you remember a debate which took place in 1891 in the House of Commons, initiated by our friend Mr Sutherland here?—I think I do; there were several debates, and Mr Marjoribanks made a speech, I think.

10,551. Do you remember what amount of land it was admitted had been added to the deer forests in Scotland?—No, I do not remember.

10,552. Do you remember that the figure was 150,000 acres?—There might be.

10,553. But that estimate was disputed by those who were against the increasing of deer forests?—Quite so; I recollect the discussion.

10,554. A Government return has since been obtained, which shows that the increase since has been not less than 591,000 acres?—Quite so.

10,555. And that increase from private sources, which I have read of, has been made up to close on a million of acres?—Quite so.

10,556. Now, do you not consider that that large increase in the area under deer must have proved very detrimental to the nation?—You must take the individual cases; it might be the very reverse. I don't know but our own case, where there has been no detriment to anybody or anything.

10,557. Do you agree with the recommendation of the Napier Commission as to the further restriction of deer forests?—In general terms I do; of course I have said already that it could not be extended to land not suitable. If any attempt is made in that way it should be stopped.

10,558. If that recommendation had been given effect to, you would not to-day have been able to offer Comar?—Quite so, we would have the land lying practically vacant.

10,559. You have told us to-day that population and deer forests are not compatible?—I said crofters and deer forests.

10,560. Not only crofters, but others?—Oh well, if they are engaged in the forest, there may be as many as you like; it would be a very good job for them.

10,561. You would perhaps not remember the time when Guisachan was sold?—No, I do not remember.

10,562. Are you aware that it is stated in the advertisement for sale of that property, that the small population mentioned is an additional incentive to anyone to buy the property?—I don't know.

10,563. You are perhaps aware that it is frequently mentioned in advertisements of deer forests or other game preserves, that a diminished population is always put in as an inducement?—A small population.

10,564. Now, is it not the fact that the declining of the population and the decay of a nation are very much the same thing?—But you see a small population and a declining population are two very different things; a population may be small, and yet not declining.

10,565. You would do your best to diminish the population?—No, nothing of the kind.

10,566. In your quarter of the globe?—No.

10,567. Oh, you don't?—We don't.

10,568. You do not admit that there is any decline of the population?—We do nothing to make it decline.

10,569. I heard you say, in the course of reading your paper, that the population of your particular district, The Chisholm district, had not decreased to the same extent as other parts?—I spoke of the parish of Kilmorack: these are the only statistics I have got. I took the percentage, and found that the decrease was lower than in some other parishes.

10,570. As a matter of fact, you cannot tell us whether the population in your district proper has increased or decreased:—No, I have explained that I have not the statistics to enable me to answer that question.

10,571. Then on the question of labour: you have mentioned that Mr Winans and Mrs Chisholm expend very considerable sums in wages?—Yes.

10,572. Might I ask you what is the nature of the employment by which these men obtain their wages?—Do you mean the work they are engaged upon?

10,573. Yes.—I think I mentioned the kind of work: they make roads, and build bridges, and put up buildings, and embank rivers, and all the ordinary work going on in an estate; and there are so many, of course, who are gamekeepers.

10,574. All done for the upkeep of the forest?—Yes.

10,575. Therefore the wages are not earned in any productive industry?—Well, Mrs Chisholm's case is different from that; I was referring more particularly to Mr Winans. He employs them on the forest, Mrs Chisholm on the estate generally.

10,576. What I wish to point out especially with regard to Mr Winans is this: there is a great distinction in spending money in wages for something that produces no substantial result, and spending money for example in the reclamation of land, which is a permanent benefit to the nation.—I don't admit that. We have land reclaimed at great expense which has been no benefit.

10,577. Then you are not prepared to admit that Glencannich could at this moment be profitably or advantageously occupied by small tenants?—No.

10,578. Not under any conditions?—Of course under

Beauly.

John Brown Grant.

any conditions,—if you could plant them there, and keep them there, and pay them to be there, but not profitably occupying it.

10,579. But supposing they got the land at a moderate rent, could they profitably occupy it?—Supposing they got the land for nothing at all, they could not.

10,580. That is your opinion?—That is my opinion.

10,581. But you have no facts to speak from?—I am judging from the past record, and from my own knowledge of the neighbourhood.

10,582. But taking the past record of Strathglass, according to the information we have obtained, it used to support a thriving tenantry?—I dispute that evidence.

10,583. But you are not in a position to rebut it by any facts?—I will put in the estate rent-rolls.

10,584. But the rent-rolls in the form in which you have put some of them in are very misleading; that is the least I can say about it?—They are the only rent-rolls.

10,585. Mr Macleod.—I think you said you had been eight years on the Chisholm estate?—Yes.

10,586. And before being there had you any other experience of Highland property?—Yes; I was three years at Skibo, with Mr Sutherland of Skibo.

10,587. As estate manager?—As estate manager and factor, and so on.

10,588. So that that comprises the whole of your experience?—Well, I was at home with my father, who was a manager and factor in connection with Highland property all his life.

10,589. Where?—He was in Skibo for seven years.

10,590. I hope you do not think that the questions are impertinent, but you have expressed a very strong opinion on more than one point with regard to the subject that is before us,—a very strong opinion, and I am anxious, of course, to know on what experience it is founded?—Well, my father was an estate manager and factor, and I myself took up that profession.

10,591. Where, might I ask?—He was at Aldourie here, and Strathnairn, and Skibo,—been that all his life. He is now a farmer; and in that way I had an early training. Then I went into a bank, and then back to Skibo, and was eighteen months there. I then went to Her Majesty's Home Farm at Windsor for two years, then to Ireland, and was on a very large place there with the Earl of Wicklow; I then came back to a place in Warwickshire, and was estate manager there for two years; then I returned to Skibo, and from there to Strathglass.

10,592. I take it that this was the first experience you had on The Chisholm estate of deer forest property?—Deer forest, yes.

10,593. And of course you had no knowledge of that particular district under any other conditions?—No, of course not.

10,594. And your view is that there is no available land there?—Yes, that is my view.

10,595. For crofters or other small tenants?—Yes.

10,596. I think, though, you said in preparing the paper you submitted you did not know the terms of the remit to us?—No, I don't know that I have read it.

10,597. Now I would like you to tell me what object you had in making that statement with regard to the population first on The Chisholm estate and secondly as to the parish of Kilmorack; perhaps you had better refresh your memory by reading it.—It has reference to the context, very likely. As Mr Munro says, there has been an attempt made to show that deer forests have decreased the population.

10,598. And I quite agree with you that in many cases they have not; they simply took the place of sheep farms, and foresters took the place of shepherds. I quite agree with that. But you have prepared a very elaborate paper,—certainly it may not, perhaps, as you have said yourself, be all germane to the subject before us, but still you must have had some reason for giving these figures?—I have given the population of the whole parish in 1831.

10,599. You gave the population on The Chisholm estate?—No, I have given no population on The Chisholm estate at all.

Beauly.

John Brown Grant.

10,600. You said there were a certain number of tenants at a particular period?—Yes.

10,601. Of course we know the manner of arriving at the population; all that I wanted to know is,—you may have had some other reason, but I understood what you wanted to bring out was a comparison between the population then and now?—To some extent.

10,602. And the inference you desired us to draw was that there had been no decrease in the population?—Not more than the ordinary normal decrease all over the country. I do wish you to draw that inference.

10,603. And the manner in which you desired us to draw that inference was by giving us the number of tenants?—That is with reference to the estate, of course; that is the only available means I had. I did not mention the cottars even.

10,604. No, you did not mention cottars?—No.

10,605. Nor sub-tenants?—No.

10,606. And you did not even say principal tenants?—No. I just took the whole rent-roll, and there is the number of tenants.

10,607. So that if it was not for the fact that we had of our own knowledge, or otherwise, obtained the information, it might be taken that that was all the population that was on the estate?—Quite so; you make it more when you bring it up that way.

10,608. But you do not, of course, doubt in any way that the population on The Chisholm property has been very much decreased?—I don't know since what period? There have been rises and falls.

10,609. You see this. I quite agree with you that the deer forests may not probably have decreased the population, but you are quite prepared to admit, I should think, that the sheep farms have?—Oh, to some extent they did, no doubt. Where you find them displacing small tenants, as in Glencannich, of course they did not employ as many men as before.

10,610. So that, although the deer forests did not decrease the population, the sheep farms originally did?—No doubt, to some extent.

10,611. And in that way, indirectly, the deer forests are the means of keeping the population lower than it would otherwise be?—Well, I don't know, I am sure.

10,612. I think that is a perfectly fair conclusion, but it is not a matter of very great importance.—Quite so.

10,613. Would you mind reading again that portion of your statement where you spoke of the rental of the agricultural subjects? You said that it had decreased from £5000?—I just took the rent-roll.

10,614. From £5000 to £1500. You made that bald statement without any explanation.—I did certainly explain.

10,615. What was the explanation?—I quite expected that I would be asked how that was arrived at, and I was going to explain it as I went along.

10,616. In any case, you made the statement without any explanation?—I did explain.

10,617. What explanation did you give?—I found an agricultural rental in the rent-roll of 1860 of £5000 or thereabouts, and in the same way in the present rental of £1500 only.

10,618. And what inference did you desire us to draw from that?—I desired you to draw from that just that there was a general fall in agricultural rents, and that so much of the land that had formerly been devoted to agriculture, including sheep farms, was now devoted to deer forests.

10,619. Don't you think now, that a fair inference, if we had not had the knowledge otherwise, would have been that it was a real decrease in rent,—that sheep farming had gone back?—You must draw your own inferences altogether. I am explaining the figures; they are there.

10,620. I am exceedingly sorry to say it, but I do not think you used us well. That is all I have got to say, and I decline to go any further in the examination.

10,621. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Mr Sutherland examined you on the sentimental view of the deer forests question; he seemed to think that the occupation of foresters or gillies was rather derogatory to Highlanders, and that they assisted in the sport without deriving any profit or enjoyment from it. Is it not generally admitted by those who know anything about deer-stalking that the chief pleasure of the sport consists in the long stalk rather than in the moment of the shot?—Yes, I enjoy that part of it most myself.

10,622. And, to be successful, must not the stalker have an intimate knowledge of the ground and of the wind that comes from the corries?—Very intimate.

10,623. And therefore it is the forester and sometimes the gillie that bears the chief part of the amusement?—Yes.

10,624. And, in the late autumn, during the hind shooting, he has the shooting as well?—Yes.

10,625. He then shoots as well as stalks?—Yes.

10,626. Therefore is it not fair to say that the foresters and gillies have not, at least, an equal part in the enjoyment of the sport of the deer forest with the proprietor or his friends, many of whom are ignorant of the ground, and therefore unable to do any stalking for themselves?—Yes.

10,627. The Chairman.—I think it fair, in the interests of this inquiry, to put this question. You admit that there has been a considerable increase in afforestment of land since 1883?—Yes.

10,628. Does it consist with your knowledge that that increase has been due, to a considerable extent, to the failure to obtain tenants for grazing farms?—That is quite the case.

10,629. In a number of instances has the afforestment been in a certain sense compulsory, because the landlord could not get a tenant-farmer?—That is quite true.

10,630. And, if he could have got a tenant farmer, he would not have afforested the land?—He would not have afforested the land.

10,631. Does that apply to a considerable tract of the new afforestment?—It does, to a great extent.

10,632. That is true of the land of which we have been speaking?—Yes.

10,633. Is it also true to your knowledge of certain recent afforestments in the county of Sutherland?—Not to my knowledge, but I believe it is so; I have heard it so stated.

10,634. Now you used these words, in the course of your examination by one of our number, that you would not approve of afforestment except in such places as Glencannich or Glen Affaric?—Places suitable like that.

10,635. Now, having that view, in the future would you be against afforesting grazing land even if a grazing tenant could not be got?—I can see no harm whatever in doing it. If a grazing tenant cannot be got, what can you do with it?

10,636. You have committed yourself to the view that you would not approve of afforestment except in such places as Glencannich and Glen Affaric?—Each place must be considered on its own individual merits, and, unless it is suitable like that, I would not approve of it.

10,637. But looking to the feeling which prevails in many influential quarters, as well as many uninfluential quarters, on the subject, would you in the future approve of additional afforestment of grazing lands, even if a grazing tenant cannot be got?—I would let the thing take its individual course.

10,638. Then your view is that the landlord should exercise the right which he undoubtedly at present possesses of adding additional land to a subsisting forest, or of creating a new forest, if and when he cannot obtain a grazing tenant for a farm?—That is mainly so.

10,639. And that is your view?—That is my view.

10,640. Mr Sutherland.—Would you kindly state generally,—I do not wish you to do it with any detail,—the means you have taken to secure grazing tenants in cases where lands have been made into deer forests?—Well, in the case of Knockfin, it was extensively advertised, north and south.

10,641. For how long a period?—For perhaps six months. Beauly.

10,642. Did you get any offers?—No offers at all. John Brown Grant.

10,643. Take the case of Mr Winans, who took it first as a grazing tenant?—Yes.

10,644. Did he sign a grazing lease?—Yes.

10,645. By what means did it afterwards become a sporting lease?—He took a sporting lease afterwards. It was let to Lord Tweedmouth as sporting tenant at the time; the sheep farm was advertised, and Mr Winans took it.

10,646. What became of his lease binding him to keep it a grazing farm?—He was not bound to keep the sheep there.

10,647. Not by his grazing lease?—No.

10,648. Do you mean to say you let a tract of land without specifying the purpose to which it is to be devoted?—We always do. We let it for that purpose, but we never bind the tenant to devote it to any particular purpose.

10,649. Do you allow him to devote it to any purpose he likes?—In terms of the lease, for grazings, but we do not compel him to graze it.

10,650. How did the grazing lease of Mr Winans turn into a sporting lease?—He bought out Lord Tweedmouth, who was the sporting tenant.

10,651. But what did he do as regards his arrangements with the estate?—He put the two leases together, and made one lease of it. They are distinct leases still; he has got a grazing lease, and a sporting lease, as you will see from the valuation roll.

10,652. So he made a bargain with the estate for grazing purposes, and he made a bargain with Lord Tweedmouth for sporting purposes. Now you say both are combined, the two are made into one, and he has the alternative of grazing or sporting as he chooses. Is that the explanation of it?—That is exactly so.

10,653. So there is no difference then: it would be possible to combine two leases anywhere, and do the same?—It is frequently done. Lord Tweedmouth did the same thing himself with the farm of Kerrow. He was grazing tenant, and had sheep there for some time, but he cleared it when he was also sporting tenant under a different lease.

10,654. So there is nothing to prevent a grazing tenant from turning a farm into a deer forest?—Our tenants have done it frequently.

10,655. Without consulting you?—Without consulting us at all.

10,656. Mr Donald Macrae, 'Balallan,' Plockton.—I should like to put a question or two to the witness, with your lordship's permission.

10,657. The Chairman.—Yes.

10,658. Mr Donald Macrae.—The first question is with regard to the farm of Comar, the lease of which expired just now, and the valuation of which took place only ten days ago,—a valuation that embraced, it was stated, 8500 sheep. I should like your lordship to put the question, Did the estate take steps to secure if possible a grazing tenant for that farm, and if so, what steps?

10,659. The Chairman.—You hear the question, Mr Grant? Did you take steps to secure a grazing tenant, and if so, what steps?—We made a general inquiry, but the thing was so absolutely hopeless that we did not advertise in this case.

10,660. What was the nature of the general inquiry?—I know a great many farmers, and I mentioned the matter to them.

10,661. Did you not advertise?—No, we did not advertise.

10,662. Mr Donald Macrae.—They did not advertise. What reason has he to suppose that if he had advertised for half a year or more or less he would fail to secure a grazing tenant for the farm?—The reason is this, that I was looking at the example of other proprietors who had failed after advertising.

10,663. The Chairman.—You despaired of getting it let?—Yes.

10,664. Mr Macrae.—Are there landless cottars on

Beauly.

John Brown Grant.

The Chisholm estate, and where are they situated?—Do you mean workmen?

10,665. I mean cottars,—people who live in houses, and whose names do not appear in the valuation roll.—We have a number of work people.

10,666. And who have no lands; who are not tenants in any sense?—The workmen have their houses for occupation.

10,667. The Chairman.—But have you landless cottars on the estate who are not workmen?—I do not think so; everybody finds employment on the estate.

10,668. Mr Macrae.—Have they stated employment, from year to year, and from week to week?—I think so.

10,669. They have?—I do not know any who have not.

10,670. Are there cottars about Cannich?—Yes.

10,671. Are they content in their present condition?—I hope so.

10,672. Are they content in their present condition? I should like an answer to that?—I know of no discontent.

10,673. Did they express a wish to get holdings?—They expressed a wish to get a cow's grass, some of them.

10,674. Did they present a petition for land to Mrs Chisholm?—Yes, and some of them got land.

10,675. How many presented the petition?—Including the schoolmaster, and the minister, and people of that sort, I think there were ten.

10,676. The Chairman.—And how many got land, or a cow's grass?—Three; some of them had land before.

10,677. Mr Macrae.—I should like to know, my lord, what they actually asked in the petition?—Witness.—I have got a copy. Might I read the Free Church minister's letter to Mrs Chisholm?

10,678-9. The Chairman.—On behalf of the applicants?—Yes.

10,680. Just read it.—It is dated 22nd May last:—'I have been requested to intimate to you a resolution 'passed unanimously at a meeting held in the Cannich 'school on Wednesday last. The resolution was that 'Mrs Chisholm be asked if she will voluntarily grant 'grazing for a cow, and potato ground, to some ten 'men in the district. Your petitioners think that this 'can be given without any detriment to existing interests. 'These men do not include those who have already got 'some land on Comar Muir. The object for which the 'meeting was called, was to consider what steps should 'be taken before the Commission on Deer Forests in 'June. But, in the first place, the wish of the meeting 'was to do nothing until Mrs Chisholm should have 'an opportunity of considering their wants. I am sure 'I most sincerely wish to be on the most honourable 'terms with my proprietrix, and I can say the same 'for your petitioners. But Mrs Chisholm will readily 'understand, that when any one is driven to the other 'side of the country for necessary provision for the 'beasts, while plenty could be got at the door, that 'it is not easy to cherish such kindly feelings as one 'could wish. Hitherto I have always spoken in public 'and private in the most respectful terms, but I do wish 'for all concerned that these few people would get some 'little consideration. It is a hard thing for the poor 'people to have the dung that ought to be growing 'potatoes at their houses; also to have to buy milk from 'a distance and sometimes not able to get it at all. 'I, at least, must always feel thankful that Mrs 'Chisholm has removed intoxicating liquors from her 'estates.'

10,681. Who signs that?—C. C. Mackenzie, the Free Church minister.

10,682. Mr Macrae.—I mean to follow up the question, with your lordship's permission: I mean to bring out another interesting fact. I should like to ascertain the names of those landless cottars who did not get land?—They got land not because of the petition, they got it before the petition altogether.

10,683. I should like to know what the reply to that petition was.

10,684. The Chairman.—What was the result of that petition?—It resulted in nothing at all. Mr Mackenzie did not give any names there, and when I came to make inquiries, I found it included himself and the schoolmaster and the blacksmith; there were some who got land, but it was too late to give them all.

10,685. You had no land to give?—No land to give.

10,686. Mr Macrae.—I should like to know whether that letter was replied to. The letter is addressed to Mrs Chisholm; she may have replied to it—I do not know.

10,687. The Chairman.—You did not reply to it?—No.

10,688. And you got no instructions about it?—No.

10,689. Mr Macrae.—I should like to ask if that was the only document by which these people approached Mrs Chisholm?—Oh no, I think Mrs Chisholm had been twice written to by Mr Mackenzie before.

10,690. The Chairman.—On behalf of these cottars?—Yes.

10,691. Mr Macrae.—I should like to ask if they took the usual steps of approaching Mrs Chisholm through the factor?—They may have made an approach through me; I do not remember.

10,692. The Chairman.—Did they approach you?—They may have done so. I think so.

10,693. I take that as an affirmative answer?—I think on one occasion.

10,694. Mr Macrae.—Did they present a petition to Mrs Chisholm in an unclosed envelope through the factor?—Yes.

10,695. Has that petition been replied to?—Yes, I am sure it has.

10,696. Who replied to it?—I think I replied to it.

10,697. Can we get here the request made in the petition?—I think I replied verbally to one.

10,698. The Chairman.—What was the request then made?—The request was for a cow's grass.

10,699. What was the answer made?—The answer was that it was all let, and we could not give it to them.

10,700. Mr Macrae.—I am to ask another question, with your lordship's permission. Are these people sufficiently free and sufficiently independent to come before Her Majesty's Royal Commission here to speak for themselves?—Certainly.

10,701. Is it a fact that in one of those petitions they stated to Mrs Chisholm that the tenant of Comar threatened to pull their houses about their ears if they would dare to speak about land to the Commissioners here?—They might have said something of that kind, but we paid no attention to it.

10,702. The Chairman.—Was there something of that kind said?—It was stated in one of the petitions. Of course the land was let to Mr Robertson, Comar.

10,703. Mr Macrae.—My lord, I have now to state that I have been up there a fortnight ago, at a public meeting held there before I ever went to Glencannich, or before any other here went to Glencannich, so far as I know; the people voluntarily held a meeting, and appointed delegates to appear before Her Majesty's Royal Commission. I was there less than a fortnight ago, and those delegates were present, and one in particular of the delegates complained to me, and that delegate, as I understand, is a cottar living on Comar farm—a cottar without any security of tenure. That man told me that he was in fear and in terror of coming before Her Majesty's Royal Commission to state the case for himself and for the others, because a deliberate threat was made that he would be hounded out of the country and his house pulled down, and the houses of the others, if they would dare open their mouths about land; and they are not here to-day because of that threat?—Witness.—We never threatened anything.

10,704. Mr Macrae.—And further, my lord, that those people made Mrs Chisholm aware, through the factor, of the fact that they were threatened, and they expected a measure of encouragement and protection from the estate to come here. The estate has given them no encouragement, and no security, so far as the estate was concerned, and that is the condition of matters, that Her Majesty's Royal Commission is so far baffled in their inquiries.

10,705–6. The Chairman.—Mr Grant, you admit that something of the kind was said by the tenant of Comar?—Yes; in the petition to Mrs Chisholm it is so stated. Nobody has been turned out, and nothing has been even attempted.

10,707. Mr William Burns, Solicitor, Inverness, Agent for Mrs Chisholm.—One word in answer to Mr Macrae. He suggests rather that the estate did not help the people to come. Did Mr Macrae ask us to do so? I have heard nothing of it. Mr Robertson and we are at loggerheads; we are at variance; we are not on the one side; we are just on the borders of litigation. He got the land under a lease that has now expired. If you had asked us to help you, I don't know what would have happened.

10,708. The Chairman.—Does Mr Robertson's lease expire just now?

10,709. Mr Burns.—Mr Robertson's lease of the grazing lands away up in the glen is ended, but his lease of the arable land down where his house is is continued, and this is the place that he is talking about. We cannot interfere with him, but if Mr Macrae, 'Balallan,' had asked for it, I should have taken the utmost care to protect all mankind that wanted to make a statement here.

10,710. Mr Macrae.—My lord, with your lordship's permission I would make only one remark, and then I am done. The matter is in your lordship's hands and in the hands of the Royal Commission. These people approached Mrs Chisholm through the factor; they were aware that I had no protection to afford them except the protection that I am endeavouring to secure for them here and now. They approached Mrs Chisholm through the factor, and it is from that quarter, I hold, that they should have had some encouragement and some protection, these forsooth 'independent' people.

10,711. The Chairman.—It is only right to say that we are faced with the significant fact, whatever it may mean, that eight names were sent in from Strathglass as delegates, and the Secretary's information is that there are only three here, whatever the explanation may be.

10,712. Mr Macrae.—These people, my lord, want to come, if they only had the necessary security.

10,713. The Chairman.—Well, eight names were sent as delegates from Strathglass, and they are not here.

10,714. Mr Macrae.—These men are absent and this is the reason.

10,715. Mr Burns.—In the name of Mrs Chisholm, and of Mr Winans, and everybody, I offer them the utmost security.

10,716. The Chairman.—You are quite willing to give that undertaking?

10,717. Mr Burns.—Absolutely; I will have them carried down and taken back, and give them whatever security they want. The request should have been conveyed to me.

10,718. Mr Macrae.—It was conveyed to Mrs Chisholm and to Mr Grant, and there was a petition besides, with this fact mentioned in it.

10,719. The Chairman.—The result, Mr Macrae, is this, that Mr Burns on behalf of The Chisholm estate offers the fullest encouragement to anyone who desires to come here to give evidence before the Commission.

10,720. Mr Macrae.—But, my lord, Mr Burns dropped a very significant hint that these people, or at any rate the one to whom I referred, is a cottar on lands held on lease by the man who made the threat, and the question is, what security has Mrs Chisholm to give the men if that threat is to be put into execution? Mr Burns made the significant suggestion that they had no power whatever to prevent him putting that threat into execution.

10,721. Mr Burns.—I am willing to give the same undertaking on behalf of Comar, on my own responsibility.

10,722. Mr Macrae.—Has he a brief from Comar?

10,723. Mr Burns.—No.

Beauly.
John Brown
Grant.

10,724. Mr Sutherland.—Allow me to make one remark. All this is settled by law; there has been an Act of Parliament passed last year which aims at people who may threaten any person giving evidence before a tribunal or Commission of this kind, by which they are liable to a fine of £100 or three months' imprisonment. It lies in the hands of the usual criminal authorities to put this Act into force.—Witness.—Mr Robertson's threat, whatever it amounted to, had no reference to evidence before this Commission.

10,725. Mr Maccallum.—Mr Grant, you led me to understand that there was no probability of the deer forest area on your estate being increased. Do you still hold to that answer?—There is the sheep farm that Mr Munro referred to.

10,726. It was distinctly conveyed to me by you that there was not any probability of any increase here. You notice there was an increase of 28,000 acres?—I might have had that in my mind, of course, at the time.

10,727. You now withdraw that, and say there is a probability?—There may be a chance that this farm will be cleared.

10,728. You see you admit this, that you were so hopeless of getting a farmer to take Comar that you did not even advertise it?—No.

10,729. And you also made the further statement that in such a case as that it should be turned into a deer forest?—Yes.

10,730. So there is every probability of it being turned into a deer forest?—Yes.

10,731. And therefore you withdraw the impression you have given?—Quite so, if it did have that impression.

10,732. Mr Munro.—In the negotiations for the transfer of Comar farm, who took the initiative?—Comar, by giving us notice that he would go out.

10,733. When the notice of this threat was conveyed to you by the small tenants, did you take any steps to assure them they would be kept skaithless?—Yes, I assured them that there would be no danger of this ever happening.

10,734. Mr George Malcolm, Secretary, Highland Property Association.—I wish to put a question to Mr Grant, first, as to the total area under deer forest. Mr Munro, I think, put the area at 3,000,000 acres. Are you aware, Mr Grant, that by the latest return the total area is 2,552,383 acres? [Hands a document to witness.]—Yes, I see that is the summation brought out here.

10,735. Mr Sutherland.—What is the date of that?

10,736. Mr Malcolm.—4th August 1891.

10,737. The Chairman.—It is Mr Fraser-Mackintosh's Return.

10,738. Mr Malcolm.—Are you aware that there was a finding in Lord Napier's Commission Report that it was necessary in deer forest land to devote 5 acres to the keep of each sheep? You have read that?—I think I read that.

10,739. I will read the passage I refer to:—'We 'believe that on the best forest land it takes about '4 acres to graze a sheep, and on the worst per-'haps 8 acres; but these are both extremes, and over 'the greater portion of the land devoted to deer forests 'we believe the average number of acres required to 'graze a sheep cannot be less than 5.'—Quite so; I said 3, I think.

10,740. If you divide that area of 2½ million acres by five, you get 500,000 sheep, don't you, as the sheep-keeping capacity of the forests?—Yes.

10,741. And, as a practical farmer or as a manager of farms, you know that sheep—Highland sheep—take three years to arrive at maturity?—Yes, I think so.

10,742. So that, although the number of sheep is 500,000, only one-third is put out in each year?—Yes.

10,743. That means that over all the forests 170,000 sheep are annually sent forth?—Yes, I would say that is a high estimate.

Beauly. John Brown Grant.

10,744. I need not enter into detail, but I have made the calculation, and I find that it only yields a fractional part of 1 lb. of meat to the whole population of this country?—Quite so; I understand it must be very small.

10,745. Now, in the course of your examination to-day, a reference was made to some parts of Lord Napier's Report which were called recommendations by that Commission. Are you aware that these, with one exception, were not really recommendations, but mere suggestions?—Well, I understood that they had not the weight of recommendations to the Government, whatever their nature was.

10,746. In one case they say:—'It is our opinion,' in another case they say something like this:—'Assuming that this suggestion,' and so on. The one that is a distinct recommendation is a recommendation that there should be no increase of deer forests which would involve the removal of crofters?—I understood that; that is my opinion.

10,747. In your case, where there has been an increase of afforestment, there were no crofters?—No crofters.

10,748. And therefore no removals?—No.

10,749. And even if this recommendation had been put in force in the Crofters Act, you, of course, would not have gone against anything of that sort?—No, certainly not.

10,750. There was another suggestion made, that afforestment in future should not take place below 1000 feet?—I have heard that suggestion made.

10,751. Do you consider that, if that suggestion were put into legal force, it would be not only detrimental to deer forests but destructive of them?—Oh yes, it is not practicable in any way, compatible with the existence of deer forests.

10,752. Then are you aware, further, that all those recommendations or suggestions, whichever way you look at them, it was a distinct recommendation of that Commission that they should not be made to apply to deer forests existing at that date?—Yes, that is so.

10,753. The remarks upon that point are:—'The 'preceding remarks are not intended to apply to 'existing forests. We would not think it equitable 'that these areas should be subjected to exceptional 'legislation, other than that which may be made 'applicable to agricultural or pastoral lands, even at 'the termination of current leases?'—Quite so.

10,754. Now one of the Commissioners made a reference to an increase of afforestment in Glengarry?—Yes.

10,755. I do not know whether you are fully aware of it?

10,756. The Chairman.—No, there is a misapprehension there; you were mentioned as Mr Malcolm of Glengarry.

10,757. Mr Malcolm.—I beg pardon. I thought Mr Maccallum gave the extent of the extension.

10,758. The Chairman.—Oh no.

10,759. Mr Malcolm.—Some reference was made to the increased expense of wintering. Did I understand you to say that the increased expense of wintering, notwithstanding some diminution in the area of sheep farms, was due to a very serious diminution of the area of low country wintering?—To some extent; that is one of the causes.

10,760. The Chairman.—The witness went into that very fully, Mr Malcolm; I don't think you need detain us on that point. He was quite explicit on the subject.

10,761. Mr Malcolm.—Mr Macleod made some reference to the remarks in your paper about the population in the parish, and about the diminution in the agricultural rental. Was it your object in making the remarks—was it one of your objects at any rate,—to show the effect made upon taxation by a large reduction of rent?—Yes, and that we were spending money on agriculture that we did not receive from it.

10,762. The Chairman.—I am afraid I can hardly allow that line of examination. I think it has been fully exhausted already from this bench. What you have asked already with regard to deer forests was perfectly relevant, especially as your name was directly mentioned.

Beauly. John Brown Grant.

10,763. Mr Malcolm.—May I put a question as to the extent of the taxation in the parish—as to the extent of the rates derived from sporting subjects in the parish?

10,764. The Chairman.—What is your answer to that question, Mr Grant?

10,765. Mr Malcolm.—I wish to put the question in this form, if you please. I understand that, taking the road and poor and school rates in this parish of Kilmorack, they amount to about £1500, and that of that amount no less than £1000 is derived from the sporting subjects?—I can quite understand that.

10,766. Is that the case?—That is very likely the case; of course I have not the figures before me.

10,767. Then when you spoke of the products of a deer forest, you mean, I suppose, the results in the shape of improvements, wages, reduction of taxation, and so on?—Yes.

10,768. The Chairman.—We have had all that fully gone into. I don't think there is any occasion to labour it further.

10,769. Mr Malcolm.—Mr Maccallum put the question to you very properly, as to the opportunities of the crofter class to rise to places of distinction in society?—Yes.

10,770. Is it not equally the case that men in that position, whether in Glencannich or in Glasgow, or anywhere else, have equal opportunities of rising to distinction?—Oh yes, of course; everybody has got good opportunities nowadays.

10,771. Mr Burns.—One question I should like Mr Grant to answer. In Lord Napier's Report of 1884 it is stated [p. 93]:—'We have considered it our duty to 'record unequivocally the opinion that the dedication 'of large areas exclusively to the purposes of sport, as 'at present practised in the Highlands, does not involve 'substantial diminution of food-supply to the nation, and 'we have amply recognised the various benefits which 'are in many cases associated with the sporting system, 'where it is exercised in a liberal and judicious spirit. 'Do you agree with that?—Yes; that is my case.

10,772. And, in an investigation before the House of Commons, Mr Mundella admitted that, supposing all the land now devoted to deer had gone back to sheep, the difference in the price of mutton would not be one penny per pound?—Yes.

10,773. Mr Sutherland.—Can you give us any idea how much venison could reach the population of the country, if it were ever sold?—It is not sold; it is given away for nothing.

10,774. How do you distinguish between a recommendation and a suggestion?—Mr Malcolm has made the distinction very clearly. I myself did not read the Report very carefully.

10,775. You are aware that the suggestion was made that on the east coast of Scotland in no case should a new deer forest come below the 1000 feet level?—I think in one of the Reports——

10,776. In the General Report?—That is so; it appears somewhere.

10,777. Now has any land been made into deer forest under the 1000 feet level?—Oh, I have no doubt it has.

James Campbell.

JAMES CAMPBELL, Crofter, Druim-an-dorsair, Kilmorack (69). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

10,778. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

10,779. What is the name of your holding?—Druim-an-dorsair.

10,780. Was your rent fixed by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

10,781. I see your area is 7 acres arable, 10 acres 3 roods 23 poles outrun, no common grazing: the former rent was £7 and the Fair Rent is £4, 10s. How long have you been living there as a crofter?—Twenty years myself, and my father was there before me. It is not in the same place that my father was.

10,782. But in Strathfarrar?—In Kilmorack.

10,783. How far is your croft from Beauly?—About 3 miles.

10,784. Do you find your croft too small for occupation?—Little enough, and big enough in a way.

10,785. Are you in need of additional grazing?—Yes.

10,786. Then is it your desire to get additional arable land, or only additional grazing?—I would rather get the hill my father had.

10,787. What hill was that?—Farley Hill.

10,788. Is that now deer forest?—Yes, always.

10,789. How long ago is it since the hill was turned into forest?—I believe it is about fifty-eight years since the wood was planted.

10,790. Had it been taken from your father before that?—Not until the wood was planted.

10,791. What stock did your father keep upon that ground?—I do not know what stock my father kept; he was in the habit of putting the cattle on to the hill.

10,792. Is there land on the forest, not under wood, available for grazing purposes?—Yes.

10,793. What extent?—I cannot tell.

10,794. How far is that land you refer to from your croft?—About 300 yards.

10,795. Are there other crofters near you?—Plenty.

10,796. Are they in need of grazing?—They have no pasture, any of them.

10,797. Are they desirous of obtaining pasture if it can be got?—Yes.

10,798. I understand your view to be that you do not wish to leave your holding for a better, but to get grazing added to your holding?—Yes, the place I have will do me all the days of my life.

10,799. Does your holding march with the forest?—It is quite near to the wood.

10,800. Are there a number of crofters near you?—Yes, full of them.

10,801. How many?—I cannot tell you the number.

10,802. Have you an application for enlargement of holdings before the Crofters Commission at present?—Yes.

10,803. And is the application for a portion of this land of Farley?—Yes.

10,804. Then is this the way of it, that if that application is granted, you get all you want in the way of additional land?—Just that; I would have my share of it like any other crofter.

10,805. But if you had your share of it like any other crofter, that would satisfy you, would it?—Yes.

10,806. Now, besides this land for which you have made application to the Crofters Commission, is there any other land in the locality which you ask our attention to?—Yes, to Urchany. There was no forest there during my time, between Kintail and Farley.

10,807. You recollect when there was no deer forest between Kintail and Farley. Is that so?—No; I was only 21 years of age when there was plenty of deer forest.

10,808. You don't remember then when there were no deer forests there?—Yes.

10,809. How were these lands occupied before they were afforested?—Cattle and sheep.

10,810. Were they in the hands of large farmers or crofters or of both?—Not first, but eventually came to that.

10,811. Now before they were in the hands of large farmers, how were those lands occupied?—They put off the crofters, and sheep farmers took it.

10,812. Before the sheep farms came there, the lands were in the hands of crofters to a great extent: is that what you say?—Yes.

10,813. Now were these crofters in townships?—I don't remember the crofters, but I remember the farmers that put them out.

10,814. But were the crofters of whom you speak whom the farmers put out, individual crofters with large holdings, or were they townships?—I cannot say a word about that.

10,815. Can you mention the name of any old place where crofters were, any old village or clachan?—In Urchany.

10,816. Any other one?—No.

10,817. How many crofters do you remember occupying that ground?—I don't remember one of them, but I have heard it said there were fifteen men.

10,818. In Urchany?—Yes.

10,819. Do you remember any anywhere else in that quarter?—No.

10,820. Do you remember the establishment of the large farms; I think you said you did?—Yes.

10,821. How many farms were formed out of the lands to which you refer?—One, Urchany.

10,822. What was the extent of it?—I don't know; there was a great deal of sheep on it.

10,823. Is that farm part of the forest now, or is it still a farm?—A forest.

10,824. Is it part of the forest of Farley?—It is bordering with it.

10,825. What is the name of the forest to which it belongs?—Farley Hill.

10,826. Is the land you are speaking of at Urchany just now embraced in the application to the Crofters Commission?—Well, I don't know about that, but I was thinking that we should get part of the wood.

10,827. Now, besides Urchany, is there any other land suitable for occupation?—No, I don't know but these two hills—Urchany and Farley Hill.

10,828. Farley Hill, I think, is between Urchany and Druim-an-dorsair?—Farley Hill is a little to the east of my house and a little to the west.

10,829. Now, the land you are speaking of at Urchany, as I understand, is not under wood?—No.

10,830. What sort of land is that: is it old arable or grazing land?—They were telling me it was good land, those parties that were working there.

10,831. What kind of land is it: is it under rotation?—Both arable and grazing, arable below and grazing above.

10,832. It is part of a farm of Urchany, you said: what is the name of the farm tenant?—There is no tenant there. The first man that I saw there was Sherriff.

10,833. It is part of the deer forest, is it?—It is a forest altogether.

10,834. Going west from Urchany, is there land west of Urchany suitable for occupation?—No, there is not much worth speaking about till you go into Glen-Strathfarrar.

10,835. Well, we will go into Glen-Strathfarrar; is there land there?—Yes, plenty.

10,836. Now, what part of Glen-Strathfarrar?—It is commencing at Culligran, and continuing as far as Inchvuilt.

10,837. Is Culligran under wood?—Yes, under birch wood.

10,838. And does the wood terminate at Loch Bunucharan, or where does the wood terminate?—On this side of Deanie.

10,839. That is exactly what I mean. Now, after you pass that, what kind of land do you come to near Camus-ochairidh?—Good land.

10,840. But is it grazing land or old arable? Give us a general description of it?—Old arable land with hill along with it.

10,841. Is it land suitable for occupation by crofters, in your opinion?—According to my opinion, it would be very good. The parties that were put out of it were very sorry leaving.

10,842. Who were put out of it?—I did not see but three.

10,843. When did you see three?—In the year 1849 or 1850; I am not sure which.

10,844. Going further up the glen, is there any other land suitable for occupation?—There is a fair share up to Inchvuilt.

10,845. How far is it from Deanie Lodge to Inchvuilt? How long would you take to walk it?—Six miles.

10,846. Is there land lying along the north bank of the river suitable for occupation?—Yes.

Beauly. James Campbell.

10,847. Is there land on the south side?—Not much; there are three places that a person could live on very well.

10,848. Just give us the names of these places?—Inchlair; it is of the worst end I am speaking, and coming along.

10,849. Well, take the west end. Is that on the south side of the river?—Yes.

10,850. What sort of a place is it just now?—A forest.

10,851. Is it near Inchvuilt wood?—Not very far from it.

10,852. What is the name of the next place?—Camus-ochairidh.

10,853. How many crofters could be planted there?—I don't know how many.

10,854. But is there old arable there?—Yes.

10,855. And grazing?—Yes.

10,856. What is the next place?—Blatrale.

10,857. Is there old arable?—Yes.

10,858. Can you tell us of any places on the north side of the river?—Yes.

10,859. What are the names?—Deanie.

10,860. Is there old arable there?—Yes, plenty.

10,861. Now, passing on, and going further up, what is the next place?—Bunacharan.

10,862. Is there old arable on the banks of that loch?—There is old arable there in every step.

10,863. What is the next place you would mention?—Muillie.

10,864. It is close on the loch?—Not very far from it.

10,865. Is there old arable there?—Yes.

10,866. What is the next place between that and Inchvuilt?—Ardchuilc.

10,867. And is there old arable there?—Yes.

10,868. What is the next place?—Uachdar.

10,869. Is there old arable there?—I cannot say very much about it.

10,870. There is a place called Lochavullin?—I am not acquainted with it.

10,871. Are there any mills between Inchvuilt and Farley Wood?—I don't remember.

10,872. Do you know the name Lochavuillin? I think it is a mistake on the map. Now tell me, is there any land, do you think, suitable for occupation beyond Inchvuilt?—No, but Inchvuilt itself.

10,873. I take it, speaking more generally, that along both banks of the river, but especially the north bank from Inchvuilt down to Deanie Lodge, there are considerable tracts of ground that might be profitably occupied by crofters. Is that so?—Yes.

10,874. Is the land low enough in level for occupation?—I did not hear but it was.

10,875. But you know it yourself, I suppose?—Yes.

10,876. Do you yourself at Druim-an-dorsair suffer from blight from late seasons and late harvests?—No; when there is a good season we will have a fair crop, and when there is not a good season it is quite the opposite.

10,877. That is to say, when the season generally is good, it is good with you too?—Yes.

10,878. Is there much danger from serious floods from the river?—I never heard of them making any damage.

10,879. Can you give us any information about any other glens?—No, I cannot say a word about them.

10,880. Do you know anything about Monar?—No.

10,881. Mr Macleod.—Are you speaking of your own knowledge of Glen-Strathfarrar?—Yes, from what I know myself.

10,882. You said that there was a considerable area of old arable land there now without wild birch. Do you remember when it was cleared of birch?—No.

10,883. Do you think there would be any great difficulty in getting rid of the birch?—I think there would. There is a place under it called Gortanmor that would be very suitable.

10,884. You would not say that this land that the birch is growing on would be suitable land for the formation of arable holdings?—No, but it would be suitable for pasture in connection with the arable.

10,885. In connection with the arable at Gortanmor? Beauly. James Campbell.—Yes.

10,886. Then, with regard to the wood at Farley, you think that could be made available for grazing too?—Yes.

10,887. Mr Maccallum.—Are there many crofters in your township, or where you reside at Druim-an-dorsair, in your neighbourhood?—Yes, it is full of them.

10,888. How many have joined in the application for an increase?—I don't know.

10,889. You are one of them?—Yes.

10,890. Besides these, are there others who would like to get more land?—Yes; there are very few there but would like to get what their fathers had.

10,891. You spoke of a number of places in Glen Strathfarrar. Do you remember the whole of these places having been occupied?—I remember three, and gamekeepers.

10,892. You mentioned a number of places; were they townships as a rule?—Three.

10,893. Three in each of these places?—One in each place, so far as I remember.

10,894. All these places are now a deer forest, are they?—Yes.

10,895. Were they made into large sheep runs before being turned into deer forest?—It is the sheep runs that they were. The sheep put the crofters out, and the deer put the sheep out.

10,896. And, in your opinion, are all these places suitable for reoccupation?—According to what I know, they are the best places that I have heard mentioned here.

10,897. Can you give us any idea of the size of holding that you think would be successful in these places that you have mentioned?—Twelve acres, by getting the hill pasture.

10,898. And you would contemplate having a club stock?—(Question repeated in Gaelic by Mr Maccallum.)

10,899. Would you have any stock in common between you?—Common stock would be better, but I am afraid they might disagree about it.

10,900. But their stock would thrive better?—I am not going to say about stock. There would not be as much noise.

10,901. What reason have you to think they would disagree about it?—There was a disagreement in every one that ever was in the world; one man was trying to be bigger than the other.

10,902. Have you had experience of these disagreements about a joint stock?—I saw a part.

10,903. Where did you see a joint stock?—At Farley Hill.

10,904. There was a joint stock there?—The crofters there had it altogether at one time.

10,905. And was it one common stock they had?—Yes, one stock.

10,906. Was it under the management of one shepherd?—At one time every man was looking after his own, and at other times they had a shepherd.

10,907. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You say these lands that you told us of could be occupied by crofters. Do you say so from your own knowledge, or from what you hear others say?—I have my own opinion on that.

10,908. You know the lands well?—Yes, for a long time.

10,909. Do you mean that they could be profitably occupied?—Yes, they were very much against being put out of it.

10,910. Will you kindly tell me what you mean by profitable occupation?—What do you mean by that.

10,911. It is an important point. Do you know any men who would undertake to settle on these lands, cultivate them, put on the stock, build the houses and pay rent?—I don't go to look after that, but I am sure that could be found.

10,912. Do you know the men who would undertake it?—No, it is not in my mind just now.

10,913. With regard to the wood at Farley, what kind of wood is it?—Good wood.

10,914. What kind of wood?—Fir and larch. I was there planting it myself.

10,915. You have told us that the available land is where the wood is now?—It is that part that we were using for pasture until our own grass would grow.

10,916. But in order for crofters to occupy that land now, it would be necessary to clear the wood?—It will not do any harm although the cattle were in the wood now, the wood is so grown.

10,917. Grazing in the wood?—Yes.

10,918. Mr Donald Macrae (for the Highland Land League).—Would your lordship kindly ask him how many acres of old arable land there are in Urchany, and if there are over 150 or 200 acres?

10,919. The Chairman.—Can you tell me how many acres of old arable are in Urchany?—I think there is between 50 and 60, but not much of that was turned over since Mr Sherriff left it.

10,920. When did he leave?—More than fifty years ago.

10,921. Is the extent of old arable not greater than that?—I cannot say how much.

10,922. Mr Macrae.—Would he be surprised to know that there are over 150?

10,923. The Chairman.—Have you ever heard that there were as many as 150 acres?—I cannot say how many acres there were, but there were fifteen families on it.

10,924. Mr Macrae.—He said fifteen families, and every one of them having enough, and well doing.

10,925. The Chairman.—I want to ask you this question. Is there included within what is known as Farley Wood, considerable tracts of ground which are not covered by wood?—No.

10,926. It is all covered with wood, more or less?—Yes, I think it is.

10,927. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You say you helped to plant the wood. Have you not practical knowledge of the management of wood?—I have no knowledge but of planting it.

10,928. You don't know then that it is impossible to manage a wood properly if you once graze cattle on it, because it interferes with the proper course of cutting and planting?—I don't think it would.

10,929. The Chairman.—Mr Peter, you represent the Lovat estate?—I do.

10,930. The Chairman.—And this witness has been giving evidence with regard to the Lovat estate?—Yes.

10,931. Mr Burns.—I have some questions to ask, my lord.

10,932. The Chairman.—I thought you were only for The Chisholm estate?

10,933. Mr Burns.—No, I am appearing for the Lovat estate. (To Witness.) You pay £4, 10s. of rent, don't you?—Yes.

10,934. Do you know that the rent of Farley Forest is £1000 a year?—We heard sometimes it would be that, and sometimes not.

10,935. We will take it as it is in the Valuation Roll, at £1000 a year. How are you going to pay that when you get it?—That is not what we ask, but fair rent.

10,936. But have you any method of thinking how you are going to pay this thousand a year for Farley when you get it?—I am not speaking of that at all.

10,937. You are wanting the Farley Forest, and I am telling you Lord Lovat gets £1000 a year for it. How are you going to pay him that rent, if you intend to pay it?—Although Lord Lovat would get £5000 for it, that is not the price of the place.

10,938. Supposing anybody thought it was right that you should pay Lord Lovat as much as he is getting just now, what is your scheme about you and the rest of you paying the money?—I have no scheme.

10,939. The Chairman.—I don't think you should press this witness about that?

10,940. Mr Burns.—I would not, if there were other witnesses who might be asked. (To Witness.) But I don't suppose you could pay half that rent?—We did not make up our minds yet what to do.

10,941. You had no plan about the rent?—We have a plan that we shall never give that for it.

10,942. Have you any plan how far you should go? Beauly.

10,943. Mr Macrae.—My lord, this man applied for a definite portion marked on the Ordnance Survey Sheet. They don't want this forest. James Campbell.

10,944. The Chairman.—The total rent of the forest of Urchany and Farley is £775 in the Valuation Roll, and I have no doubt this application is only for a very small portion.

10,945. Mr Macrae.—That is so.

10,946. The Chairman.—You can hardly ask this man what rent he would give for a whole forest, of which the rent is not £1000, and of which he only asks a fraction.

10,947. Mr Burns.—The rent is £1000, but it includes household furniture, and servants' wages, &c.

10,948. The Chairman.—It is a little awkward that we have not got the application.

10,949. Mr Burns (to Witness).—What is your notion, Mr Campbell, of what you would give if you got it?—I did not make up my mind, but I think it would be dear enough at 6d. to 9d. per acre.

10,950. You said, and I rather think you said it inconsiderately, that there was no deer forest between Farley and Kintail. What time were you referring to?

10,951. The Chairman.—What he did say was that he remembers a time when there was no deer forest. —Witness.—In my early days I remember when there was no forest between Kintail and Farley.

10,952. Mr Burns.—Do you remember a time when there was no Fasnakyle Forest?—Yes.

10,953. And no Struy Forest?—No.

10,954. And no Glen-Strathfarrar Forest?

10,955. And no Glencannich Forest?—No.

10,956. And no Glen-Affaric Forest?—I don't know; I was not going there.

10,957. And no Guisachan Forest?—I can't give any account of it.

10,958. And no forest at Monar?—I cannot go up there either.

10,959. Did you ever see a map? Do you know that these names are on the maps 150 years ago?—No.

10,960. Did you ever live in Glen-Strathfarrar?—Yes, on the bottom of it for five years.

10,961. When?—Forty years and over.

10,962. And you have not been there since forty years ago?—Yes.

10,963. When?—Yes, with Finlay Macrae that was in Culligran.

10,964. Staying for a night?—For four years.

10,965. But Culligran is at the foot of the glen?—Yes, the first farm.

10,966. The Chairman.—Did you say that you lived there for four years?—Yes.

10,967. When was it you were four years there?—I went there in 1845, and left in 1851.

10,968. Mr Burns.—What arable land is at Camus-ochairidh?—A nice place, but it is the worst place of the whole.

10,969. Is it occupied now?—Gamekeeper.

10,970. It is only a bit of potato ground, is it?—Yes, and oat land.

10,971. It is a croft for a keeper or a shepherd?—Yes.

10,972. Is not this the story, that these little bits of arable land are either little crofts for keepers or shepherds: they are not farms?—Gamekeepers and shepherds never had them until they were taken from the people.

10,973. But there are small bits of land suitable for keepers and shepherds, suitable for having three cows and their followers?—Yes, as gamekeepers are situated there now.

10,974. The Chairman.—And they would be very good for crofters?—Yes.

10,975. And a greater number of crofters could live there than the gamekeepers at present?—Yes, three times.

10,976. How many keepers are there?—I don't know. There are four or five.

10,977. How many crofters would you place there if you had a chance?—If we got the pasture along with it, I will put two on Camus-ochairidh

Beauly. — James Campbell.

10,978. How many in the whole glen?—I would require to make up my mind

10,979. Could you put twenty?—Yes, twenty.

10,980. Can you name some other figure yourself?—Yes.

10,981. How many?—Twenty.

10,982. You think twenty would do. How much rent would they pay apiece?—I don't know what they would pay.

10,983. Can't you suggest?—I am not going to say.

10,984. How much land would they have—arable land?—Six or seven acres each.

10,985. Would they pay £10 a piece?—I don't know what they would pay, but that would be too dear.

10,986. Well, £5?

10,987. The Chairman.—He does not enter on the subject of rent, Mr Burns. I will put this question. What would you consider to be a fair rent payable by the crofters whom you propose to see settled on this ground of which we are speaking?—If we get the pasture along with it, about 12s. per acre.

10,988. How much rent would you make payable by each crofter?—I cannot tell.

10,989. What rent would you propose to fix, supposing the rent to be a fair rent; what rent would you propose to make payable by each crofter?—Unless the hill is along with the arable, 8s. an acre is dear enough.

10,990. Mr Burns.—Would you pay £100 for the whole glen amongst you?—I don't know what will be just now.

10,991. Mr Sutherland.—I wish to make this point clear with regard to the application. You were asked if you wanted £1000 worth of land without paying £1000 of money. Did you ask the £1000 worth of land?—I did not ask that.

10,992. You only asked for Farley Wood: is that so?—No.

10,993. And you were asked if you were to pay for that the whole rent of the Farley Forest?—No.

10,994. And you said that you were not willing to pay that. You only wanted the Farley Wood?—Yes.

10,995. But not the Farley Forest?—Yes, and the hill at the back.

10,996. But not the whole of the Farley Forest?—Every bit of the forest.

10,997. And you were willing to pay the same rent for it as you paid for the other part of your holdings?—Yes, according to what the Commissioners would fix.

10,998. You are perfectly willing to pay any fair rent for any additional land that is given to you?—Yes.

10,999. And everything you told us about Glen-Strathfarrar was spoken from your own information and experience?—Yes.

11,000. Mr Burns.—You said that the sheep put the crofters out of Glen-Strathfarrar. Were there ever crofters in Glen-Strathfarrar?—Yes, it was the sheep that put them out.

11,001. When?—I cannot tell you.

11,002. Mr Macrae.—The man said, my lord, that there were crofters there.

11,003. Mr Burns (question repeated).—I never saw there but three tenants, and I saw the place where they were in.

11,004. What was the place?—One of them in Inchlair, the other in Ardchuilc, and the other in Camusochairidh.

11,005. But there were no club farms?—No, everyone was on his own land.

11,006. The Chairman.—What rent did these crofters that you speak of pay? Do you know the rent any of them paid?—I cannot tell.

Duncan Campbell.

DUNCAN CAMPBELL, labourer, Beauly (80).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

11,007. The Chairman.—Do you reside in Beauly?—Yes, for some time back; for the last forty years.

11,008. Do you know about Farley Deer Forest?—Yes, I was shepherd there twice.

11,009. Did you hear the evidence given by Campbell?—No, I did not hear what he said. Beauly. —

11,010. When were you shepherd there?—Sixty years ago, with the farmers. Duncan Campbell.

11,011. Was it under wood then?—No.

11,012. When did it go under wood?—I believe thirty-seven or thirty-eight years ago.

11,013. Is it larch or birch?—I was not working at it, but I think it is larch and fir.

11,014. Is the whole of the land there called Farley Wood under wood, or is it partly wood and partly rough ground?—Yes, so far as the march came to The Chisholm's ground. The tenants in the Farley district went to this hill ground, and the hill was let to them by the factor on the Lovat estate.

11,015. Are you one of the applicants for additional land from that quarter?—No.

11,016. What is it you desire specially to tell us?—Anything that is asked of me.

11,017. Mr Donald Macrae.—I think he undertook to speak about Strathconan.

11,018. The Chairman.—The note furnished to me is 'Farley Deer Forest and Strathconan.'

11,019. Do you know about Strathconan?—Yes, I was born there.

11,020. In what part of Strathconan were you born?—Clachundulan; my father paid rent there for thirty-five years.

11,021. What is the length of Strathconan?—I am not very sure, but I suppose it will be 12 miles long.

11,022. Is there land there suitable for occupation by crofters?—Yes, for farmers or crofters, good land in Strathconan.

11,023. On both sides of the river?—Yes, both sides.

11,024. And is it land that would do partly for arable and partly for grazing?—Every 'town' has the hill along with it.

11,025. Can you give us the names of any of the old places or townships?—I hope I can.

11,026. Well, go on and do it, if you please?—On the south side, Coire-Feola, Achadh-an-Eas, Ach-na-h-Uidhe, Inbhir-Chomhrain, Blair-na-Bidh, Baile-na-Creige, A' Chrannaich, Dail-Breac, Baile-an-Uillt.

11,027. Are there tenants there?—It is in the hands of the landlord. Glaic-Odhar, Annat, Baile-an-Uillt (there are two places called Baile-an-Uillt) An Caorann. On the north side of the river, Coire-bhuic, Bac-a'-Lianian, Scaird-Ruadh, A' Charnach, Innis-Longard, Clachundulan Dail-riabhach, A' Chroit, Innis-Mheanaidh, Druim-an-t-Suidhe, Goirtean-nan-Ullag, Baile-'Bhlair, Druim-Fearna, Strathan-Mor, Baile-Mhuilinn, Am Por-Ruinn, Daile-na-Croiche, Achadh-Lorachan, Druimean-Buidhe, Creagan-nan-Mollachd, Leac-Ruadh, Bun-an-t-Srath (or Druimean-Riabhach), Fearnach.

11,028. Were these places at one time occupied by crofters?—Yes.

11,029. Every one of them?—Yes.

11,030. All these places were occupied by crofters?—Yes, and there were nice farms during that time also.

11,031. Were these individual holdings—individual crofts, and small farms, or were they townships?—Three and four in some places.

11,032. Some of them having as many as three or four separate families and some of them individual crofts?—No, there were no individual crofts.

11,033. Then in every one of these places was there more than one family?—Yes.

11,034. That is within your recollection, is it?—Yes.

11,035. Then was the glen cleared of the small holders?—Yes.

11,036. What year, or years, was that?—A great many of them went out when the property was under trustees. Before Mr Balfour bought the property it was under trustees.

11,037. Did the main clearances take place while the property was under trustees?—Yes, one man, John Fraser, had Urchany at one time.

11,038. I cannot get a sequence of question and answer from you. Who was John Fraser?—He had a farm over at Inchberry here.

11,039. What had he to do with the clearances?—To put sheep on and shepherds; it was he who got the place.

Beauly. Duncan Campbell.

11,040. Mr Donald Macrae.—The witness mentioned that fifteen were put out in one day.

11,041. The Chairman.—But that does not help me except to a very slight extent.

11,042. Mr Macrae.—It was stated by the witness, and it might lead your lordship to follow it up. It was not repeated by the interpreter.

11,043. The Chairman.—What I want to get from you just now is the particular date; how many years ago was it that these clearances took place?—I am sure fifty years ago.

11,044. The property was in the hands of trustees,—whose trustees?—Lord Conan's trustees.

11,045. Can you tell us when Lord Conan died?—I don't know.

11,046. Was it this century?—Pooh.

11,047. Can you tell me when it was that the late proprietor's father bought the property?—There are three there in succession: I am not very sure.

11,048. It was the late proprietor's grandfather, I think, that purchased it?—Yes, the grandfather of the present Mr A. J. Balfour. He was the first that came there.

11,049. And no clearances have taken place since then?—Oh yes, plenty; they were demolishing the houses, and the factor has demolished my own house, too.

11,050. How many years is it since the last clearance took place?—About forty years ago.

11,051. You said you remember of fifteen being cleared at one time?—I might remember that: they were pulling down the houses.

11,052. I suppose you mean you do remember it?—Yes, and they pulled down the house myself and my mother were in.

11,053. How many years ago was that?—The best part of forty or forty-four years.

11,054. They pulled down the house your mother was in. What rent did she pay?—We had a value of £20 of rent. It is from another party we took it, not from the landlord.

11,055. Who did you take it from?—Eben Macaulay.

11,056. Was he a farmer?—He was a farmer, but he gave it up; he came over to Cabrich and had a croft there.

11,057. Was your mother a sub-tenant?—Yes.

11,058. Were most of the crofters that were removed sub-tenants, or were they tenants of the proprietor?—Some of them were sub-tenants and some were tenants of the proprietor.

11,059. Had all these tenants that were removed portions of arable land?—Yes.

11,060. And hill grazing?—Yes, the hill along with it.

11,061. What class of stock did they keep: did they keep cattle?—Cattle and sheep.

11,062. Did any of them keep horses?—One horse each.

11,063. Had all of them a horse?—Yes.

11,064. All that land, as I understand you to say, was turned into sheep farms?—Yes, it was a hill for sheep.

11,065. Are the remains of the houses of these crofters still quite visible?—Yes.

11,066. Over the whole extent of ground to which you have referred?—Yes, all over the ground.

11,067. Were these holdings situated on the bank of the river on each side, near the river bank for the most part?—The south did not belong to the north.

11,068. What do you mean by the south not belonging to the north?—The whole place belonged to the same landlord.

11,069. Are you of opinion, because you are giving us much information, that the whole of that land, arable and grazing, would be suitable for occupation by crofters now?—Yes, and it would keep five.

11,070. What do you mean by 'it'?—Blair-na-Bidh.

11,071. That is the place you were in yourself?—Yes.

11,072. And would each of the other places you have mentioned keep more than one crofter?—Yes, I am sure two.

11,073. There are thirty-five places, so that would be accommodation for at least seventy to eighty crofters. Is that land all under forest now, or is it under sheep?—All under forest.

11,074. How long after the last of the removals was it turned into forest?—I am sure over forty years ago.

11,075. Is any of the land which was formerly in the possession of crofters under wood now?—Yes, they put a plantation there in a good lot of it.

11,076. Can you tell us what part was turned into wood: is there a wood called Strathconan Wood?—Yes, there is a wood at Coille-Bhùiridh.

11,077. Can you give me the names of the places where there is wood growing now, formerly in the occupation of crofters?—Near Dail-na-Croiche there is a wood at Bun-an-t-Srath.

11,078. Any more?—No.

11,079. Were you going to say anything about the wood of Bun-an-t-Srath?—It is a birch wood.

11,080. Is it the only wood?—Yes.

11,081. Is all the land that was formerly in the occupation of its small holders at a low enough level for cultivation and grazing purposes?—Yes, it was wintering the sheep for us and wintering the cattle.

11,082. And did your crops ripen there in the general case?—Yes, as early as it would here [Beauly]. There is not a Highland district in the country before Strathconan for ripening.

11,083. And you were able to grow oats and barley, and turnips and potatoes?—Yes, and very good oats, too, but no barley nor turnips. Turnips were not in fashion at the time. We had plenty grass and straw.

11,084. Mr Macleod.—You gave the names of those townships where there were people, but you said there were tenants as well, didn't you? Were there any large tenants as well as those small ones?—Not very big. £20 was the highest.

11,085. Besides the people that were in these places that you mentioned, were there any other tenants in the Strath?—I mentioned all the 'towns' to you.

11,086. And there were no people on the Strath except those that were on these 'towns'?—No.

11,087. Can you tell us how many sheep farms the Strath was formed into after it was cleared?—I don't know of anyone but Mr Gordon's, the proprietor of Arabella.

11,088. I thought you mentioned some people who came from Inchberry and turned out some of the people. Who was the man that came from Inchberry?—John Fraser.

11,089. What was he?—He had the arable farm of Inchberry, and he also had Glengowrie and Urchany grazing farms, and he had a brother called Dr Fraser, who had Kerrow in Strathglass.

11,090. You cannot tell us how many families were in the Strath altogether; you never heard that?—There were six or seven families in the 'town' that I was in myself.

11,091. If I gave you time to go over each of them, could you give the number of families that were in each 'town'?—Yes, I can tell it now. In Coire-Feola, 4 families; Achadh-an-Eas, 5 families; Ach-na-h-Uidhe, none there lately, but it would maintain one crofter; Inbhir-Chomhrain, 6 families; Blair-na-Bidh, 7 houses, but there were only 5 holdings. Some of the cottars were small.

11,092. It is the number of families. I don't mind whether they were tenants or cottars?—In Blair-na-Bidh, 7 families, as I said; Baile-na-Creige, 4 families; A' Chrannaich, 4 families; Dail-Breac, in my time there was only one tenant, John Macdonald, but there were small tenants before my time.

11,093. Did you ever hear how many small tenants?—There was one part forming a portion of Dail-Breac called Cnoc-Dubh, where there were 2 tenants. In Baile-an-Uillt, 2 families Glaic-Odhar, 3 families; Annat, 1

Beauly.

Duncan Campbell.

family; Baile-an-Uillt, 4 or 5 families; An Caorann, 2 families; Coire-Bhuic, 7 families; Bac-a'-Lianain, 2 families; Scaird-Ruadh, 9 families; before they were cleared out. They were removed by Colin Munro. A' Charnach, 4 families; Innis-Longard, 1 family; Clach-lonndrain, 2 families; Dail-Riabhach, 2 families; A' Chroit, 2 families; Innis-Mheanaidh, 5 families at any rate; Druim-an-t-Suidhe, 1 family; Goirtean-nan-Ullag, 1 family; Baile-Bhlair, 4 families; Druim-Fearna, 3 families; Strathan-Mor, 3 families; Baile-Mhuilinn, 6 families I believe; Am Por-ruinn, 4 families paying rent; Daile-na-Croich, 4 families; Achadh-Lorachan, 3 families; in my early recollection there were 3 tenants, but there is only 1 now; Druimean-Buidhe, 4 families; Creagan-nam-Mollachd, 1 family; Leac-Ruadh, 1 family; Bun-an-t-Srath, 2 families; Fearnach, 2 families.

11,094. Mr Macleod.—Would you take the trouble of reading them out to him, as it is a matter of some importance. (List read over by the Secretary.)

11,095. The Chairman.—Are these all correct?—Yes, as far as I know.

11,096. In Bac-a'-Lianain were there not 4, 1 principal tenant and 3 cottars?—No, just the 2.

11,097. Of course you remember all these places yourself?—Yes, and I remember the people who were there. It was the father of Mr Macrae, the horse-hirer here, who was in Bac-a'-Lianain.

11,098. And he had 2 cottars, or how many?—He used to give houses to people there, but they had only got the houses. He was the tenant of the land.

11,099. How many houses then were there?—3.

11,100. Besides Mr Macrae's own house?—Yes.

11,101. So that is 4?—Yes; there was the family of the tenant himself, and the other 3 tenants.

11,102. Were there any other houses that you have not counted in this list?—I believe there was a house or two in Coire-Mhuilt that I did not mention. In addition to these there was a school-house in Baile-Mhuilinn.

11,103. Except for these one or two, you think you have mentioned every family that was in the Strath at the time you speak of?—I think I did, as far as I know I mentioned them all; but there might be a good many since I left the district. I left the district long ago.

11,104. What year do you speak of?—I cannot well tell the year, but I believe there are some men in the village here who could tell the year. There is an old man from Strathconan living in the village here, I believe he could give you the year; he is the father of the coachman in the employment of Mr Mackenzie, banker, Beauly.

11,105. Can you give me within ten years of the time?—It is at any rate forty years ago; it is a little over forty years; I am forty years here.

11,106. What were you doing at the time you were speaking of?—I had been droving, and it was not to my profit. I used to go to Mull and the Isle of Skye, and travelling the world. I lost £100 in one year in Mull transactions.

11,107. That is at the time you speak of?—But since I came down here I was in the employment of Mr Maclennan, Tomich, and I was in the employment of Mr Archibald Maclennan, attending to his sheep so long as he had any.

11,108. Would you be 30 years of age at the time you speak of?—I was for two years a shepherd in Strathconan; but I have been thirty-five years in Beauly, and these two years were before I was in Beauly. I was a shepherd before.

11,109. You are speaking of forty or fifty years ago?—Yes, that is so.

11,110. Were the people put away all at one time, or was it over a number of years?—By degrees. They were not sent away at the same time, and those who did not willingly remove, had their houses pulled down.

11,111. Can you tell me how many years the sheep were there after the people were put away?—In the township that I was in, it was only a year or two under sheep before it was put under deer after the small tenants left; but Scuravuillin, the place where I was a shepherd, is still under sheep belonging to the proprietor.

Beauly.

Duncan Campbell.

11,112. So that there was no great length of time between the putting away of the people and the putting away of the sheep?—No.

11,113. Going back to the condition of things before the Strath was cleared at all, can you tell us now about the crops?—They would have a good crop in a good year, and when it was not a good year, they would not have a good crop. We made meal there.

11,114. How often would you have a bad year?—Strathconan is low lying, and if there was a bad year they felt it down here as soon as they felt it in Strathconan. I have travelled over many a district, but I never saw a Highland district more natural than Strathconan.

11,115. Speaking from your own experience, you would say that the crops grow as well in Strathconan as down in the Aird here?—I think so, in parts of Strathconan.

11,116. What about the other parts?—When crops were done they were obliged to earn their food otherwise, and buy it.

11,117. What was it that was against these places: is it that the land was poor naturally, or that there were floods, or frost, or what was it?—There were too many people in some of these districts, and they did not go away to earn their living elsewhere.

11,118. But I am speaking just now about the crops, not about the condition of the people?—The land was not so good, it was drier.

11,119. Were the potatoes ever frosted within your knowledge?—Not often; the water ran.

11,120. You spoke about the corn crop; were there any mills in Strathconan?—Yes, and they are there still.

11,121. How many do you remember in your first days?—There was only 1 mill and there is only 1 mill now, and the place where the mill is is Baile-mhuillin.

11,122. I suppose they made meal there every year more or less?—Yes, no matter how little it would be. Although it were only a boll, we ground it.

11,123. About the stock that you had on the place. I think your own father died when you were pretty young?—No, he did not.

11,124. You said about yourself that you were put out of there with your mother. Where was your father then?—He was in Clach-lonndrain. He was thirty-five years paying rent there.

11,125. Where was it that you were put out of yourself?—Blair-na-Bidh; my mother was then a widow, and they pulled down the house, and then she came to Beauly.

11,126. What sort of stock did you put on the hill there?—There were 150 sheep for every £20 of rent, and the rent of the town was £100.

11,127. Then had they cattle in their souming as well for the £20?—We had three milk cows each on the low ground; the sheep were on the hill ground. There was not a town nor a place in the district better for a milk cow than it.

11,128. For the £20 they had three cows and their followers and 150 sheep?—Yes.

11,129. Then tell me how you held the sheep. Were they held in common, or did each one hold his own flock?—In my time each tenant had his own sheep, but Mr Smith, the former factor for Mr Balfour, got some tenants to have a joint stock, but that does not refer to the township I was in, but some other townships on the estate. In this particular place the factor himself took the stock at valuation from us, and the place was converted into a forest.

11,130. Then as to the place where you had this stock in common, was it a bigger place or a smaller place?—The place is Glaic-odhar; it is not a big place.

11,131. I don't want you to answer this question unless you can speak from your own knowledge, but do you remember how they got on with this stock in common?—They got on very well. Mr Smith himself took the stock from them since then and sent the tenants away. The two tenants in Glaic-odhar saved money.

11,132. Now about the sheep stock and the cattle that they had. You were, of course, a drover yourself, and you had been seeing something of the world. How did the stock they had compare with the other parts of the Highlands? How did the Strathconan stock compare with the Mull stock?—The principal parts of Strathconan will produce sheep as good as any place. It is in Glenorran, a place called Coire-nan-Stuc and Aonach-mor. That was the first deer forest in Strathconan.

11,133. Can you tell us how much stock the tenants had there before they were cleared out, compared with the stock elsewhere?—The stock was good then, but not so heavy as now. In the old times they used to have yeld cattle and horses on the hill, and that would deteriorate the quality of the sheep.

11,134. It was black cattle that they had?—Yes, Highland black cattle.

11,135. Speaking with all the knowledge that you have got of Strathconan, do you think that it could be profitably cultivated by small tenants?—Yes, it is them that could do that, if they got the place.

11,136. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I want to ask you first about four places—Coire-Feola, Achadh-an-Eas, Scaird-Ruadh, and A' Charnach. Were not the people removed from there before the year 1839, before Mr Balfour purchased the property?—Not from A' Charnach, but they were sent away from Invermeany. Colin Munro put the tenants away from Coire-Feola and Achadh-an-Eas before Mr Balfour acquired the property.

11,137. And Scaird-Ruadh?—The same Colin Munro also sent them away from Scaird-Ruadh.

11,138. Now, with regard to the other places, do you remember the potato famine of 1846?—Yes, I remember that well.

11,139. Was there not a great deal of distress among the crofters at that time?—Yes, meal was dear; it was 36s. per boll.

11,140. And was it not on account of the poverty and discomfort in which they lived that the late Mr Balfour removed some crofters?—The factor, Mr Smith, saw that the land was not sufficient to support them all.

11,141. Too many crofters for the land?—Yes, in every township, and they did not go away elsewhere to earn anything.

11,142. Was not every care taken in their removal that they should not suffer more than could be helped?—He was sending them away, pulling down the houses.

11,143. Were they not given two or three years' notice before they were removed?—I don't think it; he did not give that to our township, at any rate.

11,144. And were not some of them excused two years' rent before they were removed?—I never heard that. We did not get the place for nothing, at any rate.

11,145. Were they not supplied with as much work as could be found for them at a full market wage?—Those down at Milton and Am Por-Ruinn, in the neighbourhood of Mr Balfour's own house, got labour, but not those in the upper parts of the Strath.

11,146. Did not some settle at Knockfarrel, near Strathpeffer?—Yes, they were obliged to leave Strathconan, and they came in and settled in Knockfarrel, and they are there still to-day; and Mulbuie and the Black Isle are full of people removed from Strathconan.

11,147. And they did well after they left?—Every man of them did well there. Each man will have a cow.

11,148. Did not the removal of these crofters who did well when they went away give more room and therefore benefit those who remained behind?—Yes, Mr Smith thinned them down until he reduced the number to such as the district would maintain, but the best lands were put under deer.

11,149. But if the crofters were replaced in the places you have named to the same number as they existed fifty years ago, would there not be great difficulty for them to live?—No, the land is so long out of cultivation that it would yield a first-rate crop to-day.

11,150. But for how long would the land go on yielding that?—If it were kept well, and manured, it would keep in good crops for a long time; but under present conditions it would give crops for three years in succession with very little manure.

11,151. It would require considerable expenditure on the land to keep it yielding good crops?—Not much; the greatest difficulty would be the building of the houses.

11,152. The Chairman.—I think it is only fair in this inquiry to call attention to the statement made a propos of the line of examination by Mr Gerald Balfour before the Colonisation Committee, of which the present Secretary for War was the chairman, on 21st July 1890. The account of the matter he gives is this:—'After the advent of the potato disease in 1846, 'the destitution upon the estate became so great, and 'the outlook so serious, that my father, who had by 'that time entered into possession of the property, 'determined to effect a complete reorganisation of the 'management of the estate, and to establish it once for 'all on a basis such as would make a permanent rise in 'the standard of comfort possible. The essential con-'dition of success was that the population should bear 'a reasonable relation to the capacity of the crofts, 'together with the opportunities of earning wages from 'labour on the estate. In my father's judgment the 'number of the inhabitants, reduced as it was, was 'still too large to fulfil this condition. He came to 'the conclusion that it must be still further diminished, 'and that the holdings of the small tenants must be 'rearranged, and the practice of squatting (that is to 'say, allowing the children on marriage to settle upon 'the parents' holdings) must be abolished. This led to 'the removal in 1850 of twenty-seven families, or, in all, '123 persons, including children, 385 persons remain-'ing on the estate. There were 385 persons after 'these removals, and that number has now dwindled to '233. There have been no evictions and no removals 'since that time. All the old people were left on the 'estate; no old people were removed; they have 'gradually died off. In consequence of my father's 'reforms in the management of the estate, the people 'have been far more active-minded, and far more 'willing to go; many are living in Inverness or else-'where; there is far less disposition to cling to the 'land than there was. The children have gone off on 'their own account, and anything like squatting has 'been strictly prohibited upon the estate, so that this 'reduction from 385 to 233, at which it stands at the 'present time, has been effected independently of any 'compulsion exercised by the proprietor.' That is the account given so recently as 1890.

11,153. Mr Sutherland.—I don't know whether it would be to advantage that I should read the cross-examination upon that statement of Mr Gerald Balfour's, but perhaps the facts may be brought out by the few questions I have to put to the witness.

11,154. Was it in your opinion a good way to improve the state of the people by putting them away?—Those who remained had a better chance.

11,155. Would you kindly say how many are remaining now?—I don't know; I left the district long ago.

11,156. Do you know if Mr Balfour made any provision for the places to which these people went?—I did not hear, I am not aware.

11,157. You did not hear that he made any such provision before he removed them?—The greatest kindness that he did in my own experience was to send his horses for our furniture to Dail-Breac. I did not hear of their making any provision in the settlements to which the crofters went.

11,158. You don't know that he went to Knockfarrel at Strathpeffer, and made arrangements for them there as to places to which they should go?—I did not hear that. I heard it said it was Mr Mackenzie of Millbank who got places at Strathpeffer.

Beauly.

Duncan Campbell.

11,159. So that if they were indebted to any person it would be to Mr Mackenzie?—Yes.

11,160. Did Mr Balfour make any arrangements about Mulbuie before they were sent there?—I don't know. I did not hear. Mulbuie belongs principally now to Sir Kenneth Mackenzie of Gairloch, and Mr Gillanders of Highfield.

11,161. Did the people find homes made for them?—No, they did not. They got lots of dry heathery land, and they had to build their own houses.

11,162. And did they get any compensation for the houses you said were pulled down?—No, I did not hear of it.

11,163. So Mr Balfour's improvement of them was limited entirely to turning them out of their houses?—That is all.

11,164. Mr Macleod.—You were speaking about your droving experience. I forgot to put one question to you. You said that you lost some money by it?—Yes.

11,165. You had that money on leaving Strathconan, hadn't you?—Yes, it was since I came to Beauly that I lost most money.

11,166. But you had money on leaving Strathconan?—Yes.

11,167. And that is the money that you spoke of losing?—Yes.

11,168. Mr Burns.—As to the Mr Balfour you are talking about. What is your date?—Was it the grandfather of the present Mr Balfour who tried to re-arrange the glen by removing the population?

11,169. Mr Macleod.—Allow me to say this, that if you will kindly remember—I say this, because I was chiefly responsible for it—I mentioned the name of no proprietor, and desired to make no reflection on any proprietor, because I know nothing of who the proprietor was.

11,170. Mr Burns.—Still it has a relation to some things that were said. (To Witness.) What is the date you refer to?

11,171. The Chairman.—Mr Balfour purchased the estate in 1839. The proceedings we are now hearing of took place under the father of Mr A. J. Balfour.

11,172. Mr Burns.—You are not suggesting that the present Mr Balfour had anything to do with it?—No, no.

11,173. The Mr Balfour you speak about tried to re-arrange the estate as best he could, and the result was that he thought that the population should be somewhat decreased, and that was done. Did you suffer by it?—I lost by being sent away.

11,174. Where did you go?—To Beauly.

11,175. And you became?—A drover.

11,176. What did you do in Strathconan. You were a crofter, I suppose? Your mother was the tenant?—We took the share that one Eben Macaulay had in the township, and we were there for ten years. We did not take it direct from the proprietor, but Eben Macaulay assigned his tenancy to us.

[Adjourned.]

Beauly.

TWELFTH SITTING.

BEAULY, JUNE 15, 1893.

Present:—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
Michael Hugh Shaw Stewart, Esq., M.P.
Angus Sutherland, Esq., M.P.
James Noel Muller Forsyth, Esq.
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
John Macleod, Esq.
Henry Munro, Esq.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

Roderick Maclean, Manse Cottage, Fasnakyle, Strathglass, (50)—examined. Roderick Maclean.

11,177. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No, I am a watcher in Mr Winans' service.

11,178. Is Manse Cottage where you live?—Yes.

11,179. What wage do you get from Mr Winans?—3s. a day.

11,180. And how long have you been in his employment?—About eighteen years.

11,181. Did you enter his employment when he first acquired land in the north?—There were some before me.

11,182. But not many, I suppose?—I was in his service before he took any of The Chisholm property.

11,183. And you have been with him ever since?—Yes.

11,184. Can you tell me the different additions that have been made to the Winans' forest during the last eighteen years: begin with the first?—All Chisholm's property was added to it since.

11,185. All The Chisholm property that is in forest has been added since you became his servant?—Yes.

11,186. Was all the property previously under sheep, or partly under sheep and partly under deer?—Partly under sheep and partly under deer; Comar was under sheep. Mr Winans took it over from Lord Tweedmouth; it was a forest before he got it. He had the low part from Mr Robertson, Comar, and was getting £500 a year for the grazing.

11,187. Mr Winans took it from Mr Robertson?—Yes.

11,188. And then after he held it some time he turned it into forest?—Immediately after he got it.

11,189. What extent of land belonging to The Chisholm estate was added to the Winans forest, altogether, within the last eighteen years, roughly?—I could not exactly tell you the amount; he had very near the whole of the west part of it—nearly the whole of the estate.

11,190. Nearly the whole of the west part of the estate?—Yes.

11,191. Did that include some tracts of arable land?—At Knockfin.

11,192. The arable land at Knockfin. Was that land under rotation?—Yes.

11,193. Did it include any other arable land?—I was here yesterday, and I heard that two parts of it were taken up then. Some part was added this year; part of Fasnakyle was added to the forest: that was not "taken up" at all yesterday.

11,194. I will come to that; but was there arable on Knockfin added to the Winans' forest?—All the land in Knockfin was handed over to Mr Winans, the same as it is now.

11,195. And was there arable land then?—I could not exactly tell you; there is plenty arable land there.

11,196. And, of course, when Knockfin became part of the forest, that land also became part of the forest?—Yes.

11,197. Was there a considerable tract of it, or was it only a small portion?—It is in different places; there is some of it in wood.

11,198. And some is arable, is that so?—I could not exactly say; I would say myself that there would be something over 100 acres arable.

11,199. Had that been reclaimed land, or had it always been arable in your time?—I have seen part of it worked.

11,200. Part of it was reclaimed?—It was worked about thirty years back when Mr Williamson was in Knockfin.

11,201. He was working that arable?—Yes.

11,202. Did he reclaim land in his time or did he not? Just say what you remember about it: you need not have any hesitation in answering?—He was working all the bottom part of it; but there were some crofts up there that Mr Williamson was not taking in at all.

11,203. Passing on to Fasnakyle, what were you saying about it?—There are 12 to 16 acres arable.

11,204. Where is that?—It is down where Fasnakyle Lodge is.

11,205. It is near Fasnakyle Lodge, is it?—Yes.

11,206. Is that land under wood now?—No, it is under crop now.

11,207. How far is it from Fasnakyle Lodge?—About 200 yards.

11,208. What is the extent of it?—I think between 12 and 16 acres arable, and about 30 acres altogether of land under crop; that is what the petitioners were wanting.

11,209. Mrs Chisholm's petitioners were wanting that for a cow's grass and additional land?—Yes.

11,210. And that is part of Fasnakyle?—Yes.

11,211. Who is cropping that land at present?—Duncan Robertson, Comar.

11,212. Part of his farm?—I was told that it was added to the forest lately.

11,213. But was it formerly part of his farm?—Yes, and the crop belongs to him now.

11,214. But you have heard in the district that it has been recently added to the forest?—Yes.

11,215. Now do you mean to Mr Winans' forest?—No, I don't believe it is Mr Winans' forest.

11,216. What forest?—I could not tell whether Mr Winans took the place or not.

11,217. Do you know whether it has been re-let to Mr Robertson?—No, I am not sure; but we were told that it was to be added to the forest, but we put in the petition before Comar got it. Comar's lease was out when we put in the petition.

11,218. Were you one of the petitioners?—Yes.

11,219. How many petitioners were there altogether?—We put in three petitions, and I would like Mr Grant to hand over the other two.

11,220. There were three petitions altogether?—Yes.

11,221. To whom was the first petition presented?—It was sent open, through Mr Grant the factor, to Mrs Chisholm.

11,222. Addressed to Mrs Chisholm but sent to Mr Grant in an open envelope?—Yes.

11,223. How many people were in that petition?—I think it is ten.

11,224. How long afterwards was the second petition presented?—I could not give you the date, but very shortly.

11,225. Were they the same petitioners or different petitioners?—The same.

11,226. Ten again?—The same.

11,227. Then there was a third petition?—Yes.

11,228. Were the second and third petitions addressed to Mrs Chisholm or to Mr Grant?—I could not say: Mr Mackenzie, our Free Church minister, sent the other one in the name of the meeting.

11,229. In the name of a public meeting?—Yes.

11,230. Whose petition was the third one: was it from Mr Mackenzie?—Yes.

11,231. Were the petitioners the same?—Something of the same, wanting the grazing of a cow each.

11,232. The petition was to get the grazing of a cow and nothing more?—The keep of a cow all the year round.

11,233. What was the answer or answers returned to these petitions?—For my own part I did not get any answer at all.

11,234. But I suppose you know an answer came somehow or other?—That they had no ground to give us.

11,235. Who returned that answer?—I believe it was Mr Grant.

11,236. Was there any written answer returned?—Not that I am aware of.

11,237. You never saw one?—No.

11,238. Now, I don't think I got from you—I missed it if I did—what was the date of the first petition?—I could not exactly give you the date.

11,239. But about what time?—I am not prepared to say.

11,240. Was it this year?—Yes.

11,241. They were all presented one immediately after the other, I suppose?—Yes, we put them in soon after the other: we heard that they were going to let the place.

11,242. Was the first of these petitions put in before the land was let to Mr Robertson?—Yes.

11,243. Before that?—The first two were.

11,244. You mentioned part of The Chisholm estate as having been added to the forest within the last eighteen years. I want you to tell me what other additions have been made to the forest during that time?—The sheep are in Comar's ground yet. Mrs Chisholm still had the sheep on that part of it.

11,245. What other additions, if any, have been made to the Winans' forest in your time?—There is Kerrow.

11,246. When was Kerrow added; about what time?—It was handed over from The Chisholm to Lord Tweedmouth. Lord Tweedmouth cleared the ground for the forest.

11,247. He afforested the land, and then did it become part of Mr Winans' forest?—Not then. Lord Tweedmouth handed it over.

11,248. Lord Tweedmouth handed it over to Mr Winans?—Yes.

11,249. Is it also part of The Chisholm estate?—Yes.

11,250. Were there any other additions made?—Not that I am aware of.

11,251. Now do you know—I suppose you know well—the tract of country held by Mr Winans under forest?—Yes, I know it well.

11,252. You have been over the whole of it?—Yes.

11,253. More than once?—Often.

11,254. Is there land there suitable for occupation by crofters?—There is plenty.

11,255. Now just begin and tell us, going from east to west, or west to east, where that land is?—There are about 60 acres above Comar that were not mentioned at all yesterday.

11,256. Not mentioned yesterday at all?—They call it Auchinan. That is old arable land.

11,257. Is it East Comar or West Comar you mean?—Above Comar, near Beinn-a'-chirein.

11,258. Is it near Craskie?—Nearer Comar than Craskie.

11,259. Is it near Loch Longard?—No.

11,260. Well, is it east of Fasnakyle or west of it?—East; between Fasnakyle and Cannich.

11,261. How far is it from Comar Wood?—It is just close on Comar Wood, just above the wood.

11,262. What is the name of the place?—Auchinan.

11,263. Now, the extent you said was 60 acres?—I would take it to be about 60. It is in crofts, the same as the old people used to work it.

11,264. You mean to say there are the remains of old buildings there?—Yes.

11,265. Houses and steading?—Well, the houses are there.

11,266. How many houses were there, can you make out?—I could not exactly tell you. Three or four; there are only the walls of them.

11,267. Was that the old nameof the place, do you know?—As far as I know.

Beauly.

Roderick Maclean.

11,268. Is there land there, in your opinion, suitable for cultivation by crofters now?—I would take it myself if I could get a bit of it.

11,269. You would be very glad to take a small holding there if you could get it?—Yes.

11,270. What extent of arable would you require?—If I was not in any other occupation I would require about 25 acres.

11,271. Of arable, and some hill grazing?—Yes.

11,272. What carry of hill grazing would you require?—There is pretty good hill grazing above that place.

11,273. I want to know what carry of grazing you would require for an arable croft of 25 acres to make the thing a reasonably profitable concern?—I would like to get as much as would keep 100 sheep or so.

11,274. And any cattle?—Two or three.

11,275. Two or three cows and followers and a horse?—Yes.

11,276. Will you venture to say what rent you think you should be asked to pay for a holding of that kind on that place?—If I got the like of yon place for a number of years I would not grudge to give the price they give now for it.

11,277. And what is that?—About 1s. 6d. an acre for the arable. That is the average of Winans' deer forest.

11,278. Would you not give more than 1s. 6d. an acre for the arable?—It is all over the same as paying for the arable and all.

11,279. I thought you said there was a considerable tract of arable land there?—Sixty acres. It is old pasture.

11,280. I know; but it is easily ploughed up, you know. Only 1s. 6d. an acre for old arable land, easily ploughed up; is that your answer?—I mean that for the whole between old arable and pasture; the same as they now pay for it.

11,281. Do you know what the carry of the place formerly was?—Not in my time.

11,282. And you cannot tell us anything of the carry of the place?—I saw the place the same as it is now.

11,283. You did not see it under sheep?—Yes.

11,284. What I want to get from you is what carry had that land when it was under sheep?—I could not give you any information about the sheep stock; I was not paying any attention to it.

11,285. Besides that arable land, is there any other land of a similar kind?—There is some land up in Glencannich there.

11,286. Where is it? Can you localise it for us?—The first place is Tombuie.

11,287. Can you give me the extent of arable there?—I would say it would be about 5 or 6 acres.

11,288. There is land there that should be looked at?—Yes.

11,289. It is presently under grass and heather, I suppose?—It is under grass.

11,290. Then do you know Dalreoch?—Yes.

11,291. Is there old arable there?—A little bit there.

11,292. Can you tell me the carry of Tombuie, or do you not know?—I have seen a man keeping 2 cows and a horse there.

11,293. Any other place in Glencannich where there is arable land?—Muckrach.

11,294. That is on the north side. Confine yourself in the meantime to the south side. Do you know Luibguish?—I don't think that side would be much benefit to any crofters—the south side.

11,295. You do not think so?—I do not think so.

11,296. I invite your attention to Luibguish and Fraoch-Choire. Is there no arable land worth mentioning at either of those places?—There is a little of arable land in Luibguish.

11,297. How much?—About 2 acres, I would say.

11,298. At Fraoch-Choire is there any?—I don't think there is any.

11,299. Now pass to the north side of Glencannich. You mentioned Comar, I think?—Yes.

11,300. Is there land there?—Plenty land there.

11,301. What extent?—I would say 8 acres or so at Muckrach.

11,302. Old arable?—Some of it is out of crop, and some I have seen in crop.

11,303. Carrie. Is there any land there? Mention the places yourself, as I do not wish to suggest anything?—Carrie is the next place.

11,304. Well, what about it?—In most of these places the pasture is better than the arable land, but there is some good land down at Carrie.

11,305. What kind of land do you mean, arable or pasture?—Arable.

11,306. Old arable do you mean?—To keep 2 cows and a horse.

11,307. For grazing you mean?—For crop or anything.

11,308. Any other place to which you would like to invite our attention?—Leitrie.

11,309. Is there old arable there?—I have seen a keeper there with 7 or 8 cows.

11,310. What extent of arable would you say is there?—I could not exactly tell you.

11,311. Now, Shalavanach, do you know it?—Yes.

11,312. Is there land there?—Yes, there is a bit of land there.

11,313. How much?—About 4 or 5 acres.

11,314. Old arable?—Old arable.

11,315. Mullardoch, do you remember it?—Yes.

11,316. Is there land there?—Very little arable land.

11,317. Then, do you know Luibardchaig and Coire-nan-cuilean?—There is some arable land there.

11,318. Do you mean not much?—There was, but I have only seen it under grazing, the same as it is now.

11,319. I understand you to indicate there is not much of it?—Not much that I have seen.

11,320. That is on the east side of Coire-nan-cuilean. Now, what about the west side?—There is a little arable land there, but I did not see it except the same as it is now.

11,321. You only saw it under grass?—Under grass.

11,322. And is it small in extent, or is it considerable?—Oh, it is a good place. It is as good a place as is in Glencannich for grazing. It is the best in Glencannich for grazing, and 20 acres at least could be easily cultivated.

11,323. How much of it is there; what would its carry be?—The bottom part?

11,324. Well, I have not seen it. You know I am speaking of land I have never seen, so you must meet me half way?—Oh, I can't tell you how much stock there might have been.

11,325. Now, do you know Auchinan?—Yes.

11,326. Is that the place you mentioned before?—Yes.

11,327. Then Airidh-Dhuibhein?—Yes, it is on the west side of Auchinan.

11,328. You know the place I am referring to?—Yes.

11,329. Is there old arable land there?—A small bit of croft.

11,330. You mean by that that there are the remains of a holding?—Yes.

11,331. The walls are there?—The walls are there.

11,332. There is nobody living there?—No one living there.

11,333. But at one time there had been a holding there with a crofter in it?—I did not see the croft, but it looks as if there had been.

11,334. That is to say, there is green ground and walls of a former building?—Yes.

11,335. That is the land you have spoken about in Glencannich. Is there any other land that you would like to speak of?—No, for my own part I would not like to go up the glen any further. I would like to get a bit of the low part.

11,336. What is it you call the low part?—Fasnakyle and Auchinan.

11,337. Is there accommodation there, according to the best of your judgment, for a considerable number of crofters?—The place would keep about four.

11,338. That is the place nearer to Auchinan?—Airidh-Dhuibhein.

11,339. Is it near any of the lochs?—No, it is above Fasnakyle—in the wood up above Fasnakyle.

11,340. Is it on the south side or the north side?—On the north side of Fasnakyle.

11,341. Could you show it to us when we go there?—Yes, it is only a few yards from my house.

11,342. You said at the commencement of your examination that you wanted to see all, or as many as could be got, of the petitions presented for land?—Yes.

11,343. Well, I should like to see them too, if we can get them. Where were you born?—In Breackachy.

11,344. That is in this district?—It is on the Chisholm estate. My father was put away the time that Roderick Chisholm of Chisholm came from America. He was summoned out of the farm of Breackachy.

11,345. Were you removed yourself, or was it your father?—My father and the whole family.

11,346. What year was that?—I cannot exactly say. I could give you it afterwards.

11,347. Mr Sutherland.—You stated, Mr Maclean, that you know the land, and that you think it is suitable for new holdings, and that you yourself would be willing to take a holding if you got it under favourable conditions?—Yes.

11,348. And you have also stated that you would be quite prepared to pay as much as is being paid for it now per acre as deer forest?—Yes.

11,349. And that you stated at 1s. 6d.?—Yes.

11,350. That is all that is being paid per acre according to the evidence of the factor yesterday, is it not, and you are perfectly willing to pay that for land if you got it?—Yes, for the arable and the pasture.

11,351. Would you take your share of the arable and pasture just as the deer forest takes it now? Well, then, have you taken this into account, Mr Maclean, that you would not have so much use of the land as the deer forest has at present—that is to say, that the deer forest has the sporting right, and you would not expect to get that, would you, for 1s. 6d.?—I was not expecting that.

11,352. So that you would actually pay a good deal more than is being paid for it as deer forest now?—Yes, for that part.

11,353. How much do you think is the sporting worth per acre per year? Is not the whole rent at present a sporting rent? It is not used for any other purpose, is it?—I could not exactly tell you.

11,354. Is Mr Winans' deer forest used for any other purpose than sporting purposes at present?—Not at present.

11,355. And he is paying 1s. 6d. per acre for it?—Yes.

11,356. Then you would not get that part that Mr Winans is using at all?—No.

11,357. And yet you are willing to pay 1s. 6d. an acre for it?—Yes, we are willing to pay 1s. 6d. an acre for it; but if we got a lower part than that we would rather have it.

11,358. Then you say that you saw crops on some of these places you have mentioned—Muckrach?—Muckrach and Tombuie.

11,359. Did they get good crops?—Yes, very good.

11,360. You never heard but the harvests averaged as good as in the average of places round about here?—No. I have seen it thirty years back.

11,361. And they bear good crops?—Good crops.

11,362. Some of them are under cultivation yet. There are some crops being raised in that glen yet, are there not?—There are very little.

11,363. Are there not?—I don't think it.

11,364. None at all?—Except potatoes.

11,365. Do they get good potatoes there?—Very good.

11,366. You never heard of them being utterly destroyed by frost, did you?—Yes, the whole Strath would be sometimes destroyed by frost.

11,367. And are they ever destroyed anywhere else by frost?—I don't think the glen is worse than any other places in the Strath.

11,368. Not more subject to destruction by frost than any other place?—No.

11,369. And did these crops that you saw yourself in Muckrach ripen?—Yes, as early as down at Cannich or Comar.

11,370. You also stated that there was good land in Carrie?—Yes, but in my day I did not see a crop there.

11,371. Then you have, no doubt, an intimate knowledge of the land up there; you have known it for a number of years?—Yes.

11,372. And, though you are in regular employment at the present time, would you be quite willing to take a holding there again under the circumstances you have mentioned to the Commission?—Yes, if I would get a suitable place.

11,373. About the size and the nature you have indicated to the Chairman?—Yes.

11,374. Perfectly willing?—Perfectly willing, and very glad to get it.

11,375. Now, you mentioned something I would like to get a little information on with regard to the farm of Comar. You stated that there was a part of it sublet to Mr Winans?—Well, I was told by the head keeper that the factor promised to add that addition to the forest.

11,376. But let me understand it, if you please. Was Comar nominally a sheep farm?—Yes.

11,377. And while that was so, did Mr Winans get a sublet of part of it: did I understand you to say that that was the case?—I could not exactly tell how it was; we were told that Mr Winans threw it up, and I could not say whether Mr Winans had it or not.

11,378. Did you ever see the valuation roll of the county?—No.

11,379. You could not tell us whether Comar was entered as a deer forest or a sheep farm in the valuation roll?—It was a sheep farm in the last valuation roll.

11,380. It was entered in the valuation roll as a sheep farm?—Yes.

11,381. Can you tell us what year this arrangement was entered into, so far as you remember?—This new arrangement must be lately.

11,382. This one that you refer to? I think we are not understanding each other. I thought you made a statement that part of the Comar farm was given to Mr Winans?—That is a part of Fasnakyle there of arable land, and about 30 acres between arable and pasture.

11,383. Well, what happened to them?—It was added to the forest. It is under crop now and belongs to Mr Robertson. I was told that it was added to the forest.

11,384. But you don't know, then, about the arrangement?—No, I don't; I am not sure of it. I was told about it.

11,385. You were told that part of the sheep farm of Comar was sublet to Mr Winans, and that Mr Winans added that to the deer forest: was that what you were told?—Yes.

11,386. What year was that?—This year.

11,387. That is the arrangement you referred to when the Chairman asked you questions about it?—Yes; that is what we put in the petition for.

11,388. That while this was being transferred you understood that a certain arrangement was made by which Comar farm was going to change hands: was that it?—Yes.

11,389. And then you thought that was a good opportunity of applying to the proprietrix for the grazing of the cow?—Just so.

11,390. These are the circumstances that gave rise to it?—Yes.

11,391. And are you quite willing to pay the proprietrix the same price per acre for the grazing of the cow as she would likely get for it as a deer forest?—Yes.

11,392. Or a sheep farm?—Yes; the whole of the petitioners would give the same.

11,393. Did the whole of your petitions state that?—Yes, we said that at the meeting.

11,394. And these were the petitions to which you got no direct answer beyond that there was no land to give you?—Yes.

Beauly. Roderick Maclean.

11,395. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I want to ask you one or two general questions first. You say you would be willing to give for such a holding as you have mentioned 1s. 6d. an acre, grazing and arable?—Yes, old arable.

11,396. I am speaking of the holding that you told us you would like to take up, some 25 acres of arable land and grazing for 100 sheep, and you would be willing to pay 1s. 6d. an acre for such a holding?—Yes.

11,397. But the whole forest is rented at the rate of 1s. 6d. an acre, is it not?—Yes.

11,398. Well, then, supposing that other holdings were taken up like the one you speak of, that would be the best land taken from the forest, would it not? Such holdings as you would have in your mind would be of the best land in the forest?—Yes, it is in the best part of it.

11,399. Then, if you take up the best land in the forest—first of all, let me ask you this. Is not the forest composed of a great deal of poor land and a certain amount of better land?—Of course; the highest part, we could not get a crop out of it.

11,400. You could not get the higher parts into cultivation?—No.

11,401. Is there not a great deal of high land in the forest?—Yes, a great deal.

11,402. Then it would be the low lying lands that would be taken up for cultivation and grazing by such holdings as you mentioned?—Not the high land; not the higher land at any rate. There would be about four or five in that place I mentioned, Auchinan.

11,403. But you tell us that the forest consists of a great deal of high land which no one could possibly think of cultivating. I want to get this from you. I think it is a plain enough question; would not the land that would be taken up by new holdings take the better land of the forest, leaving the highest ground alone?—No, the best part of the forest is the highest, for grazing.

11,404. But up to the 2000 feet. Is there good grazing up to the top of Beinn-a'-chirein?—Not very good; the worst part of the glen.

11,405. Not good grazing at the top of Beinn-a'-chirein?—No.

11,406. Then you would not contemplate taking the top of Beinn-a'-chirein into your holding?—No. There is passable grazing, but not so good as in the west part.

11,407. Then there are considerable tracts in the forest which are not very suitable for sheep grazing on the high ground?—I don't see any bit in Strathglass not suitable for sheep grazing.

11,408. Well, then, would you propose that the whole of the forest should be taken for the grazing of these new holdings?—No, I would not propose to take the highest place; I don't suppose it would be so much benefit to crofters.

11,409. Now, in the rental of the forest at 1s. 6d. an acre, the highest ground is included as well as the better ground, is it not, in your estimate of 1s. 6d. an acre for the whole forest?—The poor ground is included as well as the better ground in that rental. The west part of the ground is better than the nearest part of it, and it is higher.

11,410. But there are some tops, you tell me, that are not worth much for grazing, but those tops you rent at 1s. 6d. an acre, just the same as the rest of the forest which is suitable for grazing?—It would not be worth for the crofter to give the same; I said for myself that nearer part; 1s. 6d. would be too dear, taking it all over the pasture. I only say that for certain places.

11,411. I understand it would be too dear a rent for grazing, but at present that rent is paid for it as a forest?—That is for shooting and grazing and all.

11,412. When you speak of the whole forest being rented at the rate of 1s. 6d. an acre, surely you include these barren tops as well as the better pasture, do you?—No, I was only just mentioning the part that people could live in.

11,413. I am not speaking now with regard to the holdings at all. I am speaking entirely now as the ground is at the present time let as a forest. If you estimate the rental of that forest at the rate of 1s. 6d. an acre, you include the whole forest, do you not, bad tops and all?—Yes.

11,414. You quite understand that the sporting rent of the forest takes in the rock as well as the grazing at present?—(No answer.)

11,415. I think that is clear enough: do you not understand the question?—No, sir, I don't understand what you mean.

11,416. 1s. 6d. an acre is the rent paid, we were told yesterday, for the whole forest, poor land and good: you understand that?—Yes, I understand that, for the sporting and grazing.

11,417. That is what is paid at present for everything?—Yes.

11,418. Now, what I want to ask you is this: if you take the best grazing out of the forest, do you not make the worst land, which is now paying 1s. 6d. an acre under deer, quite useless for rent?—No.

11,419. Well, who is going to pay rent for those high tops if you take the lower part for sheep grazing or crofts?—I believe they would get plenty there to go. A club farm would take the whole of the forest.

11,420. You told me yourself you would not?—I would not go myself, but they will get plenty to go.

11,421. You would not mind seeing others take the barren tops, but you would not take them yourself?—No.

11,422. Well, supposing you could find nobody to graze these barren tops and pay 1s. 6d. an acre for them, would it not be reasonable for the proprietor to expect more than 1s. 6d. an acre for the better land which is taken?—No; between pasture it would be dear enough.

11,423. It might be dear enough from your point of view, but the rental of the whole area would be much less, because nobody would be paying any rent for the barren tops, supposing you could get nobody to take them for grazing?—(No answer.)

11,424. Now, I will ask you about the land you speak of above Comar. How many crofters do you think could live there at the place you mentioned, Auchinan?—I think about four or five.

11,425. But you have told us that there is only 60 acres of arable land there?—Just about that.

11,426. But you want 25 of them for yourself, do you not?—Yes.

11,427. That leaves only 35 acres to be divided among the other four?—Well, I would take that into consideration. We would divide it amongst us if we would get the chance of it.

11,428. Then you would not get the 25 acres you wanted?—I am not expecting we would get that, however.

11,429. You would have to be content with considerably less than 25 acres arable?—I must take what I will get.

11,430. But, supposing you could get no other work there, could you make a living to profit of such a small holding as that?—Well, I would try it.

11,431. And suppose you failed, what would you do then?—We had to go and work for our living any place that we could get it.

11,432. But now you get wages from the deer forest?—Yes.

11,433. But you don't suppose there would still be a deer forest there with all the best land taken up with holdings and sheep. There would be no work on the deer forest for you then?—The way that we are now, we are not sure about a day. We might get one day and be put off to-morrow. We are not sure of our work. We want to get a place where we would be sure of a home.

11,434. Yes; but you understand what I mean when I say that if there would be no deer forest, where would you get the work. If you found your holding too small to make it profitable, where would you get your work?—I would work at the croft.

11,435. But you would be getting no wages for that.

If you did not get enough money out of your croft you would have to try and get wages elsewhere, would you not, to help you out? If your croft was not paying you, where would you look for wages?—I would just go about the country the same as any other labourer.

11,436. You would have to leave the district for work?—Yes.

11,437. One other point. There is only a limited quantity of good land through these glens for arable holdings to be taken up along with grazing. There is not very much land in these glens for this purpose. You could only put three or four crofters here and there, I suppose?—Just so.

11,438. Well, supposing these holdings were made and portioned out—mapped out—would there be much competition for them in the country? Would there be many people anxious to take up these holdings?—I think there would, taking the glens. They would take Glencannich whatever for a club farm. That is what I hear them speaking about.

11,439. You think there would be many coming forward ready to take such holdings, club farms, or however best they thought they could do?—Yes.

11,440. You think there would be a good many after them?—Yes, I think so.

11,441. Well now, should these holdings be let to the highest bidder?—I think they should be valued. It should be given to the Royal Commission to value the ground.

11,442. You think, then, that some tribunal should fix the rent of these holdings before that tribunal knows what kind of tenant is going into them?—Yes.

11,443. How could they tell what kind of a living would be made out of these holdings without knowing what kind of man was coming forward to cultivate it?—I don't understand you.

11,444. I will put it in another way. Who would choose the tenant for each holding if there were several applicants for each; would you put it on to the tribunal to choose, or how?—Yes.

11,445. Then the tribunal is to choose the holding, and to pick out the man who is to go into each spot, is that it?—Yes, to pick the men amongst themselves, and make a club farm of it.

11,446. Mr Munro.—I wish to make it a little more plain, with reference to your statement, that you are willing to take a proportion of arable land and hill land at 1s. 6d. per acre. Now, are you willing to take the proportion of hill land that would properly fall to your proportion of arable land at the 1s. 6d. per acre? Or I will put it in this shape to you: Supposing there were 100 acres of arable land and 10,000 acres of hill pasture, that would give 10 acres of arable land to each, dividing it into lots of ten, and 1000 acres of hill land, would you be willing to take the 10 acres of arable land and the 1000 acres of hill pasture as you apportion it?—The pasture would be too big for the arable.

11,447. Yes; but you can see that it might result in considerable hardship to the landlord if you were simply to take your portion of arable land to suit you and only the portion of the hill land to suit you, leaving probably the worst part of the land in the landlord's hands?—(No answer.)

11,448. The Chairman.—Try and answer.—This ground that I refer to is the worst part of it for pasture; although it is arable land, it is the worst part of the glen for pasture.

11,449. Mr Munro.—But you have not strictly answered my question yet. Take it that there are 100 acres of arable land and 10,000 acres of pasture, and that they were divided into lots amongst crofters—divided equally into ten parts. That would give you 10 acres of arable and 1000 acres of hill land. Now, would you be willing to take the land in these proportions—1000 acres of hill land and 10 acres of arable?—Not so much pasture as that; there is too much pasture in it for the arable.

11,450. So you would like to pick and choose the land you would like to take along with your arable land?—No, I would just take it in front of me, but I don't want much pasture.

11,451. But don't you see that it might result in considerable injustice to the landlord if you were simply to pick and choose the hill pasture and leave the rest in his hands, probably the worst part of it?—Well, if they gave us the lower part we would not go up there at all.

11,452. Would you take the arable and the pasture in the proportion in which it exists there?—For the same money they are paying for it to-day?

11,453. Yes; of course I understand that is 1s. 6d. per acre?—I will take so much of it.

11,454. The Chairman.—Perhaps I might propose this question, Mr Munro. Would you like to get such an assignment of arable, with a corresponding proportion of grazing, as would enable you to live?—Yes.

11,455. Is that what you would be at?—Yes.

11,456. Mr Munro.—But you would wish to have the selection of the grazing land yourself?—Yes.

11,457. Mr Forsyth.—Do you think it a wise thing to offer for this holding at a rate, say, 1s. 6d. per acre—I mean by the acre. Do you think that would be profitable for yourself?—Yes, I think so.

11,458. You want a holding of 25 acres of arable, say, and grazing for 100 sheep; and you propose to offer for these at the rate of 1s. 6d. per acre. Do you not see that in order to get land to carry 100 sheep, if you pay per acre, then if the land be bad, you would require a great many more acres to carry the 100 sheep, and certainly you would have to pay a much larger rent. Can you see that?—I mentioned that I was only wanting just the bottom part of it. A certain place I alluded to.

11,459. You wanted the better land, so that the 100 sheep would be carried on a certain number of acres, not too big. But don't you see that it might be very bad for yourself. You would have to take as few acres for your 100 sheep as you possibly could keep them on, because you would be paying per acre. Otherwise your rent would come very heavy?—Yes, it would be heavy if the pasture was big, but I was wanting little pasture.

11,460. Well, try it from another point of view. How many acres do you fancy you would require of grazing for your 100 sheep?—The place I am alluding to, at Auchinan, there are only a few crofts, and there are bits between them which you would have to take in before you got it into arable.

11,461. But I wanted to get at this: How many acres of grazing do you think you would need for your 100 sheep at the place you mentioned?—I could not exactly tell you.

11,462. But I was trying to get it from you whether you did not think it unwise to estimate your rent at a rate per acre when sheep-grazing comes in. You don't think that?—(No answer.)

11,463. Then you would prefer to offer by the acre?

11,464. The Chairman.—Might I venture to put it: Don't you think it is a dangerous thing, Mr Maclean, to offer 1s. 6d. an acre for grazing which may not be worth half of that? Would not it be better to have your rent adjusted on some principle?—I was meaning the place—the low part.

11,465. The arable?—The old arable.

11,466. Mr Forsyth.—Then your 1s. 6d. would apply merely to the old arable land?—Yes.

11,467. We understood that you meant 1s. 6d. right over the grazing, because that was the average rent of the place as a forest; but now I find from you that it merely is the rent you propose to give for the old arable?—Yes.

11,468. Then have you any idea of the grazing rent; what would you put upon the grazing for 100 sheep?—I would say 6d. an acre.

11,469. I think your method—with all deference—I think the method per acre is not a good one for sheep grazing; that is my own experience; but you seem to stick to the rent per acre. Therefore you think 6d. an acre on the whole?—On the pasture.

11,470. Mr Macleod.—You are a watcher, I think you said, with Mr Winans?—Yes.

11,471. You heard what Mr Burns said here yesterday on Mr Winans' behalf, that no one who was in his employment would suffer in any way from giving evidence here?—Yes.

Beauly. — Roderick Maclean.

11,472. You heard that?—Yes.

11,473. And you are quite satisfied with that assurance?—Yes.

11,474. Now you know generally the purpose that has brought us here to-day?—Yes.

11,475. You said something about the people in your district talking about things. What was it that you understood when you came here to-day to give evidence?—I came here to give evidence about these petitions that were sent and did not get an answer. It was not for ground; only for petitions.

11,476. It was with regard to that particularly?—Yes.

11,477. You sent certain petitions to the proprietor, and, not having got any satisfactory reply, you thought that possibly you might get what you wanted by coming here; is that it?—Yes.

11,478. Have you not got copies of these petitions yourself? Did you not keep copies of them?—I think there is a copy of them: they are not in my possession.

11,479. Whose possession are they in?—Archibald Chisholm, Cannich, it should be in his possession.

11,480. Is he here to-day?—No.

11,481. And he has not got them?—He had them once.

11,482. But you did not think of bringing them?—No.

11,483. And is there any other person but yourself here to-day from that particular district?—Not that I know of.

11,484. Only yourself?—Only myself.

11,485. Were there any more appointed?—Yes, there were a few appointed.

11,486. Why are they not here to-day?—I don't know.

11,487. What were their names?—James Grant, Fasnakyle; Roderick Maclennan, Fasnakyle; John Campbell, Cannich; Angus Cameron, Balmore. That is all.

11,488. And why are they not here to-day, do you know?—I could not exactly tell; but one of them told me, James Grant, that he would not be allowed to come unless he got a man in his place.

11,489. What does he do?—He is a gardener in Fasnakyle.

11,490. Whose employment is he in?—Mr Winans.

11,491. Who told him that he would not be allowed to come unless he put another in his place?—The head keeper, he said to me.

11,492. What is the head keeper's name?—Donald Mackenzie.

11,493. Is he here to-day?—I did not see him.

11,494. Was this man Grant appointed at a meeting called for the purpose of appointing delegates to come here?—Yes, it was himself who gave his name in to come.

11,495. And the meeting appointed him?—Yes.

11,496. And is he a man that knows about the land in the district?—Yes, he was about thirty years in the place as shepherd, back and fore in the glen.

11,497. Then can you tell us about any of the others?

11,498. Mr Burns.—But as to Mr Grant, you can see him to-morrow. I will undertake that he should appear.—Witness.—I don't know the reason that is keeping the others.

11,499. Mr Munro.—But you are the only witness here to-day from that particular district?—Although Grant said that to me, Mackenzie told me himself that he did not ask leave to come.

11,500. Mr Burns.—Grant did not ask to be allowed.

11,501. Mr Macleod.—Excuse me, Mr Burns, but I have got the witness, and I object myself strongly to your interfering with me in anything.

11,502. Mr Burns.—I want you to understand.

11,503. Mr Macleod.—But I want you to understand that you have no standing here at all. (To Witness.) What did you say with regard to Mackenzie?—He told me that Grant did not ask leave at all to come.

11,504. Mr Mackenzie told you that Grant never asked leave?—Yes.

11,505. Well, it is only proper to state that. Now, leaving that matter and coming to the land in the district that you have been speaking to, do you think yourself, is it your opinion, that small tenants or crofters could profitably cultivate, and otherwise advantageously occupy, land in this district that you have spoken of?—Yes.

11,506. That is your opinion? Now, do you think with your experience—I think you said you had been a watcher for how long?—About eighteen years.

11,507. Do you think that the number of small tenants that you contemplate might be settled in this district could be settled there without any injury to the sport in the district?—I don't think they could.

11,508. They would injure the sport?—Yes.

11,509. To what extent would they injure the sport, or in what way?—The forest would not be the same as it is now.

11,510. In what way would not it be the same as it is now? Just tell us what the difference would be, in your opinion?—Mostly on it is deer, but if the crofters were put in the deer would go away.

11,511. Do you remember when there were sheep there?—Yes.

11,512. Were there any deer there then?—Yes, but not so many as now.

11,513. But there were deer then?—Yes.

11,514. But you think that the deer would go away if there were small tenants settled there?—Yes, they would have to go away.

11,515. Why?—They would go away from them.

11,516. Why?—They are not accustomed to small tenants being amongst them.

11,517. Then you agree with what Mr Grant said yesterday, that small tenants and deer cannot thrive together?—No, I don't believe what Mr Grant said. I don't think he told any truth yesterday.

11,518. You agreed: he stated yesterday that small tenants and deer don't thrive well together: surely you agree with him to that extent: that is what you said just now?—Well, I say that the deer forest must be so far separate.

11,519. To the extent that small tenants grazed their stock upon it?—Yes.

11,520. But would you be prepared to say that it would entirely destroy the sport?—No, I don't say that: I have seen better deer than what they get there thirty years back, the time that Colonel Inge was in Fasnakyle.

11,521. Then why do you say that it would destroy the forest?—There would not be so many of them.

11,522. That stands to reason. But you think, then, that at any rate it would not utterly destroy the sport?—It would not altogether; there could be sport also.

11,523. You think there could be sport as well as small tenants?—Yes.

11,524. You were speaking about the question of rent. I don't suppose that you have any personal knowledge as to how rents are fixed?—No.

11,525. You don't know anything about that matter?—No, not much.

11,526. But in any land that would be assigned to you or assigned to your neighbours you would be prepared to pay a rent that an impartial tribunal would fix for it?—Yes.

11,527. Now about the character of the ground assigned there. Are there many barren mountain tops in the district that would not be of any value for grazing?—No, there are not many: the whole of it is value for grazing.

11,528. It is fit for grazing, the whole of it?—Yes.

11,529. Would it graze cattle and sheep to the tops, or sheep alone?—Yes.

11,530. Tell me, then, as to those who are settled on the districts—those whose names were on the petitions. Did they contemplate holdings of the character that you described here to-day?—No, they were wanting smaller than that; the most of them were only wanting a cow.

11,531. They were only wanting a cow's grass, but you had an idea that you would like a larger holding than that?—Yes.

11,532. You said something about the people in the district talking about a club farm. What was it that was being said with regard to that matter of a club farm?—That three of us should take a place like Muckrach in Glencannich.

11,533. Three of them would take, say, the township of Muckrach and the grazing going along with the township?—Yes, between the three they would keep about 800 sheep or so, and a cow or two each.

11,534. That was the idea, that it could be done in that way?—That is the idea.

11,535. Now, in that particular place, do you think that it would destroy the sport if there were three tenants settled there?—No, if they don't commence to poach them—to kill them.

11,536. Do you think now, supposing that there were small tenants settled on these townships that you spoke of here to-day, and that they were on good terms with the sportsmen, do you think his sport would be entirely destroyed by these small tenants being there?—No, I don't think it, it would not be entirely destroyed: it would be, so far.

11,537. Do you think it would be so very much worse than it is now, except as you said now to the extent that the sheep and other stock of the tenants would eat up probably some of the grazing that the deer have now?—It would not harm the forests, but the place that these crofters would take, no deer would come and stop there.

11,538. Then, have you any knowledge of land where there were sheep and deer together on?—Yes, plenty.

11,539. And is it your experience that where the sheep are the deer won't go?—But crofters were not there: where I have seen them it is only big sheep farms. Perhaps a shepherd would go there once a week or so.

11,540. But, supposing there were three small tenants taking this place of Muckrach, they would just have a shepherd to look after their sheep in the same way as a farmer would. What you fear is this, that if there were a number of small tenants there each of them would be going out to the hill at all times herding their sheep, and in that way disturbing the deer. That is what you think, is it?—Yes, that is what I think.

11,541. But if they made such an arrangement that there was only a shepherd, as it was when the sheep farms were there, you don't think it would do the same injury to the sport?—No, if they make up with the sportsman they can take care of the deer as well as the sheep; the shepherd could do both.

11,542. And you can quite conceive an arrangement being made by which they could give the sportsman as good sport as he is getting just now?—Yes.

11,543. Now, with regard to the deer, you said that you saw heavier deer many years ago than now?—Yes.

11,544. How do you account for them decreasing in weight?—They used to come to the corn, and there is no corn in it now to come to.

11,545. So that the deer have suffered by the small tenants being put away?—Yes.

11,546. They are not so heavy?—They are not so heavy as they used to be in the corn.

11,547. You say now, though, that they are more numerous?—Yes.

11,548. But they are not so heavy, and are they as good?—No, not so good in quality. There are ten for one.

11,549. Ten for one in number, but they are not so good in quality or in weight?—No.

11,550. Then, are they changing in character: are they tamer than they were?—They are tame enough about this place.

11,551. About that district?—Yes.

11,552. Mr Maccallum.—You told us about Auchinan, and you said you thought there were about 60 acres of arable there?—Yes.

11,553. Is that ground that was cultivated formerly?—It was some time back; I did not see it.

11,554. But it bears marks of having been cultivated?—Yes.

11,555. Now, is there any more land there that could be improved besides the 60 acres that were cultivated formerly?—Yes, there is a bit between the crofts that could be taken in.

11,556. Do you know the meaning of the word Auchinan? Do you speak Gaelic?—No.

11,557. You speak Gaelic, don't you?—Yes, but I don't know what the word means.

11,558. Don't you know "Achadh"?—Yes, if it means the bottom.

11,559. Does not "Achadh" mean a field, and does not "Auchinan" mean 'green fields'?—Well, it is green.

11,560. Well, is not that the meaning of the word?—I don't know.

11,561. Well, it is so. Is it your opinion that the whole of Glencannich could be taken up by small tenants?—It is my opinion that the whole of the north side could be take up for small tenants.

11,562. And what do you say about the south side: could it be taken up by small tenants?—It could be taken up by a club farm.

11,563. Now, what sort of rent could they pay. You were questioned at great length about that, but what sort of rent could they pay for these farms?—I could not exactly tell you.

11,564. But not so much, you think, as is paid just now?—Not in that farm.

11,565. But, of course, the rent that is paid just now includes the grazing and the sporting?—Yes.

11,566. And it is 1s. 6d. an acre for everything, over all?—Yes.

11,567. Now, if it were occupied by small tenants, would it not still be worth a good deal as sporting ground? I wish you to answer that question strictly. If it were occupied by small tenants, would the ground not be worth a good deal as sporting ground?—Yes, if it was. I daresay to the landlord it would be more.

11,568. I am not speaking of the landlord at all, but would it not be a sporting place still: supposing the tenants had the grazing, would it not still remain a sporting place?—Of course it will: it would spoil the sport so far, but not much.

11,569. And rent could be got for it as a sporting subject?—It was in my time: they were getting good sportsmen in that time as well as they are now.

11,570. It would still afford sport?—Yes.

11,571. Then you don't agree with the evidence which we had yesterday, that no sportsman would take land on which there was a crofter?—I don't believe that.

11,572. You think that there are people who would still take land with crofters on it for sport,—that is, the hill being used as grazing by these small tenants, could the places not be used for sport after all?—Yes, of course they could.

11,573. Is it your idea of sport that the place must be wholly devoted to game: that was the idea that was given us by the factor, that a place is not worth anything for sport unless it was devoted to game; is that your theory?—No, that is not my opinion at all.

11,574. Was there any sport in the country until land was wholly devoted to game?—Yes, better sport than what it is now.

11,575. And your idea is that there would be true sport though the land were not wholly devoted to game? There would be true sport still, although the land was not wholly given up to deer?—Yes.

11,576. Then with regard to this application that you put in for grazing for a cow. When you made that application to Mrs Chisholm had she it in her power to give you land?—Of course it was in her power to give us land.

11,577. Had she land out of lease?—Yes, the whole of Comar was out of lease at that time.

11,578. When you sent in your application?—Yes.

11,579. Did you get any reply?—No, but that she had no ground to give us. Three of the petitioners got a small bit. I don't know what the value of it is.

Beauly. Roderick Maclean.

11,580. But those who did not get what they wanted, had they a reply from Mrs Chisholm?—No.

11,581. Of any kind?—Not that I am aware of.

11,582. Or through the factor?—No.

11,583. Then you say that the application was sent in, and that some of them got no reply at all. Yourself, for instance, have you got any reply?—No, I did not get any.

11,584. Then, do you understand now that this land you were asking has been given to another: the land from which you were wishing to get grazing, has it been let to another since your application?—We did not allude to it; we only just put it in when Comar farm was broken up.

11,585. And did you wish to get the grazing on Comar farm?—Yes.

11,586. Then has that place been let to another?—It is let now to the old farmer.

11,587. To Mr Robertson?—I believe so.

11,588. And that was after your application?—It was after our application.

11,589. But we understand that it is only the arable ground that he uses?—Yes.

11,590. And the rest of Comar, what use is it put to now?—It is under sheep to Mrs Chisholm.

11,591. And is it currently reported that it is to be made a deer forest?—Yes, that is the current report.

11,592. You were asked some questions about the fixing of rents for the holdings that are proposed, and you think that rent ought to be fixed by an impartial tribunal—that it should not be let to the highest bidder. If small holdings were made available out of deer forests or otherwise, do you think that the rent should be fixed by an impartial tribunal?—Yes.

11,593. And not given simply to the highest bidder: is that your idea?—Yes.

11,594. And it was pointed out that there might be this difficulty, that if it were made available there would be a difficulty in selecting the person to whom the holding should be given?—I don't understand.

11,595. Would you leave it to this proposed tribunal to select the tenant as well as to fix the rent, if there were many applicants for the same place?—I would think that the men among themselves to take it.

11,596. The Chairman.—Do speak a little more articulately.—I don't understand.

11,597. Mr Maccallum.—There is a supposition that there is a holding and a fair rent fixed, and there are several applicants for that holding. Would you leave it for the tribunal that fixed the rent to select the tenant?—I don't follow that.

11,598. You would leave it with those that fixed the rent to say who would be the most useful tenant, would you not?—Yes, yes.

11,599. And they might go on some principle of selecting their tenant; for instance, would it not be reasonable to give a preference to such a one as this, one who had land in a congested township—in a township that was overcrowded—would it not be reasonable to take a man from that place to such a holding?—Yes, it would be reasonable enough.

11,600. The Chairman.—Where is the sanctuary of Mr Winans' forest?—I think it is all sanctuary together. There is not a sanctuary as far as I know.

11,601. Is there not a sanctuary?—No, it is all the same.

11,602. Mr Maccallum.—Are there sanctuaries in deer forests?

11,603. The Chairman.—Is there not a place to which they resort?—Not since Mr Winans took it.

11,604. Is that because of the way in which it is preserved?—There was not one killed since thirteen or fourteen years.

11,605. Is it in this way, that there has been so little deer stalking of late years that you don't know?—No.

11,606. How long is it since there has been deer stalking in the forest?—It is over ten years.

11,607. You say, speaking solemnly, there has been no deer stalking there for ten years, to the best of your knowledge?—No.

11,608. None in which you took any part?—No.

11,609. How long is it since Mr Winans was sporting or visiting?—He was never sporting there.

11,610. How long is it since he has been visiting there?—I could not exactly tell.

11,611. Is it a number of years?—Yes.

11,612. Five at least?—It is over five.

11,613. Now, has there been no use made of the forest as a deer forest for a number of years?—No.

11,614. And when Mr Winans is not there, is there anybody else there deer stalking?—No.

11,615. No friend or relation?—Well, part of it is let.

11,616. But as to what is unlet, there is nobody there?—No.

11,617. And nobody has been there for a number of years?—No.

11,618. Neither himself nor any of his friends or relations?—Well, some of his friends were there fishing.

11,619. I mean deer stalking?—Not one.

11,620. Nobody deer stalking for five years at least?—No.

11,621. For over ten years?—No.

11,622. Mr Maccallum.—You were asked by the Chairman about the sanctuary of the deer forest. Do you know what a sanctuary is?—Yes, a place to keep the deer quiet.

11,623. Do you know the meaning of the word sanctuary?—It means a holy place, does it not?

11,624. Or a place for refuge?—I don't know the meaning of it.

11,625. Is there a sanctuary where no man is allowed to go?—I don't know.

11,626. Is that the meaning of it in the forest—a place where no man is allowed to go?

11,627. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is it not a place where it is not usual to shoot a rifle?—No, it is a place to preserve the deer. Not to move them out of there.

11,628. And, therefore, it is not usual to fire a rifle in the sanctuary?—No.

11,629. Mr Burns.—You said there has been no stalking for ten years. Mr Winans was shooting, I am told, there in 1885. That would be eight years ago?—Not that I am aware of.

11,630. In Glencannich?—They were shooting in Glencannich. They were driving them to Lord Lovat's place.

11,631. Mr Winans was shooting in Lord Lovat's place?—Yes, he was driving them to Lord Lovat's place.

11,632. This sanctuary is the place where no man shoots during the shooting season: is not that the meaning of the sanctuary?—Yes, and preserve the deer as well.

11,633. The notion is, that when a rifle is fired in the forest, the deer shall run to the place called the sanctuary, and not run out of the forest, is that it?—Yes.

11,634. Do you know that this land you have been talking about—Mrs Chisholm's land—let to shooting tenants, is let for £6700 a year?—No.

11,635. I am telling you that from the valuation roll. Now, have you any scheme by which crofters, if they occupied it, could pay anything like £5000 or £6000 a year.

11,636. The Chairman.—You mean occupy the whole of it.

11,637. Mr Burns.—Yes, occupy the whole of it?—Not for the whole of it.

11,638. Have you any scheme by which you could get crofters profitably to occupy the land so as to pay a rent of about £6000 a year, supposing they had the whole of it?—I did not come here to answer that question. I could not do it: I did not come here for a land question, but only for the petitions.

11,639. Now, assume this—I am telling you what is the truth from the Government returns—that there are 2,616,000 acres of land in Inverness-shire, and the total rent is £332,000, which is half-a-crown an acre; do you know any reason why Mrs Chisholm's land should be let for less than the average of the county?—

The arable ground is not so good as down here, nor near-hand it.

11,640. But taking it overhead?

11,641. The Chairman.—Is there any reason, in your judgment, why land should be let at less than taking the average of half-a-crown per acre for the county?—Yes, the only reason I could give is that the arable land is not so good. An acre down here at Beauly is worth four or five up there.

11,642. Mr Burns.—You have been saying it was good; you said there was not much of it, but it was good?—It is as good as there is in the place.

11,643. But, seeing that it is so scanty, it might not average so high; but you would average it at 1s. 6d.?—I average it for pasture.

11,644. Then you have no scheme by which this 1s. 6d. can be got overhead for the 80,000 acres, which would be £6000. You have no scheme by which occupation by small tenants could return to Mrs Chisholm this large rental?

11,645. The Chairman.—You may take his answer as negative.

11,646. Mr Burns.—You said that Mr Winans made part of Comar from sheep?—I was told that.

11,647. Was it not Major Boyd who changed Comar from sheep to deer, before Mr Winans came? Major Boyd had Luibnadamph and Fasnakyle?—Yes.

11,648. And Mr Peter. Don't you remember them?—Yes.

11,649. They were within your eighteen years. Wasn't it them that cleared the sheep?

11,650-1. The Chairman.—Do you know if it was Major Boyd who cleared the sheep?—It was Lord Tweedmouth that cleared the sheep.

11,652. Mr Burns.—So long as you free Mr Winans I don't mind. It was Lord Tweedmouth that cleared the sheep off Corrie?—Yes.

11,653. And off Beneveian and Ath-nam-Muileach and Comhlan?—I don't know who cleared the sheep.

11,654. But it was not my friend, Mr Winans, at any rate.

11,655. The Chairman.—He does not know anything more about it.

11,656. Mr Burns.—Wasn't it the sheep farmer that cleared the sheep?—It was.

11,657. The sheep farmer, not the shooting tenant?

11,658. Mr Sutherland.—What date was that?

11,659. Mr Burns.—All the time, eighteen years.

11,660. The Chairman.—Was the clearance, in your recollection, by the sheep farmer or the shooting tenant? or do you know?—There is part of it that was cleared by the sheep farmers and part by the shooting tenant.

11,661. Mr Burns.—And the shooting tenant was Lord Tweedmouth and Major Boyd?—Yes.

11,662. You were at Breackachy at one time, you said?—Yes.

11,663. That was not a small farm?—Something about £50. There were two of them in my time.

11,664. What was the rent?—Something about £50.

11,665. £150 it is now, but there has been something added to it perhaps?—There were two farms at the time.

11,666. Now, about your 1s. 6d. an acre. Would you take Scuir-na-Lapaich at 1s. 6d. an acre?—No.

11,667. Nor Mam-Soul?—No.

11,668. Nor Carn-Eige?—No.

11,669. These are all in this place you are talking about.

11,670. The Chairman.—You would not take them for nothing?—Oh yes, I would take them for nothing.

11,671. But they are very good grazing for summer sheiling, are they not, these mountain tops?—Oh yes.

11,672. Mr Burns.—Do you remember the story about the man that went up to the top and Mr Winans built a house for him on the top of Scuir-na-Lapaich? It was not you, was it?—No.

11,673. You know about the man. You remember the story?—No.

11,674. Did you watch the deer?—Yes.

11,675. Don't you remember the man that was snowed up, 16 feet of snow on the top of his house, and he only found out it was daylight by the snow coming down the chimney in the afternoon?

11,676. The Chairman.—Don't answer that.

11,677. Mr Burns.—You did get some reply to the petitions, except the last one?—No.

11,678. You have no reason to suppose that Mr Mackenzie, the minister, did not get some reply?—No, he did not get any reply.

11,679. He did not tell you he got a reply?—He told me he did not get a reply.

11,680. To the last one, but to the two previous ones?—Well, Mr Grant there will be able to state.

11,681. Didn't you get a general reply to some of them that the land had been let to Mr Robertson, Comar?—Not I.

11,682. Mr Mackenzie didn't tell you that?—No.

11,683. Mr Robertson, Comar, had the land all the time, hadn't he, for the last twenty years?—Yes, but his lease was out then.

11,684. The Chairman.—And you wanted to embrace the opportunity of the lease being out?—Yes.

11,685. Mr Burns.—His lease was expiring at Whitsunday last, and you thought you would get some of the land?—Yes.

11,686. Now you can tell us this, as you are a deerman, to clear it up. Can you have a deer forest, in the method by which they are now managed, and sheep successfully; can you have both a deer forest and sheep on the same ground?—You could not have a deer forest and sheep on the same ground, but you could have some sporting.

11,687. I know you can get grouse shooting?—Yes, and deer too, to some extent.

11,688. But not in the method by which you manage the forests now?—No, no.

11,689. The Chairman.—Is that because the desire is to kill a much larger number of deer than used to exist?—Yes.

11,690. Mr Burns.—The reason is, that the shepherd and his dog in going about the sheep interrupt the ground. That is the reason; you want stillness and quiet?—Yes.

11,691. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—I should like to ask one or two questions: Who cleared Knockfin?

11,692. The Chairman.—Who cleared Knockfin, it was cleared?—Mr Winans.

11,693. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—I think your lordship has the amount of sheep cleared already in evidence—over 4000 sheep. (To Witness.) Who cleared Beneveian and Achagiat, which was part of the grazing of Mauld?—It was Mr Winans that cleared that.

11,694. The Chairman.—Mr Fraser, Mauld, sold over to Winans, and Winans cleared the ground. Is that the way of it?—Yes.

11,695. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—What do the watchers do in the deer forest—such men as yourself and the gamekeeper—what is their occupation?

11,696. The Chairman.—What is the occupation of a watcher and a forester on a deer forest? What is his particular duty?—There are some of us only keeping the deer from doing any harm—keeping them up from going on low ground.

11,697. What kind of low ground; it is all forest?—Corn and crop.

11,698. Whose corn?—There is Mr Robertson, Comar.

11,699. Keeping them off Mr Robertson's corn, and any other duty?—There are some standing watchers up the glen.

11,700. What does he stand and watch?—To see there is no poachers or anything.

11,701. Anything else?—Not that I am aware of.

11,702. Is that their whole duty?—I think so.

11,703. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Are they allowed to carry any rifles or keep any rifles, either watchers or keepers?

11,704. The Chairman.—Are you allowed to carry or keep a rifle?—Not I.

11,705. Are the foresters allowed to carry or keep rifles?—I don't think there is any except the head-keeper, Mr Mackenzie.

Beauly — Roderick Maclean.

11,706. Are you allowed to carry or keep guns?—No.

11,707. Then you have no gun?—No, I have no gun.

11,708. Have you a sporting dog?—Yes, I had a small terrier.

11,709. But you have no regular sporting dog?—No.

11,710. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Then, what is your occupation?—I can suggest the occupation if your lordship will allow me, but perhaps you had better get it.

11,711. The Chairman.—He says he watches poachers, and he watches that Mr Robertson's corn is not eaten up. I have not heard anything else.

11,712. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Have they to report to Mr Winans daily, or pretty often, the number of stags they see browsing on the hillsides, and have they to report to himself and his keeper daily, or send duplicate reports of any people they see walking along the highway through these forests, their names and addresses, and whether they are off the highway or not.

11,713. The Chairman.—Do you make that report?—Some of the men are employed to do that. Some of those who are up the glen had to report the number of deer.

11,714. And do they also report, as far as they can, the names and addresses of people passing through the forests by the road?—I am not aware of that.

11,714*a*. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Is the forest used for any purpose whatever connected with what was understood in his early years as sport? Are these forests used now in any sense in a similar manner to what forests—they were not called forests in those days—to what sporting preserves were used in his earlier years?

11,715. The Chairman.—This is the question: Are these forests used in any sense in the way in which sporting ground was used in your early days?—No, it is not used in the same way.

11,716. Now, what is the special difference?

11,717. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Do they shoot anything at all?—The difference is, that in my first days there was shooting there, and there is not shooting there now.

11,718. The Chairman.—You mean they don't shoot game?—No.

11,719. And for a number of years, as you told us, they have not even stalked deer?—No.

11,720. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Doesn't the fact that there is a great deal more arable land on the lower grounds throughout this county, than there is proportionally in these glens, account for the difference in rental that Mr Burns referred to?

11,721. The Chairman.—I think you might put the question if you can get him to understand it.

11,722. Mr Shaw Stewart.—These forests of Mr Winans, are they not used exceptionally: you never heard of any other forests in Scotland where there was no stalking every year: you never heard of any other forest dealt with in the same way as this?—Yes, Glen Strathfarrar is in the same way.

11,723. All other forests in Scotland, except those under Mr Winans, are used every year for sporting purposes?—Yes.

11,724. And if Mr Winans gave these forests up, I suppose these forests would in all probability be stalked over again?—Very likely.

11,725. Mr Burns.—Do you know that these forests have been let, the whole of them for this year, to be shot?—Yes, I know that.

11,726. The Chairman.—Has Mr Winans not kept any part of the forest?—He has kept some.

11,727. What some, now?—Luibnadamph.

11,728. Mr Burns.—You told us the story about how you would work your own croft—25 acres of arable and 100 sheep. What rent would you pay for that?

11,729. The Chairman.—I will put the question again, as I don't think he answered it?—I gave you a proper answer for that.

11,730. Mr Burns.—Would it be twenty-five one-and-sixpences?—I mean that for a certain place. I would not give that for the pasture.

Beauly. — Roderick Maclean.

11,731. The Chairman.—Would you like to see an equitable rate for the arable land or old arable land and so much per sheep for the sheep?—Yes.

11,732. And an impartial body of men with competent knowledge fixing rent on that basis would satisfy you?—Yes.

11,733. Mr Burns.—Have you any notion how much it would come to, 25 acres of land and 100 sheep?—No.

11,734. The Chairman.—He has given us what enables us to form an opinion.

11,735. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—I should like to ask a question or two, my lord.

11,736. The Chairman.—As short as you can.

11,737. Mr Donald Macrae.—Oh, decidedly.

11,738. The Chairman.—We wish to finish to-day.

11,739. Mr Donald Macrae.—This is a point that I consider of some importance, and I hope your lordship will bear with me for a moment or two. I understand Mr Maclean to say that he did not consider himself an authority as to the question of the amount of stock that the various places would carry. I should like to ask him now, was he present at a public meeting in Cannich within the last fortnight, where the question of evidence to be submitted to the Royal Commission was fully debated for two or three hours.

11,740. The Chairman.—Were you present at a meeting in Cannich of that kind?—Yes.

11,741. Mr Donald Macrae.—Does he remember the names of the men who were appointed by the people there to give evidence? Does he remember of an old man speaking as to evidence for over an hour, and giving the names of every single place in Glencannich on both sides, and mentioning the names and the number of the various farmers who were in those places, and the amount of stock they had, of horses, of cattle, and of sheep, for every single one of them separately? I think over twenty places in Glencannich alone.

11,742. The Chairman.—Do you remember hearing a statement upon these matters at that meeting from a very old man?—Yes.

11,743. What was his name?—Angus Cameron.

11,744. Mr Donald Macrae.—Do you remember of another man there who was appointed as a delegate, and who was very anxious to be here to give evidence, and who said that he was afraid to come because of a threat?

11,745. The Chairman.—Do you remember that?—Yes.

11,746. What was his name?—James Grant, Fasnakyle.

11,747. Mr Donald Macrae.—Can you remember the name of any other man who was appointed a delegate, and who was very anxious to come, and who also told me in your presence that he also was afraid to come because of a threat?—Maclennan was afraid to come. They were threatening to let his house down.

11,748. The Chairman.—Who threatened to put his house down?—He told me it was Robertson, Comar.

11,749. Mr Donald Macrae.—I simply want to point out, my lord (I feel the evidence would be at second hand from me), but these old men gave the names of over twenty places, farms that were cleared and that are now under deer, and the names of the tenants, if not farmers, the number of milk cows and followers, the number of horses and the number of sheep at every one of these places; and as an illustration of them I may mention one where there were three and four head of cattle and 3000 sheep. In other places, six and eight and ten head of cattle, and 500 and 600 and 700 sheep, quite a common thing.

11,750. The Chairman.—Of course, you know as well as I do, we can hardly take that as evidence.

11,751. Mr Donald Macrae.—I know; but what I wish to point out is the loss sustained to the country through the fact that this vital part of the evidence is suppressed because of the terrorism that has been referred to.

11,752. Mr Burns.—We are denying that.

11,753. The Chairman.—I quite understand that, but I think it is only fair to allow this to come out.

11,754. Mr Maccallum.—It is a fact, is it, to your knowledge, that there are people in Glencannich much better qualified to speak as to the quality of the land than you?—Yes, the whole of them have better knowledge of the land.

11,755. They could give better evidence than you could give?—Yes.

11,756. And they were willing to come, and made arrangements to come?—They were willing when I was speaking to them.

11,757. Now, you were engaged yourself as a watcher: was there any threat against yourself coming?—No.

11,758. Did you ask permission to come?—No, I did not ask. I thought I would be at home in time.

11,759. And so there was no refusal of permission?—No, there was no word said to me.

11,760. The Chairman.—I should ask you this in fairness to the estate. Have you any reason whatever to anticipate any harm to yourself or to your employment from having come here and given evidence?—Well, I believe they would not be pleased at me to give evidence.

11,761. But have you any reason to anticipate any harm?—I could not tell you. It might.

11,762. Mr Sutherland mentioned yesterday, and I was much obliged to him, and I beg to repeat, there is an Act of Parliament passed very recently which affords special protection to a person giving evidence in similar circumstances to yours. Now that will do.—Thank you, my lord.

WILLIAM BURNS, Solicitor, Inverness (52)—examined.

[I wish to go into the box and contradict this.]

11,763. The Chairman.—Do you wish to be examined?—Yes, about this point. I give as evidence, my lord, that this statement, and the reflection upon the management of the estate and upon Mr Winans, that has been made to-day and yesterday, with regard to preventing witnesses coming forward, has not the remotest foundation on earth, so far as I know. It is perfectly well known to all the people in this district that my firm are, and have been for many years, agents for The Chisholm estate and for Mr Winans and for Lord Lovat; and there was no mention made to me or to any factor, or so far as I know to any manager or any assistant manager upon any part of the estates, of any desire of any person to come forward to give evidence. I need hardly say to your lordship that, if the thing had been communicated to me, directly or indirectly, I would instantly, without regard to the Act of Parliament, have prevented any person interfering with any man coming forward and giving your lordship the most full evidence possible; and the thing is—I don't say got up on purpose, because these people do go and think and in their own minds have notions that we would threaten or interfere with them—but the notion that I, or any person connected with me, would interfere with the inquiry at the instance of Her Majesty, is absurd.

11,764. I did not understand at all, Mr Burns, that any harm was dreaded from you personally or from your firm or anyone connected with you?—But from Mr Winans or Mrs Chisholm, or the factor, or anyone, the thing is not possible. It would have been communicated to me. We have a general supervision of all this district of country — Mrs Chisholm's estate with the aid of the factor, Mr Winans' without the aid of anyone.

11,765. Your evidence, among other things, comes to this, that if anything of that sort has occurred you have no knowledge of it whatever, and it would be wholly without your consent or instructions?—Entirely; and I have inquired, and expect if Mr Donald Mackenzie of Fasnakyle, who does not happen to be here——

11,766. Mr Donald Macrae.—He was here yesterday when the statement was made. He denied it yesterday.

11,767. Mr Maccallum.—It was not denied by Mr Mackenzie before the Commission. Beauly.

11,768. Mr Burns.—He told me that the thing was nonsense; but the suggestion now is made that Mr Robertson of Comar, who is not one of our people, and who is a tenant and is a rich man, has done something on his own account, but he could not influence our people. They don't care a snuff for Mr Robertson of Comar. I also want to say this about yesterday's evidence, that these sheep farms of Kerrow and Knockfin proved commercial failures during the last years of their existence. I took over the sheep stock, in the first place, of the farm of Kerrow in 1872 from a Mr Rogerson, who had lost many thousands of pounds in the adventure, for Lord Tweedmouth. We carried it on; there was a loss. We did not lose in any year less than about £800 on the farm of Kerrow, and then we sold the stock. William Burns.

11,769. Mr MacCallum.—During how many years?—Mr Burns. From 1872 to 1878, I think, so far as I can get the figures. Then in Knockfin I took the sheep stock over for Mrs Chisholm of Chisholm in 1882. Mr Winans repaid the money; that was part of the bargain. We carried it on, Lord Tweedmouth being the shooting tenant, at a great loss, although we never took the trouble to ascertain exactly what it was; but in 1886 I sold off the whole stock and cleared the land, but there was a loss, I am bound to say—a considerable loss. We did not realise it, because we did not keep any separate capital accounts; it was of no great consequence to Mr Winans. But, in the case of Kerrow, we did keep accurate accounts, and I think the loss was never less than £800.

11,770. From 1872 to 1878?—As far as I can get the figures.

11,771. During each of these years?—Each of these years. I ought to qualify that, to some extent, in fairness to you, by saying that both these places were occupied with a view as much, or perhaps more, to sport than profit. That may have had to do with it.

11,772. That, of course, has a good deal to do with it. I have no questions to put, but some of the other Commissioners may have.

11,773. Mr Munro.—Perhaps you would kindly take your pencil memorandum that you had before you to refresh your memory: First, as to the acreage of the county of Inverness, what did you say?—I got the acreage from Oliver & Boyd.

11,774. I have it here stated in Lord Napier's Report as 2,723,501 acres. That is quoted from an extract in the Highland Sportsman, advertising some estates in the county for sale?—Well, I have taken the figures from Mr Malcolm, who has got them from Oliver & Boyd's Almanac.

11,775. I don't for a moment mean to impugn the accuracy of these figures, but I think it is right, Mr Burns, to direct your attention to the discrepancy?—We will get it in a moment.

11,776. Turning from that point in the meantime, we come to the question of rental. What did you state the rental of the county to be?—I got it from Mr Malcolm again—£332,000.

11,777. The gross rental of the county of Inverness is £332,000, but that is inclusive of the Highland Railway—£16,000, and the Caledonian Canal—£2500?—That would increase the rental per acre if you knock the railways out.

11,778. I think it is stated here, in Oliver & Boyd, 2,616,545. Oliver & Boyd, p. 1005:—'Inverness 'covers an area of 4255 square miles, or 2,723,501 acres. 'The ordinary rental of the county for the year 1892–'93 is £303,700, 4s. 3d.; Highland Railway, £16,536; 'Great North of Scotland Railway, £2551.'

11,779. I don't undertake to say which statement is the accurate one; but now about the rental?—I see in Oliver & Boyd, p. 634, the figure given is £331,916. I took it roughly as £332,000.

11,780. The rental given here, in the abstract for 1892–93 of the Valuation Roll, is £322,787, 4s. 3d. I presume you will take that as accurate?—I will get that in a moment from the Valuation Roll. We will take it at £322,000. I fancy the Valuation Roll must be taken before Oliver & Boyd. It is only £10,000 difference.

11,781. I beg your pardon, it is a considerable deal more. If you eliminate from these figures the value of the Highland Railway Company and the Caledonian Canal it brings you down to £303,000?—Obviously, but we took the biggest figure, because, if you take the gross amount, you increase the rate per acre.

11,782. Included in the £303,000 of gross rental are there not the houses of the county,—the rental of the houses in the county?—Oh, surely; it is the heritages in the county if they have done it right.

11,783. What proportion would you estimate that at, roughly speaking?—That is a question it is absolutely impossible to answer on a moment's notice, but I will give you a guess, if you like. Take, as an example, the Chisholm estate; what are the houses down at. I am bound to say they will not be one-tenth of the value of the whole land.

11,784. I would not be disposed to take The Chisholm estate as a typical example?—Well, take Lord Lovat's; although he has built that tremendous big castle, Lord Lovat's estate is probably assessed at £28,000 a year, and I would be astonished to find that there was £2000 under houses.

11,785. I would be astonished to find that there was not double?—You can get it. What do you say Beaufort Castle was down at. £500 a year. I would say it was a big rent. They always accuse us of putting down too little for mansion houses, but what do you put it down at? I don't believe there would be £2000, and that would be 10 per cent.

11,786. The Chairman.—(Turning to Mr Peter). But you must know, Mr Peter, what Beaufort Castle is?—I think £250.

11,787–8. Mr Burns.—Well, put down other £250. That would not be more than one-hundredth.

11,789. Mr Munro.—Surely, Mr Burns, you would not seriously allege that the valuation of the village of Beauly would only be £200?—But I am not talking of the village. Inverness-shire is a very curious place. There are almost no towns in it except the town of Inverness, and the villages are few. There are Beauly and Fort William, and Fort Augustus and Kingussie. You have about exhausted the lot, and the rentals are not very heavy. I don't believe that 10 per cent. of the rental is houses.

11,790. In addition to that, you have got mansion-houses, farm-houses, and the like?—The farm-house is a sort of implement of the land it is on.

11,791. Would you estimate the valuation of the houses in the county as £70,000 a year over all?—I said 10 per cent.; that would give you £30,000. Chuck in these villages. I would split the difference with you and give you £45,000, but really this is a wild guess.

11,792. But you made rather a wild statement to begin with?—I took it out of Oliver & Boyd.

11,793. You made out that the average rent per acre in the county of Inverness was 2s. 6d., and on that you based a question to Mr Maclean, asking him if he was prepared to pay a sum equal to that, or did he consider it reasonable that Mrs Chisholm should take a less rental than the average of the county. Now, the average of the county is very considerably under 2s. 6d. per acre; it must of necessity be?—No; you reduced your gross rental, and therefore increased the rate per acre, and you have knocked off as much the one way as you have added the other way.

11,794. I am afraid your arithmetic has got a little confused.

11,795. Mr Sutherland.—Don't you see you are decreasing your dividend without increasing your divisor; you are attributing the value to the land that is given to the railway and the canal?—He has shown me that my total rental was too great; then that gets your rate per acre up.

11,796. The Chairman.—Isn't it the other way?—No, it is not. It is an arithmetical inquiry, and Mr Munro thinks he is right.

11,797. Mr Munro.—You have reduced the rental very considerably by £70,000 or £80,000, but you have not reduced the acreage of the county. Must not, therefore, the average rent be considerably less per acre? You have reduced the amount to be divided without reducing the divisor?—Our brains don't work the same fashion. I say no, supposing it was £1 instead of £332,000, the rate per acre would be two millions.

Beauly. William Burns.

11,798. Mr Sutherland.—You are attributing to land the value of railways and canals?—I admit that, and I say you can take off 10 per cent. and you will not appreciably alter the difference. That would be 3d. off the 2s. 6d.

11,799. That is merely the houses, without including the Railway and the Caledonian Canal?—You will not get it down to 2s., do anything you like in the way of deduction or addition.

11,800. Mr Munro.—Would it put you to an excessive amount of trouble if you made up a statement showing the actual amount paid for agricultural holdings in the county?—Really, it is impossible to do it except by a tremendous estimate. There is a farm paying, say £500, and there is on it a house—good, bad or indifferent. You would have to keep that off, and try and take the acreage of the land without the house.

11,801. You are rather gifted in that way?—I am absolutely gifted in lots of ways, and if you want me to do it I will do it, but the county assessor will do it for you.

11,802. But, speaking in the slump, you will acknowledge frankly, no doubt, that you overestimated the average rental of the county of Inverness?—No, Mr Malcolm took the figures out, and he has divided them, and it makes 2s. 6d. You can have the calculation there and check it. I believe it is correct.

11,803. You are responsible for the statement. You made the statement.

11,804. The Chairman.—He is responsible for it, because he based questions to a witness upon it.—I did, my lord, and I say it is correct.

11,805. I must say that the figures were rather hurriedly furnished by Mr Malcolm?—We have checked them by Oliver & Boyd.

11,806. Mr Maccallum.—Do you still hold to that statement that the rate is 2s. 6d. an acre on the land in Inverness-shire?—Yes, I hold to that statement, with the qualifications that Mr Munro has suggested—that the houses are included and some other things are included.

11,807. Mr Sutherland.—And the railways and the canal?—Yes.

11,808. Mr Maccallum.—Having made these admissions, it comes to this, that the rate is very much less than 2s. 6d.?—No, it is the other way.

11,809. Surely you can make that simple calculation, Mr Burns.

11,810. Mr Donald Macrae.—Might I ask a question of Mr Burns on the statement he made.

11,811. The Chairman.—Oh, certainly.

11,812. Mr Donald Macrae.—Mr Burns stated the loss on certain farms during certain years. Is he prepared to state the profits on the same farms during the other years that he was very careful not to refer to?—There is an insinuation, 'Mr Balallan,' that I was very careful to conceal something. I was not at all careful. I may tell you very frankly I know nothing about it.

11,813. Mr Burns knows nothing about it?—But there was a loss every year that I had to do with it. I don't think there was any profit at any other time.

11,814. What explanation has he to give of the fact stated by the factor yesterday, that on the expiry of the lease of Comar, the valuation of which the other day embraces 8500 sheep, that farm was not advertised at all for a grazing tenant? It was not at all advertised. What explanation has Mr Burns to give of that fact. How can he give an explanation consistent with the other statement that they were most anxious to get a grazing tenant and yet took no means to secure one?—But did Mr Grant say they were most anxious to get a grazing tenant?

11,815. The Chairman.—Oh yes.—Mr Burns. Then that is Mr Grant's affair. I may tell you that there have been, I think, interrupted negotiations between Mr Winans and Mrs Chisholm, and probably also Mr Robertson, Comar, for the last fifteen years, and there are still negotiations of all kinds. Mr Winans has a very inventive mind when he is proposing this, that, and the other thing, and what is going to happen to this sheep stock has not yet been settled. I believe that the probability is—but that is a thing I cannot vouch for, it is in Mr Winans' hands—the probability is that we will not see him here again, and, if he does not come back to shoot, I cannot tell you what is going to happen to that sheep stock. Mr Winans has the grazing of that land in succession to Mr Robertson, Comar. What arrangements they are making, I don't know: I don't suggest there are any. I can't tell; that is not in my hands. Mr Winans is grazing tenant of that place just now in law, whatever he spends on it.

11,816. Mr Donald Macrae.—My next question to Mr Burns is this:—Did he hear the factor for The Chisholm admit yesterday that the factor and Mrs Chisholm were informed by the delegates themselves in a petition to Mrs Chisholm, through the factor, that they were threatened with having their houses pulled down about their ears if they would ever say a word about land?—I heard Mr Grant read a letter yesterday.

11,817. The Chairman.—And you heard his evidence?—I heard his evidence.

11,818. Mr Donald Macrae.—You heard his admission?—I heard whatever he said.

11,819. The Chairman.—He made that admission. I will read the passage:—Mr Macrae.—'Are these 'people sufficiently independent to come before the 'Commission and speak for themselves?—Certainly. 'Is it not the fact that in one of these petitions they 'stated to Mrs Chisholm that the tenant of Comar 'threatened to pull their houses about their ears if 'they appeared before the Commission?—That was 'said in one of the petitions.'—Witness.—I think I heard that, but I was out during a part of Mr Grant's evidence.

11,820. Mr Donald Macrae.—I wish to ask what steps Mr Burns has taken, if any, since yesterday, to give these people an absolute assurance in the event of their coming down to give evidence before the Royal Commission?—I think I made some statement in the Court here.

11,821. The Chairman.—You made a further statement, Mr Macrae, in which you informed the Commission of what had happened to delegates then present.

11,822. Mr Burns.—Mr Macrae suggests that the estate did not help the people, but did he ask us?

11,823. The Chairman.—Mr Macrae added:—'These 'people approached Mrs Chisholm through the factor, 'and it is from that quarter, I hold, that the offer of 'protection should have come.' Then I interpose a statement about the number that had come forward. Then Mr Burns says:—'In the name of Mrs Chisholm 'and Mr Winans, I offer them the utmost security.'

11,824. Mr Donald Macrae.—These people live a considerable distance from this place; it is inaccessible. Has Mr Burns taken any steps whatever beyond that statement? Has he any reason to believe that the statement he made in Court yesterday has been communicated to these people?—Not unless it has been done in the public prints, but if you give me the names of any body,——

11,825. The names were given here?—You never gave me the name of Mr James Grant.

11,826. I gave the names yesterday.—Well, take the trouble to write their names on an envelope, and I will send a special messenger to get them to come and see the Commissioners.

11,827. How can you explain the fact that the petition of these people, for the simple and small matter of cow's grazing, has been ignored, while Mr Robertson, who has been threatening to pull the houses about their ears if they would dare ever say a word, has got a renewal of his lease?—Well, Mr Robertson is an old tenant of The Chisholm estate: he is 76 years of age, and he has given up the grazing, which is at a distance, I suppose, of about 15 to 20 miles from his house, on account of advancing years, and he wants to retire from that part of his business, and he wishes to continue in the place where he has cattle and sheep, and where he cultivates an arable farm close to his house, and Mrs Chisholm thought it was a very proper thing to do not to turn out an old man. These petitioners are servants of Mr Winans, whose tenancy may terminate, probably will terminate, next May, and the notion was that we should take from Mr Robertson part of his possession and give it to these people. That did not seem to the factor or to Mrs Chisholm to be reasonable or fair, and there is an end to it. Supposing Mr Winans, who is a different person from The Chisholm estate altogether, terminates his connection with them,—that is to say, pays them off, what would be the use of their holdings to them?—They may take them, if they like, from Mr Robertson. I have no doubt if they apply to Mr Robertson for a cow's grass they may find him reasonable. I have found him sometimes reasonable. I may also add, three of the men who had applied got land. We could not manage the rest.

Beauly. William Burns.

DUNCAN ROBERTSON, Farmer, Comar, Strathglass (70)—examined. Duncan Robertson.

11,828. The Chairman.—How many years have you been in Comar?—Thirty-four.

11,829. You entered thirty-four years ago, on a sixteen years' lease, did you?—A fifteen years' lease.

11,830. And that was succeeded by a lease for how many years?—I don't remember, but there were two leases since. There were ten years added to it.

11,831. There were ten years added to the fifteen years?—Yes.

11,832. That is twenty-five?—And nine again.

11,833. And the lease is out now?—The lease expired at Whitsunday of this year.

11,834. Were any additions made to your farm during this lease?—Yes.

11,835. What were these additions?—There was one farm added to it.

11,836. What was the name of it?—Mam.

11,837. What was the extent of it?—I am not sure about the extent of it. It is not a very large farm. It is a hill farm altogether.

11,838. And it is now part of Comar?—Part of Longart farm in Ross-shire.

11,839. Is that what you call East Comar?—It is not in Comar at all; the top of Glencannich.

11,840. Now you heard the statement—I want to take this shortly and to help you so far as I can up to the point. There was a statement made. The question was put by Mr Macrae—'Is it not the fact that in one 'of these petitions' [the petitions we have heard so much about] 'they stated to Mrs Chisholm that the 'tenant of Comar,' meaning you, 'threatened to pull 'their houses about their ears if they appeared before 'the Commission.' Do you wish to make any statement to the Commissioners with regard to the implication in that statement?—Yes, I wish to say that that is not the fact. It is not true. I never made such a statement, or any statement bordering on it.

11,841. Neither that statement nor any statement of the kind?—No, nothing of the kind.

11,842. I should, in fairness to you, ask you this further question,—Did you threaten anybody if they appeared before this Commission?—No, my lord, I never did.

11,843. Did you say anything to anybody about what might happen to them if they appeared before the Commission?—No, I never did.

11,844. Had you any conversation with anybody with reference to his or her evidence before the Commission?—No.

11,845. Did you speak to anybody on the farm or in your neighbourhood on the subject?—No, I never thought of doing anything of the sort.

Beauly. Duncan Robertson.

11,846. Can you suggest how this idea has arisen?—I can't say, and I never knew of it till I saw it in the papers this morning. That was my reason for coming here.

11,847. I must tell you, that you are quite entitled to come here when your name was involved. Now, as you have come here and are giving us information, I would like to get this from you if you can give it. You know Tombuie?—Yes.

11,848. What was the carry of cows there before it became forest?—I cannot say; I never had cows, it was sheep I had on it.

11,849. What sheep did it carry?—It would carry about 200 cheviots.

11,850. What sheep would Dalreoch carry?—Dalreoch would not carry much; I am not sure of the boundaries, but the land is not so good.

11,851. What did it carry in your day; would it carry 300?—I am not sure of the marches; I never had that place. I had not Dalreoch.

11,852. But do you not know what it would carry? Can you not give us an estimate?—Dalreoch and Slios-garbh might between them carry 1800 altogether.

11,853. What does that include?—Away up to Coire-buie march.

11,854. Now you know Luibguish?—Yes, that is included in the 1800.

11,855. Then you know Fraoch-Choire?—Yes.

11,856. Is that included?—That is included.

11,857. That is all on the south side of Glencannich?—All on the south side.

11,858. Now, passing over to the north side of Glencannich, what would the carry of sheep on Muckrach be?—Muckrach and Carrie together would be——

11,859. About 1000?—No, about 700.

11,860. Would there not be nearly 900?—I don't think it. I don't think it ever had 900 on—about 700 I would say.

11,861-2. Pass on to Leitrie: what would the carry in sheep on Leitrie be—500?—Not quite.

11,863. How many?—Perhaps 400.

11,864. Then Shalavanach—you know it very well—what is the carry on it?—About the same.

11,865. And the carry on Mullardoch?—That would be 600.

11,866. Then, take Luibardtaig and Coire-nan-cuilean on the east side, what is the carry there?—Something over 500.

11,867. And the carry of Coire-nan-cuilean on the west side?—Not quite so much.

11,868. Taking Comar and Fasnakyle: Auchinan, what is the carry of that?—It was wintering I had there; it would keep about——

11,869. 250?—Oh, it would keep over 1000.

11,870. For wintering?—It would keep 1500 for wintering.

11,871. And how many at other times of the year?—Perhaps about 1000.

11,872. Does that include Airidh-Dhuibhian?—Including Coire-dubh and all up to Airidh-Dhuibhian, and round by Tombuie. Tombuie is included in that.

11,873. 1500 wintering, and how many in summer?—It would only keep, summer and winter, about 1000.

11,874. Now I would like if you could give me—I have not taken you over it,—but can you give me the carry of these places in cows and horses?—No, I can give you what the farm of Comar keeps.

11,875. Do you not know whether Tombuie would carry 6 cows?—I don't think there would be keep for 6 cows there.

11,876. You are not able to speak with the same confidence of the carry in cattle as of the carry in sheep?—No.

11,877. You never had cattle there?—No, never.

11,878. Now, Mr Macrae, you raised this question in your examination yesterday. Have you any question to put to Mr Robertson.

11,879. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Your lordship has almost exhausted all I should like to ask Mr Robertson, but I may put this question,—Did he visit the house of Roderick Maclennan and speak to him upon the question of their asking hand?

Beauly. Duncan Robertson.

11,880. The Chairman.—Allow me to guide you so far. In a question of that sort you have given him the place, and you must also give him the date.

11,881. Mr Donald Macrae.—About the time of these petitions, within the last three months?—Witness.—No.

11,882. Did Mr Robertson say anything to Roderick Maclennan or to James Grant, or to any other of these men in the neighbourhood of Cannich; did he say anything to them about pulling down their houses?—Never did.

11,883. There is no use following that up. We have it from the men themselves?—Some of the people that you named there as coming to the Commission, came to my house and said they had no money to bring them down, and my niece gave them money to bring them down, and they did not appear here to-day.

11,884. The Chairman.—How many got money?—One.

11,885. What money did he get?—As much as what would bring him down.

11,886. A few shillings?—Yes.

11,887. What was the name of the man?—Angus Cameron.

11,888. He had his expenses here and to help him back?—Yes.

11,889. And who gave him the money?—My niece.

11,890. She lives with you?—She lives with me, and that shows that I was not keeping them back.

11,891. Mr Maccallum.—Do you know that the person who got that money was one of those appointed at the public meeting to give evidence?—I heard his name mentioned here to-day.

11,892. And those who were appointed to give evidence here, are they in any way dependent upon you?—No. One of them has a house from me, and pays me £1 a year.

11,893. That is the only one that is indebted to you in any way?—No other one.

11,894. Mr Munro.—You are leaving the sheep farm of Comar, I understand?—Not at present; I have Comar.

11,895. But you are leaving it, I understand?—No, I am not.

11,896. What land is it that you are leaving?—I am leaving Ross-shire.

11,897. You are leaving the Ross-shire part?—Yes.

11,898. Did you make application to the landlord to be relieved of that part of the farm?—No, I don't think I did.

11,899. You were not willing to continue the lease any longer?—Well, I never considered it much.

11,900. But you yourself made application to be relieved of it?—No, I did not; but I sent a renunciation in.

11,901. But we had it here in evidence that you yourself took the initiative in the negotiations for giving up the farm?—Yes, I did that.

11,902. How do you reconcile that with the statement that you did not make application to be relieved of the farm?—Not to any person; I just sent the renunciation when my time was out, that I was to be cleared.

11,903. You were not willing to continue as tenant there?—I don't say I was particularly willing.

11,904. You know the purpose to which the farm is now to be applied, I suppose?—No, I can't say.

11,905. Not of your own knowledge?—Not of my own knowledge. It was supposed that it was to be a deer forest when I gave it up.

11,906. That is the common notion, that it is to be converted into a deer forest?

11,907. Mr Sutherland.—You said the Ross-shire part of your farm?—The Ross-shire part and the hill part of Comar farm was a deer forest some years back.

11,908. Mr Macleod.—Mr Munro, you will notice Mr Robertson, was rather surprised when you said you had not given up Comar—that you still had Comar?—I have the low part of it.

11,909. As I understand it, you some years ago yourself sublet a portion of it?—Of the hill.

11,910. Of the hill?—Yes.

11,911. As a deer forest?—Yes.

11,912. In fact you yourself took the sheep off it and let it?—I had no sheep on it; it was wintering I had.

11,913. So that you sublet it in that way. Now you gave the Chairman a number of figures as to the number of sheep that could be carried on different places?—Yes.

11,914. And then you said you could not give any information as to the cattle, because you hadn't any cattle there?—No.

11,915. Now, do I understand that the number of sheep that you gave is the total stock that the place would carry—that is to say that, supposing that you were putting cattle on, would you have to reduce the number of those sheep?—I would have to reduce the sheep stock, certainly.

11,916. So that this is really the total carry of the places, in your opinion?—Yes.

11,917. If there were cows put on, or any other animals.

11,918. The Chairman.—Horses?

11,919. Mr Macleod.—Horses. It would be necessary to reduce the sheep stock to the number of the other animals you would put on?—Yes, I would fancy so, but these are not my own places; I have only guessed the thing—given my opinion upon it.

11,920. One other question as to the number of sheep that were on the ground that you gave up at Whitsunday term. Might I ask you what the number was?—About 8000.

11,921. I may tell you that it was stated here yesterday at between 7000 and 8000, and it has been stated in another place at over 8000?—There are not 8000 delivered yet, but there should be.

11,922. There should be about 8000?—Yes.

11,923. The Chairman.—I may mention at this stage, gentlemen, we are extremely anxious to complete the evidence to-day.

11,924. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—I wish to ask some questions of this witness.

11,925. The Chairman.—We want to finish our work this afternoon.

11,926. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—I hope your lordship will give us an opportunity, as well as Mr Burns.

11,927. The Chairman.—Certainly.

11,928. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Will your lordship ask if this is in the handwriting of Mr Robertson [hands document to witness].—Witness.—Perhaps it is.

11,929. The Chairman.—I suppose it is?—I think so.

11,930. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Mr Robertson supplied me with these figures on a certain occasion when I went up to see what that glen would carry. That was two years ago, and he was good enough to give me these figures which I have already used publicly. Would your lordship ask Mr Robertson if he has there given the carrying capacity of Tombuie as 6 cows, with followers, 2 horses, and 300 sheep?—No, it will not keep that.

11,931. Has he given this to me, my lord?

11,932. The Chairman.—He says that is in his writing, and, of course, therefore he admits that he differs from the figures you have given, I suppose.

11,933. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Well, I will ask for an explanation of that after I have given the figures, if you will allow me. Dalreoch, 3 cows, with followers, 1 horse, 300 sheep; Luibguish, 5 cows, with followers, 1 horse, 400 sheep; Fraoch-Choire, 4 cows, with followers, 1 horse, 300 sheep. Glencannich, north side, Muckrach, 8 cows, with followers, 2 horses, 360 sheep; Carrie, 8 cows, with followers, 2 horses, 580 sheep. The cows were estimated at the time, I may be allowed to state, on the basis of what the arable land in each place would maintain through the winter.—Witness.—How many sheep does that keep on the south side altogether?

11,934. I will give you that directly you have added it up yourself at the end. Leitrie, 10 cows and followers, 2 horses, 500 sheep; Shalavanach, 8 cows and followers, 2 horses, 500 sheep; Mullardoch, 6 cows and followers, 1 horse, 900 sheep; Luibaltaig and Coire-nan-cuilean, east side, 4 cows and followers, 1 horse, 800 sheep. Coire-nan-cuilean, west side, (there are two Coire-nan-cuileans apparently), 8 cows, with followers, 2 horses, 840 sheep. Comar and Fasnakyle, part of Auchinan (that is the district that your lordship had some difficulty in discovering on the map early in the examination of the witness Maclean), 10 cows, 2 horses, 250 sheep; Airidh-Dhuibhein, 4 cows, 1 horse, 300 sheep. And our friend adds, in his own handwriting, at the bottom: 'The whole of the above farms have been possessed by 'substantial and well-to-do tenants, who lived com-'fortably and happy.'—Witness.—I never saw a tenant in either of them but one.

11,935. Oh, I can't tell you that?—Make up the number of sheep and you will find that it will come to the number I have said. That is the summering of it, but what would it winter?

11,936. The Chairman.—But were the figures you gave me summering or wintering?—The figures I gave you were the average it would keep the whole year.

11,937. And what are those figures?—Those are the summering.

11,938. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—And the wintering for the cattle, you will notice, my lord.

11,939. The Chairman.—What about the cattle?—It would summer the cattle, but it would not winter these cattle. There is no land in that ground that would provender all these.

11,940. Your answer is this, that the figures you gave me relate exclusively to wintering?—Just so: and these are the summering.

11,941. Mr Macleod.—It is a pure misunderstanding, I think.

11,942. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—I may say that the number—I totted them up—is 84 cows, 10 horses, 4310 sheep, and Mr Robertson was good enough to go into the calculation with me and point out to me at the time that the horses and cows were based entirely upon the amount of arable land in the district, and the amount of fodder and food for the cattle which could be produced for wintering them on the ground. Is that the case, Mr Robertson?—No.

11,943. The Chairman.—Then what is the fact?—They might summer a few cattle there, but there was no wintering for cattle there; there is no arable land there to winter cattle to that extent.

11,944. Then do you say this, that having in view the explanation you have given, there is no real inconsistency between the answers you gave to me and that paper?—Just so. This is the summering, but I gave the figures for the whole year.

11,945. The evidence you gave me related to the whole year over, and this relates to the summering?—Yes.

11,946. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—I cannot take that.

11,947. The Chairman.—That is his answer!

11,948. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Quite so, but it is not consistent with the information given me at the time all the same.

11,949. The Chairman.—That may be!

11,950. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Now, may I ask if part of the farm of Comar was sublet by Mr Robertson to Mr Winans?

11,951. The Chairman.—When?

11,952. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—For several years until last Whitsunday, at a rental of £500.

11,953. The Chairman.—The question is this. Was part of the farm of Comar let by you to Mr Winans consecutively for some years till recently?—I let it to Major Boyd.

11,954. Did you let it to Mr Winans?—No, I did not, but he took it over from Major Boyd; it was transferred to him.

11,955. When was that?—That is some time ago. I can't really give the date.

Beauly. Duncan Robertson.

11,956. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—It will be ten or more years ago?—More, I would say.

11,957. And it continued as a deer forest till last Whitsunday, I think, or the Whitsunday before that?

11,958. The Chairman.—Did it continue as a deer forest?—It is a deer forest to this day.

11,959. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Was the rental—the sub-rent paid by the shooting tenant—£500 or thereabouts?

11,960. The Chairman. — Was that the shooting rent?—The shooting rent was £500.

11,961. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Was that entered, to your knowledge, in the valuation roll at all? Did it ever appear? Of course it was no part of your business to put it there, Mr Robertson, but do you know whether it appeared?

11,962. The Chairman.—Do you know whether it appeared in the valuation roll as a deer forest?—No, I don't know, but I was paying income tax on everything, and rates for it.

11,963. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—I was going to ask that.—Witness.—I was paying the full rent to The Chisholm. I was paying something over about £1200.

11,964. Mr Sutherland. — Was it entered in the valuation roll as a sheep farm or as a deer forest?—It was entered in the valuation roll as a sheep farm, because I was paying the rent and the rates, and I was getting this from the shooting tenant.

11,965. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Was the arrangement this, that he should pay all taxes and continue nominally as the tenant of the place as far as the public knew, or as far as the valuation roll was concerned?

11,966. The Chairman.—Was this the arrangement, that you were to pay the taxes and appear to be the farm tenant, but that the real tenant was the sportsman who paid you £500 a year? Was that the English of it?—That was partly the English of it.

11,967. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Did the estate recognise, as a tenant, Major Boyd or Mr Winans?

11,968. The Chairman.—Were you recognised as the tenant?—Yes.

11,969. Quite so; then the other people were not.

11,970. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—And that has now continued a deer forest after you gave up the farm?—It is a deer forest now.

11,971. Was that cleared of sheep by Major Boyd or Mr Winans?—There were no sheep on it: it was for wintering it was kept.

11,972. But it was for wintering sheep?—Yes.

11,973. And who stopped the use of it for wintering sheep: was it Major Boyd or Mr Winans?—Major Boyd.

11,974. Mr Burns.—One word about the valuation of the farm, Comar. You sublet part of your land to Major Boyd?—Yes.

11,975. But you continued to pay your rent to Mrs Chisholm just the same?—Yes.

11,976. And the entries made in the valuation roll by the factor were correct, and Mrs Chisholm knew nothing about this business?—Knew nothing.

11,977. Whether you were a sort of sub-laird or not?

11,978. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—In reference to this question, has Mr Burns, as agent for the estate, returned this portion of the farm as a deer forest in that parliamentary report.

11,979. Mr Burns.—What parliamentary report?—

11,980. The Chairman.—Mr Fraser-Mackintosh's parliamentary Return.

11,981. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Would your lordship also ask him if he ever returned Knockfin; he told us just now he was the practical manager.

11,982. The Chairman.—The question just now is, did you return Knockfin, and did you return this part of Comar as a deer forest?

11,983. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—Are they mentioned in the Return?

11,984. Mr Burns.—Craskie, Fasnakyle, and Glencannich were returned in 1884; these include that.

11,985. Mr Sutherland.—It was a Return two years ago?

11,986. Mr Burns.—I never saw it. I suspect that was done by the assessors. It is in 'Glencannich, 'North Affaric, and Erchless' in this return, '78,000 'acres.' Mr Grant says roughly 80,000 acres. Beauly. Duncan Robertson.

11,987. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—But Mr Winans pays a rental of £2200 for Knockfin alone, and there is not a penny of that appears.

11,988. Mr Burns.—It is in that 78,000 acres.

11,989. The Chairman. — Does this statement 'Glencannich, North Affaric, and Erchless, Mrs 'A. C. Chisholm; estimated extent, 78,000 acres,' include Knockfin and Comar?

11,990. Mr Burns.—Yes, you will find it on the plan that I put in.

11,991. Mr Sutherland.—Was a direct application made to you by the Crown agent for this Return?—

11,992. Mr Burns.—Yes, certainly.

DONALD MACKAY, Cottar, Camuiltmuir, Kiltarlity (48)—examined. Donald Mackay.

11,993. The Chairman.—You are described as a cottar: is that correct?—Yes.

11,994. Do you pay any rent?—Yes.

11,995. What rent do you pay?—I pay 10s., but I built the most of the house myself.

11,996. To whom is the rent paid?—To Lord Lovat.

11,997. Have you any land?—No, only a small bit of garden.

11,998. Do you carry on any employment?—I have a bit of the roads just now. I got it a year last Whitsunday.

11,999. As a road contractor?—Yes, a small bit of the road.

12,000. And you are desirous of obtaining more land?—Yes.

12,001. Now do you know of land to which you can invite our attention?—Yes.

12,002. Where is it?—There is part on the Belladrum estate, and part on the Lovat estate.

12,003. The Belladrum estate is in the hands of Mr Merry?—Yes, and I would like to take the Belladrum estate first.

12,004. What is the name of the part of Belladrum estate to which you refer?—I am going to commence very close to the Mains of Belladrum.

12,005. Where is it from Beauly?—About 4½ miles.

12,006. In which direction?—South-west; it is south-east from this.

12,007. What is the name of the nearest village?—The nearest village is Beauly itself.

12,008. Do you know Glackbea?—Yes.

12,009. Is it near Glackbea?—It is a little on this side of Glackbea, but a little to the south; it is south of Camuiltmuir.

12,010. Then the place you ask our attention to is?—The first place I would like to mention is Tenacrae.

12,011. What land is there there?—Well, I can't go very exactly into the acres, but I have seen two crofters there, with a horse apiece and two cows, and a few little stirks apiece. Sometimes they would have three cows, but not regularly.

12,012. Is that land under wood now?—No, but there is wood upon it in some parts.

12,013. What extent of ground is there there of the kind you refer to?—I would say, to the best of my knowledge—because I never measured ground—but as far as I understand I think there will be from 12 to 15 acres.

12,014. Of arable?—Of arable, and some pasture with the birch.

12,015. Now that, you think, is a place where two crofters could be settled?—Well, I think for a man to take his living out of it, I think it should be left to one.

12,016. Now passing from there?—The next place I would like to mention is Coire-Seilich.

12,017. What direction is that?—I believe ¾ of a mile.

12,018. In what direction?—Clean east; west from Beauly.

12,019. What land is there there?—Well, of the extent I cannot be exactly sure, but I have seen the crop and the corn yard with the stacks in it, with three or four, but the man that was there is present in the house and he can tell the number of acres, but I can't. He will be examined here, I think, for Strathconan. He is one Nicolson.

12,020. How many tenants were there?—One there.

12,021. Do you remember what stock they had?—Well, previously, once or twice or three times I happened to go there when I was there, and I must tell the truth, I did not count the stock.

12,022. Any other land?—Yes.

12,023. Where?—A place they call Torranherick, quite close to that again.

12,024. Is there arable land there?—I have seen two crofters situated there myself. I will give the names of them.

12,025. What are the names?—James Stewart was the oldest there, and John Fraser.

12,026. How is that land occupied at present?—Part of it is planted; most of it was planted, but plants don't grow much upon the arable land.

12,027. Part is planted, and how is the other part occupied?—The other part is all occupied by wood; it is planted out anew, but some of it is arable. The arable land that could not grow plants is just what it was.

12,028. No wood?—No wood; four years is the oldest. It is since the last Commission was around.

12,029. Now all the land at Torranherick is under wood, either young or old wood?—There is some of it that the wood would not grow on.

12,030. But it was intended for wood?—Yes.

12,031. Any other land?—Yes.

12,032. Where is that?—A place called Badton, on to Loch Ness.

12,033. What extent of land is there?—The man that was there had two horses and three or four cows. I think he had four for the most, and some stirks.

12,034. And how many horses?—Two.

12,035. Had he any sheep?—That is a thing that I can't go into; the pasture was tidy, but they planted the pasture; I think there were sheep before my knowledge.

12,036. Is that land at present grazing land?—No, it is closed in all for game.

12,037. Grouse?—Grouse and every kind of winged game, and hares and rabbits.

12,038. Not deer?—There are some deer.

12,039. Is any of the land at Loch Badton planted under wood?—Not of the arable land.

12,040. But there is wood close at hand, I suppose?—Yes.

12,041. Now is there anywhere else?—Yes, there is a farm we called Blairmore.

12,042. There is land there?—Yes.

12,043. Is it presently under game, or what?—In summer they graze the low parts—the arable land—but the whole of the hills are all under game.

12,044. And the lower parts are grazed?—In summer only.

12,045. There is no land under crop there?—No.

12,046. And what extent of land is there there?—Fifty or fifty-one acres in one place, and I think there is ten in another. There is another bit that I can't go into.

12,047. There will be at least 70 acres?—Well, I can't say if it would come to 70 altogether, but it is very close; it is past 60.

12,048. Have you seen crofters there, or small holders?—I did not see crofters, but I have seen a farmer in it. He is between ten and eleven years away, and the place is vacant.

12,049. What was his name?—Mackenzie: he is the father of Mr Mackenzie, the Free Church minister of Strathglass.

12,050. Since that time has the land been in the hands of the proprietors?—All the time.

12,051. Under game?—Under game.

12,052. Any other spot on the estate?—Yes, there is another spot down below Belladrum—nearer Beauly than Belladrum—one little farm. Beauly. Donald Mackay

12,053. What is the name?—Cnoc-a'-Chonais.

12,054. What is the nearest place to it?—It lies between Belladrum and Phoiness.

12,055. Is it under wood?—No.

12,056. Have you seen a tenant there?—I did not see a tenant, but they are coming after me, I believe, that saw the tenant.

12,057. Do you know how many were there?—One.

12,058. Are the remains of buildings there?—Yes, and the house walls are all there, excepting what I took out myself for wood-work for Belladrum.

12,059. Is there old arable there?—Yes, a good extent; it will be close on 30 acres whatever.

12,060. Of old arable?—I am not very sure about the extent, however.

12,061. What use is it being put to at present?—For game.

12,062. That is winged game and ground game?—Yes, and roes; I believe there will be some deer too.

12,063. Anywhere else?—There is another place that I was told to take up, by the last meeting that we had in the place,—some pasture that the people had close to Coulmill, on the up side, about 51 or 52 acres.

12,064. Is that grazing ground?—Grazing ground which Coulmill and the crofters had between them.

12,065. You mean the farmer of Coulmill?—Yes, and the crofters; they were getting the pasture between them, and the crofters had a complaint about it at the last meeting.

12,066. What was the name of the farmer?—Mr Macwilliam.

12,067. He is not there now?—Yes.

12,068. Do you know what rent he pays?—I am not sure: it will be over £200.

12,069. Is there a considerable extent of grazing there between Tomnacross and Coulmill?—It is not between Tomnacross and Coulmill, it is above Coulmill.

12,070. Anywhere else?—We are coming now to the Lovat estate. The first place is Inchstaing.

12,071. Where is that place?—That is up above Bruiach, next Boblanie, and then Inchstaing.

12,072. What direction is it from Belladrum?—West: the same as you were going to Strathglass.

12,073. It is on the river Bruiach, direct west from Glackbea?—Yes.

12,074. Are there remains of old houses there?—Yes.

12,075. How many?—One in that place.

12,076. How is the land occupied at present?—By game: I think there will be deer and everything there; there is plenty of them.

12,077. Can you tell me the extent of arable there?—I think there are about 18 acres in the place itself, and there is another small bit. I can't say whether there was a croft in it, or how it was before, but it will contain 8 acres, I think.

12,078. And that land is under game just now, and not under wood?—That is so.

12,079. Anywhere else on the Lovat estate?—Yes.

12,080. Where is that?—There is another place adjoining to it where there used to be a large farmer, but there is a keeper in it now (John Ross); but there is a part that he does not occupy. The large farmer does not occupy the whole of the land. The rest is vacant.

12,081. What is the name of it?—Clunvackie.

12,082. There was a farmer there?—Yes, I have seen him there; Chisholm, a large farmer.

12,083. That farm is partly occupied as a farm still?—Yes, by the keeper.

12,084. And the rest of it is thrown in for game?—Yes.

12,085. Can you tell me the extent of the land in the possession of the keeper?—No, I cannot; I cannot go into the keeper's land. It will not do to go round keepers. We must keep back from that.

12,086. There is some wood there?—Yes, there is some planting.

Beauly. Donald Mackay.

12,087. Anywhere else on the Lovat estate?—Yes.

12,088. Well?—Achatuloch.

12,089. Where is that from where you are?—Higher up, straight on, not very far away.

12,090. Is that north or south?—Straight on up the river.

12,091. Are these two places you mentioned pretty close on the river?—It is not a river we call it, it is a burn.

12,092. Well, call it a burn; not far from the burn?—Not far from the burn.

12,093. And both on the same side of it?—Both on the same side. The whole that I am mentioning as well are on the same side.

12,094. Are there remains of buildings there?—Yes, plenty, both of houses and steadings.

12,095. How many houses?—I cannot say; there was one in that place, and then there is the second place the crofters' farm is on. I am going to follow them by name.

12,096. Had it one tenant or more than one?—One tenant.

12,097. What name had the other place?—There are four places, and the names that I have got for them are two Achatulochs and two Cullichies.

12,098. Was there one tenant in each of these?—Yes.

12,099. And the remains of the houses are still to be seen?—Yes, and of the steadings too. There are four, but I may have a wrong name for one, but the ruins are there.

12,100. There is the evidence to show, now, on the ground, that there have been four tenants in these two places?—Yes.

12,101. Now is there anywhere else?—Yes.

12,102. Where?—Culnaskiach.

12,103. And was there one tenant there?—Yes, a good place for one tenant it is.

12,104. And the remains of a house there?—The whole house is there yet.

12,105. Is that ground under game?—Partly under game and sheep, but there is none stopping in either of the places. The only shepherd that is in one of the places stays in a croft of his own far away. There is no man there.

12,106. I should have asked you this. These four places that you mentioned before, are they under game?—One of them is entirely under game.

12,107. Which of them?—The nearest to us—the first Cullichy.

12,108. And the other three?—The other three are under sheep, but I believe the game is amongst the sheep. I can't say about that.

12,109. Who has the sheep?—William Fraser.

12,110. He has a lease of the grazing?—He has the grazing. I can't say whether he has a lease.

12,111. And he manages the sheep by a shepherd who lives at some distance?—Yes, on a croft of his own.

12,112. Is that shepherd a tenant of Lord Lovat?—Yes.

12,113. Now go back to Culnaskiach. Who has the sheep?—Alexander Maclean from Drumcroy.

12,114. Is he a crofter?—He is a farmer. He has 2 horses and 4 or 5 cows and some stirks about his own place, but the place is not tied to these. It will be a good bit away from it.

12,115. He will pay a rent of less than £30?—I can't say about that. I don't think it would be less than £30.

12,116. Can you give me the extent of Culnaskiach?—I think it is from 25 to 26 acres of arable land, but there is another place west. I cannot tell whether it has a house on it or not, but the ground shows that it was worked. There is no ruin to be seen of a house.

12,117. What is the name?—I can't give you the name of the place. I did not hear it. It is in connection with——

12,118. Can you tell me the extent of it?—No.

12,119. Passing from Culnaskiach, do you wish to mention any other places?—There is another crofter that is close beside the place they call—I can't get my tongue about the place—Achnyach. Beauly. Donald Mackay.

12,120. Is it in Glen-Convinth?—It is down coming back this way from Culnaskiach. A piece of land that is very close to Achnyach.

12,121. What is it called?—Torr-a'-Chapuill—that is the name of the place.

12,122. Was there a crofter there?—That is a thing I can't say, but the land is waste, and the crofter that is close beside it, his place will not keep him alive.

12,123. What is the name of the crofter close beside him?—I think it is the widow's name he is under, but it is the son that is applying for this. She is the widow Maclean.

12,124. What is the name of her holding?—I am not sure. I think the chap is here himself. No. 2 Lon-Mhic-Shim.

12,125. Is there any other place?—There is another place coming on near Beauly, they call Glascharn, on the river a little above Dunballoch, about a mile further than Beauly Bridge.

12,126. Was there a croft there?—Yes.

12,127. Are the remains of a house to be seen?—Yes, some of the stones, but not very much; they took them away for a dyke they made round the wood.

12,128. What is the extent of arable?—I cannot be sure of the extent, but I will give you the name of one farmer that was there; it was one Douglas: he was at Balchraggan.

12,129. This arable land is surrounded by wood, you know?—By deer.

12,130. That land is all under game?—Yes.

12,131. No sheep?—None.

12,132. Is there anything else you would like to mention?—Well, I think I am done.

12,133. All these are places, as I understand you to say, in former times in the occupation of individual crofters, and the land is at present suitable for occupation by crofters, and could be re-cultivated, and buildings put up?—I will be glad to see that the Commission will be satisfied with it on their looking over it; I am sure the places are quite suitable for it.

12,134. All that land is now under game or mostly under game—partly under game and sheep?—Partly under sheep.

12,135. Are any of these sheep in the hands of the proprietors?—It is all let ground, but their farms have no connection with the ground they have their sheep on.

12,136. These are special grazings?—Special grazings.

12,137. And they have farm lands besides?—They have lands of their own besides.

12,138. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Were these places formerly farms?—Some farms, and some crofts.

12,139. Do you know if the farms paid?—Well, I know if they were not rack-rented they should pay.

12,140. But do you know if they did pay?—Well, I think some of them were paying; I did not see the men worse than others.

12,141. Did those crofts pay?—That is the reason of their extending two of the crofts to make one—to let the men take their living out of them just now.

12,142. But these places when they were crofts before?—They were managing, but some of them had rather little to take their living out of, but when you put two into one they will take their living out of them.

12,143. Mr Sutherland.—This is all very low-lying ground?—Well, partly; you see there is Culnaskiach, which is the highest place I have mentioned.

12,144. But they are in this immediate neighbourhood?—All surrounding and all around is within 2 or 3 miles.

12,145. All low-lying ground?—Some of it is partly high.

12,146. And would be under none of the disadvantages we heard attributed to land up the glens?—No, it is just very good land, I think.

12,147. Mr Forsyth.—Do you think that if these lands were passed into the occupation of small holders they would be able to build houses themselves and stock them without assistance?—Well, I don't think that that would be the way ; when there is such a cry for the land around us, I think it is the club system we should try.

12,148. [Question repeated.]—I think they should try the club system—we would be looking for that ; that there would come something on that would manage that.

12,149. Do you mean the club system of stocking, because that generally applies to a common grazing?—Oh, but I think we will come on with it, that we will take it, and that we will manage everything.

12,150. You mean that they would, from some source, require assistance?—Yes, with some assistance.

12,151. One or two of these are high-lying places, I think?—The highest place, as I mentioned, is Culnaskiach, and it is not a high place ; it is a place that I would go to,—either of the places that I mentioned.

12,152. Mr Macleod.—You have given us the names of a number of places where you say there were either small tenants or small farmers before. Do you know how these places came to be vacant? Did the tenants go away of their own accord?—That is beyond my knowledge.

12,153. You never heard the cause stated?—Well, on the Belladrum side I think some of them were just destroyed by game and stuff.

12,154. That is to say, they had to give up the places because the game was destroying the crops to such an extent that they were not worth having?—Yes, I think that was the most of the cause, but not the whole of them that way ; there was no game near Blairmore at the time Blairmore was let out. I think the cause of it was that they did not get enough of land, because the farmer that was in was offering a pretty fair rent for the place (which I have from good witnesses), and he could not get it. They tried it with the papers, and did not get enough, and then they put it all under game.

12,155. It was because it let better as a game preserve than as a small farm?—Most of them were put away to make room for game. Some of them, Coire-Seilich and Torranreach, were just cleared for game places.

12,156. We may take it that some of them went away because the places were destroyed with game?—One of them, especially, that I can speak about.

12,157. In another case that you know of, the farmer did, you thought, offer a fair price, but it was let out under game?—Yes.

12,158. And the others were put away for game?—There is another thing that I would like to take up about Torranreach. The man that is adjoining it is under the Crofters Act, and the time that the other tenants were put out he asked for this place, and was refused, to join it to his own place. The man is coming forward after me, and will tell about it for himself.

12,159. You have spoken of these arable holdings. Is there any available pasture round them?—Oh yes, around the most of them.

12,160. How is it occupied?—By game, the most of it ; the whole of it by game and wood.

12,161. What sort of wood?—Some birch, and some fir and larch.

12,162. Is the birch natural birch?—Yes, the whole of it.

12,163. Don't you think it would injure the wood if it was let out in grazing along with that arable?—No, I don't see that there is any wood in any of the two places that it would harm.

12,164. And you would not contemplate letting that out as grazing?—I don't see that it is right to be a wood, after the Commission was around last.

12,165. But you see the wood is there now?—And into arable land as well.

12,166. What place is it that you refer to particularly?—To Coire-Seilich, the place I am just speaking about. It was all hill pasture.

12,167. What estate was that on?—Belladrum.

12,168. There was one tenant there?—Yes, and he had a lot of pasture.

12,169. And it has been all planted?—The most of it is planted.

12,170. Has it grown?—Part did, and part not.

12,171. Did it grow on the arable ground, or on the rising ground?—I don't think much grew on the arable ground ; maybe some, but not very much.

12,172. But you think that, apart from two places that you have mentioned, which have been planted, it is all available now for small tenants?—Yes, the whole is quite fit for tenants.

12,173. And that the ground that is covered by older wood could be grazed without injury to that wood?—Yes.

12,174. Mr Maccallum.—Were you speaking of what happened within your own memory?—The most of it. The whole of the Belladrum place, except Cnoc-a'-chonais,—I have seen crop on the whole.

12,175. And on the Lovat estate?—I did not see crop on the whole of it, but I have seen a crop on Inchstaing and I have seen a crop once in Culnaskiach,—a little bit of it.

12,176. Did you see crop in Clunvackie?—Yes, plenty.

12,177. And in Achatuloch?—No, but there are fine fields for all that.

12,178. Now I would like to know why these tenants were removed from the places in which they were. Do you think it was because they were not able to pay a fair rent to the proprietor?—No, I do not believe that.

12,179. And after they were removed, or after they left, were the places advertised to let as individual holdings?—I told you the only one that ever I heard advertised was Blairmore, and they got in offers but did not give it ; the rent was too small.

12,180. And do you think they were offered a fair enough rent for Blairmore?—Yes, I think it was.

12,181. Are you aware whether there is any difficulty in this neighbourhood in letting small holdings?—No.

12,182. You think, do you, that there is a keen competition for any small holdings that may be to let?—We have a terrible cry for land, whatever.

12,183. So that if these places were again made available, do you think that there would be applications for them?—I know that we have more names at our last meeting than we can get land for.

12,184. Are some of these people who could stock a holding?—Well, they would be looking for some assistance, between club or something.

12,185. But are there some of them who could stock?—There may be some that will do it.

12,186. Are you aware that there really are some who could take these holdings and stock them?—Well, there might be this : I think there may be some of them that would be close on fit, but I don't know any man's pocket, and I cannot say. I heard them speaking of it, whatever, in the meeting, that there were many amongst them, but I cannot say if they were all. I am not going to say what I am not sure of.

12,187. And your own opinion is that they would be able to make a living on these holdings, and pay a fair rent?—Yes, if the ground would be given at a fair rent.

12,188. And make a comfortable living?—Yes, and to give them what would be a comfortable living off the ground.

12,189. The Chairman.—You have just told us that there is a terrible cry for land?—Yes.

12,190. Do you mean by that that there is a widespread desire among men of the crofter class in your district to get new holdings?—Yes, and some that have not crofts at all. There are a number of us who have no crofts at all.

12,191. Who would like to have crofts?—Yes. I am for one myself, and there are three or four others at my back.

12,192. These are people who would like to get holdings, and who have a considerable knowledge of crofting, and who would do their best to make these holdings pay?—Yes.

12,193. They are all people belonging to the district?—The whole of them ; to the estate whatever.

12,194. To the Lovat estate?—Yes, and back and fore about the place.

Beauly. Donald Mackay.

12,195. Has application been made, to your knowledge, within the last two or three years repeatedly for new holdings from the Lovat estate?—That is a thing I cannot say. Since the Commission there is no one applying about anything, because it is our own meetings we are keeping on until such time as we would come to some relief otherwise.

12,196. You are depending upon other means of a solution to the question?—Yes.

12,197. How many may there be upon the Lovat estate really desirous of obtaining holdings?—There are a good many.

12,198. In the parish of Kiltarlity?—There would be a great number.

12,199. Would there be fifty?—The holdings that they have are so small that they will not keep them half alive, and they want to work the two together, and the one could go: each would have what would keep him alive.

12,200. You are representing a general belief? You are at present stating a view which is entertained by yourself and by a great number of friends, that a number of the Lovat crofts are much too small, that these crofts ought to be in many cases combined, two or three crofts into one, and that those who are put out should get new holdings?—Yes.

12,201. Moreover, that a number of those who have no crofts and no land are desirous of getting crofts where they could sustain themselves?—Yes.

12,202. And that, you say, is a widespread desire on the Lovat estate, and in the locality?—In our locality.

12,203. Mr Peter, Factor for Lord Lovat.—You got a site from Lord Lovat how many years ago?—Nine years, I think.

12,204. It was a long while before you were able to put up a house?—No, I put up the house not six weeks from the day I got the ground from you. I was inside, stopping in it.

12,205. Regarding Inchstaing and Clunvackie, do you know that ground was planted and fenced round with a deer fence?—I know there was a part of it.

12,206. Do you know the elevation, 606 feet? Well, now, in regard to Achatuloch, do you know who occupies that?—I know that it is William Fraser that has it just now, under sheep; William Fraser, Knockholly.

12,207. How much does he pay?—I know he pays only £25 for the whole place we want.

12,208. I may correct you by saying it is £42. Then Culnaskiach,—do you know who occupies that?—Yes, I think I told that.

12,209. I think you did not put distinctly down where he lived: how far is it from Culnaskiach?—He is ¾ of a mile or ½ a mile whatever.

12,210. From the house, but not from the ground he rents?—Yes, from the arable ground.

12,211. That is all let to him as part of his farm.

12,212. Mr Sutherland.—Has he more land than this Culnaskiach?—Surely, he has a large farm.

12,213. Mr Peter.—Do you know the name of the place he occupies as well as Culnaskiach?—Yes, Drumcroy; I gave it up.

12,214. The Chairman.—What do you call it, Mr Peter?

12,215. Mr Peter.—Ardblair.

12,216. Witness.—Ardblair is the next place; it is Finlay Macdonald who is in Ardblair.

12,217. Mr Peter.—Do you know how high Drumcroy is?—I don't know, but I know one thing, that they have very good crops in it.

12,218. It is 800 feet high?—That might be, or 1000; but they have very good crops.

12,219. Do you know that this Widow Maclean had applied to the Commission and got her rent fixed by them?—Yes; but then supposing she got her rent fixed, surely she could get more land, if it was lying waste.

12,220. I understand: you mean to take the land from her?—No, no.

12,221. That is one of the places you wished to get land at. That is one of the places that you enumerated, that you wished to get possession of?—Which part?

12,222. Widow Maclean's lot?—No, I never mentioned such words.

12,223. I have taken them down here.

12,224. The Chairman.—What you mean is that she would like to get her croft extended?—Yes.

12,225. Mr Peter.—Then in regard to Glascharn, do you know that that ground is planted, and within the Beaufort Park?—I know it is birch; there is not a plant of tree down at the low grounds, but there is birch.

12,226. The Chairman.—Is it within Beaufort Park?—It is not on the same side of the river as Beaufort.

12,227. Mr Sutherland.—How many miles from Beaufort Castle?—To come around the wood, it will be over 2.

12,228. Mr Peter.—Do you think that if the Culnaskiach ground was taken from the party who holds additional arable land at Balblair, he could make a living?—Yes, I am sure he could.

12,229. Without Culnaskiach?—Many is the year he did without it. I have seen him more than twenty years without it.

12,230. In regard to William Fraser, Achatuloch if he were without that, do you think he could make a living?—I am sure of it, and more than that, he has to pay a lad for his own work, and I think that is quite sufficient for him without more at all.

12,231. Mr William Burns.—I should like to ask a question.

12,232. Witness.—I will not stand to that.

12,233. The Chairman.—What is your interest here, Mr Burns?

12,234. Mr Burns.—On behalf of Belladrum.

12,235. Mr Peter.—I should like to ask the witness How much do you make as a road contractor?—How much do I do a year, is it?

12,236. Yes.—It is very little that I make as yet, but I cannot say what I may do.

12,237. Mr Burns.—What arable land is there at Belladrum? You were talking about some near Phoiness?—You have got the names of the places I mentioned. Ask me about any place that I named; 'near Belladrum' is not enough.

12,238. How much arable land is there in Belladrum—Mr Merry's Belladrum?—What have I to do with what land he has?

12,239. The Chairman.—He specified particular places, and gave the acreage, and he gave the names of as many places as he could.

12,240. Mr Burns.—Did you want Easter Lovat for fun.

12,241. The Chairman.—No, not 'for fun.'

12,242. Mr Burns.—For business, then,—to take crofters down to Easter Lovat and Wester Lovat?—I am not speaking about Easter Lovat and Wester Lovat; I never said a word about them. Surely you don't mean to twine me into that. I want crofters yonder, if they could be settled on it.

12,243. On Easter Lovat?—No, I never mentioned it.

12,244. But you meant it?—Let us be satisfied with the land that is out before we touch the others. We have lands just now, without being occupied by farmers.

12,245. Where?—I mentioned it already.

12,246. The Chairman.—He went over the whole of them.

12,247. Witness.—I did not come here for that question at all.

12,248. Mr Burns.—Where is the land that you wished to settle crofters on?—I told it already and I am not going to tell it again.

12,249. The Chairman.—Coulmill is one of them.

12,250. Mr Burns.—How much there?—It is not arable land for that, it is pasture.

12,251. Tenacrae, how much is there?—I think I gave it up already; I put it down already, once.

12,252. If you could say it before you can say it again?—I am not going through the thing again.

12,253. Then you have none there, have you?—Yes, I told it already to my lord. Beauly.

12,254. How much land have you in Belladrum?—Altogether?

12,255. Yes.—Well, if you will allow me a little, I might give it in, but I am not going to an acre, but 10 or 20. My lord will tell you it as I gave it up already.

12,256. Add it up.—I gave it up to my lord already, and I will not give it again.

12,257. What do you suppose they are paying for it just now?—That is a thing I cannot go into.

12,258. You do not know?—Surely you don't think we would get it from the factors or the lairds what the people were paying?

12,259. Yes, you have the valuation roll?—I am not a man going into valuation rolls.

12,260. How much do you pay for it?—I never paid anything for it.

12,261. How much would you pay for it—for all the arable land?—I don't want all the arable, and I am not fit for it.

12,262. You are here to tell a plan to the Commissioners.

12,263. The Chairman.—No, he is not here to tell a plan.

12,264. Witness.—I am presented here by the people of Kiltarlity.

12,265. Mr Burns.—Well, the people have not sent you here to tell a story. Tell me how much land you would like to get, and how much you would pay for it?—It is not so.

12,266. I am only asking a question.—Don't you think you can come and say that against me—that I am coming to rob any man; I come here for justice.

12,267. How much land do you want to pay for, and how much do you intend to give?—I told my lord already.

12,268. Tell me again, for fun.

12,269. The Chairman.—He has indicated certain spots which we have been able to recognise on the map, on the estate of Belladrum, where he says there is arable and grazing, or either, where crofters have been settled before, and could be settled again, and his proposal is that crofters should be settled there, on fair rents.

12,270. Mr Burns.—But let me question him, because the landlords have an interest in this. How much money does he intend to give?—What for?

12,271. For the land that he talks about?—What land? Tell me the land you mean.

12,272. The Chairman.—You must specify the land.

12,273. Mr Burns.—He has specified the land.

12,274. The Chairman.—If you mention a particular place, he may be able to answer you, but he cannot answer at once for all these places, at different altitudes.

12,275. Mr Burns.—Take the places then. I want to know how much money he will go the length of for the land he has found. How much money does he suggest he should pay for the land he has found?—All that I said of these places, is it?

12,276. Yes.—I think I should leave that to the Commissioners or valuators that would go and value the land. I was never made a valuator.

12,277–78. The result of your story is this—that you have no suggestion to make as to the value of the land?

12,279. The Chairman.—No, he has none.

12,280. Witness.—I told you I was not a valuator.

12,281. The Chairman.—He has no such suggestion to make; what he has to suggest is that he should get the land, and its value should be assessed by an impartial tribunal.

12,282. Witness.—Yes, my lord.

12,283. Mr Burns.—He gives no assistance to value the land.

12,284. The Chairman.—No.

12,285. Mr Burns.—Nor compare it with its present value, which he does not know about.

12,286. The Chairman.—No, he does not know that. You are quite entitled to get that out, but I think it has come out.

12,287. Mr Burns.—Now do you think you should come down to Dunballoch or to Easter or Wester Lovat?—I did not mention such places. Donald Mackay.

12,288. You don't suggest that crofters should be planted there, do you?—Well, if there be not other places for them, why not, if other men have too much? I think the land was meant for people in the world; I don't think it is for the one or two only.

12,289. Do you suggest that these people should come down and be planted at Dunballoch and Easter and Wester Lovat?—Did I say any word about Easter and Wester Lovat? And, Mr Burns, you have tried that on me before, but you had just as well stop it!

12,290. You will answer me fairly, and I will ask you fairly.—Ask me as to the places I have mentioned; but asking me about places that I never spoke of, that is no law at all.

12,291. I ask you this: Do you propose that these crofters should come down and be settled upon Easter and Wester Lovat, or Dunballoch, or not?—Did I speak about them?

12,292. No, you did not.—Well, why do you ask me such a question?

12,293. Then you did not intend that?—I did not say 'no' or 'yes' about that.

12,294. You did not think of it?—I did not say that I did, or that I did not.

12,295. That is not in your story?—I did not speak about it at all. Surely you are not going to take me into questions that I did not refer to at all.

12,296. But you and I are perfectly square about this. I only want to know if you have been thinking about the notion of bringing down the crofters or bringing them up, to settle around Easter or Wester Lovat, or Dunballoch,—upon this flat land near the sea? You have not thought about it?—Never yet.

12,297. The Chairman.—That is an answer. I think this examination should stop.

12,298. Mr Burns.—I am at an end.

12,299. The Chairman.—That will do, Mr Mackay. As you have given us a very full statement with regard to these lands on the Belladrum estate, and on the Lovat estate, possibly some of the other witnesses who came here to give evidence about these places may rest satisfied with what we have already heard, and in that way we can usefully abbreviate the proceedings.

RODERICK MATHESON, Crofter, Torran-na-h-eirig, Kiltarlity (51)—examined. Roderick Matheson.

12,300. The Chairman.—I may take you as concurring generally with the evidence of Mackay?—I agree with what he said, and I think he has told the truth.

12,301. And I have no questions to put to you.—Yes.

MURDOCH CAMERON, Torrangorm, Kiltarlity (35)—examined. Murdoch Cameron.

12,302. The Chairman.—You heard the evidence given by Mackay?—Yes.

12,303. And you agree with it, do you?—Yes.

12,304. Do you wish to make any addition to it?—No.

12,305. Then I will take you as concurring, and I have no questions to put. That will do.

JOHN MACDONALD, Balliemore of Dochgarroch, Dochfour (46)—examined. John Macdonald.

12,306. The Chairman.—Are you to speak with regard to the Dochfour estate?—Yes.

12,307. Solely as to Dochfour estate?—That is all.

12,308. And that part of the Dochfour estate near

Beauly.

John Macdonald.

Dochgarroch?—Upon the estate of Dochgarroch, right above Dochgarroch Lodge.

12,309. How far is the place you are going to speak of from Abriachan?—A good way; the Caiplich road breaks off from Dunain.

12,310. What is your employment?—I was a gamekeeper and forester on the estate of Dunain at the time Sir John Ramsden had it.

12,311. What are you now?—I am a common labourer now; I follow public works.

12,312. A labourer on the estate?—No, I was gaffering at the new section of the railway.

12,313. Now, what place are you going to speak of?—About Balliemore and other townships in Dunain, and Lochend and Dalreoch.

12,314. What are you going to say about Balliemore?—My father was a tenant there, and my grandfather.

12,315. As crofters?—As crofters.

12,316. And how is the land occupied now?—The land was taken from us. It was a township (three of us), and it was planted. It was planted four times and the plants did not grow on it.

12,317. Is it planted now?—No.

12,318. What is the extent of old arable there, or land that was once ploughed?—We had about 15 Scotch acres.

12,319. Among you, or each?—Each.

12,320. Is there grazing there besides?—Mr Baillie himself has the sheep, but it is let out for sport first. It is a rabbit warren now. It was planted for a cover, but it did not succeed.

12,321. And now it is under game and rabbits?—Yes, and they have their own sheep grazing on it. Of course the houses are standing there yet; the thing only took place twenty years ago or thereabout.

12,322. After Balliemore did you wish to mention any other names?—Immediately below that there is a small croft Battlefield. There used to be one tenant there.

12,323. And a small extent of arable, I suppose?—About 5 acres Scotch.

12,324. Now, after Battlefield is there any other place?—There is another croft immediately above Dochgarroch Lodge; one David Fraser stopped in it.

12,325. What was the name of the place?—Dochgarroch we called it.

12,326. There was a croft there; and is the house there still?—The remains of the house are there still.

12,327. Can you tell me the extent of arable land at this Dochgarroch holding?—There would be about 4 acres to that croft.

12,328. Now, after this is there any other place?—Balnafettoch: it is in the corner of Dunain wood, quite close to the Dochgarroch burn.

12,329. We are talking just now, of the Dochgarroch estate?—Yes. When my grandfather took the croft there it was Maclean that had Dochgarroch.

12,330. Then about Balnafettock: on what estate is that?—There are two.

12,331. Are there two Balnafettocks?—Yes; on Muirton estate and on Dunain estate.

12,332. You refer to the latter?—Yes.

12,333. It does not appear to be on the map, but I take it it is not far from Dunain house?—Not far, but further west. It was once attached to Lagnalian. I have seen a woman who had a croft there.

12,334. Do you know the extent of her holding?—6 acres or more.

12,335. Is there anywhere else?—The township of Dochgarroch. I have seen five crofters there, down at the locks.

12,336. What is the extent of arable at Dochgarroch?—There is a great extension there: I don't know how much, but it is in the hands of the proprietor now. When they cleared it out, they took it into their own hands; I have seen five crofters in it.

12,337. With arable land and grazing?—Yes.

12,338. Did they keep sheep?—No.

12,339. Only horses and cattle?—That is all.

12,340. Anywhere else you wish to mention?—There was again Dunain, where there were five or six if not seven crofters: that was cleared by Mollison.

Beauly.

John Macdonald.

12,341. That is near the Mains of Dunain?—Yes.

12,342. When did Mollison clear them out?—Close upon twenty years ago.

13,343. What extent of arable had they?—Some of those crofts amounted to so many acres, and some not so much: I am not sure.

12,344. Can you give the total extent?—No, I cannot, but I know the crofts perfectly well, and the houses are standing upon some of them yet.

12,345. Would there be a dozen acres arable for each?—Ay; and some more.

12,346. And some less?—And some less. I don't know but that there was one croft of 18 acres.

12,347. Do you know the name of the man that had 18 acres?—Duncan Fraser; he has the farm of Dores now.

12,348. Is there any other place you would like to mention?—Dalreoch, down near by the canal.

12,349. How many crofters were there?—Five in it, and perhaps more.

12,350. Can you give me any idea of the average size of their holdings?—Some of them had pretty extensive crofts.

12,351. What sort of rents did they pay?—I am not exactly sure what rents they paid.

12,352. They are all away?—They were all cleared by Mollison.

12,353. About the same time as the clearances from Dochgarroch?—About the same time. Dochgarroch was cleared a few years before that.

12,354. Were all these clearances by Mollison?—Yes.

12,355. He was rather high-handed, that gentleman?—Very high-handed: I know that to my cost.

12,356. So do I.—I lost a crop which I was entitled to get; and then my grandfather paid £16 of valuation on coming in for the houses, and they have all that.

12,357. How is that land at Dalreoch occupied now?—It is lying waste.

12,358. Is it under game?—Under game, and I believe they have their sheep in it sometimes.

12,359. The sheep are the property of Mr Balfour?—Yes.

12,360. Anywhere else you wish to mention?—The township of Lochend, on the Dunain estate.

12,361. The Dunain estate is Baillie's?—Yes, it belongs to the Baillies of Dochfour. It was formerly held by Baillies who are now extinct.

12,362. What is called the Dunain estate, and the Dochgarroch estate, and the Dochfour estate, are all in the hands of Mr Baillie?—Yes.

12,363. Now about Lochend: how many crofters were there?—There are a few there yet, but there were four or five removed.

12,364. By Mollison?—By Mollison.

12,365. About the same time as the other clearances?—The same time.

12,366. Is that land under game now or under sheep?—Part of it lies in their own hands: in some of the houses they have some of their own servants, who have a cow's grazing, and they take rent from them but they won't allow them to pay rates. Mr Baillie pays all the rates.

12,367. Is there room there for three or four crofters, or more?—There were good crofters there before, three or four well-doing crofters.

12,368. Are there any more places you could mention?—Another place, Lochend hill.

12,369. How many were there?—Two or three. There is one good croft on it called Torranbuie.

12,370. That is 1042 feet high?—I have seen two crofters there.

12,371. Is that all, or have you any other places to mention?—That is all, but there was an eviction at Blackfold, one Donald Ferguson, but he went to law with them in the Court of Session. He stops in Lochend now with a brother. He stays now at Midton, Lochend.

12,372. Is there a tenant still in Blackfold?—Yes, there were three lotters there, and at the time we were removed from the crofts they removed them, and they overcrowded Blackfold with them. They sub-divided the land there between the three lotters and those that were there before.

12,373. After that sub-division how many was the land divided among altogether?—Three and two, that is five.

12,374. So that five small tenants got the land which had been previously held by two?—Yes.

12,375. Was that in Mollison's time?—In Mollison's time.

12,376. And those that were brought down into Blackfold were taken from where?—From Abriachan wood.

12,377. Mr Sutherland.—Generally do you believe that crofters could be settled with advantage on these lands you have referred to?—Certainly they could.

12,378. You think that the conditions are favourable in every way for their thriving?—They were well-doing, and they had their rents paid to date, and some of them had some living there. I had that myself.

12,379. And at present the land is not devoted to agriculture in any way, is it?—No, it is not.

12,380. Lying waste?—Lying waste.

12,381. And you are of opinion that, if opportunities were offered to people they would be very willing to take small holdings in these places?—Certainly. Of course they are low ground crofts, these.

12,382. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You said Balliemore was four times planted?—Yes.

12,383. Why did the trees fail?—That I could not say; the ground would not receive them, or they did not grow in it. They had a good crop of the weeds they call 'stinking Willie.'

12,384. That does not speak well for the soil?—It is generally the case; they won't grow in old ground. That ground is noted to be the oldest ground on the Dochgarroch estate, and it was stated so by Mr Fraser-Mackintosh.

12,385. Is it enclosed as a warren now, with a rabbit fence?—No, it is not.

12,386. Just given up to rabbits?—Keeping up the rabbits.

12,387. Mr Macleod.—In these places that you have spoken to us about, there is no available pasture?—Yes, they held the whole pasture in common.

12,388. How is that hill pasture being used at the present time?—Those that are remaining there are taking the use of it.

12,389. But there are a number of places where there is none?—In Blackfold the people keep their claim upon the pasture.

12,390. But there are several places you have mentioned where there are no tenants now. Was there pasture in connection with them?—Certainly. Balliemore and Blackfold held the hill pasture in common; they had the same rights to it, and at one time—at the time Maclean had that—the crofters on the low ground could go up with their cattle there.

12,391. That is Balliemore?—Yes.

12,392. But Battlefield?—That is immediately below Balliemore again, between Balliemore and Dochnalurg.

12,393. And the same pasture that the Balliemore people used the Battlefield people used?—Yes. Of course at one time we could go down to Battlefield with our cattle.

12,394. But there is no grazing that you could direct our attention to as land that you think could be advantageously occupied by small tenants in connection with this arable land?—Yes, there is Dochgarroch hill.

12,395. Does that name include the whole of any common grazing that there may be?—Yes, it includes the whole.

12,396. You said that you had been a keeper and forester?—Yes.

12,397. Only on the Dunain estate?—On the Dunain estate, but before then I was working in the woods at Dochfour till I lost the place, and after that I got a situation from Mr Fraser-Mackintosh there; as long as Sir John Ramsden had it he wanted me to stop there, but there was something came between myself and Mollison. Before we got the crop off, my father died and I succeeded, and it was I that cleared the crop. There were no legal steps taken to remove us from the land, but Mr Mollison made copies himself, and he wanted the people to sign them. At that time my father was on his deathbed and I was working on Dochfour, and he said the other two were coming down to sign the papers, and he asked me to get my father to sign his. I said no, if he wanted it signed he could come up to my father's deathbed. I did not sign it at all.

12,398. You heard the previous witness speaking of a holding that had been planted?—Yes.

12,399. And he said that on the lower part of the ground—the arable ground—the plants did not grow, but that they grew on the steeper ground. Is that in accordance with your experience that plants don't grow on old arable ground?—No, they do not; the ground must be very good.

12,400. It is more likely to grow on the harder ground?—The harder ground.

12,401. Mr Maccallum.—Can you suggest any reason why the tenants were removed from Balliemore?—Of course at the time sport was rather prevalent, and they were getting high rents for sport.

12,402. For land let for sporting purposes?—Yes, and their intention was to put the land under sport. It was intended to make it a sort of showy place, and to put up a shooting box there. That is what Mr William Baillie suggested. He said he would put my father into that lodge as keeper.

12,403. But the tenants that were there were successful as farmers?—Yes.

12,404. They lived comfortably?—Of course they were just independent crofters, the whole of them.

12,405. They did not fall into arrears, did they?—No, no, they had their rents paid to date.

12,406. Mr George Malcolm.—I think the witness spoke of a group of crofters that were formerly about Dochgarroch Locks. I wish to ask him whether that is at present lying waste?—I told that it was in the hands of Mr Baillie himself.

12,407. You said, in reply to one of the Commissioners, that the whole of the lands you spoke of were now waste?—No, I said about Dochgarroch, that it was in the hands of the Baillies.

12,408. May I ask whether that land, where this group of crofts formerly was, is not now part of the home farm of Dochfour?—Certainly it is added to the home farm.

12,409. The Chairman.—The whole land, as I understand, of which you have been speaking is under game, or is under game and deer?—Deer! there is no deer.

12,410. I mean game and sheep?—Under game and sheep.

12,411. It is either under ground and winged game, or it is under sheep and ground and winged game?—Yes.

12,412. Mr Malcolm.—I beg pardon, my lord. I have just elicited that the group of crofts above Dochgarroch is at the present time part of the home farm of Dochfour.—(Witness.)—No, no, the ground above that is.

12,413. Mr Sutherland.—Is it cultivated or uncultivated?—It is lying waste yonder, since we took the last crop off it.

12,414. Is it cultivated or uncultivated?—Uncultivated.

12,415. The Chairman.—Is this land of which you have been speaking preserved for game?—Certainly, my lord.

12,416. The whole of it?—The whole of it. But then they have their own sheep on it at times.

12,417. Mr Baillie has his own sheep on it?—Yes.

12,418. Now you were asked a question by Mr Malcolm, whether the land at Dochgarroch was not part of the home farm?—It is part of the home farm now, since they put out the crofters. They are working it.

12,419. Is it under rotation?—Under rotation.

Beauly. — John Macdonald.

12,420. Is the whole of the land from which the crofters have been removed under rotation?—Yes, at Dochgarroch, close by Dochgarroch lodge.

12,421. What is the name of the home farm?—Dochfour home farm.

12,422. But, except that land, is all the land of which you have been speaking under ground and winged game, or under that and sheep?—It is under game and sheep; under rabbits and sheep.

12,423. Mr Burns.—Dochfour has a home farm?—Yes.

12,424. But, look here, I am going to deal straight with this. I asked—Has Dochfour a home farm, and you said yes. He has sheep and he has cattle, has he not?—Certainly.

12,425. But is this thing preserved more than any other land in the country is protected from poaching?—Of course every land is protected from poaching.

12,426. I say is this home farm of Dochfour more protected from poaching than any other home farm or any other land is?—Of course he prevents people poaching on his land, but is it made a special preserve?

12,427. The Chairman.—Is that land any more preserved for game than land is ordinarily preserved by being protected from poachers?

12,428. Mr Burns.—It is not a special game preserve: I know the place as well as you do.

12,429. The Chairman.—But we do not know it.

12,429*a*. Mr Burns (to witness).—Is it a special game preserve, or is it just subject to the ordinary rules of preservation?—To the ordinary rules, as far as I know.

12,430. The Chairman.—That is an answer to the question.

12,431. Mr Burns.—You said the land was now lying waste. Now tell me what you mean, because you know I owned that estate at one time and I know all about it.

12,432. The Chairman.—Well, but we do not.

12,433. Mr Burns.—It is Dunain.

12,434. The Chairman.—When you say the land was lying waste you mean it is not under cultivation?—That is what I mean.

12,435. Mr Burns.—But what do you mean by saying not under cultivation?—It was all let to tenants at one time.

12,436. Now, at this moment?—No, it is not.

12,437. Why not? We have the tenants in the valuation roll?—Unless you put tenants there yourself. Alexander Dallas had the house and wood.

12,438. He had the whole estate?—No, he had not; Dallas bought Dunain house and Dunain wood, and that is all he had.

12,439. He bought Dunain estate?—No, he did not. Don't you know it was Sir John Ramsden that bought Dunain estate?

12,440. Yes, and we sold it. This is what the valuation roll says:—'John Catherine, salmon-fisher, 'J. P. Brodie, Lochend?'—That is the old public house.

12,441. 'Dunain lands, home farm, Dunain, Cona 'Mills, Roderick Hugonin': is he not a tenant?—I did not go to that end of the estate at all.

12,442. 'Alexander Fraser, banker, Inverness': is he not a tenant? 'Captain Alaric Grant'?—I was not dealing with that part of the estate.

12,443. That is the whole of Dunain estate?—No, it is not.

John Peter. JOHN PETER, Factor for Lord Lovat (73)—examined.

12,444. The Chairman.—I understand you wish to read a short statement?—Yes, I do.

12,445. You are factor on the Lovat estate?—Yes.

12,446. And have been factor for how many years?—For forty-one years.

12,447. Continuously?—Continuously.

12,448. You have prepared a short written statement?—Yes, about the Glen-Strathfarrar forest, because most of the events happened before my time. I have taken my facts from original records, and have taken very great care to state them correctly. I find by a rental of 1806 that Glen-Strathfarrar was held as a sheep farm by Hugh and Robert Fraser at a rent of £572, 7s. 6d. In 1820 it was relet to them at the rent of £600, and in 1825 to George Grieve and Robert Ballantyne at a rent of £500. They held it until 1833, when finding it was not paying them they gave up the north side, and in the following year the south side also. It then came to be let in various divisions. I may mention that that was the period when the people were taken from Glencannich and put on Glen-Strathfarrar; Lord Lovat had placed them there. On being amalgamated with the Struy estate, which was bought by Lord Lovat in 1827, the following parties held it:—

The last two are now in Glen-Strathfarrar. From that time it was occupied in various ways by changes of tenancy, and parts put into forest ground, until 1850, when it all became forest, and all the previous occupiers had found tenancies on the Lovat estates lower down. There never were any crofters in Glen-Strathfarrar, with the exception of one small croft at Loch Muillie, where a crofter still remains. Beyond the crofts necessary for the foresters and their families, there is no available ground for a crofting population, that outside the foresters' crofts being absolutely essential for the winter pasture for the deer; and, apart from this, it is far from any centre, and unsuitable for cultivation, most of the ground being very steep and rocky, and at elevations of from 700 to 3000 feet above sea level. That is all I have got to say, but I shall be very pleased to answer any questions that may be put.

12,449. Mr Macleod.—You gave us the rentals?—Yes.

12,450. You mentioned that in 1806 the whole of Glen Strathfarrar was let for £572, 7s. 6d.?—Yes.

12,451. And in 1820 for £600?—Yes.

12,452. And in 1825 for £500?—Yes, to new tenants.

12,453. I am not concerned with the names of the tenants at all.—Very good.

12,454. And in 1833 they gave up the north side, and in a year or two the south side also?—Yes.

12,455. Thereafter the glen was let in various ways?—Yes, held by the people of whom I have given you a list, some of them going off by degrees.

12,456. For the sake of comparison, can you tell us what would have been the rental paid by these tenants that you mentioned that got the place after 1833,—the total?—That were taken down into the low country?

12,457. Yes, can you give us the total?—Well, I could hardly tell you; there was one family put in Barnyards here, £400, and another one at Croichiel, I suppose about £120.

12,458. You said that in 1833 Glen-Strathfarrar was given up by George Grieve and Robert Ballantyne, and that it was a year or two after that that the glen was let by Lord Lovat to those people who came from The Chisholm estate?—Yes.

12,459. And I wanted to bring out for the sake of comparison what was the total rental they paid?—Oh, I beg pardon, I had not understood that.

12,460. I may say I took down the figures as you read them out.—Oh, thank you, you will be able to see the total then.

12,461. Outside Glen-Strathfarrar there were places rented at the following sums:—£88, £52, £63, and £30?—That is the Struy ground.

12,462. Well, of course, you cannot take that into the comparison?—No.

12,463. I thus make the total of the rents paid for subjects in the glen proper by seven tenants, £676.—Yes, it appears so.

12,464. What do you think is a fair inference to draw from these figures? You see when it was let in one holding in 1806 the rent was £572, then it rose to £600, then in 1825 it went down to £500, and in 1833 the two tenants that had it gave it up.—My assistant here makes the total you speak of £590.

12,465. It may be. I would prefer if you would mention the rents in the Struy district, outside Glen-Strathfarrar.—Mr Garrioch, sub-factor.—The rents for the Glen are as follows:—

Corrieharbey, ...	£ 50
Inchlair & Moulie-reach, ...	70
Deanie & Easter Moulie, ...	125
Wester Moulie, Ardchuilc, Ochtero & Browlin, ...	155
Culligran, ...	190
Total	£590

12,466. That is entirely different from what Mr Peter gave—Witness.—It is £46 of a difference.

12,467. In any case, there was an increase of rent from £500 to £590?—So it appears. I have given the figures as I found them.

12,468. What I wanted to know for our information is, what inference do you think it would be fair to draw from that?—Well, I suppose more could be made out of the place, perhaps, in that way than by having it all in one holding, down to a certain extent; but I do not think going very much lower,—I question very much if the same would apply.

12,469. In other words, you think that if Glen-Strathfarrar were to be occupied at all by tenants, it would be in moderate-sized grazing farms, with rents running as you had here from £40 to £50 up to £190 or £200?—Yes.

12,470. If it were to be occupied at all that would be the only possible way?—We would more easily find tenants to occupy it then.

12,471. You think it would let more readily that way than in the larger holdings?—Yes, there would be fewer to select from if it were in one glen.

12,472. You no doubt heard a statement made yesterday by Mr Grant, the factor on The Chisholm estate, that if there were to be any small holdings in this district, it would be a better method to settle small tenants on the carse land down here rather than in those glens and straths. Do you agree with that opinion?—Well, I am not very sanguine of the success of small holdings if they are very small ones; judging from my long experience, I think we usually make more by having them of a moderate size than very small holdings.

12,473. Quite so. It is more profitable to the proprietor to have them of a moderate size?—Yes.

12,474. What would you describe as a moderate sized holding?—For a regular arable holding, nothing less than two horses and up to two or three pairs of horses.

12,475. And with regard to cattle?—We do not count upon cattle so much, it is low country management,—cattle we buy and sell almost every month.

12,476. The size of these holdings is judged more by the number of horses that are kept?—The number of pairs of horses kept to labour the place.

12,477. That is, with reference to the carse land, that you would approve of holdings of that size, able to keep from a pair of horses up to three pairs?—I think more than that you find there are few men who have the means to do it.

12,478. But you are in favour of a size of holdings like that?—Oh, yes.

12,479. You have stated what you think in the upper part of the country would be the most suitable if there were to be tenants, and now the carse land. Then, do you think that the success of a tenant who was settled, say on a pair horse holding on the carse land, would be greater than that of a tenant who was settled as a small grazing farmer, say at £100 or £120 of rent in the upper ground? Which would you say would be the more successful farmer, the more likely to make money?—I think the low country farmer.

12,480. That is your view?—Yes, I think so.

12,481. Then you said that you had compiled those figures from the estate records?—From the rent ledgers.

12,482. And I suppose you would be willing to give us reasonable access to the originals?—Most assuredly.

12,483. Then, with regard to the land in the lower part of the estate here, I presume there have been considerable differences made as to boundaries?—Very great, indeed almost completely changed. When the grandfather of the present Lord Lovat succeeded to the property he had it all surveyed and laid out and put into squares of different sizes according to the means of the people, particularly in regard to crofter tenants, so that they might each have their own ground laid out to them. He made out regulations so that when any ground was trenched he put dykes round it, and he then made roads for them, and assisted them in draining the ground, and in that way they did a great deal in improving the property.

12,484. What date was that?—It began in 1839, and was in force for a good part of my time up to very nearly the present time. Now nearly all the ground that there is on the estate has been improved. His lordship thought of putting it still further up the hills, but he found that a complete failure. The crops are so often destroyed by frost and wet weather that in many places I have not got a shilling of rent for years. The cause is, going up too high, to too great an elevation.

12,485. I have no doubt you would be able to give us access to the older plans of the estate?—Oh yes.

12,486. So that we could see the difference that has been made with those improvements?—Yes.

12,487. But your feeling is that those improvements, which you say have been carried on from 1839 almost to the present day, the area that it was possible to apply them to has been almost if not wholly exhausted?—Not wholly, because there are little bits that the crofters have not taken in as was arranged for.

12,488. But it is inside their holdings?—Yes.

12,489. And you think that the fact that they have not taken in those small pieces is an evidence in favour of your view that the improvement has gone as far as it is possible for it to go profitably?—It is, and there are two or three ways. Formerly the families remained much longer at home, and assisted their parents in improving the ground in the winter season. Now most of them go away to towns in various capacities, so that, comparatively speaking, there are very few of the families that remain so long as they used to do. Railways having opened up the country, they see a way of doing better by going away. And I think it is a very good thing.

12,490. But it is not good for the estate?—No.

12,491. You do not get so much land improved?—No.

12,492. Might I ask now the method you adopted of getting the people to improve the land?—The footing was that they got the land for 1s. an acre on a nineteen years' lease. We gave them leases, and they took in land, and they got the benefit of the improvements—perhaps in a few years they would have taken in several acres, by which they might get a considerable income. I have known cases where a small crofter paying £5 of rent might get in £50, all for potatoes, by the prices going at that time. That was mainly how they succeeded so well, and then there was the security of tenure. By the time they came within two or three years of the end of their lease, they were always most anxious to apply for a renewal. His lordship has never turned away a single tenant, even going back to 1846, at the time of the destitution.

Beauly. John Peter.

12,493. You gave us an instance where he actually accommodated tenants from another estate?—Yes.

12,494. What rule did he adopt when arranging a second lease?—Well, of course, then it was looked upon as if they had repaid themselves by the end of their nineteen years, and we put a value upon the holding, just what we thought it was worth.

12,495. Whoever got it?—Yes, only of course his lordship always gave the preference to the sitting tenant. We frequently took a lower rent than we thought just the actual value of the holding; when any tenant died, we always got a higher offer for the place than the amount we ourselves put on it.

12,496. It was taken as a guiding principle that the tenant had recouped himself during the nineteen years for his improvements?—Yes.

12,497. Then you gave him a preference to the extent that you lease out in his favour rather than that of another?—Oh yes.

12,498. You thought that that was a perfectly fair arrangement?—Well, if at any time they wished to go away, there was a certain scale fixed in their leases by which they were repaid for any improvements executed up to that time.

12,499. And you found no difficulty in getting people to improve under these conditions?—No.

12,500. There was always a demand?—Always; and very few changes took place, because we much preferred always the people who are there.

12,501. You heard some evidence to-day as to a number of holdings that had been occupied at one time, particularly in the Kiltarlity district?—Yes.

12,502. That are now being devoted to other purposes. Did you agree with the view that was expressed?—Do you mean by the first witness?

12,503. Yes.—The most of these, I think, I accounted for in cross-examining him—two of them at least that I referred to were taken into the large plantation and fenced all round. There is occasionally deer there, and it is all fenced round.

12,504. It was added to a large plantation?—Yes, called Boblainy, and increased by the last Lord Lovat, who thought that would make a very nice plantation, so he added to it and shut it in. That prevented the deer getting out upon the arable ground. Then about the others—these are let just in the ordinary course. Part of them was planted, and the rest given to adjoining tenants at certain rents in addition to what they got before. The rents are very moderate still.

12,505. What I wanted to be at was this, whether the reason why you did not let these holdings again was that there was no demand for them?—No, I think Lord Lovat had cut them up for planting more ground. Most proprietors were then anxious to plant a good deal, as it would ultimately become valuable, and part of it was not looked upon as valuable to farm out. A good part of it was planted, and what was not planted was added to the nearest tenant.

12,506. You think it is quite probable that there may have been a number of applications for these places at the time?—There might have been, but I do not think so.

12,507. You said that the land was let out on nineteen years' leases at 1s. an acre?—Yes.

12,508. That was the rule?—That was the rule.

12,509. Not more than 1s. an acre?—Well, not more than 1s. 6d. at any rate. I think the most of it was at 1s. an acre. There might be a slight difference, according to the quality of the ground.

12,510. Although you thought that the tenant was recouped for his improvements in nineteen years, you would not consider that the proprietor would be recouped in that time for his improvements?—Well, we made no calculations in these things; but his lordship made all the roads through the various districts, and also constructed all the leading drains. It was a standing rule that unless you gave tenants roads and assisted them in the matter of drains, there was no chance of them making any other improvements.

Beauly. John Peter.

12,511. You found the tenants always anxious to co-operate?—Just so. That is the whole thing. They came down, in fact, almost every Saturday to propose some improvement, and see how much his lordship would contribute towards it.

12,512. So that you think it would be fair to say of the small tenants generally in this district, that they made a good use of their opportunities so far as they got them?—I think so, and I think it was an excellent arrangement, and prevented them having any further claims.

12,513. Mr Maccallum.—When was Strathfarrar made a deer forest?—It began in 1833, but it was not completed until 1850. They moved out as circumstances arose and other places were found below.

12,514. They were removed gradually?—Yes.

12,515. Who was the first sporting tenant of Glen-Strathfarrar?—I suppose his lordship himself perhaps was the first, and then he used to let it out in divisions.

12,516. Do you remember to whom it was let first of all?—It was let every year to various people. That is forty years ago.

12,517. But is it now wholly a deer forest?—It is.

12,518. And it is let now to Mr Winans?—No, it was let three years ago to a Mr Mason, the upper part, and the lower part to a Mr Barry.

12,519. Do you think that is the best use to which Glen-Strathfarrar could be put?—I do, assuredly.

12,520. You do not think it is fit for sheep grazing?—It is a poor business, sheep farming; it would be very hard indeed to get tenants who would take it.

12,521. But would sheep thrive there?—They won't go up to the high ground as much as the deer do, but they would thrive very well on the low ground.

12,522. There were sheep, I suppose, on Glen-Strathfarrar before?—Yes, the first sheep were black-faced hardy West Highland sheep. The next people who came in (Ballantyne), brought in cheviots, but they found they could not keep them over winter; they had to take them down to the low ground in winter.

12,523. Had not the black-faced sheep to be sent away for the winter?—No, they lasted out the season unless there would be a storm.

12,524. Was it simply and solely because you could get no rent for it as a sheep farm that you let it out for deer?—My impression is that, as to the people who went there in those small divisions I told you of—I am rather under the impression, though I was not here to know at the time—that they were not finding it a paying business. Lord Lovat said to me they were very glad to get down.

12,525. But that was perhaps because you offered them better lands?—Well, yes, in a better position; but they were all away before I came here in 1851.

12,526. But you had small pastoral farms there, and they were able to pay rent?—Oh, yes. How they paid them I am not able to say.

12,527. And you think that small pastoral farms will succeed better than large pastoral farms?—Oh yes, I do, only you must have a certain amount, for this reason, that, if you have very small ones, the labour of looking after them would be too great compared with any return they might yield.

12,528. Don't you think, now, that it might be possible to re-introduce small pastoral farms into Glen-Strathfarrar?—I don't think the owner of it would find it a profit to him to do so; I think he would find it most difficult to arrange for. You would want buildings, and everything. I don't think it would be beneficial even to the crofting class; I don't think they would benefit by them; they would be so very, very far away from the markets. Also you would need new buildings all over, and I am satisfied the income would be very small compared with what is derived from it.

12,529. But I suggested small pastoral farms, not crofts.—Well, that is the only objection I see to it; if you make them too small the expense of attending to them and looking after the sheep, with the income from it, would not pay. That is the only advantage in a large one. If a sheep farm is fair-sized, there is full work for one or two men, as the case may be.

12,530. But there is no special reason, is there, why small pastoral farms should not succeed there as well as anywhere else?—But I do not think pastoral farms succeed—not with us, at all events. My experience has been that small sheep grazings did not pay very well.

12,531. But your experience is more with large ones?—We have both kinds. Up in Strathglass they have grazings of 700 or 800 acres.

12,532. But you don't deny that the pasturage is good?—The pasturage is good; it is the expense of working it.

12,533. The pasturage is good: then why would not sheep thrive there as well as anywhere else?—There is no reason, except in a severe winter,—what are you going to do with them then?

12,534. But you tell us that the stock there used to winter, when it was good black-faced sheep?—That is all I know about it.

12,535. That is not the only place that is subject to storms; they would have to provide for an exceptional year like that?—Sometimes the very deer are perfectly starved out, and come down to the low ground when they can get no food above.

12,536. Would you not like to see it under pastoral farms again, if it were practicable?—I should not like to advise that it should be gone into, from the money question, and I am very doubtful whether you would get people who would take it. We find it most difficult to let grazings.

12,537. But, generally speaking, for small holdings is there not a very keen competition?—Well, my experience is that, as a rule, people succeed best who are not dependent on a small bit of pasture ground. The sheep stock is never so good as it is in the regular large farms, with proper people regularly trained for it.

12,538. But there is nothing peculiar in the district that makes it impossible to set up sheep farms there?—There is nothing impossible that I can see, though I do not think it would be a very wise thing to do.

12,539. Is there not the danger that deer forests might become unprofitable also, even to the landlord?—Well, they must take the risk of not getting the forest let, and so on.

12,540. Do you think there is a probability that they might encounter a difficulty in letting deer forests by-and-bye?—I cannot say; we have always got along as yet.

12,541. I notice in the evidence given before the Napier Commission that Mr Malcolm in reply to a question says:—'There are not many more people 'pecuniarily able to have deer forests.' [Q. 24,427]. Do you agree that that is so? And then he says [Q. 24,432] 'The demand for forests has really slack-'ened of late considerably.'—Well, I do not think there has been very much of that; Lord Lovat has no more ground that he could put into deer forests.

12,542. Do you think that the demand for deer forests has slackened?—I cannot very well tell you. Some seasons it is extremely good, other times less so. Last year there was a very great demand.

12,543. But don't you think it would be a better way, if it were possible, to put the land under small holdings? that the income would probably be more secure even for the proprietor?—What do you call small holdings?

12,544. Such holdings as were in Strathfarrar just before the deer forests were formed?—Well, I am very doubtful. I do not think it would do for sheep to be put in place of game; but there is very little prospect of that: we are very glad we have so little to do with sheep grazings.

12,545. Then, with regard to the treatment of crofters on this estate, I think you said that the grazing was completely taken away from the crofters at one time?—I did; Lord Lovat's view being entirely that tillage would best remunerate them, in place of men going up the hill after a few sheep and doing nothing else.

12,546. Might I ask what was done with the pasturage that the crofters had?—It was planted.

12,547. And do you think it was for the advantage of the crofters to lose their grazings?—It was thought they would benefit much more by reason of cultivating the ground and devoting their whole energies to that. The most of them used to be in some trade or other also.

12,548. You said you did not like very small holdings, but would it not be far better if they got the arable and the grazing together? the holdings would be larger?—I don't think so. I said when they had arable and grazing both, they devoted their time to looking after a few sheep which would hardly make any return at all, in place of devoting their time to the arable ground and getting a good return from that.

12,549. Could they not have a shepherd for the sheep?—Who could pay for one?

12,550. Could they not have a club farm?—My experience of that on the west coast has been most unsatisfactory. There has never been peace for forty years; they are always coming appealing to me.

12,551. You say that in the club farms with which you have had to deal, there was always a dispute. Where are these farms?—In Morar.

12,552. They quarrel among themselves? don't they think their club farm is a great benefit to themselves, after all?—They don't say so.

12,553. Do they themselves think it is a benefit?—I don't think so.

12,554. Would they rather be deprived of it the same way?—Another portion of the small crofting population let the winter grazing. The cows and everything graze upon it in summer, and they let the wintering to some people outside as a sheep grazing, and divide the proceeds.

12,555. But they are very glad to have a common grazing?—These people in North Morar could not do without it, because the little arable ground they have is mostly in potatoes, and the cows are put off that, and put on the hill.

12,556. But, in the face of it, does it not seem an extraordinary way of benefiting the crofters, to take from them their grazings?—No, if you put them in a better position, and give them a certain size of croft to improve, and plenty of work.

12,557. But I look altogether just now to the deprivation of the grazing. Is it not a curious way of benefiting them to deprive them of the grazings?—It just makes them arable farmers, according to the size of their farms.

12,558. Does it not really look curious that you say you tried to improve the crofters by taking away the grazings?—With this view: we took away the ground, and put it to a useful purpose.

12,559. But they did not get the benefit of that?—They got the benefit afterwards by devoting their whole energies to arable farming.

12,560. Did you give them the benefit of the land that you took away from them?—I don't think that any of them had any land except occasionally a little bit of outrun. There was no regular outrun here as there is on the west coast.

12,561. Does it not look like this, that you tried to improve them by lessening their opportunities of making a livelihood?—No, because we thought they wasted their opportunities of making a livelihood by reason of having a professed bit of grazing which was of no value to them. It was only giving them an opportunity for idling away their time.

12,562. But you go on the supposition that they would waste their time upon it. Let us suppose that they did not waste their time, and did make good use of the land?—I would give the crofters as much as is good for them, but I would rather give them cultivated ground if it was possible, without any grazing at all. That is in this country, not in the west coast where it is quite different.

12,563. The Chairman.—Don't they need cows' milk for their families?—They have it in their crofts. A croft always carries two cows or so.

12,564. Mr Maccallum.—Then, when you limited them to the arable portion, did they turn out industrious?—Most industrious—exceedingly so, and they became much stronger men. They are well fed, they get plenty of work, and are a new race. Lord Lovat remarked that to me when he came first to the property, they were a diminutive race, and had very spare eating; they lived upon little. After they got plenty of work from his plantation and otherwise, they became much stronger men, and in every way improved.

Beauly. John Peter

12,565. Seeing that they made such a very good use of the arable land, why should they not make an equally good use of the grazing land?—I have repeated that several times over; they devoted themselves to looking after a few sheep,—perhaps a score of sheep; that is no work at all for a man.

12,566. You suppose they would do that; but why should they not get a shepherd?—It would never pay for a shepherd to look after twenty sheep.

12,567. But several of them together. You said leases were given: were the leases binding on the proprietor for the 19 years?—They were not binding on the proprietor, but the actual practice was that there would not be one tenant removed. It was very very seldom that one tenant was removed; it was only because he would be smuggling or not doing what was right. His lordship always made a practice of coming down upon smuggling in that way.

12,568. You thought it necessary always to keep them dependent on the good-will of the proprietor?—It was nothing more than that.

12,569. It was very much therefore only the name of a lease?—It was quite secure to them; they never looked upon it as otherwise than secure.

12,570. But still they were in the power of the proprietor?—Well, that was the way.

12,571. The Chairman.—The Crofters Commission held these to be yearly leases?—They did.

12,572. Mr Sutherland.—You said the improvements you referred to began in the year 1839 or thereabouts?—Yes.

12,573. That was some little time before you came to the management of the estate?—Ten or eleven years.

12,574. But you are sufficiently acquainted with the working of the system?—Thoroughly; it was going on when I came here.

12,575. And I think you indicated, in a general way, that the security of tenure given thereby resulted in a great deal of good?—A great deal of good.

12,576. It resulted in good to the tenants, and I presume you are not prepared to deny that it resulted in good to the landlord?—I admit at once it was good for both.

12,577. And, in fact, it afforded to the country an example of what security of tenure can do in the way of improving estates?—Yes.

12,578. And you are quite prepared to bear your testimony at this time of day to the industry and success of small crofters under such security?—Yes, and having plenty of work to give them in the district otherwise.

12,579. Might I ask you the general state of the land that was given to the people at that time?—Moor.

12,580. Only moor?—Only moor. There might be some little patches.

12,581. But the general character of it was moor?—Yes.

12,582. And they have brought that moor into the state of cultivation we can see for ourselves at the present moment?—Yes.

12,583. Is some of it within sight of this hall?—Along the braeside here.

12,584. Might I ask where these people came from?—People just located on the property; and when there was a great movement at the time of the destitution in 1846, Lord Lovat did not send away a single man; he said he would find plenty of work improving it.

12,585. Was it a fact that those who were turned out from other estates came here?—No, I think his lordship kept very much by those he had already upon the property. Of course sometimes the holdings would alter a little—sons would go away, and sometimes the family died out.

Beauly. John Peter.

12,586. Then, as to the nature of the security that was given, you said there were some conditions upon which they could be broken.—I suppose that would be all specified in the lease?—All specified in the lease. After notice given, they were paid for any improvements they had effected, at a certain rate per acre.

12,587. As a matter of fact, was such compensation ever paid to a tenant who was turned away?—Oh, yes. The turning away I have not been talking about, but several examples of that occurred in my time. It was stipulated that if Lord Lovat turned them away, or even if they went away of their own accord, we have always paid them.

12,588. No doubt all the conditions of the tenure would be laid down in the lease and incorporated therein?—Yes.

12,589. And was smuggling one of them?—I don't think it was put into the lease, but it was an understood thing. There were tickets put out.

12,590. But was smuggling as a matter of fact prevalent?—It was; very much so at one time.

12,591. You, of course, are aware that the prevention of smuggling is an Imperial matter?—Yes, now the law will take it up.

12,592. Did not the law use to take it up?—Well, it could not, and the law was defied.

12,593. Did the landlord come to the assistance of the executive of the day?—He did, because men that devoted their whole time to smuggling were of no use on crofts.

12,594. The same thing would apply, no doubt, to people who sell drink at the present day?—Well, they might, but it was one of the conditions that his lordship made before they entered.

12,595. I am not questioning the moral effect, but it was not specified?—No.

12,596. It was not in the regulations as such?—No.

12,597. Then you made the statement that there were never crofters in Glen-Strathfarrar. Might I ask you the basis of that statement?—Simply the books, which I can show you, and the statement that I read to you.

12,598. Nothing beyond what you have stated?—Nothing.

12,599. You do not know the relations that existed between Lord Lovat and the Clan Fraser previous to that?—No, I don't.

12,600. Your statement is based upon the fact that you find there was a sheep farm there in 1806?—Yes, and that the tenants remained till 1825, and were followed by others.

12,601. And that there were tenants who remained there till 1825, did you say?—Who held it as one farm till 1825, and longer than that—till 1833.

12,602. But the most remote basis of your statement is 1806?—That is as far back as I can go; I cannot find any documents to go farther back.

12,603. It amounts to this then, that for 'never' can be substituted 'in 1806'?—No, I cannot find anything farther back.

12,604. But, in the face of well-known social conditions in the Highlands, would you go the length of saying that, because you find no estate documents to prove that there were any, there were therefore no crofters in Strathfarrar before 1806?—Well, we have the fact that that was the whole rent paid for it.

12,605. But you are not going to deny that people lived there?—I cannot say what these people might have done.

12,606. What was done with Glen-Strathfarrar previous to 1806?—There is nothing to show. That is a good many years before my birth.

12,607. But there might have been no Glen-Strathfarrar, so far as the estate is concerned, previous to 1806?—The glen has been there, but how it has been occupied I can say nothing.

12,608. But don't you think it is just rather straining that evidence to say that there were no crofters in Glen-Strathfarrar, and never were?—I did not say that; I only say as far back as 1806 there are none that I know of.

auly.
hn Peter.

12,609. General Simon Fraser you have heard of, I have no doubt?—Yes.

12,610. Did he belong to the Lovat family?—Well, not the present family; they took their descent from farther back. The present family are not descended from General Fraser.

12,611. Was he a cadet of the Lovat family?—Yes, he was. He succeeded the Lord Simon who was beheaded.

12,612. You have heard of the raising of the Fraser Highlanders, have you not?—Yes.

12,613. Did any of them come from Glen-Strathfarrar?—I have not the slightest idea.

12,614. But you are not in a position to say that they did not?—No, I cannot say one way or the other. There were a good many soldiers located here by General Fraser.

12,615. Then, as to the statement that Lord Lovat had no more land to be turned into deer forest, what does that imply?—I only imply such as could be possibly cultivated to any advantage up to a certain height.

12,616. Land evidently can be divided into two categories—land that can be made into a deer forest, and land that cannot. What is the limit of the land that cannot be made into a deer forest? The crofting area, I understand, cannot; it is covered by Act of Parliament. Does it imply that the two categories are the area under crofters, and the area under other farms?—I mean, of course, that the other farms and the crofters have all the ground below, and the ground at a higher elevation than this could not be cultivated to advantage. I was speaking about the Kiltarlity district and Dochfour; that land they could not make anything out of, by reason of its elevation.

12,617. Could not that land be made into a deer forest?—It is too small for that.

12,617*a*. Could it therefore not be made into small holdings?—We have it now in small holdings.

12,618. And what is the size of the holdings?—About 20 acres or so; that is about the average.

12,619. At what rental?—Very little—perhaps 10s. an acre.

12,620. But is that not covered by the Crofters Act?—Yes.

12,621. Then you cannot add it to the deer forest?—No, we do not want to.

12,622. But you could not although you wanted?—We should never think of it.

12,623. But did I understand you to mean that there was no more land in the Lovat estate that could be made into forest?—I beg your pardon; no more land that could be cultivated, brought out from the moor into arable land, with advantage. The expense of improving it would be more than would be justified by the return, the return would be so small.

12,624. The Chairman.—I think you mean all the land has been made into forest on the Lovat estate which, in your judgment, can be made into forest?—Quite.

12,625. And the other land which is now not forest is apparently composed of crofter land under the Act of Parliament, and farm land?—And plantations.

12,626. But all that land you would describe as land that cannot be properly made into deer forest, in your judgment?—Yes.

12,627. Mr Sutherland.—Why?—Simply because it is too low.

12,628. It is too good?—Yes, too good. Most of Lord Lovat's ground is at an elevation of 1000 feet.

12,629. It is at too low an elevation to be made into deer forests?—Anything that remains.

12,630. But you are aware, are you not, that the better the land is, the better it is suited for a deer forest?—That is not Lord Lovat's view.

12,631. I am glad to see you have a limit to the land that should be put into deer forests, and you draw the line much below what Lord Napier's Commission was inclined to put it at, viz., 800 feet.—Well, I was looking at the maps lately and found the general elevations of Lord Lovat's forests as I stated, but I have drawn no line.

12,632. But the general feature of the Lovat estate has been that in times past some security of tenure has been given, even if a limited one?—Yes. Beauly. — John Peter.

12,633. And, even under that limited security, the industry of the Highland people has improved the land to the benefit of themselves and the proprietor?—Yes, and they had such reliance on the proprietor that they had not the slightest fear of being removed if they did what was right.

12,634. Mr Shaw Stewart.—With regard to Glen-Strathfarrar, I understand you think that the only way to put that glen to agricultural purposes would be to divide it into moderate sized farms; but you also think that such farms—grazing farms—would not pay now-a-days?—I don't think they would.

12,635. Is that because that kind of farm at the present time is generally considered rather unprofitable? They are; it is hardly possible to let them.

12,636. You compared high-lying farms with low-country farms. A low country farmer, I suppose, expects to make something by buying and selling cattle?—Yes.

12,637. While the up country farmer would be almost entirely dependent on his sheep?—He would.

12,638. That is the reason why you consider the low country farms more profitable than the up country farms?—Yes, and they are nearer the markets.

12,639. The Chairman.—At this late hour I do not propose to detain you, more especially as you have been so fully examined by some of my colleagues.

12,640. Mr Malcolm.—I should like to ask the witness some questions as to the comparative remunerativeness of letting this strath as a deer forest and as sheep farms. I wish to ask him what is the present rent paid for Glen-Strathfarrar as a deer forest,—is it £2850?—Yes, it is.

12,641. And you brought out in your statement that when last let as sheep farms the rent was something like £600?—Yes.

12,642. Do you suppose that if this glen was again let under sheep you would get more than £625 for it?—No, I do not think we would get so much.

12,643. So that, from the point of view of rent or returns from the glen, there would be this very striking difference that, whereas you are getting now £2850 of rent, you would only get £600, or thereby, from it as a sheep farm, and there would be a loss of rent of £2250. Is that so?—That is so.

12,644. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—I would like to ask the witness whether, when he said this land could not be profitably used for sheep farming purposes, he meant what Mr Malcolm has indicated,—that it could not produce so much rent for the proprietor; or whether he meant in addition to convey that, given at a fair rent, the people could not live and thrive there?—Well, it depends upon what sort of rents you put upon them.

12,645. Well then, supposing it were let as a sheep farm, would there be no rent for the grouse shooting over it?—That would not be very much.

12,646. How much would it be for Glen-Strathfarrar?—There are no grouse there: you would have to breed the grouse, and there are many things you would have to do.

12,647. Because you spoil it by making it a deer forest. But suppose you had not turned it into a deer forest, and it had been allowed to remain as it was, supporting sheep and grouse, and occasionally deer, what rent would you expect to get for it as a grouse moor, in addition to the sheep farming rent?—I can hardly tell you, because I am not a sportsman, and am not very well aware of things of that sort.

12,648. But you will admit you would get something for it?—Oh, we would get something.

12,649. Therefore it is not the case that the loss would amount to the sum Mr Malcolm states?—It might be a little different, but it would not be very much. Suppose the grouse rent was £200, it would still leave a difference of £2000.

12,650. Would you not get more than £200 for a stretch of country like that as a grouse moor, provided it was in good order? Would you not get more than £1000 for a stretch of ground of that size?—Do you mean for shooting?

Beauly. John Peter.

12,651. Is your experience not this, that a grouse moor of that extent, of an ordinary character, would fetch a rent at least equal to £1000 under present conditions,—I mean land of an exactly similar class, and of similar extent which is not a deer forest? Would not that quantity of land fetch ordinarily £1000 to £1200 as a grouse moor alone?—I cannot tell you. I think not.

12,652. Now a statement was made here yesterday by Mr Grant: he said, what we all know, that the rental of the parish of Kilmorack was £18,000,—the gross rental—and that if you abolished the deer forests £10,000 of that would be at once wiped out. Is that correct?—I think it is quite correct. I had my attention drawn to that, and I think it is quite equal to that.

12,653. Is it a fact that you would not get a penny at all, one sixpence, for the whole grouse shooting of the parish of Kilmorack if you were to let it as a grouse moor in addition to its being a sheep farm, and a black cattle-producing area as well? Would you not get a penny for it at all as a grouse moor?

12,654. The Chairman.—Would large tracts of Kilmorack not let for grouse shooting?—Not for some years.

12,655. And, so letting, would bring in considerable rents?

12,656. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—After a sufficient time for the moor to mature and get into a natural state?—Still, I think it would be nothing compared with the other way of letting it.

12,657. The Chairman.—But were not you satisfied of this, that, given land in the parish of Kilmorack suitable for grouse shootings, and these made into grouse shootings, a substantial rent would come therefrom?—That would also be a very uncertain rent, because, if you don't let, you can make nothing of it.

12,658. But if they do let, don't they let at a good rent?—Well, we have a grouse moor up in Strath-Errick where the rent for 12,000 acres is £600, and this includes mixed low ground shooting and a few stags.

12,659. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—What would you get for that as a deer forest?—We never think of that.

12,660. What is the grazing rent of it?—It is let as a farm for £450.

12,661. And you get £600 for it as a grouse moor. So that, according to that illustration, my lord, we should, at least, double the rent. Now, there is one question more. As a man of great experience, and a gentleman I have always found most fair in transactions of this kind, would you tell me whether you believe that the country will allow the deer forests in existence to continue much longer?—I certainly do, because I do not see how it is possible to get out of it.

12,662. You believe that this system will be permitted by the legislature to continue?—Within reasonable bounds.

12,663. The Chairman.—I must say to Mr Peter he is not bound to answer that question unless he likes.

12,664. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—It has a serious bearing on this question.

12,665. The Chairman.—That may be, but it is not a question he is bound to answer.

12,666. Mr Alexander Mackenzie.—I want to know if he is going to answer that question?—Repeat it again.

12,667. Whether you believe, with all your experience and knowledge, that the legislature of this country will permit the present system of deer foresting to continue?—I give no opinion upon that at all. I may mention that the ground in Glen-Strathfarrar is too high for grouse.

12,668. The Chairman.—Does that consist with your knowledge?—Well, as I mentioned, I am not a sportsman. Lord Lovat and his sons always took the entire charge of the sporting.

12,669. Mr Burns.—You cannot have sheep and deer on the same ground, with the same advantage to the deer?—There is no doubt about that, certainly not. Beauly. John Peter.

12,670. Because the sheep and the dogs and the men bother the deer?—Quite so.

12,671. The Chairman.—The rearing of deer suffers severely from having sheep and their accessories upon the ground?—Very severely.

12,672. Mr Burns.—You may have grouse with sheep, but not with deer, because grouse fly up and spoil your stalk?—Yes, but even with grouse among sheep, you must arrange with the shepherds.

12,673. Mr Macleod.—I must refer to what was presumably a statement of fact. You were asked whether Glen-Strathfarrar was let presently at £2850?—Yes.

12,674. And you said that that was so?—Yes, the two portions together, what we call Braulen and Struy.

12,675. Then it was put to you whether you would get more than the rent that you had previously been getting out of it, the sheep rent, which was put at £600?—Yes.

12,676. You agreed that you would not get more than £600?—Yes.

12,677. As a matter of fact, the rent you were getting before, according to the figures you supplied us with, was £909 for the two places?—Yes, but that takes in Struy as well as Glen-Strathfarrar, and part of these is still let at a rent of £310 separate from the forest, and to make this quite clear I give the present rentals as follows:—

Sporting rental of Braulen and Struy, .		£2,850
Present rent of Struy Estate not within forest, as per Valuation Roll,	£260
Present rent of Culligran part of Glen-Strathfarrar not within forest, as per Valuation Roll, ...	50
Present rent of Struy and Glen-Strathfarrar not included in forest rent .		310
Gross rent of Glen-Strathfarrar and Struy Estates, ...		£3,160

12,678. But Struy proper is included in the deer forest at £2850?—Partly.

12,679. Well, for a fair comparison, you must correct your statement to the extent that you would probably get the £900 rather than the £600?—Part of Struy is still occupied by tenants, a certain portion of Strathglass, not in the deer ground.

12,680. There is very little of it?—£160 or so, and Captain Chisholm's, perhaps £100 of difference.

12,681. I must confess I was astonished at your willingness to agree with Mr Malcolm's statement, when you appeared to have known the figures so little. It is rather important, you know, in your case, that one who has been so long connected with estate work and office work as you, should have committed himself to these figures without being absolutely certain.—Well, I think it might be £100 or so of difference, £700 or £750 in place of £600.

12,682. Well, according to the figures you gave yourself, you were getting £909 before it was converted into a deer forest.

12,683. Mr Sutherland.—As a matter of fact, the two areas were not the same?—Somewhat more than £600 let in the divisions.

12,684. Mr Macleod.—You corrected me to the extent of saying that Glen-Strathfarrar proper was let in these moderate sized grazings at £590, but the total of Glen-Strathfarrar and Struy let at £909?—Including the two.

12,685. That is the same subject that is now a deer forest, letting at £2850?—No, it is not that, because there is the Struy farm to take off.

12,686. How much does that amount to?—£130.

12,687. Mr Sutherland.—The question is, was it the same area that was compared in both cases?—No.

12,688. Mr Macleod.—It is not a matter of any importance whatever, Mr Peter, except so far as your eauly.

own statement is concerned. If you are quite willing to let it go that you have committed yourself to a statement where you did not know the figures, of course it is not a matter that we need trouble about?—I should like to make it quite accurate.

12,689. It is not the same area?—No, not the same.

JOHN BROWN GRANT, Factor, Chisholm Estates (recalled)—examined.

12,690. The Chairman.—I would like to get from you these applications for more land?—Yes, my lord.

12,691. Have you got them here?—No.

12,692. Will you send them in to Mr Mackenzie, the Secretary?—Yes. I may mention I have only got one; the first one went direct to Mrs Chisholm, and I don't think I got it back. The second one went through me, and I have got it. The third one was the letter which I have lodged already.

JAMES SMITH, Factor for Strathconan (48)—examined.

12,693. The Chairman.—You wish to read a statement, I understand?—Yes.

12,693*a*. Kindly read it?—I am 48 years of age. I have been factor for Strathconan for ten years, and my brother and father held the same office before me. My father took charge of the estate shortly after it was purchased, in 1839, by James Balfour, Esq., of Whittinghame. This estate, which extends to 73,600 acres, is of a mountainous character, some of the hills rising to over 3000 feet above sea level. The strath is an unusually narrow one throughout its entire length of about 15 miles, and, for a large part of the year, is very adversely affected by climate. It is very subject to snow storms, and I have, myself, been unable to leave my residence in the strath for five weeks at a time, from this cause. There is a heavy rainfall in Strathconan, and the glen is also liable to visitations of frost, usually late in spring and early in autumn, which interfere considerably both with sowing and reaping of crops there. The acreage above mentioned is thus divided:—Sheep farms, 42,000 acres; deer forest, 27,500 acres; crofts, 2,400 acres; woods, 1,300 acres; water and waste, 400 acres; total, 73,600 acres. On the whole estate the arable land is apportioned as follows:—In deer forest, 50 acres; sheep farms, 395 acres; crofts, 105 acres; total, 550 acres. Most of this is under cultivation at present. When Mr James Balfour purchased Strathconan, the population upon it numbered 568. The people were then in extreme poverty, as estate records show. They were not able to pay even school fees, and a large proportion of this population were unable to read or write. The poverty among the population I know to have been the case, even at a later date, within my own personal recollection. It was for this cause, viz., the congestion and poorness of the people, and there being no prospect of its being otherwise relieved that, in 1842, a number of small tenants who then occupied the farm of Corriewick, extending to 5500 acres, voluntarily gave it up. It was then let to a Mr Brown, but several of the former tenants of this farm remained on the estate in various methods of employment. A few left the estate, but there were no forcible removals involved in this change of tenancy. This farm of Corriewick is still let as a sheep farm. Another movement of Strathconan tenantry was connected with the farm of Blarnabee, which extends to 4000 acres. There the small tenants who occupied it in 1847 importuned the proprietor to take the farm off their hands, and purchase their stock. This he not only did, but allowed them the occupation of their houses and arable land for two years after this proposal of theirs was accepted, in order that they might have time to make other plans for themselves. To carry out this arrangement, the proprietor had to take this farm into his own hands, and he held it as a sheep farm until 1850, when it became part of the deer forest. Another sheep farm, generally known as the Home Farm, and which extends to about 10,000 acres, whereof about 154 are arable, was also voluntarily given up by the former tenants of it to the landlord. The principal tenants of this farm went to other holdings on the same estate. There were no evictions or forcible removals in this case, nor in the other cases I have mentioned. Altogether, as above stated, 42,000 acres of this estate are still devoted to sheep farming, and this, along with the land in the occupation of the crofters on the estate, is, generally speaking, the best land on the estate. The deer forest was formed at intervals from 1841 to 1877. The land of which it is formed is much higher in altitude, and, generally speaking, inferior in quality to the other land of the estate. Not a single individual was turned off this land in the process of formation of the deer forest. Ever since Mr Balfour acquired this estate, there has been a large annual expenditure on improvements, such as new buildings, roads, drains, planting, &c. In an estate record before me, I find that from 1851 to 1890, over £50,000 has been thus expended; but this was on improvements alone, and does not include many other items of expenditure which are incidental to the personal occupation of an estate of this kind. The total annual expenditure at present is at the rate of over £3000, and this is more likely to increase than diminish for some years to come. There is indeed one contingency under which this expenditure would not only decrease, but very probably disappear altogether,—I mean in the event of the re-occupation of the land by crofters. Not only would it be very likely that such a step would put a stop to the improvements and consequent means of employment which the present proprietor of Strathconan is now carrying on, but it would prejudice the position of the small tenantry who now occupy holdings in Strathconan, and who, I feel sure, would dislike very much to be disturbed in such a way. I am distinctly of opinion that an extension of crofting could not be carried on in Strathconan, or the land there advantageously occupied otherwise than it is at present.

James Smith.

12,694. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You speak of £50,000 having been spent on estate improvements. Do you think that could have been spent on the estate without the rent that was derived from the deer forest?—No, certainly not.

12,695. Has the landlord made permanent improvements on the farms?—Yes.

12,696. And has he given any help to the crofters?—Yes, he gives the crofters the material—lime, slate and wood, and they contribute labour.

12,697. Mr Sutherland.—You have not been very long in charge of this estate?—I have been connected with it more or less all my life, but I have only been in charge of it for ten years. It now belongs to Mr Richard Combe.

12,698. That is the name of the present proprietor?—Yes.

12,699. Do I take your statement to refer to his management, or the late proprietor's management?—The management of the late proprietor, but Mr Combe is carrying it on in the same way, and laying out even larger sums of money.

12,700. But for the distribution of the land Mr Combe is in no wise responsible as yet?—No.

12,701. Except the fact that he has got it now—he is the man in possession?—He is the man in possession.

12,702. You said that the estate records showed the poverty of the people before these events took place. In what way?—Well, from documents in my possession,—from appeals that were made to Mr Balfour to grant schools without fees and such like, and from the whole history of the case.

12,703. But don't you know that the old law of Scotland was, that there were no school fees?—But this was put forward by this minister, at any rate, to show the extreme poverty of the people,—they could not pay them in kind, and the reports of all the other people are to the same effect.

12,704. Do you mean to found a charge of general

poverty against the people on the fact that they wished to have a school built?—No, but he mentions the fact as an illustration.

12,705. If they wished a school built it was a testimony, was it not, to their desire for knowledge and education?—Yes, but the fact was mentioned that they were poor.

12,706. Is it not a serious allegation to make against a people that they were sunk in poverty, because they wished a school built?—The fact was mentioned that they were poor, but he only added that as one of the reasons.

12,707. But you know that poverty is a comparative thing always?—Yes.

12,708. How did it compare with other parts of Scotland at that time?—I don't know, but like all congested parts, such as Strathconan was at that time.

12,709. What was the population of Strathconan at that time?—568.

12,710. And do you say that is a congested population for all these thousands of acres you have told us of?—Yes.

12,711. How many acres is it to each individual?—The extent of arable is so exceedingly small.

12,712. But could they not profitably occupy the other land?—No, they could not occupy the hills; it is a very narrow glen.

12,713. But it has all those acres. Then you said they were unable to read or write. You mean in English, no doubt?—It does not mention that; it does not say whether it was in English or in Gaelic.

12,714. Is there any statement that they could not read Gaelic?—No.

12,715. And then I gathered from your statement that all those surrenders of land to which you referred were voluntary. You talked several times of voluntary surrenders of land on the part of these people?—Yes, I understand that was the case; they could not carry on their holdings to advantage, they got into debt, and had to ask the landlord if he would take their stock off their hands.

12,716. But you mentioned 'voluntary' several times. Did you refer to all the clearances?—No, I do not know about some of the previous clearances. It is from hearsay just that I was speaking about them.

12,717. Well, I am not disposed to go farther into the matter, seeing the proprietorship is comparatively a recent one.

12,718. Mr Macleod.—I would like to know this exactly. You have submitted yourself for examination, and you have made several grave statements, which you say are founded on estate documents and other documents in your possession?—Yes, and I said also on the report of the people generally—the old people on the property.

12,719. But would you be prepared to show those estate documents upon which you found your statement?—Well, I daresay I could show them.

12,720. What do they consist of, as a matter of fact?—Of a letter in one case.

12,721. Is it not a fact, Mr Smith—coming to the point at once—is it not a fact that you have no ground whatever for the statement that you have made here just now, beyond the fact that you have a letter which was addressed by a minister in Strathconan to the then proprietor, asking him to come forward to put up a school in a particular place for the people, and he gave as one of his reasons for making that request that the people were poor, and not very well able to do it themselves? Is not that really the whole ground that you have got to go upon?—That is one fact; but I know from the evidence of the people, the old people in the strath all round, that it was the case.

12,722. I don't know whether you are also aware that that letter has already done duty on several occasions?—I was not aware of that, until it was pointed out to me.

12,723. It is printed here, I may tell you,—in the Minutes of Evidence of the Colonisation Committee?—I was not aware of that till lately.

12,724. And, as a matter of fact, what the minister said was not that they were not able to pay fees, but that they could only pay them in kind; that they could not pay them in coin of the realm. In sending this letter to the proprietor, the minister enclosed a copy of replies that he had made to certain queries put to him by the General Assembly of that time; and one of these answers was as follows:—'The people' he says 'are 'so extremely poor that a teacher could not calculate 'upon any fees in money, and but upon very little as 'equivalent for fees.'—He there says they are extremely poor.

Beauly. James Sm

12,725. All that I say is this. You know, when you come forward and say you have got documents which your statement is founded upon, you ought in fairness to state exactly what the documents are. Is this all the documents you have got?—That is all the documents I have got about that particular point.

12,726. Have you got any other documents?—I have got other documents relating to other things which I have mentioned in this paper, such as improvements and that sort of thing.

12,728. Of course it would be rather impossible for these improvements to have done any benefit to the small tenants, seeing they were cleared out of the place?—What I mentioned was to show the necessity for having them changed.

12,729. Mr Sutherland.—To justify the clearances?—That is the reason.

12,730. The poverty and ignorance were the reasons?—And the congestion; the numbers.

12,731. Mr Macleod.—But the only ground you have for making that statement is the fact that a minister, who was making a particular application, made a certain statement, very probably in order to strengthen his appeal?—But I have already stated that I have taken evidence in getting up the case—perhaps it may have been informal—from the old people, who have all distinctly told me the same.

12,732. Mr Sutherland.—What did they tell you?—About the poverty in these old days.

12,733. Mr Macleod. — You heard a gentleman speaking here last evening?—I did.

12,734. Who had no reason to come forward and mislead us in any way, either on the one side or the other?—You mean Mr Campbell?

12,735. Mr Campbell; he came forward here, and he gave evidence as to the condition of these people?—He never was a crofter himself in the strath.

12,736. But, surely, you do not deny the fact that he was there?—Certainly he was there.

12,737. And that he saw what you have never seen, although you are so positive about it?—I don't say that I have seen farther back than my own knowledge goes, but my father has seen a great deal more than he saw.

12,738. But you heard Mr Campbell's statement?—Yes.

12,739. And you heard what he had to say about himself; he left the strath there?—Yes, he left the strath.

12,740. He did not go away voluntarily?—But it was such as he hanging on to the crofters and their relations that made the population so large.

12,741. Was there any particular objection to the population being large?—Certainly, in a case of that kind.

12,742. Why?—Because they cannot possibly exist, if crofters are allowed to multiply and live upon one croft,—they reduce each holding to about a quarter of an acre.

12,743. That is not the case in this instance. Here was a man and his mother, who was a widow, who had a holding that kept a considerable number of cattle and sheep, and paid a rent of £50,—you would not in these circumstances go and say that Mr Campbell was hanging on, as you put it?—I think he stated that they paid £20 for 12 sheep.

12,744. No, no; 150 sheep?—150?

12,745. That was his statement; and he did not leave in poverty, and he did not go away voluntarily. Now I want you to tell us exactly whether this letter alone, or this letter and the queries, are all that you have got to go upon?—That is all I have got; but perhaps on a future occasion, if my father could get an opportunity to attend and give his views about it,—he was present all along, and knows perhaps more about Strathconan than anyone else.

12,746. Of course, as a matter of fact, it is not at all german to what is before you.

12,747. Mr Shaw Stewart.—How long has your father been on the property of Strathconan?—Almost ever since it was bought by Mr Balfour's grandfather.

12,748. And, therefore, this is not merely what might be called hearsay evidence,—you have heard directly from your father descriptions of what he saw with his own eyes on the property?—Oh, certainly; I was a boy at school then.

12,749. Mr Munro.—Did you say that the tenants came forward to ask the proprietor to take the stock off their hands before they were removed?—Yes, in Blarnabee.

12,750. Yes, but did they sign any application in writing?—I don't know how the thing was done, or how they made the application. I know that they applied to have the farm taken off their hands.

12,751. In what way?—By valuation.

12,752. I mean, whether by writing, or by word of mouth?—I think it would be mostly by word of mouth.

12,753. But have you any evidence that they sent in any letter at all making that request?—No.

12,754. You have no document to show that they made any such request?—No.

12,755. The Chairman.—A question has been sent up, which I think I ought to put. 'Does it not 'appear from a document [Q. 6566] submitted by Mr 'Gerald Balfour to the Select Committee on Colonisa-'tion, in 1890, that the population of Strathconan in '1829 was 1100, reduced in 1834 to 870, and in 1839 to 568, as stated by Mr Smith?'—I am aware that he population was 1100 at that date.

12,756. And was reduced as there stated?—Yes, I think I gave the figures.

[Adjourned.]

THIRTEENTH SITTING.

CANNICH, STRATHGLASS, INVERNESS-SHIRE, JUNE 21, 1893.

Present:—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
Michael Hugh Shaw Stewart, Esq., M.P.
James Noel Muller Forsyth, Esq.
George Gordon, Esq.
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
John Macleod, Esq.
Henry Munro, Esq.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

Cannich.

Roderick Maclennan.

Roderick Maclennan, Fasnakyle Bridge, Strathglass (about 50). (Examined partly in English and partly in Gaelic.)

12,757. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I am a watcher with Mr Winans; but I cannot speak English, my lord.

12,758. You spoke to me the other day on the road in English with perfect ease: I had a conversation with you lasting several minutes, and I heard Mr Donald Macrae also speaking to you in English.—I cannot say much in English.

12,759. Your statement surprises me; you spoke to me in English some days ago?—Mr Mackenzie here was speaking for me.

12,760. You are a watcher in the employment of Mr Winans?—Yes.

12,761. On what part of the estate?—Fasnakyle.

12,762. How long have you been a watcher?—About 12 years.

12,763. Twelve years back?—Yes.

12,764. What wages do you get?—I am getting 3s. a day.

12,765. You wish to give the rest of your evidence in Gaelic, perhaps?—Yes.

12,766. Had you a conversation with Mr Robertson, Comar, on a day towards the end of April last?—Yes.

12,767. If you have the least difficulty with any word I use you will get it in Gaelic?—I don't understand English well, but if there is any sentence I do not understand I will ask that it be repeated in Gaelic.

12,768. When did that conversation take place?—About the latter end of April, the time of planting the potatoes.

12,769. Were you busy with your potatoes that day?—I was on the road when he met me.

12,770. You met each other on the road?—Yes.

12,771. Was there any one else present?—No, not one.

12,772. Did a conversation take place between you?—(In Gaelic) He told me, first of all, that Mr Winans had let the whole of the shootings to other shooting tenants.

12,773. The whole of what shootings?—The shootings that Mr Winans himself had—Fasnakyle and other places.

12,774. Proceed with what passed between you?—He then asked me, What are you going to do now? He referred to the watchers, not merely to myself, but to the whole body of watchers. He said that every man of us would have to go to beggary now, there was nothing else for it.

12,775. Did any thing more pass? He said, What right had we to go and ask for a part of his land, or for his land.

12,776. What did he refer to by that?—The petition that was sent to Mrs Chisholm.

12,777. Did anything more pass between you?—He told me he would put me out of the house, put me on the road.

12,778. Did he use the words "out of the house?" He said he would "put me on the road." [The Secretary—That is a Gaelic idiom, meaning that he (the witness) would be turned out of the house.]

12,779. Anything more?—He asked to see some fields, and I met him coming back again, and he then said, "Would it not be as well for you to ask for the parks at Fasnakyle as to ask for more land?" The parks at Fasnakyle, I explain, are in connection with the shooting lodge.

12 780. And what did you say?—I said to him that his lease was out, and that he himself for two years was telling us that this was the time for us to get land, as he himself would never take another lease of it; that is, of Comar.

12,781. Anything more, or was that all?—He told us we were brutes of people without any good; we made no good and were of no use. I said that we had done a good deal of good to him; many a day I had given him for nothing during the last ten years.

12,782. Was that the whole?—Yes, that was the whole.

12,783. Was any reference made between you to the Royal Commission during that conversation, or was it solely to the petition to Mrs Chisholm?—There was no word about the Commission: it had all reference to the petition to Mrs Chisholm.

12,784. Was this conversation in Gaelic or in English?—In Gaelic.

12,785. The whole of it in Gaelic?—Yes.

Cannich. Roderick Maclennan.

12,786. Now, had you any conversation to that effect or to a similar effect with Mr Robertson at any other time?—No.

12,787. That was the sole occasion?—Not at any other time.

12,788. And were you present at any similar conversation he had with any one else?—No; but at the fank last year he stated that this was the time for us to look for land.

12,789. Where is the fank?—at Comar; it was the clipping time last year.

12,790. What month was that; was it this time last year?—Yes, about this time.

12,791. Have you any question, Mr Robertson?

12,792. Mr Robertson.—No.

12,793. Mr Donald Macrae.—I should like to put a question, my lord.

12,794. The Chairman.—Kindly put it through me.

12,795. Mr Donald Macrae.—I will confine my questions entirely to the matter in hand. Would your lordship kindly ask the witness whether he had heard or was aware that Mr Robertson had evicted any others in the past.

12,796. The Chairman.—No I will not put that question. We are solely limiting this inquiry to-day to the matter of contradiction between Mr Robertson and Mr Maclennan.

12,797. Mr Donald Macrae.—What I had in view was that, assuming Mr Robertson had evicted cottars in the past, my point was that the threat in this case would have a terrorising effect.

12,798. The Chairman.—No, I do not allow that question. Any other question?

12,799. Mr Donald Macrae.—No. I had three cases of eviction in view.

12,800. Mr Burns.—Mr Robertson wants to deny that.

Angus Cameron.

ANGUS CAMERON, Invercannich (76)—examined.

12,801. The Chairman.—Where do you live?—East by here about a mile.

12,802. Cannich?—Yes.

12,803. What is your employment?—Nothing at all.

12,804. How were you engaged when you were younger?—As a shepherd, and many a thing.

12,805. Did anything pass between you and Mr Robertson?—No, not I; he is as good a friend to me as I have got west there.

12,806. Well, what is it you wanted to tell us?—About a garden there that Mr Mackenzie, Balmore, broke down some eight years since.

12,807. I cannot go into that matter?—Can you not?

12,808. No.—Well, I will send it on to the Court of Session then.

12,809. Certainly, if there is anything in it. Is there anything further you wish to say?—I have nothing to say against him; I might say too much.

12,810. You came to give evidence, I think, at Beauly?—Yes.

12,811. Something was said at Beauly about you getting a little money to help you to go there?—I got 3s. from Miss Campbell, Comar, west there.

12,812. Is she a niece of Mr Robertson?—Yes.

12,813. Was that to help you to get to Beauly?—Yes, to go to Beauly.

12,814. And give your evidence?—Ay.

12,815. Was Mr Robertson present at the time?—No, he was not at home.

12,816. Well, I will ask you this other question: was that a gift or a loan?—My own money; I wrought for it, for £1.

12,817. It was payment of a wage?—Just.

12,818. You were saying something about £1?—Yes, I was going to ask £1 for my trouble: I was taking up tups for him to Frianaich.

12,819. You did some work for him for which you think you have a claim of £1?—Yes.

12,820. Quite so: that is a matter between you and him.

12,821. Mr Donald Macrae.—Who kept him from going before the Royal Commission? Cannich.

12,822. The Chairman.—Were you prevented from going before the Royal Commission?—No. Angus Cameron.

12,823. You could have gone if you chose?—Yes, but there was a woman living with me, and she wished me to stop at home.

12,824. Who was the woman?—is she any relation of yours?—Yes, to be sure.

12,825. What is her relationship?—She is a married woman.

12,826. Who is she married to?—To me!

12,827. Your wife dissuaded you from going?—Ay, yes.

12,828. Quite so: that will do.

FOURTEENTH SITTING.

DRUMNADROCHIT, GLEN-URQUHART, INVERNESS-SHIRE, JULY 4, 1893.

Drumnadrochit.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
MICHAEL HUGH SHAW STEWART, Esq., M.P.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
JAMES NOEL MULLER FORSYTH, Esq.

WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

Hugh Macdougal

HUGH MACDOUGALL, Blacksmith and Crofter, Millton (41)—examined.

12,829. The Chairman.—Are you a blacksmith and crofter at Milton?—Yes.

12,830. And do you belong to this quarter?—Yes.

12,831. What rent do you pay?—I pay £4 for the croft.

12,832. Do you pay any other rent?—I pay a feu-duty of £1.

12,833. What is that for?—For the dwelling-house.

12,834. For the site of the house?—Yes.

12,835. Then do you pay any further rent than these?—No.

12,836. How long have you been residing there?—Since I was born; not in the village of Milton, but in the neighbourhood.

12,837. Was your father a crofter on this estate?—Yes.

12,838. Where was his croft?—The name is Bulburn.

12,839. Are you to give evidence orally, or have you a written statement?—I have a short written statement.

12,840. Is it prepared by yourself?—Yes.

12,841. Is it in your own handwriting?—Yes.

12,842. And is it signed by you?—Yes.

12,843. Just read it.—Gentlemen,—In my opinion there is a considerable amount of land in Glen-Urquhart, suitable for new holdings and for the enlargement of existing holdings, that comes within the scope of your remit; and there is also among the people of the glen a strong desire for such land. The deer forest of Balmacaan:—The following lands in this forest may be mentioned for new holdings:—(1) Shewglie district, where there were formerly about twenty families, and where there is only one now; (2) Between Shewglie and Lochletter, at the west end of Loch Meiklie, in the forest there are several acres of old arable land; and (3) at Druim-a'-chruinneachd, above Shewglie, there are about 10 acres old arable land in the forest. On the north-east side of Suidh-Ghuirmean there were a number of families; the ruins of some of the houses are still standing, and much of the old arable land is under heather.

Drumnarochit. Hugh Macdougall.

12,844. How much land is there there, according to your view?—I would rather not say a figure.

12,845. Is there room for more than one crofter there?—Yes, by a stretch of pasture along with it. (4) At the river side, opposite Buntait, there is old arable land in forest.

12,846. Can you give us the extent of that?—It is grown up with wood now.

12,847. Are there houses there?—No. (5) In Lochletter district, opposite Strathnacro, there are about 10 acres of old arable land; (6) opposite Mill of Torr there are about 12 acres of old arable land in forest, and the ruins of old houses at a place called Fasach-a'-Ghuill; (7) above Lochletter, at a place called Archie, there are 10 acres old arable in forest.

12,848. Are these 10 acres under timber or in deer forest?—It is deer forest, the whole of these arable lands I mentioned. At all these places new holdings could be made and improvable land reclaimed and added to the old arable, and plenty hill grazing adjoining.

12,849. In the forest?—In the forest. (8) Above Balmacaan there were ten tenants and thirteen cottars till removed about twenty-eight years ago; the tenants were comfortable. Most of their arable land was added to the home farm of Balmacaan.

12,850. Can you give us any particulars of that farm? What was the extent of it?—I cannot give the acreage of it, only the crofters. There are two or three of the crofters' lands a deer forest in that place.

12,851. You say this land you mentioned last was added to the farm of Balmacaan?—Yes, the most of it, but not all.

12,852. What was done with the rest of it?—The rest of it is a deer forest, or closed up for tame deer, part of it, and for rearing pheasants.

12,853. Can you give us any information as to the area of that farm?—I beg pardon: I did not understand the question.

12,854. Can you tell us the acreage of that farm?—No; but I think the rent of that farm that has been included in the deer forest was between £8 and £9.

12,855. Can you give us the rent or value of the land that was added to the farm?—No, I am sorry I cannot.

12,856. I am not surprised; it is merely if you happened to know?—No, I do not.

12,857. Just continue your statement.—Most of their arable land was added to the home farm, but the arable land of Lurgin and the croft of John Macmillan are in the forest or under deer.

12,858. When was that done, was it twenty-eight years ago?—It was not created into a deer forest at the time they were removed, but a few years after that; (9) at a place called Uchd Raeder, coming near to the boundary of Invermoriston; and (10) another place called Rhue, down opposite Loch Ness, there is old arable land in forest, where tenants were——

12,859. Tenants?—Tenants.

12,860. How many?—There would be two, because there are two crofts.

12,861. Two altogether, or two in each?—Two altogether; two crofts. That is on this side of Loch Ness.

12,862. Near the forest of Invermoriston?—Not far from Invermoriston boundaries. Besides the above arable land, the forest carried the following stock:—Shewglie, 2000 sheep; Lochletter, 700 sheep; Dalshangie and Drumclune, 600 sheep; Allanmore, 200 sheep; Glencoiltie, 1300 sheep; Divach, 1600 sheep; Achadh Divach, 250 sheep; Bunloit, 1000 sheep; Rusgaich, 1000 sheep—total, 8650 sheep; and the creation of the forest threw thirteen shepherds out of employment.

Drumnarochit. Hugh Macdougall.

12,863. Can you give us the date of the formation of the forest?—It was not all converted into a forest at the same time.

12,864. You don't remember, I suppose?—Yes, I remember parts of it.

12,865. But you don't remember when there was no forest?—No, but I remember when parts were not in forest.

12,866. Were all these different localities you mentioned added from time to time to what had been a smaller forest before?—Yes, exactly.

12,867. These, as I understand, had been sheep farms?—The whole forest was a sheep farm; a number of sheep farms.

12,868. Now, can you give us the acreage of these different places?—No, I cannot do that.

12,869. Do you happen to know the total acreage of the forest?—No, I have not got that, I forgot to look it up.

12,870. Have you anything more in your paper?—No, I am through.

12,871. What kind of sheep are these you have been describing?—Black-faced sheep, most of them; I suppose the whole are.

12,872. Are these figures your own estimate?—No, I have them on pretty good authority, and if you wish it I will give the authority.

12,873. Well, you have these figures on authority on which you can rely?—Yes; I rely myself on them.

12,874. And you place these figures before us with confidence?—Yes.

12,875. I suppose there are no crofters in the forest?—None whatever.

12,876. Are sheep allowed to graze in the forest?—None whatever.

12,877. Are sheep allowed to graze in the forest at present?—Sometimes; since a few years back, I think some are allowed in.

12,878. Whose sheep are these?—The farmers' and tenants' close by the forest at a certain time of the year.

12,879. They are allowed in by the proprietor?—That is the way I understand it.

12,880. A privilege of sheep grazing?—just a privilege, but only for a short time in the year.

12,881. Is the forest fenced at any point?—I think it is fenced all round about.

12,882. You mentioned some old townships where there had been one or more tenants—some few tenants. Can you tell us the nature of these establishments?—No, there are some of them so far back; only the arable land and the buildings.

12,883. Is that the only evidence you had in the matter?—Well, there is a place called Archie, and I knew the family of the man that had that place.

12,884. Have you any recollection of the removal there?—Yes, Balmacaan district; and I remember Drumclune in pasture, when it was added to the forest; that is not very long ago.

12,885. When was that?—Between 20 and 30 years ago.

12,886. Who held the Drumclune grazing before?—The present farmer.

12,887. What is his name?—Duncan Macmillan.

12,888. It was part of his farm?—Yes, it was the pasture added to the farm; it is just adjoining the farm.

12,889. Is the forest let or is it in the hands of the proprietors?—It is let to Mr Bradley Martin of New York.

12,890. Held by him on lease, I suppose?—Well, I cannot say about the terms, but he has been here since a number of years now.

12,891. You gave us some estimates of the extent of some of these patches of old arable,—10 acres, 12 acres, and so on. Is that an estimate?—Well, it is just my own estimation; I put it down at that.

12,892. You are as near as you can?—Yes, as I think myself, and having the evidence of other men as well to strengthen me.

Drumnadrochit.

Hugh Macdougall.

12,893. In giving your evidence just now are you giving it as representative evidence?—as representing the views and information of other witnesses in the district?—Well, I represent, I believe, the views of a lot of them; but, at the same time, I was not appointed here to represent them.

12,894. You were not formally appointed, but you believe that in what you have said you have expressed a very general state of information and belief in the matter?—Without a doubt.

12,895. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I did not quite catch whether you gave us the date of Balmacaan being made a forest?—Do you mean the crofting district?

12,896. The land you have been speaking of,—when was it turned into a forest?—If you mean the crofting district above Balmacaan, about 28 years ago.

12,897. You said that thirteen shepherds were displaced when it was turned into a forest. Have you any idea of the number of men employed on the forest at present?—Four or five gamekeepers that are directly concerned about the forest; in the shooting season there are more.

12,898. Could you give me any idea of the number of gillies employed in the shooting season?—No, I cannot give you the figures, but they are more for the covers and for the low land than for the forest; for the rearing of pheasants, and so on.

12,899. What kind of grazing is it you have been telling us of?—Of the forest?

12,900. Yes, I am not speaking of the arable land, but the grazing.—The grazing is good and bad; like, I suppose, the general run.

12,901. What was it used as before when it was under sheep,—summer grazing?—It was used as summer grazing.

12,902. And winter too?—Certainly.

12,903. You have given us the figures of the numbers of sheep that were carried. Were they in connection with any low-lying farms?—Some of them had only a few acres of arable land; others had, well, a good run of arable land, say 40 or 50 or 60 acres.

12,904. These grazings which had only a few acres of arable land, were they in connection with any other low-lying farms at any distance?—None whatever. There is Glencoiltie,—that is going right through the forest, and the man that had that had only a few acres of arable land.

12,905. Have you any idea of the amount of money spent in the district on the forest? I do not mean only in wages, but in buying provisions,—hay, and eggs and chickens, and so on?—No, I could not give you any figures, but I may say that, as far as I know, the most of that is bought from the home farm of Balmacaan.

12,906. Mr Forsyth.—You have mentioned certain extents of arable land which you consider available for occupation as new holdings, mostly, I think, on the Balmacaan forest, are they not?—Yes.

12,907. Or at the verge of the forest?—Exactly.

12,908. For how many people altogether do you think there is room there?—Oh, yes, for hundreds.

12,909. Hundreds of crofters?—I might say a hundred families all round.

12,910. Because you have only mentioned very small extents of arable land, have you not?—But it could be made into arable land, anyhow.

12,911. What you mean to say is, that there is improvable land capable of sustaining hundreds of families?—Yes, with the pasture along.

12,912. Do you think that they could rely upon this arable as profitable land?—Well, more on the grazing than on the arable.

12,913. The number is very large, and I should like to get some more definite statement from you as to the amount of improvable land, because 'hundreds of families,' you know, is rather a wide term. How much improvable land do you think there is on the edges of the forest generally?—Well, I never made up my mind about how much could be made into arable land, but I know, from a little experience, that there is any amount of land that could be reclaimed.

12,914. You could not define it at all?—I would rather not define it.

12,915. The Chairman.—I am not sure but that Mr Forsyth suggested to you the answer 'hundreds of families,' but I do not know if that is your own opinion.

12,916. Mr Forsyth.—It struck me that it was high, because it occurred to me that the witness had made it perhaps without due consideration.—Well, perhaps the word was used without thinking at all. I did not say 'hundreds'; I only said a hundred.

12,917. This is a large statement, you know. The figures are laid down for nearly 10,000 sheep. Well, dividing that into holdings with 200 or 300 sheep, it would make good grazing; so that, as far as grazing is concerned, a lot of families could be supported.

12,918. Of course you would not bind yourself as to any exact statement of the number of families?—No, I would not.

12,919. But you think a great many?—Yes, a great many.

12,920. The Chairman.—I would interpose a question here. You mentioned 8650 sheep. Now, suppose crofters were settled on the land you have mentioned; how many sheep would you propose to allocate to each?—To each crofter?

12,921. Yes.—Nothing less than 100; anything above that.

12,922. 100, would you say?—To 200 or 300.

12,923. Mr Sutherland.—About this deer forest and the townships you mentioned to us,—are they townships that were recently added to the forest, or are they all the townships that are contained in the forest?—Yes, they are all in the forest.

12,924. But what I want to know is, if there was a forest of Balmacaan before those townships were added; was there one before?—Oh, there was no forest in Balmacaan till a certain period.

12,925. Have you any idea when the first forest was?—I cannot say; I would rather not.

12,926. Is it within 100 years?—Yes.

12,927. Is it within 80 years?—Yes, and I believe it is within 60 years, and within 50 years, but I would rather not say.

12,928. Well, prior to 80 years ago there was no deer forest at all?—No.

12,929. Did what is now deer forest carry 8650 sheep? Was it all under sheep at that time?—Yes, all under sheep and cattle as well; horses and cattle attached to the farms.

12,930. And these 8650 sheep were displaced, and deer were put in their place?—But not at one time.

12,931. But that is the result up to the present time?—Exactly.

12,932. And you are of opinion,—I think you have stated the opinion to us,—that there is land there that is suitable for occupation by crofters, or other small tenants?—Yes, without doubt, and to enlarge present holdings that come close by the forest.

12,933. And you think they could be occupied with profit to all parties concerned?—Yes, that is my firm opinion.

12,934. You stated there was a certain amount of land that was under cultivation before, and other land that was susceptible of improvement?—Yes, attached to that.

12,935. You have no doubt as to the suitability of it for improvement?—No, in my mind.

12,936. Then, as to the proportion of it that is improvable, could you compare it with any other area that has been improved?—Oh, in my view, it is far superior to many a croft that has been reclaimed in the glen.

12,937. Taking this district in which we are sitting now, and looking round it, do you think it is capable of the same proportion of it being improved as this district?—It is not so level as this district where we are at present; it is a low lying district here.

12,938. Is it higher?—Yes, it is higher, and steeper, the most of it.

12,939. Could you give us any idea of the general altitude of that?—No, I would rather say not.

12,940. The Chairman.—You mean you would rather not say?—I would rather not say.

12,941. Mr Sutherland.—But you can compare it with the land here about?—It is not so high as plenty of the land that is cultivated at present.

12,942. What is the altitude, do you know, of the cultivated land here?—I cannot give you a figure.

12,943. Do you know a place called Allt-Dalmore?—Yes.

12,944. On the north side of Glen-Urquhart?—Yes, coming close to Kiltarlity district.

12,945. Have you any knowledge of the crops that have been raised in Dalmore?—Well, it has been lying waste for a number of years.

12,946. Why? Did the crops fail?—Well, I should think not; there is a great demand for that place if they would only get it.

12,947. Do you know the altitude of it?—No, I have been there, but I could not say.

12,948. Is it upwards of 800 feet?—I would rather not say anything about the figures.

12,949. But you would not be surprised to learn that it is 850 feet?—Well, I would not think it would be that.

12,950. That is what it is on the map. Well then, do you know of any other place that is of equal altitude with Dalmore in this neighbourhood?—Yes, just opposite us, and in Lord Lovat's place over there.

12,951. Do they raise good crops there?—Well, on some occasions the frosty weather might perhaps kill it, but, generally speaking, it is a pretty fair crop. Some crofters that were taken from Balmacaan are up on the heights there, and they seem to thrive pretty well.

12,952. And it is as high as Dalmore?—Well, in my view it is.

12,953. You believe that a large proportion of the land in the place you have indicated could be improved in the same way as this land was?—Yes, that is my opinion.

12,954. Have you any idea what this land was before the people were put on it?—The low lying land?

12,955. No, the high land up to the top of the hills.—No, most of it was cultivated before I ever came to think much about it.

12,956. But you have no reason to suppose that it was better than the other?—No, not so good.

12,957. And is the deer forest, in your opinion, a favourable subject to improve as compared with this?—Certainly, that is my impression.

12,958. Mr Gordon.—At what season of the year are the sheep allowed into the forest?—After the shooting season is over. I think it was down between winter and spring. It has only been in practice these two years back, as far as I know, or even one year back.

12,959. When are they turned out?—I would not say any date, because I have no sheep myself, and I was not so much interested in it.

12,960. Are they in the forest up till the month of April or May?—Certainly not.

12,961. Are they in the forest during the winter?—They are for a month or two, between spring and winter, there.

12,962. And you consider that a benefit?—Yes, I suppose they consider it a benefit.

12,963. Were any of these grazings that you have mentioned occupied by small tenants before?—You mean the deer forest grazing?

12,964. Yes.—Yes, the foremost part of Bunloit, as we call Bunloit deer forest; the crofters there, some dozen or less than a dozen, had it less than 25 years ago.

12,965. You have given that quantity as 1000 sheep?—Yes.

12,966. Was it a club farm, or did each hold individually?—Each had his own sheep, but it was in one piece they had the forest.

12,967. They had a forest: who had a forest?—That portion of the forest, the Bunloit crofters.

12,968. The Bunloit crofters had a portion of the forest which kept 1000 sheep?—Yes. Drumnadrochit.

12,969. Have you a croft yourself?—Yes, a small croft. Hugh Macdougall.

12,970. What is the extent of your own croft?—Between 7 and 8 acres.

12,971. Have you any knowledge of sheep grazings?—No, I have no sheep; it is all arable land I have.

12,972. Had you ever any knowledge of sheep grazings?—Not very much.

12,973. Then you are not able to speak from your own knowledge as to what ground would keep sheep and what would not?—No, I could not say for myself.

12,974. Then a good deal of what you have stated is from information from others?—Yes, from men who have been in the forest, and I offered to give my authority if asked.

12,975. Could you give us any idea of the number of sheep and cattle which you would suppose suitable for the croft that you have in mind?—Well, for the cattle, if the crofters had just 2 or 3 cows and a horse or two, and a good run of grazing for sheep; the sheep part is the main thing.

12,976. But you think they would require to have arable land for 3 or 4 cows and a horse?—Yes, to keep up a family.

12,977. Now, have you any idea of the cost of the stocking that you have mentioned,—3 cows and a horse and a 100 sheep or so?—No, I have no idea.

12,978. You cannot tell that from your own knowledge?—No.

12,979. Have you any idea of the cost of the buildings for a place of that kind?—Well, I know what my own building cost me.

12,980. Could you tell it from that?—Perhaps the crofters might do with a smaller building than I did.

12,981. What did your own cost you?—Over £200, any way.

12,982. What have you for that,—a dwelling house?—Dwelling house.

12,983. A smithy?—The smithy is extra besides.

12,984. But you require a byre, and a barn and a stable?—Well, I may say, if I am allowed to say it, I have seen poor men get a piece of land, 20 acres or thereabouts, and they managed to build houses there without any help, that I am aware of, in my days in some of the worst parts of the glen.

12,985. And, taking the buildings and the stock together, what would you estimate the cost of a small holding at?—I would rather say nothing as to the cost.

12,986. But it would take a good deal of money to provide 100 of these buildings and stocking?—Yes, but there is hardly any family but who, directly or indirectly, would get help from friends, or somehow, and that would manage that for them.

12,987. You have no idea how the money would be raised?—No.

12,988. You said something about a farm called Dalmore?—Yes.

12,989. Which side of the glen is it on?—The north side.

12,990. Facing south?—Facing south.

12,991. Do you find in this country there is any difference in the land facing the south or the north?—Oh yes, it is much hardier facing the south.

12,992. Does most of the forest face the south?—Yes, most of it faces the south.

12,993. Where? does the forest not extend up to the watershed between this and Invermoriston?—Yes, exactly.

12,994. Are not you looking south when you are looking from this side?—Yes, but when I go away from this to Corrimony I only see a bit of the forest.

12,995. If you go west from this to Corrimony, with the forest on your left hand, is that not the south?—Yes, the forest faces the north, but I say there is only a mite of the forest.

12,996. But the crops would not be so early or so sure as in the land facing to south.—They would not be so early.

12,997. Nor so sure?—I would not say that. I see

Drumnadrochit.

Hugh Macdougall.

very good crops on land near Corrimony facing the north.

12,998. Is there not a good deal of this land broken land with lochs and flat mossy ground?—There are lochs, certainly.

12,999. And flat mossy ground?—I suppose there is plenty of that.

13,000. It looks it on the map at any rate. But you think the arable land you have mentioned, or the ground that was formerly arable, is on the lower part?—Yes, most of it is down even as low as the river.

13,001. Extending up westward?—Coming down to the river that goes up Loch Meiklie there, just on the brink of the river, some of it.

13,002. Mr Maccallum.—Is this deer forest of Balmacaan fenced?—Yes, it is all fenced.

13,003. And is the fence sufficient, so that the deer do not destroy the crofters' crops, or do they suffer anything in that way?—I am not aware that they come out very often; I have seen them down even beside my own place in the fields, but not very often. Unless it is broken down they do not come through.

13,004. So there is no complaint of that kind?—I do not think there is.

13,005. Then you mentioned a township of Balmacaan that was added partly to the deer forest, and partly to the home farm of Balmacaan?—Yes.

13,006. Where were these people sent to?—Well, the crofters, those that had land, I think the most of them got land, such as it was.

13,007. Were these holdings they got as good as those they left?—They got land, but they got no holdings.

13,008. They got land without any holding?—There was no building on the land, I mean.

13,009. Was the land itself as good as the land that they had to give up?—Not in my estimation.

13,010. Was it land that had been under cultivation before, or had they to improve it themselves?—Part of it, and some of it land that was never under cultivation.

13,011. Did they improve the land they got?—Some of them did, and some of them died in the poorhouse.

13,012. And how about the houses; were houses prepared for them on these lands?—They built houses.

13,013. Without any help?—I suppose they got the trees in the wood; they had no slated houses then.

13,014. And you think that is the only help they got—wood?—That is as far as I know.

13,015. Are the ruins of the houses to be seen yet?—Some of them.

13,016. Are there people in this district who have no land and are willing to get it?—Yes, a great many, who are anxious to get land.

13,017. And about their holdings; do they complain of the smallness of the holdings?—I beg pardon.

13,018. Are there many crofters, first of all?—Yes, in fact they are nearly all crofters in this parish.

13,019. And is there a general complaint as to the smallness of their holdings?—Yes, there is a general complaint especially for grazing attached. There are some of them up the braes that have been speaking to me these two days back.

13,020. And you think if the grazing of the forest were made available, there would be a demand for it?—A general demand, a run for it, I think myself, for grazing.

13,021. Have you any idea of the extent of the forest?—No.

13,022. Is it very large?—Well, the length of it is from Balmacaan farm there up to the estate of Corrimony; that will be from 8 to 10 miles in length.

13,023. You gave us some idea of the stock that was on the land added to the forest,—something like 8000?—Yes.

13,024. And is all that good pasture?—Well, I would not say that the whole is good pasture, but, taking it as a whole, it is good pasture.

13,025. But I mean the land that was used recently as a farm under sheep; is that land good?—I do not understand your question.

13,026. I take it, first of all, that there is a forest that has been for a long time used as a forest only, and then grazings have been added more recently.—Yes.

Drumnadrochit.

Hugh Macdou

13,027. Now, were all these grazings good land—good pasture?—Yes, as far as I know.

13,028. And these grazings would carry a stock of upwards of 8000?—Yes.

13,029. And, if this land were made available for addition to the crofters' holdings at present, you think it would be a great advantage to the crofters?—I think so.

13,030. Have the crofters just now sheep?—Well, the crofters in Bunloit, as far as I know, have only 12 sheep each; I mean those that had 1000 between six or seven of them; I think it is a dozen of sheep that they are allowed in the meantime, and the east portion of Bunloit has no sheep, as far as I know.

13,031. Are these their chief grievances,—that their holdings are small, and they have no pasture for sheep?—That is just the chief grievance.

13,032. Mr Munro.—I think you told us that if the Balmacaan deer forest were made available there would be a ready run upon it for grazing purposes?—That is my impression.

13,033. Would you yourself be prepared to take a portion of the forest?—Yes, for grazing.

13,034. Have you formed in your own mind now any definite plan as to the division of the forest, supposing it was laid open to-morrow,—how it would work out on the scheme of division?—Well, I think the only way it would work out in the way of grazing would be club farms.

13,035. I will put the question to you in this form:—Supposing that you yourself had the option of taking a portion of the land of Balmacaan deer forest, would you require to make a selection of any particular part of it, or would you take it just as it would come?—Well, if we got to select it, there is no doubt——

13,036. What I want to be at is this, that it is quite possible a certain portion of it might readily be taken up by crofters, and the rest left in the proprietor's hands; am I correct in that assumption?—Well, it is my impression that it would be all let.

13,037. You have no doubt in your own mind?—That is my view of it.

13,038. But you have not formed any definite scheme?—No, in fact I did not expect myself to go in for a bit of it, even if it was offered to me.

13,039. Is there sufficient arable land to work out in connection with the grazing of the forest?—No, there is not enough arable land.

13,040. Then, how would crofters or small tenants take the whole of that forest if there was no arable land to work along with it?—Well, in Bunloit they would take just what they had before, and perhaps more, without any arable land attached to it.

13,041. Tenants from Bunloit would come here and take portions of the grazing land in the deer forest if open to them?—Exactly.

13,042. You cultivate a croft yourself, I think?—Yes, a small bit.

13,043. Can you tell us what altitude your croft is?—Not many feet; it is just in the village of Milton there, close to the level; it is steep, but not many hundred feet above the level.

13,044. Do you know what the population of Glen-Urquhart was before the deer forest was formed?—No, I heard it, but I have not got it in memory, and I took no note of it.

13,045. You could not say whether the population was less or greater now?—I say it is much less now; even the last ten years.

13,046. What has the effect of the deer forest been upon the prosperity of the district here?—Well, in the first place, the population has decreased, and, even in my own line, my work is not what it used to be; and even the big farms that are not in the forest, they are beginning to let it out into grazing more than they used to do; so that it effects myself in my own little sphere.

13,047. But is the position of the people here as comfortable as it was before the formation of the forest?—Not in general, but the crofters in some places are not worse than they were then.

13,048. Mr Macleod.—I think you said that the length of this Balmacaan deer forest,—which I understand is, in your opinion, the only available land on the Seafield estate in this district,—was 8 to 10 miles?—Yes.

13,049. Now, would you state the average breadth?—Well, I would rather not say a figure as to the breadth.

13,050. But you know in miles?—Yes,—4, 5, or 6 miles.

13,051. So that it is between 8 and 10 miles long by 5 or 6 broad?—I would say between 5 and 6 in breadth.

13,052. Now, can you give me any idea of the rent of this forest?—You mean the rent that the present shooting tenant pays?

13,053. Certainly.—I think it is £1700 I see in the valuation roll.

13,054. Did you take sufficient interest in these things at the time before this last addition was made to the forest, to be able to tell us whether there was a large increment of land when the forest was made up to its present size?—No, I could not say; I took no interest in that at that time.

13,055. As I understand it, those tenants who were removed from Balmacaan got holdings of a more or less valuable kind in the glen itself.—Yes.

13,056. In other words, they were put in upon the other small tenants?—Certainly. Other tenants added to the places they got in Bunloit up there; they got lots that the other crofters had before they went there.

13,057. So that, so far as the Bunloit tenants are concerned, they suffered probably in two ways;—they lost their grazing, and they had a number of tenants put in upon them?—Yes, but they only lost their grazing; there was no arable land where their lots were.

13,058. They were put on the pasture land?—Yes, on the pasture land, but I may say that there was only one of the Balmacaan men in Bunloit.

13,059. Where were the others sent?—Five of them got places on the west side of the loch near the old castle of Urquhart; one of them has, I understand, never paid a rent for his croft, and died in the poorhouse, but the other one is there yet.

13,060. But, speaking generally, the small tenants who were removed were put in upon the other small tenants on the lower part of the glen?—Yes, except those that were put in on the hills between this and Abriachan, they only got the barren hill-grazing there, so that it was not so bad for the crofters that had that place.

13,061. You spoke of the amount of old arable land in the forest, but I take it that those tenants who were at one time in the forest ground made their living chiefly by their grazing?—Well, that is what I would think, but I do not remember of seeing some of them.

13,062. You do not know of your own knowledge?—No.

13,063. Then you gave an estimate of the carry of sheep stock.—Yes.

13,064. Now you said nothing of cattle and horses.—No, I did not mention cattle or horses.

13,065. In the sheep stock that you stated, did you state the equivalent of those cattle and horses, or should you have included that in the estimate?—Well, I suppose they would be there occasionally, not in the winter time, but in the summer, the horses especially.

13,066. But, in addition to the number of sheep you mentioned, there would be, of course, a number of cattle and horses?—Yes, without a doubt.

13,067. Then, with regard to the present townships or holdings that could be benefited by an extension of their pasture into the Balmacaan forest, would you be good enough to give us the names of them?—Would you please repeat that question?

13,068. With regard to the townships or holdings that might be benefited by an extension of their grazings from the Balmacaan forest,—would you give us the names of those?—Yes, I will give you the names; is it the individual names or the community? Drumnadrochit.

13,069. Well, the community. — The Bunloit crofters, from east to west; it would be a great benefit to them. Hugh Macdougall.

13,070. How many are there?—Something about a score, or more than a score.

13,071. Any other townships?—Well, down in the lower flat here the most of the tenants have a slice of arable land, but not sufficient to keep one cow, and they are exceedingly anxious to get pasture land.

13,072. Has it a general name?—Lewiston is one of them, and my own village where I stop—Milton—is another.

13,073. And does this deer forest lie near them?—Well, it lies near enough, especially the covers they have for game between Loch Ness and Lewiston; plenty good pasture there.

13,074. Is it under wood?—Yes, it is under wood.

13,075. And would not it destroy the wood to pasture there?—Oh no, it would never destroy trees 40 feet high; it is not a plantation.

13,076. No, it is not a plantation; it is grown wood?—Grown wood, birches and ash and elder trees. I think there are delegates from Lewiston here, and there are others up the country between this and Strathnacro. There is a great demand there for pasture; the tenants there come down to the river side, and there is only the river between them and the deer forest, and the pasture there is as bad as could be got in the glen.

13,077. That is one tenant?—One tenant.

13,078. And are there any others?—Yes, two or three up there, Macmillan, and a miller, and some others.

13,079. Do you call that Strathnacro too?—Mill of Torr is one of them.

13,080. Any other?—Mill of Torr and Strathnacro are the two names, but I would say there will be three or four that would like to enlarge the pasture.

13,081. Are there any others?—Well, I could not say.

13,082. You mentioned about the farm of Drumclune, that the pasture was taken off it to be added to the forest?—I mentioned that the hill portion of Drumclune was under sheep in my day, and it is now under deer? I did not say whether it was taken from them or not.

13,083. What I want to be at is this: does the tenant of Drumclune desire an extension of grazing?—I do not know.

13,084. The pasture would naturally pertain to that farm?—Yes, it comes close to his house, and Allanmore is next.

13,085. It has no pasture?—Not an inch; the deer forest comes down to the very arable land.

13,086. Any other?—Well, I do not think there is any other.

13,087. Then, speaking generally, it appears to be your view that this forest of Balmacaan should be divided amongst the present tenants of the glen without necessitating any new settlements?—I mean that by enlarging the present holdings, and converting new holdings as well, it could be used—the whole of them.

13,088. You would propose, however, to make some new settlements?—Certainly; I know there is a demand in that way.

13,089. As well?—Yes.

13,090. And you think it could be done?—Yes, I think so.

13,091. Then, with regard to what could be done in that way—the areas without arable land you mentioned, I think you will admit, were small?—Yes, they are small.

13,092. Did you express the view that they could be added to?—Plenty could be added to them.

13,093. You think that?—Yes, I think that.

13,094. Have you any practical knowledge there?—I know the places well.

13,095. Have you taken in land yourself?—I have seen land taken in, by my own strength, some of it.

13,096. Do you think there are people in the glen that would be prepared to do the same?—I know there are people in the glen that would rejoice to get it for that purpose.

Drumnadrochit.

Hugh Macdougall.

13,097. Supposing they got a holding with a small quantity of arable and a considerable quantity of improvable land, do you think they would be prepared to take it in?—That is my opinion.

13,098. Do you think they would be able to take such holdings without assistance?—Yes; in fact I have seen it done in the glen.

13,099. You think a class of men in the district, who desire to get these holdings, would be able to get assistance to put them on their feet?—Yes, I believe they could get such assistance from friends, without applying for money outside.

13,100. Have you anything to add?—No, I do not think so.

13,101. Mr William Mackay, Solicitor, Inverness, Agent for the Countess-Dowager of Seafield.—I want to ask the witness first whether he was ever at Druim-a'-chruineachd?—Yes.

13,102. Did you measure the acreage of it?—No, I never measured an acre in my life.

13,103. You mentioned 10; would you be surprised that, according to the Survey, it is only 3 acres 3 roods 11 poles?—Yes, I quite believe that; that is quite correct enough as far as that is concerned, but it is all under heather now, and only men who have seen it there could say what it has been.

13,104.—When was it last under cultivation?—I won't say when.

13,105. The Chairman.—You would rather not say?—No, I would not say.

13,106. Mr William Mackay.—It was not in your time?—No, not since I was born.

13,107. Was it within the last 100 years?—I won't say when it was.

13,108. Well, this Survey is dated 1808, and in 1808 the acreage was 3 acres 3 roods 11 poles. Has anything been added to it since?—I would think not.

13,109. Mr Sutherland.—Is that a public survey?

13,110. Mr William Mackay.—No, it is the estate Survey: I shall refer to the Survey afterwards.

13,111. The Chairman.—Is that an authenticated document?

13,112. Mr William Mackay.—Yes, it is signed by Peter Brown, who was a very well-known authority about a century ago. He was the first of a family of surveyors, and he surveyed the estate then. (To Witness.) Then you also stated that there was considerable arable land in the district of Shewglie; can you give the amount—the extent?—No, I cannot give the amount as far as my own experience goes.

13,113. I am told that it is 7 acres; do you think that is about correct?—I would not say whether it is or not.

13,114-5. And do you know that that arable land is now in the occupancy of the gamekeeper?—I know the gamekeeper has it.

13,116. And this arable land within the forest that you referred to.—I think I referred to another place besides that.

13,117. To Druim-a'-chruineachd, but we have touched that.—To Suidh-Ghuirmein, did I not?

13,118. But we are coming to that. But, on Shewglie, the arable land you referred to is now in the possession of the gamekeeper.—Yes.

13,119. And, of course, you do not know what the extent is?—No, I don't.

13,120. Then you mentioned that at the east of Suidh-Ghuirmein there is old arable land. Were you ever there?—Yes, I was there.

13,121. At this spot?—Yes, I was at the shooting there.

13,122. When was that?—Close upon 20 years ago.

13,123. You would then be about 20 years of age?—More than that.

13,124. Did you measure the extent?—No, certainly not.

13,125. And do you know what it is really?—No, I don't know, but I only gave what I had from men that ought to know better than myself, and I offered to give the authority.

13,126. These men never measured the place?—No, but they have been there hundreds of times.

13,127. When was this place, Suidh-Ghuirmein, under cultivation?—I have no idea.

13,128. Was it within the last 200 years?—I have no idea whatever.

13,129. Are there any ruins at all about the place showing that it was ever under cultivation?—I think there are, as far as my own memory carries me.

13,130. Is not the arable land all under old timber?—There is timber, and heather, and brackens, and all.

13,131. The fact is, it may have been 10,000 years ago, as far as you know, since it was cultivated.

13,132. The Chairman.—10,000 years ago?

13,133. Mr William Mackay.—Yes, my lord, so far as his knowledge is concerned. (To Witness.) Well, the next place is opposite Mill of Torr. You put it down at 10 acres arable. Were you ever down there?—Yes, I have gone through it, but not to measure it.

13,134. Do not you think it is nearer an acre than 10 acres?—Certainly not, there are trees and all; there is no man passing along the road would imagine that.

13,135. It is all under old birch wood.—No, not all, some of it can be seen from the road.

13,136. Was that under tillage within the last 40 or 50 years?—Yes.

13,137. Do you remember when there was anybody there?—No, but I have been told by men, not many days ago, that they have been working there.

13,138. That is on the low land?—Yes, at Mill of Torr.

13,139. Well, there is only an acre of land there.—Well, I would like to get an acre of land of that size in my own place.

13,140. There are 10 acres of arable land, you say, within Lochletter; is that where the gamekeeper is, at Archie?—No, the gamekeeper is at Lochletter; you see it.

13,141. Up in the wood?—Up in the wood.

13,142. And that is under birch wood now?—No, it is not; there are acres of that that can be seen miles distant without any wood in it; that is, Archie.

13,143. You may be right or you may be wrong, but you do not know the extent?—I do not know if I mentioned the extent.

13,144. The Chairman.—He does not put in his own estimates as precise measurements.

13,145. Mr William Mackay.—Well, but he gave them as measurements. (Witness.) Well, I think it is the best croft of the whole.

13,146. About this Balmacaan township; you say that there were ten tenants, the rent roll gives eight; don't you think it is correct?—I quite believe that is correct as far as the names are concerned, but there were sub-tenants.

13,147. Which sub-tenants were there?—There are some of the tenants that had given off from their crofts there to their brothers or to their sons, or something like that.

13,148. But all these were put in after 1857; there were no sub-tenants in 1857?

13,149. The Chairman.—But I have information that there were 20 families.

13,150. Mr William Mackay.—Including cottars?

13,151. The Chairman.—He gives the number including cottars and tenants; the cottars would be tenants

13,152. Mr William Mackay.—No, they were not, my lord. (To Witness.) These were not removed to make way for the deer forest?—No, I did not say they were.

13,153. And the arable land was added to the home farm of Balmacaan?—Not altogether; if it was it is not now.

13,154. But originally?—Yes, for a few years.

13,155. And a portion of it is now part of the deer farm, except a deer park?—Except Lurgin and Macmillan's, and another.

13,156. The Chairman.—Was not that land added to the forest practically in 1867?

13,157. Mr William Mackay.—No, there is no part of that added to the forest. There is a deer park, my lord, I may explain, which was enclosed for deer and a high fence made within the last 15 years.

13,158. The Chairman.—But I mean in 1867, was not that added to the forest?

13,159. Mr William Mackay.—No, it was added to the home farm. (To Witness.) And the pasture they had at the back was planted, was it not?—Yes, part of it was planted, or perhaps the most of it.

13,160. The whole of it?—But some pasture lying near, I do not think it has been planted.

13,161. But there is no part of that pasture in the deer forest?—No, but it is under game all the same.

13,162. That is another thing; our fields down here are under game.

13,163. Mr Sutherland.—Exclusively?

13,164. Mr William Mackay.—No, not exclusively.

13,165. The Chairman.—I think he said most of the arable land to which he referred had been added to the home farm.

13,166. Mr William Mackay.—I understood he said it was added to the forest. (Witness.) It is added to the home farm I said, my lord.

13,167. You referred to Uchd Raeder and Rhue; is that not the same farm of Rusgich, to which you afterwards referred?—Yes, but Uchd Raeder is a place wre a croft was.

13,167*a*. But do you remember when Uchd Raeder and Rhue were under sheep?—No, I do not.

13,168. Well, I remember it; were these two not included in the Rusgich?—Yes, exactly.

13,169. And included in the land which you say was capable of maintaining 1000 sheep?—Yes, exactly.

13,170. Now, you say that there were two tenants there, one at Uchd Raeder and the other at Rhue. Were you ever at Uchd Raeder?—No, I was never there.

13,171. Well, it is very difficult to get at; was there ever any tenant there?—There was a shepherd there, and there is a croft there.

13,172. The Chairman.—Still?

13,173. Mr William Mackay.—It is arable land there; it is an old sheiling. And if there is to be any division there I will claim that; it was my grandfather's farm. Uchd Raeder and Rhue were the same as Rusgich?—The word 'Rhue' means a croft.

13,174. But they were both included in that one farm of Rusgich?—Yes, in that portion of the deer forest.

13,175. Mr Sutherland.—One moment please, I wish to understand this. Rhue was not one of the farms mentioned by the witness?

13,176. Mr William Mackay.—He had given it as occupied by one tenant.

13,177. Mr Sutherland.—Is it included in the land that bears 1000 sheep? (Witness.) Yes, I mentioned it as a bit of arable land in that portion.

13,178. Mr William Mackay.—Do you know that Rusgich has for, at any rate, more than a 100 years, been let to one tenant, including Rhue and Uchd Raeder?—Yes, I know that.

13,179. At a rent. I see the rent my grandfather paid for it was £115. Do you think that would be about the rent?—The rent to-day?

13,180. Yes.—I have no idea.

13,181. Now, with reference to the numbers of sheep which you gave; do you remember when the grazings of Shewglie were afforested?—No.

13,182. Nor Lochletter nor Dulshangie?—Dulshangie and Drumclune became one portion of the hill.

13,183. You know that the pastures of Shewglie and Lochletter were let as one?—Perhaps at one time; but at other times——

13,184. But I mean when they were converted into a deer forest?—Well, I was not aware of that.

13,185. Well, that is the case. Now, you give the amount, at least the number of sheep on both at 2700. What would you say would be a fair rent for the sheep?—I am not a judge to say what a fair rent for the sheep would be.

13,186. When did you begin crofting yourself?—Since my infancy, more or less. Drumnadrochit.

13,187. When did you get your own croft?—About two years ago. Hugh Macdougall.

13,188. The Chairman.—It is represented to us that the figures stated by this witness are precisely what were given to the Crofters Commission in 1883.

13,189. Mr William Mackay.—Yes, but these were given in by letter, and there was no opportunity for cross-examination; if there had been I think it would have been contradicted. Reference will be made to it.

13,190. The Chairman.—I am referring to it now.

13,191. Mr William Mackay.—Your lordship will find that it was a simple letter sent to the Commissioners; the writer did not appear before them personally. (To Witness.) What do you think would be a fair rent for a sheep in Glen-Urquhart?—I would say something for the low lying district, but I have no experience of the forest.

13,192. What would you say for the low lying districts?—2s. 6d.

13,193. I should like to get a good many sheep at that rate.—According to the pasture it would be.

13,194. Don't you think 2s. 6d. would be a fair thing for Shewglie where there is this splendid pasture, you say, that would be easily converted into arable land; would 2s. 6d. be reasonable there?—No, I don't think it would.

13,195. What would you say?—I think it would be too much.

13,196. What would you say?—I won't say any figure.

13,197. Well, what do you think would be a fair rent for 2700 sheep?—I won't say any figure or any sum.

13,198. At 2s. 6d., you know, it would come to about £400. Well, do you know that the rent of that grazing that was put under that forest of Shewglie was £245, 17s.?

13,199. The Chairman.—Do you know about that?—No.

13,200. I don't suppose you do; I never would have thought of asking you the question.

13,201. Mr William Mackay.—Take Bunloit then; you say that the grazings taken off Bunloit maintained 1000 sheep?—Yes.

13,202. Do you know that the rental of that grazing was £22, 6s. 5d.?—No.

13,203. The Chairman.—Do you know anything about these rentals?—No, I have no experience about the rents.

13,204. Mr William Mackay.—Now, you mentioned that the effect of the deer forest was to decrease the population; is there any township that was included in the deer forest where people lived?—Not in my days.

13,205. Was there in any day?—Oh, it is visible enough that there were townships or crofts in some parts of it.

13,206. But these are the crofts that you have been referring to at Shewglie, but up there these were removed long before the days of deer forest?

13,207. The Chairman.—Is that a question?—It is meant to be put as a question, but it is put as an assertion.

13,208. Mr William Mackay.—My question, my lord, is:—Does he know that any townships where people lived are included in the deer forest?

13,209. The Chairman.—You hear the question?—No, except part of Balmacaan.

13,210. Mr William Mackay.—Is there any part of Balmacaan where the people lived included in the deer forest?—It is under game if it is not in the deer forest.

13,211. The Chairman.—Either in the forest or under game?—Yes.

13,212. Mr William Mackay.—That is connected with the home farm?—Yes it is connected with the home farm, but it is not in use for agricultural purposes.

13,213. The Chairman.—What is it used for?—For rearing pheasants, for one thing.

Drumnadrochit.

Hugh Macdougall.

13,214. A nursery for pheasants?—And a nursery for tame deer.

13,215. Mr William Mackay.—Now, I won't be long, my lord; I have only got one or two questions about Dalmore. I may mention, my lord, that I also appear for Mr Campbell of Kilmartin, the proprietor of Dalmore. (To Witness.) You said there was a great demand for Dalmore if it would only be let?—As far as I am aware of.

13,216. You know that I have been factor on that estate for the last 18 years?—Yes.

13,217. Do you know that I advertised the place repeatedly to let?—I was not aware of it.

13,218. And that I could get no tenant?—Does that mean for any money?

13,219. Well, if you want it for nothing, possibly you might have it.—I mean, for money.

13,220. The Chairman.—Do you know about that advertisement?—No, I never heard of it.

13,221. Then you can give Mr Mackay no information about it?—No.

13,222. Mr William Mackay.—Do you know it was a pretty large farm, with rent of over £100?—Perhaps it was.

13,223. Do you know the tenants who were there?—Yes, I knew the last one and the one before.

13,224. Do you know they all failed in it?—Yes, but tenants have failed in other places in the glen.

13,225. Do you know that Dalmore is the place that was recently reclaimed by Dr Cameron, the late proprietor?—It is not very recently since Dr Cameron was the proprietor.

13,226. I mean within the last forty years?—Well, yes, it might be within the last forty years.

13,227. And would you be surprised to learn that it cost £40 an acre to reclaim and drain?—Yes, I would be very much surprised that it cost that at that time.

13,228. And would you be surprised to learn that I was not offered ten shillings an acre for it? You know that it is now under sheep, let to a tenant?—Yes, to an absentee tenant.

13,229. The Chairman.—Is the desire for more land by crofters in this quarter mainly a desire for new holdings, or a desire for the extension of grazing?—I think it is more for an extension of grazing.

13,230. Do you think the requirements of the district would be met to a considerable extent if they got such an extension?—I think so.

13,231. Now, do the lands of any of the crofters to whom you referred resident in this district march with the deer forest?— Yes, except that the river is between the forest and some of the crofts.

13,232. But do some of the crofts march directly with the forest?—Yes, at Bunloit.

13,233. With a fence running between?—Yes.

13,234. Have these crofters sheep at present?—Yes, they have got 12 each.

13,235. Is that all?—Yes, that is all.

13,236. Have they horses?—Yes, they have got a pair of horses, and a few cattle.

13,237. Do you mean a pair each?—Most of them have a pair each.

13,238. What average stock of cattle have they?—Well, I cannot say for certain, but they will have between 3 and 4 cows.

13,239. And their followers?—And their followers.

13,240. Something like that?—Something like that.

13,241. Now, you were asked a question as to your knowledge of grazings. Your father, as I understand, was a crofter?—Well, my father was a blacksmith but he had a small croft too.

13,242. Had he sheep?—He had a matter of half a dozen of sheep most of his days.

13,243. Had you anything to do with the herding of sheep when you were a boy?—Yes.

13,244. How many years were you engaged at that?—Well, I was never engaged; some part of the day, before school or after school, I used to look after them.

13,245. But you have never had anything to do practically with the management of sheep?—No.

13,246. With regard to Balmacaan, there was a clearance there, of the whole township?—Yes, but not at the same time.

Drumnadrochit.

Hugh Macdoug

13,247. But from first to last?—The whole of them were removed; the last man was the foxhunter, and he was allowed to die there, but his heirs got no land; I think they were the only people that got no land.

13,248. Where did these people go?—Some of them went across the sea.

13,249. But I mean of those who remained in the district?—Well, I can give you the names of the whole of the crofters.

13,250. But they got land in the vicinity?—Yes, on the Seafield estate, such as it was.

13,251. When they got that land had they to build new houses for themselves?—The whole of them.

13,252. Did they get any assistance from the proprietor?—Nothing, as far as I know, except the trees in the wood. They got the trees for nothing as far as I know.

13,253. Would you say, from your knowledge of the district, that those crofters here who wish settlements are better able to build new houses in the future than they were when they were removed from Balmacaan?—I should think so.

13,254. Would the crofters in this locality be willing to adopt the club farm system if they got an extension of grazings?—I think so.

13,255. Do you know if that system is understood here?—I think the Bunloit people understand it.

13,256. Are there any club farms here?—No, I do not think so.

13,257. But do you know if they have been considering the matter?—Well, I cannot say they have been considering the question in that shape.

13,258. You think they would be willing to adopt it as the mode of managing their grazing?—I think so.

13,259. Now do you know whether, in recent years, any applications have been made to the estate for additional land?—I think some of the crofters in Bunloit petitioned her ladyship a few years ago for some pasture or something; and some Lewiston tenants petitioned her ladyship for some arable land in the neighbourhood here.

13,260. What was the result of these applications?—Well, I cannot say very well for myself, but they have not got it.

13,261. You have said to us more than once that you were ready to state your authority for some information you have given us. Perhaps, looking to the course which your examination has taken, you would tell us your authority?—My authority is one of the men that had a portion of the deer forest; he is an invalid in bed now, or he would have been here.

13,262. What is his name?—James Mackintosh.

13,263. Is he a farmer?—He is a crofter, or nearly a pauper.

13,264. What rent does he pay?—£4 or £5. He has been removed from Balmacaan, and has been in that place since then.

13,265. You have given evidence to-day with his authority?—Most of it; the figures.

13,266. And he himself is so unwell as to be unable to come here?—He cannot come to the door without two crutches.

13,267. Has he been unwell for some time?—For the last six months.

13,268. Mr Maccallum.—You say, as to the arable land that the Balmacaan township had, that it was added to the home farm?—I say the most of it was added to the home farm.

13,269. Is that arable land now cultivated as part of the home farm?—Yes; I do not know if it is regularly cultivated, but it is cultivated.

13,270. And part of the arable land was made into a deer park?—I might say, perhaps about the best part.

13,271. And do you state that the pasture was added to the forest?—Yes, the hill grazing; but only one of them had a hill grazing.

13,272. Mr Sutherland.—About these first townships.

you mentioned or that you were asked questions about —Druim-a'-chruineachd?—'Cruineachd' means 'wheat.'

13,273. I was just going to ask you that questions The testimony, as far as the name goes, is that wheat grew there.—Well, that is the way I understand it.

13,274. We will take that for what it is worth. Well, about Suidh Ghuirmean, it was stated that it was not cultivated for the last 200 years. Did you not hear that?—I am not aware that any one said so.

13,275. Mr Mackay stated that.

13,276. Mr William Mackay.—No, I did not. My 200 years was an interrogation.

13,277. Mr Sutherland.—Oh, I beg your pardon. Are there marks of cultivation at Suidh Ghuirmean?—It is easy enough seeing that it is arable land.

13,278. And is not the tendency of the marks of cultivation to get obliterated by the marks of time?—Yes, that is easily enough understood.

13,279. So that, if it has not been cultivated for 200 years, much more of it must have been cultivated formerly than is visible now?—Yes.

13,280. With regard to the reclamation of Dalmore, you have heard it stated that it was reclaimed at £40 an acre?—Yes, I heard that.

13,281. Is it, in your opinion, more difficult to reclaim than any land in this neighbourhood?—No.

13,282. Have you any idea of the number of acres that have been reclaimed in this neighbourhood by the people?—I have not any idea of the number, but I know acres and acres that have been reclaimed.

13,283. And at £40 per acre they must, in your opinion, must they not, have shown a great deal of capital by this reclaimed land?—The tenants never paid £40 per acre so far as I know.

13,284. But it is of £40 value. Now, if £40 per acre were applied to the waste value of Balmacaan, would not the value be put up immensely?—Yes.

13,285. Higher than any deer forest can show?—Yes.

13,286. And I have no doubt that actuated you in the statement that you wished to see the valuation put up?—Certainly.

13,287. And if that could be done it would add £40 per acre to the value of the land. Is that your opinion?—Well, I would not express any opinion.

ALEXANDER MACDONALD, Wester Bunloit (56) —examined.

13,288 The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I am representing a widow, a crofter there.

13,289. You live with a widow?—Yes.

13,290. Are you a son-in-law?—I am a brother.

13,291. The widow's brother?—The husband's brother.

13,292. What is the name of the croft?—Bunloit.

13,293. What rent is paid for it?—£9.

13,294. And what extent of ground has the widow?—I think, as far as I can tell, about 10 acres.

13,295. Altogether?—Arable land.

13,296. And some outrun?—Some bits of pastures along with it.

13,297. Was there a re-valuation of this croft?—Yes, at the time of the reduction some time ago; it was valued, I think, the time the deer forest was made.

13,298. Can you give us the date of that?—It would be about 1852; it was about 32 years ago or so.

13,299. What was the rent before that?—Before the deer forest was made?

13,300. Yes, before the deer forest was made.—It was £15, 10s.

13,301. And reduced to £9?—It was reduced first to £12, 10s., I think, and the last reduction was £3, as far as I remember.

13,302. Mr William Mackay.—Perhaps your lordship would allow me to correct that; it was £12, 10s. until 1887, and since 1887 it is £9.

13,303. Mr Macleod.—The witness refers to the rent of the holdings before the pasture was taken from them.

13,304. The Chairman.—I want to get from you the rent prior to the rent of £12, 10s. (Witness)—£15, 10s.

13,305. The figures he gives are practically the same as your own, Mr Mackay. (To Witness.) How long have you been resident there?—I have been a long time there. I was born there, and I have been away a while, and I came back again, maybe 15 or 16 years since.

13,306. Is there land available for extension of grazings near you?—It is indeed.

13,307. Is that part of the forest?—Yes.

13,308. What kind of land is it, heathy pasture or rough pasture?—It is pasture; rough pasture—hill pasture.

13,309. How far is the fence of the forest from the widow's croft?—Well, there are eight crofters there, and it is about 500 yards from the farthest-out crofter there to the deer forest fence.

13,310. Has the widow a stock of sheep?—No, she could not have any sheep, until they got a few sheep to try and make it pay the rent.

13,311. And is she desirous of obtaining grazing land as an extension of her holding if she could get it?—Yes, my lord.

13,312. Is there land there suitable for cultivation besides the land occupied by the crofters?—Well, in the forest, do you mean?

13,313. Either in the forest or in the neighbourhood?—I don't recollect anything being in the neighbourhood but the small bits that they were speaking about already in the forest; but the people of Bunloit had nothing to do with these bits before. There was nothing of the kind in what they had formerly.

13,314. I will put it in this way to you.—Is there not old arable there to which you invite our attention?—No, I don't recollect any arable land being there.

13,315. There are eight crofters at present?—There are eight crofters.

13,316. Do you remember when there were any more or any fewer?—No, I don't remember in that part of the place.

13,317. Mr Maccallum.—Have you any complaint as to the deer encroaching upon you through the fences?—Yes, they do make raids sometimes upon the crofts and eat the crop there.

13,318. Mr Macleod.—Do you remember when the people of Bunloit had this hill pasture that was added to the forest?—Very well.

13,319. Can you corroborate the statement of the previous witness as to the amount of sheep? A thousand black-faced sheep, he said; that is for the whole of Bunloit, you know?—Well, to make a fair statement, as far as I can judge of that hill it would be just about 700 or 800 to give them fair play on the place; but I believe there would be sometimes about 1000 sheep on that place.

13,320. You think that, for the winter stock at any rate, 700 or 800 would be a sufficient carry?—Just about that.

13,321. Can you tell me at that time had your father a place there?—Yes, my father had it at the time the place was taken from them.

13,322. As I understand it, your father had this place that you are now living in with the widow; then your brother got it, he died, and the widow was there, and you are living with her?—Yes.

13,323. What was the stock of sheep that he had; I take it that they were held individually?—It was a common pasture between eight crofters, who had the hill between them. I suppose they would have, as a fair share, 100 sheep.

13,324. They each had their own individual sheep?—Yes.

13,325. They did not have it in common sheep?—No.

13,326. They had their own long mark?—Yes.

13,327. And they had about 100 sheep each?—Yes, there were about 800 in the place altogether.

13,328. And when the sheep were taken away the rent was reduced from £15, 10s. to £12, 10s.; in other words, the sheep land was calculated as having been worth £3 a year?—Exactly.

Drumnadrochit.

Alexander Macdonald.

13,329. You had the 100 sheep for £3 a year?—Yes.

13,330. How much a head would that be?—I could not say indeed just now; it could be easily made out.

13,331. It is about 9d. a head, is not it?—Yes.

13,332. Now, supposing that circumstances were to arise that this pasture was available at a fair rent, would you propose to have the individual flocks of sheep there, or would you propose to put it under a common stock, with a few shepherds for them?—I think it would be better to put them into a common stock.

13,333. It would be worked most profitably that way?—I think so.

13,334. You have some knowledge of sheep, I presume?—Yes, I have been among sheep.

13,335. You made no application to the Crofters Commission, I understand?—No, because we have been having leases, and we could not apply.

13,336. Are you under lease?—Yes, under lease.

13,337. Is it a 19 years' lease?—I believe it is.*

13,338. You do not know though?—Well, as far as I can judge, it is, but Major Grant can tell.

13,339. But it is a lease?

13,340. (Mr Mackay.—It is a lease, may I state, for 19 years from Whitsunday 1887, after the date of the passing of the Crofters Act.)

13,341. So that you were a tenant from year to year, or the widow was, at the passing of the Crofters Act.—No, we were in the lease then, I think.

13,342. The Chairman.—I may say, Mr Mackay, in my experience there are not many cases of leases in the crofting districts after the passing of the Act.

13,343. Mr Mackay.—No, but I may say that I know every one of them here by land mark.

13,344. The Chairman.—When do you say you think the lease was entered into?—(Witness.)—The last lease?

13,345. The lease we are talking of.—I could not say how far it was back, but there was a lease, as far as I remember, before the last Crofters Act.

13,346. Succeeded by another lease?—Yes.

13,347. (Mr Mackay.—Some of them were under lease, a very few, but the great bulk of them had no lease whatever at that time.)

13,348. Mr Macleod.—You take it that the widow was under lease at the time the Crofters Act was passed?—Yes.

13,349. Are all the tenants in Bunloit, the whole of Bunloit, all under lease?—I think they are.

13,350. At the present time?—Yes.

13,351. Do you know whether it was within the knowledge of those tenants, who were tenants from year to year at the passing of the Crofters Act, that they would have power under that Act if they had remained tenants from year to year, to apply for a portion of that deer forest as an addition to their grazing? do you think that was within their knowledge?—I do not think they would know it.

13,352. Well, it is a fact. Now, have you made any calculation in your mind as to the question of rent supposing there was an extension of grazing? Would you be prepared to accept a rent fixed by an impartial stranger as to what the grazing value was?—Surely.

13,353. And would you be prepared to respect any conditions that might be laid down as to working the place in the way that would do the least possible injury to the sporting interests?—I don't think there would be any difficulty.

13,354. The Chairman.—Is the widow able to come here?—Yes, she could come here.

13,355. Has this croft been under lease all the time you have been there, so far as you know?—Well, I do not remember; there would be one lease after another, as far as I can remember.

13,356. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Were there not some crofters placed in the Bunloit district about 30 years ago?—New crofters?

Drumnadrochit.

Alexander Macdonald.

13,357. Yes.—Not in the district that I represent.

13,358. How far are you from them?—About a mile perhaps, or less.

13,359. I was going to ask you something about them; can you tell me whether they have been successful?—Well, I imagine they make a very hard living of it yet.

13,360. Why is that?—Because their croft is so very small and they have to work it themselves, the whole of them, and build houses there.

13,361. But that is rather an important point I wanted to ask you about. Do you know if any of them are here to-day?—Yes, I think they are.

13,362. Mr Donald Macrae.—They are all here, my lord.

13,363. Have you had any experience of the working of a club farm?—No; I had this experience on this Bunloit farm, but every one wrought his own sheep on it. It was a club farm, but parcelled out between them.

13,364. But each wrought his own sheep?—Yes, sometimes they had a shepherd for it, and at other times not.

13,365. How do the crofters that you represent make their living principally?—Sometimes they make a living, some of them; they try to make it by the croft, perhaps the bit that they have they put stock on it, and some of them have to go away to work otherwise to make ends meet.

13,366. But do you seriously consider that the only thing required to make a living easy out of the present croft is an extension of the grazing? I mean if they had an extension of grazing they would be able to maintain themselves and pay a rent?—I think so, more comfortable than they are; that is my opinion.

13,367. The Chairman.—Mr Mackay, have you any questions?

13,368. Mr William Mackay.—Just one. I think he stated that Bunloit was, in his day, a club farm, so far as the arable land was concerned?—Not the arable land at all, but the hill pasture.

13,369. But the stock belonged to each crofter; he had his own separate stock at that time?—Yes.

13,370. And it was only a club farm in this respect, that you had one common grazing?—Yes.

13,371. Then, you read the newspapers up in Bunloit?—Sometimes.

13,372. And you are not so awfully ignorant as my friend, Mr Macleod, would have us think?—I do not know.

13,373. You knew that this Crofters Commission was appointed?—Yes, I knew that.

13,374. Did you know that some crofters actually did apply to the Commission in Glen-Urquhart—I heard that there were some of them who were going to apply.

13,375. So that it was not through ignorance that you did not apply to the Commission?——

13,376. Mr Macleod.—I beg your pardon, Mr Mackay; there was no suggestion of ignorance, and I repudiate the suggestion.

13,377. Mr Mackay.—I am very glad to hear you say so.

13,378. Mr Macleod.—You don't require to say so.

13,379. Mr Mackay.—Because I am very jealous of the good name of the Bunloit people.

13,380. Mr Sutherland.—I wish to know the extent of the grazing; what is the boundary of your grazing?—Is it the pasture?

13,381. Yes.—The present pasture?

13,382. Yes.—Maybe about 800 acres.

13,383. How far does it go up the hill?—Just to the deer forest; I stated already the nearest point to the deer forest is about 500 yards.

13,384. The deer forest comes to within 500 yards of your houses?—Of the first arable land.

13,385. What is the name of that arable land?—Inchtelloch.

* Since the date of the public sitting, Macdonald wrote stating that the lease is one for 19 years from 1882. The lease preceding it expired in 1877. See also Question 13,468.

13,386. And how far did it extend back within your memory before?—A good way.

13,387. Did it reach the cover?—No, it was not in that direction, it was N.W.

13,388. You could point out the boundaries to us, I have no doubt, when we go there?—I believe I could.

13,389. Mr Mackay.—Would your lordship just allow me one question with reference to Mr Sutherland's examination? The deer forest, he says, is 500 yards from Inchtelloch. (To Witness.) May I ask how far it is from your place?—Just about the same distance from the pasture.

13,390. But from the house?—I did not measure, but I would say it is about maybe 1000 yards, or something like that.

13,391. Is it not more; is it not a mile?—I could not give it exactly.

13,392. The Chairman.—How long would you take to walk from your house to the fence?—Well about a half a mile, my lord.

13,393. Mr Mackay.—Your lordship will see it; I think it is about 1½ miles. (Witness.)—I beg leave to contradict that.

13,394. The Chairman.—We will settle that by walking it ourselves.

JOHN MACDOUGALL, Crofter, Bunloit, Seafield Estate, Glen-Urquhart (49). John Macdougall.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

13,395. The Chairman.—What rent do you pay?—£7, 10s. at present.

13,396. Are you a crofter?—Yes.

13,397. What extent of arable land have you?—I don't know: I think there are 13 acres in all.

13,398. And some grazing?—Yes, a share of the pasture with the others.

13,399. Do you know the extent of it? Is it about 800 acres?—I am not sure: I heard it stated at 800 acres.

13,400. Do you feel any need for an extension of grazing?—Yes, I desire it.

13,401. And you would be willing to pay a fair rent for it?—Yes, very willing.

13,402. You heard the evidence given by Alexander Macdonald?—Yes.

13,403. And do you concur in that evidence?—Yes, so far as I know.

13,404. Have you any addition to make to it, or any suggestion of your own to offer?—One of my neighbours and I were wishing to get a part of the forest.

3,405. For grazing?—Yes.

13,406. Who is that neighbour?—Donald Mackintosh; he died a year ago, but his widow is still in the place.

13,407. Are you under lease?—Yes.

13,408. When was your lease entered into?—It is a 19 years' lease, with seven or eight years to run, so far as I know. It commenced in 1882.

13,409. Do you remember if that lease had been preceded by another lease?—Yes. The former lease expired in 1877.

13,410. Could you show us the present lease?—I did not bring it here, but I have it at home; I will show it to you afterwards.

13,411. You will kindly send it to the Secretary. Now, have you got a copy of the lease preceding the present lease?—I think so.

13,412. Kindly look for it, and if you can get it, send in both.

13,413. Mr Donald Macrae.—Do you remember when your father had sheep in the deer forest?—My father was in the landlord's service, and he is in the landlord's service still.

13,414. Had you sheep in the deer forest yourself?—My brother's sheep were there; he was the tenant before me in the holding.

13,415. Was your grandfather a tenant there?—Yes.

13,416. Was your great-grandfather a tenant there?—I don't know.

13,417. Had they from time immemorial that portion of the deer forest as a sheep grazing?—I am not aware of their being without it till 1860; they had it down to 1860. Drumnadrochit. John Macdougall.

13,418. Had they this land in common with the other tenants, and had they a common shepherd all that time?—Yes, I remember myself when they had a shepherd; sometimes they had a shepherd, and sometimes they had not one.

13,419. Were they very sorry when they were deprived of it?—[The Chairman.—No, no.] Have you any idea what rent they were paying?—I know what is in my own rent book.

13,420. The Chairman.—What is in your own book?—£12, 1s., when they had the land that is now in the forest.

13,421. And how many sheep had your brother in the forest?—The sheep were according to the rent paid; five sheep were allowed for every £1 of rent.

13,422. What was the rent at the time when there were five sheep to the £ sterling?—I don't know what was the rent of the other tenants, but I know what is the rent stated in my own rent book.

13,423. What is the rent stated in your own book?—£12, 1s.

13,424. Can you tell me whether any, and if so, what difference was made upon the rent when these grazing lands were taken away?—The rent was reduced from £12, 1s. to £10, 10s.

13,425. Mr Donald Macrae.—Did you ever, since you were deprived of this land, complain to the estate? Did you ever want it back?—Yes, the one I have already referred to applied to the estate.

13,426. To whom did you apply?—That tenant and I sent a letter to Lady Seafield.

13,427. What was the result of the letter?—We got word that her ladyship regretted that we could not get the land at that time.

13,428. Do you remember when the township called Lots was made into a township?—Yes.

13,429. How many years ago?—I cannot tell.

13,430. Where does it lie—between Lower and Wester Bunloit?—It is near Tenacnarry, in the neighbourhood of Easter Bunloit.

13,431. Was it at the time that the Balmacaan tenants were evicted that this place was marked out for new holdings?—I think it was a little after that, but I am not quite sure.

13,432. The Chairman.—I don't think he is speaking with any certainty, Mr Macrae.

13,433. Mr William Mackay.—Do you know that your place was re-valued in 1887?—Yes.

13,434. What was your rent fixed at?—£7, 10s.

13,435. And that is the rent you are now paying?—That is the rent I am now paying.

13,436. The Chairman.—I got that from him already.

13,437. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to that valuation, I should like to ask if you were represented at the valuation?—I am not aware that there was anyone acting for me, but I was quite pleased with the valuation I got, as far as the arable land was concerned.

JOHN MACKINTOSH, Crofter, Easter Bunloit, Glen-urquhart (54). John Mackintosh.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

13,438. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

13,439. What rent do you pay?—Till five years ago I was paying £18; I now pay £12.

13,440. When was the reduction made?—Five years ago.

13,441. Are you satisfied with the rent as it at present stands?—Middling.

13,442. Are you under lease?—Yes.

13,443. How many years has that lease to run?—So far as I know, there are eleven years of the lease past.

13,444. Is it a 19 years' lease?—Yes.

13,445. Do you know the exact date of the lease?—Yes, I have it here (producing lease).

Drumnadrochit.

John Mackintosh.

13,446. I see it is partly in print and partly in writing, and was executed on 26th July 1882, the duration being for 19 years from Whitsunday 1882. The rent is stated here at £18, and it was reduced five years afterwards, you said already, to £12.

13,447. Mr Mackay.—Perhaps your lordship may find that docquet upon the lease, very probably.

13,448. The Chairman.—No.

13,449. Mr Mackay.—It is on the principal lease, then.

13,450. The Chairman.—There are regulations and conditions endorsed, which, I suppose, are imported into the lease, but I don't see a docquet. (To Witness.)—What is the extent of your arable?—I am not quite sure, but I think there are 16 or 17 acres.

13,451. And is there an outrun for the township?—A little. There are five of us, and I have a right to send my stock to a little hillside pasture.

13,452. What stock have you got?—Three or four cows, two little beast stirks, and two horses,—sometimes less, sometimes more.

13,453. Have you some sheep?—Two or three pets on the clover.

13,454. Are you in want of extended grazings?—Yes.

13,455. Are you anxious to obtain grazings from the forest, if such grazings can be properly obtained?—Yes.

13,456. Does your croft land march with the forest? No.

13,457. What is there between your croft and the forest, or your township and the forest?—A mile, and possibly more, between my place and the forest.

13,458. How is that mile or so occupied?—It is a new township that was formed out of our pasture; that new township lies between our place and the forest.

13,459. What is the name of that new township?—We call it Lots.

13,460. That township was formed out of grazings that you previously occupied?—Yes, about thirty-five years ago: that is the time we were deprived of it.

13,461. How many holdings are on that township?—Eight.

13,462. How many holdings are on your township of Easter Bunloit?—Five.

13,463. Was there any difference made on your rents when that land was made into a township?—Yes, our rent was increased £2 when we were deprived of the pasture.

13,464. Increased or decreased?—Increased.

13,465. Are all the five tenants of Bunloit under lease?—Yes.

13,466. Are they all, so far as you know, 19 years leases?—Yes.

13,467. Were they all executed or granted at the same time, or about the same time?—I think so, but I am not sure.

13,468. Mr Mackay.—Perhaps your lordship will allow me—I have found out about it. The townships of Bunloit and Lenie, the whole of that side, were granted leases in 1882, and the other portions in 1887. For the whole of this district you are dealing with, the leases were granted in 1882, and expire in 1901.

13,469. The Chairman.—There was a re-valuation of the whole of these, I fancy, in 1887?

13,470. Mr Mackay.—In 1887 I took charge of the lands, and to all those who had not leases in 1887 I granted leases.

13,471. The Chairman.—It goes without saying that all these tenants were under lease at the passing of the Act?

13,472. Mr Mackay.—The Bunloit tenants were.

13,473. The Chairman.—In 1882?

13,474. Mr Mackay.—Yes, all the Bunloit tenants were under lease at 1882.

13,475. The Chairman.—And were under lease at the passing of the Act?

13,476. Mr Mackay.—Yes, but all the other tenants—the great majority of the tenants—of Glen-Urquhart were not under lease at the passing of the Act.

13,477, The Chairman.—All got leases in 1887?

13,478. Mr Mackay.—Yes.

13, 479. The Chairman.—Perhaps you would kindly let us know, Mr Mackay, since you have opened that matter, how many of the Glen-Urquhart tenants were put under lease in 1887?

Drumnadrochit.

John Mackintosh.

13,480. Mr Mackay.—I will give your lordship a statement. I will send you a statement giving all the tenants under lease, the dates of the leases, and their currency.*

13,481. The Chairman.—And the rent?

13,482. Mr Mackay.—And the rent.

13,483. The Chairman (to Witness).—Well, I don't ask you about Lots, as there are tenants from Lots who are coming here to-day.

13,484. Mr Gordon.—I should like to ask you one question. You entered into this new lease in 1882?—Yes.

13,485. In 1887 there was a re-valuation?—The whole estate got a reduction five years ago, and we got a reduction then.

13,486. Was that reduction made at the request of the tenants, or was it a spontaneous act on the part of Lady Seafield?—So far as I know it was Lady Seafield herself.

13,487. Mr Mackay.—You mentioned that the extent of your holding, the arable land, is about 16 acres?—16 or 17.

13,488. I find it is 18 acres 26 roods, do you think that is correct?—[The Chairman.—They are never quite accurate].

13,489. In addition to that you have got 10 acres 3 roods of arable land separate, have you not?—It is a son of mine who has it.

13,490. You work them both together as one farm?—There are two crofts, but we work them together, and he pays a rent in addition to the rent mentioned.

13,491. The Chairman.—What is your son's name?—Hugh Mackintosh.

13,492. Does he live on that piece of ground, or does he live with you?—He lives with me, he is a young man.

13,493. What rent is paid for it?—They paid £10 down to the valuation, now it is reduced to £6, 10s.

13,494. Is that rent paid by him, or paid by you?—I pay it.

13,495. How far is it distant from your house?—It adjoins the house, the two holdings adjoin each other.

13,496. Is that piece of land held under lease?—Yes, as far as I know.

13,497. I mean under lease for a number of years?—Nineteen years, I think.

13,498. Mr Donald Macrae.—Do you know the farm of Clonbeg?—Yes.

13,499. What is the name of the last tenant?—I think Mitchell was the last tenant.

13,500. How long is it since that farm was added to the Home Farm?—A few years. I could not say how many years.

13,501. The Chairman.—He is not speaking with much confidence on this subject.

13,502. Mr Macrae.—How many acres were taken from you when this township called Lots was made?—Do you ask of our township altogethcr?

13,503. Yes, the whole township?—Nine score of acres were taken off our township and made into Lots.

13,504. Was it the best portion of the pasture, or was it the average?

13,505. The Chairman.—We will see it.

13,506. Mr Macrae.—It is converted into arable, my lord. Witness.—Yes, the best.

13,507. Mr Macrae.—Was more than that taken from you for some other purpose?—Yes, a little was taken off on the other side.

13,508. What was done with it?—A few acres of arable land and a few acres of pasture were taken off us on the other side.

* The Statement submitted by Mr Mackay shows that of 141 tenancies in Glenurquhart, 2 are held on yearly tenure, while the remaining 139 are held under leases (mostly for 19 years) granted as follows:—3 in 1876, 1 in 1878, 1 in 1881, 17 in 1882, 6 in 1883, 13 in 1884, 30 in 1885, 66 in 1886, 1 in 1891, and 1 in 1893. Of these 141 tenants, 9 pay rents exceeding £30, while the remaining 132 pay rents under that amount.

Drumnadrochit.

John Mackintosh.

13,509. How many acres arable?—I think there were three or four acres of arable land.

13,510. And how much pasture?—About three or four.

13,511. What was done with that land?—It was added to the holding of Lenie. The tenant of Lenie was a crofter, and this land which was adjoining it was added to his holding.

13,512. What was your rent before these lands were taken away?—I cannot be very sure of that, but as far as I know it was £16; it might be more, and it might be less.

13,513. Do you mean that it might be a few shillings more or less? How much was the rent raised when these lands were taken away?—[The Chairman.—He said already £2.]—My father was paying £16; £2 was the increase.

13,514. Did the tenants of your township complain to the estate of having been deprived of the lands, and of their impoverished condition in consequence?—Yes.

13,515. The Chairman.—What was the date of that?—They complained some five years ago.

13,516. But what was the date of the land being taken away?—As far as I know it was thirty-five years ago.

13,517. Mr Macrae.—Do you know a place called Lonmore in your neighbourhood where the cattle graze?—Yes.

13,518. Were they in a measure deprived of their grazings in Lonmore?

13,519. The Chairman.—What do you mean by 'in a measure'?

13,520. Mr Macrae.—By allowing other tenants to graze their cattle there as well. Witness.—Others got the right to graze there. There are 23 holdings having a right to Lonmore now.

13,521. The Chairman.—And how many were there before?—So far as I know there were only five at first.

13,522. Mr Macrae.—Did your township complain to the estate particularly, and was the ground-officer sent up to mark it out for yourselves exclusively?—Yes.

13,523. And did the ground-officer mark the boundaries for you, and tell you to fence it, and did you fence it, and what was the cost?

13,524. The Chairman.—This is going into a matter that is not quite relevant.

13,525. Mr Macrae.—After putting up the fence, my lord, it was pulled down. Witness.—It was taken from us; everyone has it, and no one has it.

13,526. I have the document here, my lord.

13,527. The Chairman.—I do not think we need pursue this any further, because it is not quite relevant to our present inquiry.

13,528. Mr Macrae.—It shows the disposition of the estate.

13,529. Mr Mackay.—Is the Lonmore a peat moss for crofters or others?—Yes.

13,530. And for the people of the Strath of Urquhart, the cottars?—Everyone that chooses to go.

13,531. Mr Macrae.—There is one question arising out of that of Mr Mackay's that I should like to ask.

13,532. The Chairman.—What is your question?

13,533. Mr Macrae.—Would your lordship ask this man whether, while it is a fact admitted, that this Lonmore was allowed to all tenants for cutting peats, still the township had the exclusive rights of grazing before they were deprived of it?

13,534. The Chairman.—Was Lonmore the grazing of your township before it was made a grazing for other people?—That is what I heard, and as far as I know, I think the plan gives it to us.

13,535. Mr Mackay.—Do you know that Lonmore was the grazing of every person who cut peats there?—[The Chairman.—He said so.]

13,536. It was exclusively kept by the proprietor for all who cut peats?

13,537. The Chairman.—He has as good as said that. The two points which each of you make are quite consistent with each other; it might be a peat cutting for all, and it might also be a place which had previously been the exclusive grazing of those crofters but which other crofters were allowed to share.

Drumnadrochit.

13,538. Mr Sutherland.—And were you paying rent all the while for pasture that was being depreciated by peat cutting?—We were not told as to what our boundaries were, but we were paying rent for everything we possessed.

John Mackintosh.

13,539. And was this inside your boundaries?—Yes, so far as I know, and as far as I heard.

Donald Fraser.

DONALD FRASER, CROFTER, LENIE, GLEN-URQUHART (49)—examined.

13,540. I should like to say one or two words to contradict what the last witness said to you.

13,541. The Chairman.—Stop a little; I don't know who you are?—One of the crofters who got the liberty of peat cutting at Lonmore, through the kindness of Lady Seafield.

13,542. What is your name?—Donald Fraser.

13,543. Are you a crofter at Lenie?—Yes.

13,544. What rent do you pay?—£12.

13,545. And what do you wish to say with regard to the last witness's evidence?—I may tell you that through the kindness of her ladyship the Lonmore was given to all people for cutting peats, and the grass of the place was given gratis to the people of Bunloit, Lots, and Lenie without paying a halfpenny for it, and we were ever in my remembrance the same way, as Major Grant and Mr Mackay can tell you. There are four Bunloit crofters who always turn up in a row with every new factor that comes to the glen, claiming the things, as the factor Major Grant can prove, and we have sometimes to write to Lady Seafield about these four. But we never paid nor did anyone pay a halfpenny for that place, which is very useful for the crofters of Bunloit. These four crofters have the same share as we.

13,546. Were the crofters of Lenie put in upon the crofters of Bunloit?—All the days of my remembrance it was the same way as now. It was granted by Lady Seafield without paying a halfpenny on either side, and Major Grant and Mr Mackay will say the same.

13,547. Mr Mackay.—That is quite the case,—this was always a place reserved for peat cutting and for grazing.

13,548. Mr Sutherland.—And was it within the lands out of which these people were evicted?

13,549. Mr Mackay.—Not at all.

13,550. Mr Macrae.—One or two questions——

13,551. The Chairman.—I think we have heard enough on this point. This man has tendered his statement, and I cannot allow any more questions. Witness.—There is not a single word of truth,—I mean of lies, in my statement. It is not in one time only that these men were in a row claiming the things to themselves, but they are not paying a halfpenny for it in my remembrance.

Duncan Macmillan.

DUNCAN MACMILLAN, Crofter, Easter Bunloit (72). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

13,552. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

13,553. What rent do you pay?—£12 at present.

13,554. Was that rent reduced five years ago?—Yes.

13,555. From what?—£15, 10s.

13,556. Are you under lease?—Yes.

13,557. Do you wish an extension of grazing if it can be got?—Yes, I am for that.

13,558. You have heard the evidence that has been given from this township already?—Yes.

13,559. And you concur in that evidence?—Yes.

13,560. Can you tell us the rent before the pasture was taken away that we have heard so much about?—The same rent,—£15, 10s. We got no reduction when we lost the land. In every lease we got it was explained to us that we would get the use of Lonmore. My father and grandfather occupied the croft before me, and in their time, and up to 1882, this township had the exclusive right of grazing on Lonmore, although other crofters had a right to cut peats on it. After 1882, up till now, any one who chooses may cut peats and graze cattle as well on Lonmore.

13,561. But was Lonmore in the lease?—I think not.

13,562. Mr Mackay.—Everyone had it?—We got permission to get the good of it.

13,563. The Chairman.—Have you got your lease with you?—No.

Donald Fraser.

DONALD FRASER, Crofter, Lots, Bunloit (68).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

13,564. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

13,565. What rent do you pay?—30s.

13,566. Was there a re-valuation some years ago?—No, we have reclaimed land in Lots.

13,567. Have you a lease?—No.

13,568. When did you enter on your holding in Lots?—Twenty-five years ago.

13,569. Is your holding upon grazing land formerly in the occupation of the Easter Bunloit tenants?—Yes.

13,570. Tell me what extent of arable you have?—10 acres and 10 acres pasture, and that is too little.

13,571. Was that arable brought in by yourself?—Yes.

13,572. The whole of it?—I reclaimed about 10 acres.

13,573. And did you build the house you have got?—Yes, I built the house myself.

13,574. What stock have you got?—Three cows and stirks.

13,575. Any horses?—And one horse.

13,576. Any sheep?—No.

13,577. You are in want of pasture?—Yes.

13,578. Are you desirous of obtaining additional grazing if it can be got?—Yes, if it can be got.

13,579. And you would be willing to pay a fair rent for it, I suppose?—Yes.

13,580. Does your township march with the forest?—Yes.*

13,581. And is the land of the forest marching with the township suitable for grazing purposes?—Land adjoining our land is suitable.

13,582. Mr Shaw Stewart.—What do you sow on this land of yours?—2 or 2½ quarters of oats.

13,583. And what do you reap?—Not much, it does not save me from buying.

13,584. Do you get work in the neighbourhood at times?—No.

13,585. Could you get it if you wanted?—No.

13,586. Do none of the Lots crofters get work?—No.

13,587. I suppose you speak for others; do they all want more grazing?—Yes, we are in the same position.

13,588. Have they a knowledge of the management of sheep?—Yes.

13,589. Are they in arrear of the present rent?—We are not clear of arrears.

13,590. If they got an extension of grazing, how would they propose to stock it?—We would like to try it anyhow.

13,591. You are prepared to go into sheep farming in debt?—We would try.

13,592. The Chairman.—What rent did you pay on the year of entry? Was your rent always 30s.?—Yes.

13,593. That is 1s. 6d. an acre?—Yes.

13,594. Mr Maccallum.—You stated that you were settled there twenty-five years ago. Where were you before that?—In Bunloit.

13,595. And had you land in Bunloit?—Yes.

13,596. How did the change take place?—The place was measured, and was given to one tenant,—the place in Bunloit.

13,597. It was given to one man?—Two crofts were joined.

13,598. How many crofters were there in the Lots township altogether?—Eight. Drumnadrochit.

13,599. Where did the rest of them come from?—They came from the neighbourhood, most of them. Donald Fraser.

13,600. How did occasion arise for their leaving the place that they had? Might I ask if any of them came from Balmacaan township?—Yes, one came from Balmacaan.

13,601. And do you know anything about the others? Were their lands added to the forest or to sheep farms?—The land formerly occupied by some of these tenants was added to other farms.

13,602. And the land that you got in Lots was just pasture, and is there land in the forest quite equal to the land that you reclaimed there?—In some places far superior to Lots.

13,603. The Chairman.—Did all the tenants in Lots, except this one from Balmacaan, come from Bunloit?—No.

13,604. Mr Macleod.—When you went into Lots, did you get any assistance in taking your holding there?—No, I was at the whole expense of it myself, trenching, and spade and pick work.

13,605. Did you put up a house?—Yes, I built a house, byre, and barns.

13,606. Did you get any assistance?—No. I got timber from the proprietor.

13,607. And you manage to live at the present time without doing any outside work,—labouring outside your croft?—I am an old man, and cannot do much anywhere.

13,608. The Chairman.—Can you tell us to what extent you are in arrear?—I am not very much in arrear.

13,609. But are you one year, or two years, or more?—I believe I am two years or so behind.

13,610. Mr Mackay.—You said that some lotters were removed from land down in the deer forest?—Yes.

13,611. Will you mention their names?—I cannot say anything about that.

13,612. You cannot name any person who was moved from the forest?—No, except John Chisholm, Balmacaan.

13,613. Mr Sutherland.—Do you know the name of the man you referred to already who came out of it?—Do you ask if it is the one who came from Balmacaan?

13,614. Yes.—He is not living now; his son in-law has the place.

13,615. What was his name?—John Chisholm.

13,616. What is the son's name?—Chisholm's son-in-law, William Mackenzie.

13,617. The Chairman.—As to this tenant that came from Balmacaan, was the land he vacated added to the forest, or added to the farm?—It was added to the forest.

13,618. Mr Mackay.—Was it not added to the home farm?—I am not sure.

13,619. The Chairman.—Was this the way, that the arable land was added to the farm and the pasture land to the forest?—I believe it was.

James Cameron.

JAMES CAMERON, Crofter, Lots, Bunloit (77).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

13,620. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

13,621. What rent do you pay?—£2.

13,622. You came there twenty-five years ago?—Twenty-five or twenty-six years ago.

13,623. Where had you been before?—I had not land before then, I resided at Strone, but I had no land.

13,624. What stock have you at present?—I always had 2 cows.

13,625. And a horse?—Yes, I have a horse.

13,626. And have you any sheep?—7 sheep.

13,627. Are you anxious to get additional grazing if it can be got?—Yes, if we can get it. The eight

* Fraser has since written explaining that he meant the grazing of Clunemore.

Drumnadrochit.

James Cameron.

crofters of Lots are all of the same mind about getting more grazing.

13,628. Is there such a grazing in the forest near your holding?—Yes, the forests just immediately behind our township—about a mile from my croft.

13,629. It marches with your township?—The hill ground of Divach lies between us and the forest.

13,630. Is that the hill ground of a farm?—Yes.

13,631. What is the name of the farm-tenant?—Grey.

13,632. How far are you from the forest?—I don't know; we are not any distance. Clunemore is between us and the forest.

13,633. Is that a farm?—Yes. We would like pasture to extend behind our own township; we are confined.

13,634. Who occupies the land immediately behind your township?—Clunemore.

13,635. Maclean is the tenant, you said?—One Grey is the tenant.

13,636. Do you know what rent he pays?—No.

13,637. Does he live there?—Yes.

13,638. Do you know the extent of the farm? Is it a large farm, or a small farm?—A considerable size, he has a pair or two of horses.

13,639. And how many sheep?—He does not keep sheep.

13,640. What does he keep?—He takes in sheep to winter. [Mr Mackay.—There are 69½ acres arable, and 586 acres of pasture, and the rent is £57.] We only wish to get the pasture immediately behind our own pasture.

13,641. That is up to the present forest?—Yes.

13,642. Mr Gordon.—We did not catch where this witness's croft is.

13,643. The Chairman.—He is in Lots, and what he now says is that he desires an extension of his grazing by taking that portion of the grazing farm of Clunemore immediately behind his holding, and leading up to the forest fence. That is for outrun purposes.

13,644. Mr Gordon.—Does the pasture of Clunemore not come in between you and the forest?—[The Chairman.—Yes, he said so.]

13,645. Does the pasture of this farm of Divach not come in also between you and the forest?—There is a burn or a march between them; the two farms, Divach and Clunemore, come between us and the forest.

13,646. What I want to make plain is this, that the crofts of all the other witnesses who have spoken from Bunloit were cut off from the forest by the pasture of these two farms?—[Mr Mackay.—Except the last witness; he said that his land marched with the forest; as a matter of fact, the grazings of two farms come between him and the forest].

13,647. The one being Clunemore, and the other Divach?—[Mr Mackay.—Yes].

13,648. The Chairman.—Do you know the river called Coire-na-Ruighe?—That is up to the forest.

13,649. Do you wish grazings going across that river to the fence of the forest?—Yes, if we can get it.

13,650. Mr Mackay.—Have you got any additional pasture?—Yes, I got an additional grazing, and I now pay £2 instead of 30s.

William Mackay.

WILLIAM MACKAY, Solicitor, Inverness (45)—examined.

13,651. The Chairman.—You are law-agent for the Seafield estate?—Yes, my firm, Innes & Mackay, are agents.

13,651*a*. And you have a statement to submit to us?—Yes.

13,652. Kindly read it.—I am a native of Glen-Urquhart, where I spent the first 18 years of my life. I have still a house and a few acres of land there. I have since 1875 acted as law-agent for the Seafield family in connection with the estates of Urquhart and Abriachan, and have also, for the same period, been factor on the estate of Kilmartin (formerly Lakefield) in Glen-Urquhart. I have always taken a deep interest in the inhabitants of Urquhart and Glenmoriston, and have for many years spent much of my leisure time in searching into the history of the parish, and the social condition of the people in the past. In connection with these researches, I have been permitted to examine our public records, as well as very valuable ancient documents, preserved in the private charter chests of the Countess of Seafield, Mrs Chisholm of Chisholm, and other families connected with the district. Perhaps you will allow me to begin the statement which you have permitted me to make on behalf of the Countess-Dowager of Seafield, by referring to the history of land-ownership and agriculture in the parish, and to certain circumstances and events which long influenced, and may even not yet have ceased to influence, the lot of the inhabitants.

Drumnadrochit.

William Mackay.

Urquhart is first mentioned in Adamnan's Life of St Columba—written about the year 680. We are informed in that work that Columba preached the gospel in Urquhart about the year 565. At that time it was probably included in the domains of the Pictish King, whose palace was situated somewhere near the River Ness. In the year 1130 and again in 1160, the inhabitants of the province of Moray, in which Urquhart and Glenmoriston were included, rose in rebellion against the Scottish king. After the latter struggle the king removed the principal families of the province to other parts, and gave their possessions to loyal followers of his own. Urquhart was granted to Conachar, who is said to have been a member of the royal house of Ulster. Another rebellion occurred in 1228, after which Urquhart was conferred by the Crown on Thomas Durward. He was succeeded by his son, Sir Alan Durward, who enjoyed the estate until his death without male issue in 1275, when it reverted to the Crown, and was placed in the hands of the Cummings of Badenoch, who retained it until the time of the War of Independence. Before Sir Alan's time, the Church acquired several lands in the parish, the principal of them being the estate of Achmonie. The earliest title extant, referring to lands in Urquhart, is an agreement and conveyance, dated 1233, between Sir Alan and the Chancellor of Moray, in reference to Achmonie and a croft and toft near the Parish Church—that is near where we are now sitting. The church itself and its possessions are mentioned as early as 1215. From Sir Alan Durward's death in 1275, until the year 1509, the castle of Urquhart was a royal fortress, and the whole lands attached to it—namely, those now forming the Parish of Urquhart and Glenmoriston, with the exception of Achmonie and the other church holdings—were for about one half of that period retained by the Crown as its own property. In 1313 they were conferred by Robert the Bruce on his nephew, Thomas Randolph, Earl of Moray. On the death of Randolph's son, John, in 1346, without issue, the lands reverted to King David, who in 1359 granted them to the Earl of Sutherland. On the Earl's death in 1370, they were conferred by Robert the Second on his son David, Earl of Stratherne. Stratherne was succeeded by his brother the Wolf of Badenoch. On the Wolf's death, in 1394, without lawful issue, there was a great scramble for the lands between his natural son Alexander, afterwards Earl of Mar, the Regent Albany, and Donald, Lord of the Isles. Donald succeeded in getting possession, and he retained it until his defeat by Mar at the battle of Harlaw in 1411. Mar then seized Urquhart and Glenmoriston, but his right was disputed by Albany. In the end an agreement was entered into between them, from which we learn that the lands were then waste and unlet. Mar bound himself to let them to the best advantage with all speed, and, after they were so let, he was to get one half of the rents, while the other half was to go to the Duke of Albany. This arrangement was brought to an end by Albany's death on the scaffold, in 1425, and the whole rents were enjoyed by Mar until his death in 1435. On that event the lands reverted to James the First, but the death of that king by assassination a few months later enabled Alexander of the Isles to occupy them, and he and his successors retained them until 1476, as tenants of the Crown, at a rent of £100 per annum, which was the yearly value of the whole lands of Urquhart and Glenmoriston, according to the old valuation, known as the Old Extent. In 1476 the lands were placed under the charge of the Earl of Huntly, who was required to provide the Crown with the old rent of £100. Questions of management were left to himself, and he let them to Hugh Rose of Kilravock. Kilravock's entry was, however, actively resisted by a family of Macleans, who had for many years been chamberlains of the parish under the Lords of the Isles. The struggle was carried on for years, and at last, in 1482, Kilravock renounced his undesirable and unprofitable lease. His successor was John Grant of Freuchie, Laird of Grant, who, after a protracted war with the Macleans and their supporters, brought them under control. He also did good service for the Crown in other parts of the Highlands. He received his reward in 1509, when the King—I am now quoting from the charter—'for 'the increase of our rental, and the profit and patrimony 'of our Crown, and also with a view to the advance-'ment of order and manners, and the promotion of good 'government in the lands underwritten, among the 'inhabitants thereof, and for making those obedient to 'our laws who in times past have been unruly and 'disobedient to our said laws,' granted to him a feu charter of the lands in Urquhart still possessed by his family; to his son John, a charter of the lands of Corrimony, and to another son, also named John, a charter of the lands of Glenmoriston. The aggregate feu-duty payable by the Laird and his sons was £101, exceeding by £1 the annual rent payable, but seldom paid, during the previous two hundred or more years.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to say at what period agriculture was introduced into the Highlands. According to Dio, who wrote in the third century, there was no tillage there in his time, the people living 'by 'pasturage, the chase, and certain berries.' Probably we ought not to read this as meaning that they were absolutely without knowledge of agriculture. Be that as it may, they possessed such knowledge in the sixth century, for in the life of Columba, to which I have already referred, agriculture, agricultural implements, and mills are mentioned. The early Celts of Scotland and Ireland divided their lands into davachs, the word being the Gaelic dabhach, a vat or large vessel used for measuring corn, and the meaning of it as applied to land being a sufficient extent for the sowing of a dabhach of seed. To this extent of arable land was annexed the moor or pasture lands connected with it. Where the word davach, or its equivalent doch, is found, it proves that part at least of the lands to which it was applied was under tillage before the twelfth century, when Saxon or Southern systems of land measurement came into use in the North. Urquhart was divided into ten davachs—Deich Dochan Urchadainn—the Ten Davachs of Urquhart, as they are still called. Davachs in Urquhart are first mentioned in Sir Alan Durward's deed of 1233. The division shows, as has been said, that the glen was to some extent under cultivation before the twelfth century, and, it may also be inferred, that at one time the glen consisted of ten large farms or holdings corresponding with the ten davachs. But if agriculture was early introduced into the parish of Urquhart and Glenmoriston, its progress was for many centuries greatly retarded by wars and spoliations and the ignorance of the times. Reference has already been made to the rebellions of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, in which the parish was involved. In the War of Independence, Urquhart was occupied sometimes by the English and sometimes by the Scots. From the time of the Wolf of Badenoch, in the fourteenth century, till the charters to the Grants in the sixteenth, the parish was the scene of an almost continuous struggle for its possession. In that struggle, and in the petty wars of the Lords of the Isles, the inhabitants were engaged almost without a respite. As a result the population was effectively checked and kept down, the operations of seed time and harvest were almost entirely suspended, and the parish became a great wilderness, incapable of returning the yearly rent of £100, payable to the Crown. I have already mentioned that the agreement between the Duke of Albany and the Earl of Mar shows that the lands were waste and unlet in the fourteenth century. The Exchequer Rolls bear that during the possession of the Lords of the Isles the lands lay waste and the rents were seldom paid. That possession terminated in 1476. In an account rendered in Exchequer by the Earl of Huntly in July 1478, a sum of £33, 6s. 8d. is abated from the annual rent of £100, 'on account of the laying waste of the lands of Glen-'moriston, as was vouched at the audit.' In the following year's account a similar deduction is made, 'on the 'ground that Urquhart and Glenmoriston were waste, 'and could not be let for the year on that account.' Huntly is instructed 'either to let or occupy the said 'lands in future, as no further allowance shall be made 'to him on that ground.' Notwithstanding this, however, the same abatement is allowed to him for the same reason in the account from July 1479 to July 1480: and, as late as 1496, a deduction of 50 merks (£33, 6s. 8d.) is allowed 'on account of the waste of the 'lands of Glenmoriston.' Even after the Grants established themselves in the parish, it suffered greatly from the troubles of the times. In 1513 it was invaded by Sir Donald of Lochalsh, who kept forcible possession of it for three years, preventing the rightful possessors from enjoying their own. When he left, he carried away a large booty of cattle, sheep, and corn. In 1545 Macdonald of Glengarry and Cameron of Lochiel swooped down on Glen-Urquhart with a great host from Glengarry, Lochaber, Glencoe, Ardnamurchan, and the country of Clanranald, and swept the estates of the Laird of Grant and Achmonie of every hoof and every article of food or furniture they contained. The details of these two great raids, as well as the names of the proprietors and occupiers, from which the spoil of 1545 was taken, are still extant. The parish was invaded, and to some extent 'spoiled,' by the Clan Chattan in 1624; by the Covenanters in 1644; by the Royalists in 1645; more than once during the period of the Commonwealth; and several times during the Wars of the Revolution. In connection with the latter event the Laird of Grant supported the Prince of Orange, and as a consequence Urquhart was devastated by the adherents of the Stuarts. In January 1691, two Commissioners appointed by the Scottish Parliament to make inquiry as to the losses sustained by the laird and his tenants held sittings in Glen-Urquhart (so that your Lordship's Commission is not the first that has sat here), and took the sworn evidence of the tenants and inhabitants. The Commissioners' report, dated at Urquhart 3rd and 4th February 1691, bore that said losses amounted to £44,333, 5s. 2d. Scots, including damage to the Castle assessed at £2000 Scots, but exclusive of five years' rents lost by the laird, amounting in all to £30,000 Scots. It was found that, in consequence of the ravages upon the laird's estates, his tenants were so impoverished that he could get little or no rent from them, 'and he was necessitat'—I am quoting the Act of Parliament,—'to discharge his 'tenants in Urquhart the entire rent of the Barony 'which is £6000 Scots, and that for the years 1689, '1690, 1691, 1692, and 1693, their stocks being so 'entirely carried away that they could not continue to 'labour without that abatement.' Glen-Urquhart suffered again in connection with the rising of 1715; and after the Battle of Culloden Glenmoriston was occupied by Cumberland's soldiers, who removed every hoof of cattle to Fort-Augustus, and sold them to drovers from England and the south of Scotland. Not satisfied with this, the Duke, in July 1746, sent Kingston's Light Horse to Glen-Urquhart, who gave the tenant's houses to the flames, and, as proved at a judicial inquiry held in Glen-Urquhart on 23rd January 1747, carried away 257 cattle, 104 horses, 864 sheep, 70 goats, and a quantity of household furniture. This was the last large spoil taken from our unfortunate Glen; but more than 30 years elapsed after Culloden before the inhabitants of the West finally ceased to make petty raids on the more remote pasture lands. The parish was frequently visited by famine in the olden times. These were sometimes the result of war or spoliations; sometimes they were caused by the failure of the crops. I have already referred to the waste state of the country in the 14th, 15th, and early part of the 16th centuries. These periods of waste must have had their corresponding periods of want. There was a scarcity in 1624; a long period of distress from 1689 to 1693, during which, as we have seen, the tenants were unable to pay any rent; and a famine in 1697, when food was so scarce that The Chisholm found it impossible to obtain a peck of meal in Inverness, 'neather for gold or monie 'in hand,' as his Inverness merchant writes him. I have seen the letter in Erchless Castle. About forty of the men of Urquhart and Glenmoriston fell at Culloden, and eighty-four of the survivors were seized and transported to Barbadoes, but perhaps a greater number of the inhabitants succumbed to the famine and pestilence that resulted from the war, and the outrages that followed it. In 1782 there was an entire failure of crop, which was followed by great destitution. To relieve the distressed, Sir James Grant, the then proprietor, who was known as the Good Sir James, sent from London to Urquhart, according to a letter from himself to Grant of Lochletter, which I have seen, '10 'ton of choice picked potatoes for seed, 100 bolls of 'white pease for meal, and 50 bolls Blanesley seed oats.' The year is still remembered in Urquhart as 'Bliadhna 'na Peasarach Baine,' the year of the white pease, and it is still told how people died of want, and how others managed to subsist on blood taken from living cattle, and on nettles and other wild herbs. The potato famine of 50 years ago was utterly insignificant as compared with the absolute want of 1783. As was natural, when the checks to population which were in force in the olden times in the shape of war, and turbulence, and spoliation, and famine, came to an end after the middle of last century, the inhabitants of Urquhart and Glenmoriston rapidly increased in number. In 1755, according to Webster's returns, they numbered 1943. In 1763 the population was estimated by Mr William Lorimer, secretary to Sir James Grant, at 2000, and the following are the numbers in 1801 and subsequent census years:—In 1801, 2633; in 1811, 2446 (a reduced number, chiefly brought about by the absence of many men in the war); in 1821, 2786; in 1831, 2942; in 1841, 3104; in 1851, 3280; in 1861, 2911; in 1871, 2769; in 1881, 2437; and in 1891, 2035. The steady decrease which has been going on since 1851, when the population reached the highest point which it ever touched, is accounted for by the fact that the young men are not now satisfied with remaining at home as their fathers did, but go out into the world, and that the young women also leave home to better themselves elsewhere. Of my own father's five sons, one settled in South America, two in the United States of America, and two, including myself, in Inverness. That is an example of what has happened to almost every family in the parish. As the population of the parish increased, so also did the number of tenants, sub-tenants, and cottars. As I have already mentioned, the division of Glen-Urquhart into ten davachs indicates that at a very early period it was divided into ten holdings of a davach each. Some of these davachs were afterwards divided into halves and quarters. In 1509, the charters in favour of the Laird of Grant and his sons show that what is now the estate of Urquhart consisted of 18 holdings, Corrimony of 4 holdings, and Glenmoriston of 12. The charter granted by Randolph to Sir Robert Chisholm, dated 1345, proves that some at least of these divisions existed in that year, and the fact that their Old Extent values are given in the charters of 1509 would appear to show that they existed as far back as the 13th century, when the Old Extent valuation was made. There is recorded in the Register of the Great Seal, under the year 1548, a charter of apprising by Mary Queen of Scots, which specifies the holdings on the estate of Urquhart (with which I shall now more particularly deal) in 1545, and gives the names of the occupiers. The holdings then, as in 1509, numbered 18, and they were in the occupancy of two proprietors (the Laird of Grant and Mackay of Achmonie) and 111 tenants and sub-tenants. The first roll of tenants, which I have found in Lady Seafield's charter chests, is dated 1624. The estate was then let to 64 tenants. A list, dated 1636, shows that there were in that year 110 occupiers, including sub-tenants, being almost the same as in 1545. In 1647 the whole lands were of new let to tenants. Divach was then 'ley and waist,' and no tenant could be found for it. According to an abstract rental prepared in 1765 there were 81 tenants, who had under them 70 sub-tenants and 50 cottars—making in all 201 holders of lands and houses. The statement, however, does not include the sub-tenants and cottars on Shewglie, who were probably about 10 in number. In 1770 Sir James Grant re-adjusted the various holdings, and let them under new conditions. As so let the principal holdings numbered 103, the sub-tenancies being still continued. Some of these holdings were gradually conjoined, and in 1786 there were only 100 on what is now the estate of Urquhart, including 10 tenants on the old estate of Achmonie, which Sir James acquired from Alexander Mackay in 1779. In 1808 Sir James had the whole estate surveyed by Mr George Brown, and divided into 'regular farms and lands.' Sub-tenancies were abolished except on Shewglie, which was at the time held on long lease by James Grant of Shewglie and Redcastle, and persons who had previously been sub-tenants were now, for the first time, made crofters, holding directly of the proprietor. The estate as so let in 1808 consisted of 169 holdings, including the allotments occupied by the villagers of Milton and Lewiston, but exclusive of Abriachan, which Sir James had before this time acquired. The Shewglie sub-tenants, who are described by Mr Brown as 'very poor 'people,' were soon afterwards removed by the principal tenant, and settled elsewhere in the parish, and the farm of Shewglie was taken into the principal tenant's exclusive possession. I may explain that the old arable land mentioned by Mr Macdougall, the first witness, as being in the deer forest, is on the farm of Shewglie. After the settlement of 1808 the population, which had for ages been kept down by wars and other checks already referred to, increased at a rapid rate, with the result that the holdings were gradually sub-divided, and the number of tenants greatly increased. It was consequently found necessary by the late Earl of Seafield (husband of the present proprietrix), who succeeded in 1853, to make a new survey of the estate, and to some extent to readjust and revalue the holdings. This was done by the late Mr George G. Mackay at intervals between the years 1853 and 1862. With the exception that the hill grazings of Shewglie, Lochletter, Drumclune, Glencoilty, and Ruiskich, and part of the hill grazings of Divach and Bunloit, have been afforested, and that the possessions of the small tenants of Upper Balmacaan have been added to the home farm and other places given to them, the holdings on the estate are now the same as those fixed by Mr Mackay's survey, and they consist of the following, viz.:—Home farm of Balmacaan, valued at £200 a year; the deer forest and low ground shooting, rented at £3150, but the probable value of which, after deducting rent of grouse-moor, fishing, gamekeeper's wages, and taxes paid by landlord, is £1900; 6 agricultural holdings at rents between £165 and £80; 9 agricultural holdings at rents between £80 and £30; 244 crofters under £30 (exclusive of 48 crofters on the estate of Abriachan); 47 village allotments under £5; 106 cottars, each having a house and garden. Excluding the cottars and also gamekeepers and foresters who possess land, there are thus 306 possessors of agricultural holdings on the estate of Urquhart, as against 113 in 1545, 110 in 1636, 151 in 1765, and 169 in 1808. The above numbers for 1545, 1636, and 1765 include what I have in this paper called sub-tenants. While the principal tenants have, however, from the 16th century until now held their farms under formal written leases, these sub-tenants were occupiers at will, and whatever rights or privileges they enjoyed were of a meagre and unsatisfactory nature. They are still remembered in the parish by the name of Malunaich, that is, mailers or payers of mail or small rent, as distinguished from the Tuath or tacksmen; and their condition is thus described by Mr William Lorimer, who wrote a manuscript account of Urquhart for Sir James Grant in the year 1763, before there was any change on the old state of matters. 'There are few or no sub-tenants, strictly speaking; that 'is, persons who have some possessions of ground from 'the principal tenants, but there are many cottagers or 'cottars called also mealers [mailers]. A tenant has one, 'two, perhaps three of these, to whom he gives the 'liberty to build a house on his farm. This house has 'three couples with other kinds of wood, all of which 'are taken out of the laird's woods without any payment 'to him. This mealer pays to the tenant yearly a merk '[13s. 4d. Scots, or 1s. 1⅓d. stg.] for every couple for 'this house. The mealer has also a cow, to which the 'tenant allows a little grass. He has also a few sheep, 'and the tenant, for this grass, and the liberty of the 'pasture of the sheep, causes the cottar or mealer keep 'his sheep, and gets other little services from him.'

13,653. What was Lorimer?—To begin with he was tutor to Sir James Grant, and then he became his Secretary. These mailers were the people who were converted into crofters by Sir James Grant. He took great trouble to ensure that they cultivated the land in a husbandlike manner, encouraging the cultivation of lint.

13,654. Had you lint mills?—There was a little factory about three-quarters of a mile from the Inn, and that originated as a flaxmill, which appears as one of the crops grown in Urquhart as early as the 16th century. Sir James introduced turnips and rye grass, and insisted for the first time on a regular rotation of cropping. He strongly objected to emigration, and with the view of keeping the people at home he founded the villages of Lewiston and Milton, and attached allotments to them for the use of weavers, shoemakers, tailors, and other persons who were not, properly speaking, tillers of the land. His written 'scheme,' dated 1769, for the erection of Lewiston, shows that he expected the village to grow into a town. There is much evidence that, with the exception of the few more important tenants, the inhabitants of Urquhart have from a very early time been in a state of poverty. Reference has already been made to the famines with which they were from time to time visited, and to the difficulty experienced in the 14th and 15th centuries in getting tenants for the lands which were lying waste. In 1624, John Grant of Glenmoriston, Chamberlain of Urquhart, writes to the Laird of Grant from Balmacaan, to the effect that he is unable to get tenants for the laird's waste lands, in respect the inhabitants 'are all 'strukin in povertie.' We have seen that after the Revolution the tenants were for five years unable to pay any rent. After the troubles of the '45 they were also for a time unable to pay. Their destitute condition at the time of the great famine in 1783 has already been alluded to. In 1808, Mr George Brown describes the sub-tenants who occupied Shewglie and Shanval as 'very poor people,' and the occupiers of other parts of the estate are described by him as 'miserable poor 'tenants.' When the late Lord Seafield (husband of the present Countess-Dowager) succeeded to the estate in 1853, he found a great accumulation of arrears, and he became so satisfied of the tenants' inability to pay these that in 1856 he wiped them off to the amount of £7447, 16s. 1d., equal to two years' gross rental. By the year 1887 the tenants had, notwithstanding large temporary abatements made to them from time to time, and the amounts of which are contained in Appendix I. hereto, again fallen heavily in arrear, in consequence, to some extent, of the agricultural depression, which began to be seriously felt about the year 1880. In 1887 certain tenants petitioned the Countess of Seafield for further abatements, and the result was that her ladyship instructed me, as a matter of business, to visit every holding on the estate; to make full inquiry into the circumstances of each tenant, and to fix such a rent as in the whole circumstances I was of opinion he ought to pay. I accordingly inspected the holdings, in the company of a skilled surveyor and valuator, and I, thereafter, met the tenants individually, and adjusted terms of new leases in their favour. The rents were found to be somewhat unequal, and, with few exceptions, they were more or less reduced—the average reduction being 28⅔ per cent., and the total annual reduction being £1008, 1s. 1d. In addition to that permanent reduction, I there and then struck off arrears to the amount of £576, 16s. 10d. Several further reductions of rent have since been made. So far as the fixing of the rents was concerned, Lady Seafield gave me a free hand, and I confess that, while I was anxious to act with absolute fairness, as between her ladyship and her tenants, I had also a strong desire, as I still have, to make the lot of the tenants as comfortable as possible. Her ladyship was good enough to express her satisfaction with the result, and so were the tenants. The latter were, in addition to the reduction of rents, to get assistance to build houses. I had reason to hope that for the future their circumstances would be fairly comfortable, and it is, therefore, a disappointment to me that at this date arrears have accumulated on the rents as reduced in 1887 to the amount of £822, 15s. 1d. The climate of Glen-Urquhart is good, and the arable land on the whole of fair quality, although the moor lands afford but indifferent pasturage. With very few exceptions the people are as hard working and industrious as can be found. They are also, on the whole, good cultivators of the soil, and examples of excellent farming are numerous in the parish. I am therefore forced to the conclusion that their failure must be attributed, not to any fault in themselves, but to the defects of a system under which too many have been allowed to settle on the lands. The late Earl of Seafield was much attached to Glen-Urquhart and its people, and from his succession in 1853 to his death in 1881 he resided in the Glen for a great portion of each year. He took a deep interest in the people, and spent large sums of money on improvements, including the erection of houses for farmers and crofters. His policy was followed by his son, who died in 1884, and has to this day been continued by his widow, the present proprietrix. From Whitsunday 1853 to Whitsunday 1892, the sum of £8826, 5s. 8d. has been expended by the proprietor on holdings under £30 rent; £27,768, 14s. 4d. on holdings above £30 rent; £29,171, 10s. 2d. on general estate improvements, including buildings, fencing, roads, and bridges; £12,547, 16s. on Balmacaan mansion house and offices; and £26,118, 6s. 4d. on woods and plantations, making a total expenditure of £104,432, 12s. 6d. in 39 years, or an average of about £2700 per annum.

13,655. Have you given us the rents?—The rents are given in another statement.

13,656. That does not include sporting rents?—There were practically no sporting rents before 1884.

13,657. Have you any fishing rents?—No fishing rents. In short, the whole agricultural and grazing rents since 1853 have been expended on the estate, and in paying public burdens affecting the estate, and the great bulk of the money has gone directly to the inhabitants of the estate.

13,658. Do you mean in wages?—In wages. Take the forest, for instance; all the men are local men. Almost all the men that were employed in building houses and steadings were local men. My father was a contractor, and the people who worked under him were local men. In several instances, perhaps, an Inverness man came in. This expenditure does not include, I should say, the Hotel, which is separate.

13,659. Mr Sutherland.—I was going to suggest that you should put the rental in juxtaposition to that statement.—Well, I will do that. In addition to this, rents amounting to £7447, 16s. 1d. were, as has been said, wiped out in 1856, and rents amounting to £6194, 6s. 10d. wiped out between 1872 and 1892—over and above the permanent reduction of £1008, 1s. 1d. per annum made in 1887. My statement has already become too long, but perhaps I may be allowed to refer in a word or two to the changes that have taken place within recent years in the condition of the people, so far as material comforts are concerned. Mr William Lorimer states in his account of Urquhart in 1763 that the tenants and mailers of his day lived in turf-roofed houses, the walls of which were constructed of timber, turf, and wicker work. That, or worse, was no doubt the condition of the houses for centuries before 1763. Sir James Grant prohibited the tenants being supplied with timber for walls, and the result was that they began to build dry-stone walls, about four or five feet in height. These, in time, gave place to stone and lime walls, and the buildings gradually improved—especially since 1853—until the old black houses have now all but disappeared, and given place to neat, comfortable cottages, stone and lime built, and roofed with slate. In their food and clothing, too, and their household economy generally, the habits of the people have greatly changed. As to food, the small farmer or crofter is no longer satisfied with the bare produce of the farm or croft as his fathers were, but buys in large quantities of tea, wheaten bread, and other stuffs. He no longer tans his own leather, or makes his own shoes (the first pair of shoes that were ever made for myself to measure were made by a crofter, and the leather was tanned by himself), no longer grows and makes his own linen, manufactures his own cloth, or for that matter distils his own whisky.

13,660. The Chairman.—They did that at one time?—They did. Mr Lorimer mentions that many in Glen-Urquhart did so. The old fir candles which cost his fathers nothing have given place to paraffin lamps; and, to a great extent, on the lower lands, coal has entirely superseded peat as fuel.

13,661. Among the crofters?—Yes, on the lower lands. These changes may be improvements, and, in any case, I am not here to express an opinion against them. All I wish to point out is that they involve the small tiller of the ground in a heavy household expenditure to which his forefathers were strangers—an expenditure so heavy, indeed, that, let him labour ever so hard and so long, he, as a rule, finds it difficult, if not impossible, to meet it out of the annual proceeds of his holding. (Signed) WILLIAM MACKAY.

13,662. Would you kindly tell me what is the total acreage of this estate?—I may mention that Major Grant is to make a short statement in reference to the forest, and the extent is given there. The total extent of the estate is 46,300 acres.

13,663. How much of that is in farms under £30 of rent?—It is difficult to say. The total arable is 3155 acres, including farms and crofts, according to the ordnance survey. I may mention that in 1808, when a very careful survey was made, the total arable was 2192 acres 27 poles Scots, equal to 2764 acres Imperial measure.

13,664. What I would like to get from you, if you can give me it, is this. You have given me the total area; I would like to know how much of that is under forest, how much under large farms, and how much under crofters?—I can give you the amount under forest, but I have not divided the larger farms from the smaller. The total area under arable cultivation is, ... 3,155 ac.
Moorland used as pasture, . . 10,145
Moorland in the forest, . . . 27,000
Woodlands in the forest, . . . 1,000
Woods and plantations not included in the forest, ... 5,000
46,300 ac.

13,665. That is as you have materials to give just now. You said that a previous landlord, in your opinion, allowed too many to settle on the lands?—Yes.

13,666. That remark applies to the present time, I suppose?—They gradually increased in numbers as the population increased, and the great increase took place within the last hundred years.

13,667. Would you say that the district is congested at present?—Yes, I would; I should like to see a good many of the smaller crofts joined.

13,668. Consolidation of holdings?—Consolidation of holdings.

13,669. In your opinion that would be to the immediate benefit of the occupant?—It would.

13,670. How would you dispose of the outgoing tenants?—I have great difficulty in reference to that.

13,671. I suppose you share the traditional opinion of the estate against emigration?—No, my lord, I do not. If I were a young man I should go abroad tomorrow.

13,672. That is yourself individually; but, as a cure for the evil, would you not rather see the people who are removed from holdings in order to consolidation afforded other holdings in the neighbourhood if the land could be got?—If sufficient land could be got to make them comfortable, without interfering with the rights of other persons, I should certainly prefer to see the people settled in Glen-Urquhart.

13,673. Now, without discussing the question of existing rights with which we are not immediately concerned, are you of opinion that to some extent at least there is such land?—I think there is no land that can be cultivated by crofters profitably.

13,674. Are you of opinion that there is such land capable of advantageous occupancy?—I am perfectly satisfied that there is no land in Glen-Urquhart capable of advantageous occupancy, except, of course, what is already occupied, what is already in the hands of farmers or crofters.

13,675. But, taking lands in the hands of farmers, but within the terms of the remit, is it your opinion that there is such land capable of advantageous occupancy by crofters?—Well, I think it is very possible that you might divide the larger arable farms, but I don't think it would be to the benefit of the country.

13,676. That is another question I am quite willing to put to you; but would it be to the advantage of the crofters?—I don't think it would; my experience of the crofters in Glen-Urquhart is that it would be very much better for them not to have small holdings.

13,677. But I understand you are of opinion that there is congestion which would be relieved by consolidation?—Yes.

13,678. Don't you think that the persons who might be taken away from these holdings with a view to consolidation could be settled in neighbouring holdings to their advantage upon grazing lands?—No, I do not see where you could put them. I do not see where you could possibly get arable lands for them. You could get grazing lands possibly by taking the forest, but along with the grazing lands you must have considerable arable lands for crofts.

13,679. But I am taking the case of grazing lands belonging to the farms. Could not these people be settled on grazing lands belonging to the farms, easily capable of being made arable, with corresponding grass?—I think your lordship will find, when you go over the grazings attached to the arable lands, that there is no land capable of being reclaimed with any advantage.

13,680. Of being reclaimed?—Being converted into arable land.

13,681. I don't know the glen,—I have never been in it; but don't you think there is land forming part of the grazing lands of these farms easily capable of being rendered arable?—No.

13,682. You heard a good deal of evidence with regard to extension of grazings?—Yes.

13,683. Is it your opinion that such an extension of grazings, assuming that it could be got in some legitimate manner, would be to the advantage of those obtaining it?—I believe that a small extension of grazings, in the case of Wester Bunloit, would be to their advantage if it could be got.

13,684. You are of opinion they are in need of it?—I don't think they are in need of it; I think they are doing pretty well as they are, but it would certainly be to their advantage. I might like to get a little more land myself, but I am not in need of it.

Drumnadrochit.

William Mackay.

13,685. May I take you as putting in a claim?—If other claims are to be put in, I may do so; I am a crofter on the estate, my lord.

13,686. What is the extent of the farm of Balmacaan?—I am afraid I cannot tell you at present. It is valued at £200, I may say.

13,687. Could you tell me, roughly, how much is arable and how much grazing?—I am afraid I cannot.

13,688. Can you give me the stock it carries at present, or is supposed to carry?—Major Grant can do that.

13,689. I understand you leave to him the evidence to be given with regard to the forest?—Yes, the forest and the home farm.

13,690. You made a re-valuation at the special request of Lady Seafield some years ago?—In 1887 and 1888.

13,691. And you made a special inquiry with skilled aid into each individual case?—Yes, I visited every holding, and had a meeting with every farmer and crofter.

13,692. May I venture to ask what was your rate arable, your average rate in fixing the new rents?—Well, it varied very much. I can give you instances. Your lordship will keep in view that the altitude here varies from about 50 feet above sea-level to 800 or 900, so that, of course, the quality of the land varies, and the climate varies. Take Balchraggan, which is about half way up, I valued it at 12s. 6d. an acre, the arable land.

13,693. Give us one or two other instances?—I valued the arable land of Breackry Reach, which is about the top, at 9s. per acre. I valued the arable land of Drumcore, which is also near the top, at 8s. per acre. Garbeg, which is very high, I valued at 9s. per acre. I will see whether I can get any of the low ground valuations. Milton Brae crofts, one of which Mr Macdougall, your first witness has, I valued at 10s. 6d. per acre.

13,694. Where is it?—At Milton, just immediately behind the village of Milton.

13,695–6. What is the altitude?—Perhaps 100 feet above sea-level. These are the Milton crofts generally; I don't know which one he got. Going further up the glen we have Polmaily, some of it at 9s. an acre and some at 8s.; Camault, which is up about 600 feet, I valued at 7s. 6d. per acre; William Macmillan, Corrish, about the same altitude, but better land apparently, 10s. 6d. per acre; Lochletter, which is one of the old large farms, 12s. per acre the most of it, and a few hard pieces at 7s. 6d.; Shewglie, which you have heard a lot about, I valued 48 acres of it at 14s. and the remainder, about 100 acres, at 10s.

13,697. May we take the figures you have given us as representing the lowest and the highest?—I have not given you the lowest yet, I think.

13,698. You have given us nothing lower than 7s. 6d.—I wanted to see the factor's farm. We fixed Drumbuie at £56 without mentioning the rate. But in the case of the Lewiston lots,—the allotments of the tenants, the highest is 14s. an acre, and the lowest is 12s. 6d.

13,699. Perhaps we may take these figures as fairly representative?—I think so; the Lots are the lowest in altitude.

13,700. What is the average altitude of the whole? They vary, of course?—I should say that the average is about 400 feet.

13,701. What is the average rent per sheep, can you tell me?—No, we just valued the pasture at so much per acre, but I may mention that the pasture of Glen-Urquhart is not good,—I think the tenants will all agree with me there, especially on the north side.

13,702. I take it from these figures that when you fixed these valuations it was in contemplation of the tenants being able to cultivate their holdings to profit?—Certainly; I thought they could do so, except on the very small holdings where they were expected to go away and earn wages elsewhere.

13,703. In a number they were not supposed to supplement their earnings from the croft by labour elsewhere?—Roughly speaking, we thought that if a man had 28 or 30 acres of arable land he ought to support himself on the holding.

Drumnadrochit.

William Mackay.

13,704. Don't you think an extension of that system might result in profitable cultivation?—That is what I have been suggesting,—that two crofts should be consolidated into one. You cannot extend the arable land; it must be a work of consolidation entirely.

13,705. Can there not be combined with consolidation an extension of holdings?—Not an extension of arable land.

13,706. You think there is no room?—Not to any appreciable extent of arable land. I may explain that by saying that this has been a well-inhabited glen always, and every available inch of land suitable for arable has been reclaimed.

13,707. Then is your view this, that assuming the process of consolidation to be adopted, the only course for those who are obliged to remove is to go somewhere else altogether?—Well, of course, if—

13,708. I am not suggesting that, but is that an inevitable inference?—Unless they are satisfied with being cottars.

13,709. Have the farmers who are above the rents of crofters not during the last twenty or thirty years considerably extended their arable by reclaiming land?—No. There have been, of course, extensions here and there, but I find that the total extensions of arable land from 1808 down to this date are about 400 acres, including what had been reclaimed by proprietors, farmers, and crofters.

13,710. For nearly a century?—Nearly a century. I will give you the exact figures. In 1808 the total arable was 2764 acres, and now the total arable is 3155 acres, so that there is less than 400 acres of an increase in the century.

13,711. I must put it to you in this form. Is there no part of the grazing land in the farm of Balmacaan, old arable capable of being cultivated?—I don't think there is any old arable on the farm of Balmacaan.

13,712. You think there is none?—There is none except the deer park, and that is only a few acres.—About 10.

13,713. But old arable?—That is old arable.

13,714. You say that the present arrears of rent amount to £822, 15s. 1d.?—Yes.

13,715. As I understood you, you do not put that down to the result of outside influences?—Well, no, I do not. I think as I have already said—that it is very likely the result of depression in farming, and of the arable holdings being too small.

13,716. Is there any holding in the glen at present that comes up to your notion of an ideal croft, in point of area?—I think there are several. This is the draft of my Report in 1888; perhaps I may be allowed to refer to it.

13,717. Certainly?—There is a very nice holding at Garbeg, occupied by John Cumming, who has got 28 acres arable and a share of outrun.

13,718. And what is his rent?—His rent used to be £32, but I reduced it to £25.

13,719. And is he in arrear?—I don't think so.

13,720. Then you admit, or rather you have stated substantively, that there exists an undesirable state of matters here, with regard to the size of the holdings at any rate?—With regard to the size of the smaller crofts.

13,721. How would you remedy that?—I have no remedy at all to suggest, except that they should be weeded out. I know it is a very difficult thing to do, and I should not like to be the one to have to do it.

13,722. And quoad ultra, you don't explain?—I don't explain.

13,723. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Have you any opinion as to club farms, as to whether they are advisable, or suitable, or advantageous?—There are no club farms proper in Glen-Urquhart, or on any of the estates with which I have to do; but I have had to do with club farms, and I am decidedly of opinion that they are most undesirable.

13,724. Would you mind stating shortly what your reasons are?—My reason is simply this, that with club farms it is impossible to get the tenants to agree on all occasions. I have been acting for one or two club farmers myself during the last two or three years as a solicitor. They had quarrelled with the result that they have practically ruined themselves in litigation. That is one instance. There is another instance in this glen,—it is not quite a club farm, but they have the moor in common, and each person is entitled to so many cattle, so many sheep, and so many horses. One man was better off than his neighbours, and he put too many beasts on, and they quarrelled. For the last fifteen years I have never been out of difficulty with regard to that modified club farm.

Drumnadrochit.

William Mackay.

13,725. That exists at the present time?—That exists at the present time.

13,726. Mr Gordon.—I would like to get your notion about this club farm, because we have heard a great deal about it in different quarters. The general impression is that a system of club farming is a decided advantage, and although these disagreements have occurred in Glen-Urquhart, it has been found in several other places we have been in that they have agreed and that a properly constituted farm has been worked very well. They give their reasons thus far, that it enabled them to keep a better class of stock by combining, and a better size both for the cattle and the sheep; that the sheep were better marketed, and that fair play existed all round,—that is, that the stock belonged to no special individual, and no man got the better of his neighbour. Now do you think still that that state of matters could be carried on here?—I certainly think that it would be a mistake to form club farms in Glen-Urquhart. On the other hand, I think that the present system of each tenant having his own arable land, and having also his own separate stock, but the stock grazed on a common moor, is the best. I am thoroughly of opinion that each tenant ought to have his own stock exclusively. My experience,—I have only two cases in view, and they were not on this estate excepting one which I might call a modified system,—is that a feeling of jealousy arises among the club farmers; one man undertakes perhaps too much.

13,727. Takes too much?—Undertakes too much, perhaps takes too much too, but he undertakes too much, and a feeling of jealousy arises, and there is unpleasantness, and as I know in one case, not only quarrels, but ruinous litigation.

13,728. That may proceed possibly from bad management, but certainly if the club farm system is properly carried out it is better for the tenant and better for the landlord. If you have twenty people with individual rights in a common grazing, you have these twenty people going at will all over the place, each one looking after his own cattle and sheep?—No, I beg your pardon. In Bunloit, where I remember the old modified club farm, they had one shepherd; they were not allowed to do that sort of thing.

13,729. But there is nothing to prevent them except by mutual agreement?—They will do that in any case; if they are club farmers, they like to have a 'stravaig' over the whole place.

13,730. But if they are club farmers, it is their duty to appoint a committee who in turn appoint a shepherd. Certainly, the evidence we have had hitherto has been very much in favour of club farms.—Well, I have thought of the matter of club farms for the last eighteen years,—since I have had anything to do with the management of estates,—and I certainly think the system is a mistake. If I had to allocate the land anew, I should certainly not encourage any number to take a club stock. [The Chairman.—Would you not concede this, that the principle is good if fully and fairly carried out?—If human nature were perfect, it might be, but with the present state of human nature there are sure to be disputes.]

13,731. Have you considered the Act of Parliament in reference to this matter, Mr Munro-Ferguson's Act?—I have considered it.

13,732. That Act provides for a specific and general management of club stock?—I know, and I will go farther back than that. You mentioned that if it was not a club stock, a general stock, one tenant might be stronger than his neighbours and might overstock his share, to the detriment and loss of his neighbours. Well, I found in the Chisholm charter chest, a regulation by the baron bailie of Erchless, dated early in the 17th century, against that; and he ordained that no joint tenant of a common moor shall put more beasts on the moor than he is entitled to by his souming, and that if he does, he is to pay I really don't remember how many rents for each beast. That took place in the 17th century, and the same difficulty would be experienced now.

13,733. The difficulty would be to enforce the payment. I am sorry we cannot agree on that matter.—I am very sorry.

13,734. Would you be kind enough to explain to the Commission what your opinion is as to the proper size of a holding on which a man can subsist within the boundaries of his croft?—Very much depends upon the climate, upon the altitude, and upon the quality of the land; but my own idea, judging from Glen-Urquhart, is that the arable should extend to 25 or even 30 acres,—30 acres I should like,—and a sufficient quantity of pasture to enable the man to keep two small horses, and perhaps four or five cows, and a few sheep—twenty-five to fifty sheep.

13,735. Would you rather put it in the form of a valuation, that is to say of a rental?—Well, it is exceedingly difficult to do; I will tell you exactly what I did.

13,736. But in a general way, would it be about a £20 value?—I should be inclined to put a little more than that upon it; perhaps £25.

13,737. You attribute the inability of these small tenants to pay their rents to overcrowding?—To a great extent. Of course, within the last few years there has been considerable depression.

13,738. You assume that it is owing to the number, that is to say, that it is the upkeep of the tenant and his family which requires a good part of the free income of the croft to maintain them?—I have no doubt that is a very high item.

13,739. Is that, in the main, the result of overcrowding?—That is the main cause.

13,740. Do you suppose that these crofters, as a rule, can pay the same rents as tacksmen do for the land?—As a large farmer?

13,741. Yes?—Well, on the whole, I don't think they can.

13,742. Not if they are overcrowded?—Not if they are overcrowded.

13,743. And you think it would require a holding of 25 acres arable land before they could pay the same rent?—On the average a man requires 25 acres of fair land to occupy himself fully.

13,744. The Chairman.—And you would exact less rent from that man than from the neighbouring large farmer on similar ground?—Well, very much depends upon the land; I don't know that I would exact much less for that size; I think a man ought to pay his way with a holding of that size.

13,745. The free rental, after maintaining himself and his family, would be sufficient to pay the rent?—Certainly; but in a croft under 25 acres the man cannot be employed all the year round; he cannot support himself, and must go outside; he must get labour elsewhere, and eke out, so to speak, the proceeds of his croft.

13,746. Mr Forsyth.—Taking the case of the smaller crofter, of which we have just been speaking, the man who must seek labour outside to assist him to live, have you any ideas as to how the rent should be fixed in his case?—In the larger crofts or small farms the man can make his living entirely off his holding, and can afford to pay a certain rent which is governed more or less by the demand for the holding; but how is it in the case of the smaller crofts that you would value them?—I should say that the same rule should apply; you should take the value of the land irrespective of the question whether the man can live upon it or not; take the value of the land, and fix that as the rent.

13,747. Mr Sutherland.—You have given us some very interesting statements of a historical nature, and though these may not be very germane to our inquiry. —I was afraid they might not be.

Drumnadrochit

William Mackay.

13,748. I have no objection to it at all, and I suppose none of the other commissioners have, but as the points have been raised I would like to ask a question or two regarding Highland history, on which you differ in some respects from the recognised authorities? —I do in some points.

13,749. I take it that your statement was given from the landlords' point of view?—Not at all; it is founded upon my own independent point of view.

13,750. Founded upon documents that you discovered in the possession of landlords?—And on the public records.

13,751. Which were entirely records relating to the relations between landlord and tenant?—Quite so.

13,752. But you no doubt admit that outside the range of these there are large and ample materials from which to make deductions as valuable as your own?—I have not been making deductions; I have been stating facts.

13,753. And making deductions therefrom; otherwise the statement would not be of very much use?—I don't know that I have made any deductions.

13,754. Did you not intend us to infer something regarding the land tenure of the people in the old times? —I wished you to infer,—at least, I infer myself—from the division of the estate into 'dabhachs' at the very outset, that there were ten dabhachs or ten large holdings. I think that is the only inference I draw throughout the whole paper; all my other statements are stated as facts.

13,755. You made some remarks regarding rights that the people had to land,—that they were conceded entirely by the landlord, and I presume that that belief was founded upon these documents that you have referred to?—I don't remember that I made any statements as to the rights of the people to the land.

13,756. I think you said that there were rights conceded to them?—Do you mean since 1808.

13,757. I could not specify the time.—The only rights conceded to them were in 1808, when the old cottars or sub-tenants were made crofters.

13,758. But the very fact of something having been conceded to them presupposes that the people had not these rights?—I don't know that I would call it a concession; it was an ordinary transaction; they were offered the lands at so much rent, and they took it.

13,759. But that is coming down to more modern times?—In 1808, but I have not referred, I think,—my memory may be at fault, but I don't think I have referred to any concession either on the part of the proprietor to the tenants, or of the tenants to the proprietor.

13,760. If you are content to modify it to that extent, I have no objection. You mentioned the word 'dabhach;' are you aware of the interpretation which Skene and other authorities put upon the word dabhach?—Yes.

13,761. And Cosmo Innes?—Yes, but I am perfectly satisfied they are wrong. This is an Irish word, and the greatest authorities on the Irish language give dabhach as a vat, and we know it as 'doch.'

13,762. But you are aware that it is stated by these writers that the word was introduced into this country from the valuation put on the land in the Western Highlands for the purpose of paying tribute to the Scandinavians?—But you find no dabhachs on the west coast at all; they are all on the east coast and inland. If I remember well Skene is entirely wrong, and Cosmo Innes entirely at sea. One guesses that it was the land that might be ploughed by two horses, da each; and another one suggests that it might mean the land that could be ploughed by an ox, damh-ach, but the fact is the thing is decided. I may mention it is a well known word in Ireland.

13,763. Who decided it,—yourself?—Stokes and other Irish authorities. I may mention,—I don't want to put myself on the same level as Stokes,—but that has been my own idea for many years.

13,764. You stated with regard to the 'tuath' that the alternative name for him was tacksman. May I ask your authority for that?—A tacksman is a man who holds land under a tack or lease,—you may, if you like, call him a leaseman.

Drumnadrochit.

William Mackay.

13,765. But you stated that 'tuath' was another name for tacksman; I want to know on what authority you made that statement?—I think I put it in this way, that the 'tuath' were the larger tenants, a man might yet be a 'tuath,' a member of 'tuath,' without being a tacksman. If he had a large farm from year to year he might be a member of 'tuath'; a tenant is never a tacksman without a lease or tack.

13,766. You know the use of the word in ancient Irish literature,—the 'tuath.' Do you mean to tell me that there were tacksmen in Ireland?—It is not the same word at all.

13,767. You are aware,—I don't know whether it is the case here,—but in the part of the country I belong to I never heard the word 'tuath' applied to the tacksman, but to the small holder?—Well, in Glen-Urquhart it is always applied to the large holders only.

13,768. Are you not aware that the word 'tuath' is applied to what is now known as the crofter?—Not at all; it is the very reverse; 'tuath' is the large farmer and 'màlanach' is a small farmer.

13,769. I was coming to that. I am not ignorant of the Gaelic language, and I never heard that word.—You know that the Gaelic word for rent is 'mal.'

13,770. I know that there is no Gaelic word for rent, and that the Norman-French word you give has always been used. You quoted Mr Lorimer; do you know what his country is?—Morayshire.

13,771. And his knowledge of Gaelic is complete no doubt?—In Morayshire the knowledge of Gaelic was in his time very extensive.

13,772. But, as a matter of fact, do you know that Lorimer was an authority equal to those I have mentioned?—I know that Mr Lorimer in stating his facts appears to have recorded exactly what he saw with his own eyes; he did not go and theorise, but simply saw certain things, and reported them to his chief.

13,773. He probably would be as good an authority upon the derivation and meaning of Gaelic words as we would be if we went to France?—Not at all, he lived all his days in Castle Grant in Morayshire. He went with Sir James Grant as a young man, and he lived for about fifty or sixty years in this centre of the Highlands (Castle Grant), where very little but Gaelic was spoken at that time.

13,774. As a matter of fact, have you any knowledge that he could speak Gaelic at all or understand the language?—None at all, but I don't know that such knowledge was necessary to enable him to count three couples in a house, and to find out what a mailer had to pay.

13,775. But you see you are introducing a word which is not in Gaelic?—Which word?

13,776. 'Màl?'—Well, it is the word applied to rent.

13,777. But you say this word was introduced into the Gaelic language in the day of that writer?—Not at all, it was long before his day. He heard the word as it was applied in his day, and he simply reports that fact.

13,778. So then you speak of the people in Glen-Urquhart at that time in certain positions as these 'màlanaich?'—Certainly. I have heard my mother, who was the daughter of the tenant of Rusgich, mention a dozen times about the 'màlanaich.'

13,779. You have a knowledge of the Highlands outside Glen-Urquhart?—Yes.

13,780. Did you ever hear 'màlanaich' so applied outside this district?—Yes, by Sir Kenneth Mackenzie of Gairloch. I told it to him, and he said:—'Well, I 'could never make out what that word was.'

13,781. Is he a Gaelic speaking gentleman?—Certainly.

13,782. Where did he hear it?—In Gairloch, I presume, possibly he may have heard it in many places.

13,783. You made a general statement as to the changes that had occurred, which were no doubt due to military circumstances and otherwise; were you struck with the facility with which the land could be conveyed from one party to another? I have no doubt you were. —I was particularly struck with the facility with which the lands in Glen-Urquhart have been changed from one party to another within the last three hundred years. The Lairds of Grant were particularly careful to enter into long leases,—I can show you some of them here,—and every twenty years, every nineteen years, there was almost a complete change on many of the farms. There were new leases given when new tenants took the farms and when old tenents renewed their bargains.

13,784. How do you account for the great facility with which the lands were transferred?—Simply because very likely the man who offered the highest rent, and who proved himself likely to be the best tenant, would get the land. It was just exactly in the same manner as if you were selling a cow or a horse.

13,785. And who was the party selling?—The landlord.

13,786. The landlord?—Yes.

13,787. Was it the landlord that transferred the lands from Randolph, Earl of Moray?—I beg your pardon, you are referring to the change in ownership?

13,788. Yes.—I, on the other hand, was referring to the change in tenantry.

13,789. How then do you explain that?—Would you kindly repeat your question?

13,790. You stated that the lands were passed over in succession from Sir Alan Durward [Quentin Durward] to some other person in the time of Robert the Bruce, and ultimately to others of whom the Earl of Seafield was one?—Yes.

13,791. How do you account for these transfers of land?—Well, I account for it in this way. The titles show it distinctly. In the case of Sir Alan Durward the Crown granted the land to himself and his heirs male. He died in 1275, I think, leaving only daughters, consequently, according to the Feudal System, the lands reverted to the King. Very well, the King held the lands, he put the Cummings of Badenoch into possession until the time of Robert the Bruce, and then he granted a charter of the lands to Thomas Randolph, the famous Earl of Moray, and his heirs male. Randolph had two sons, both of whom were killed in battle unmarried and without children, and, of course, the destination failed, and the lands again reverted to the Crown. The same thing went on until they were given to the Laird of Grant without any restriction as to succession.

13,792. Oh, indeed, or any restriction as to rent?—Yes, he had to pay a rent of £101 to the Crown, and he pays that yet.

13,793. He pays that yet; in what form?—He pays it in money.

13,794. What is it called?—Feu-duty.

13,795. And you stated, I think, that some of them held it on condition that they should pay a certain amount per annum?—Yes, £101.

13,796. And as to the conditions upon which they are held now, this £101 is still being paid annually?—Still being paid, and in addition to that there is what we call a casualty payable when there is a change in the succession, and the Crown gets the benefit of that.

13,797. Who is the official who gets payment of that?—The Crown Receiver in Edinburgh.

13,798. I wish to ask you with regard to those reductions of rent that were made and your valuation of the land in 1887. Of course, I am not going to question your competency as a valuator?—Well, I had skilled assistance.

13,799. You had skilled assistance, doubtless. Can you account for the reduction taking place in 1887 more than in any other year?—I cannot, except that there was a great depression for several years beginning about 1878, and everybody, large farmers and small, were getting reductions. I put in a statement, which shows the reductions given annually, from the year 1872–3, £40, to 1891–2, £26, 13s. That shows my own great reduction in 1887–8, £1584, 17s. 11d.

13,800. Twenty eight per cent. you stated?—Yes.

13,801. There is this point; I may be wrong, but what I gathered from your statement was that in 1887 certain tenants-at-will were converted into leaseholders?—They were not tenants-at-will, except between 1882 and 1887. The new leases were granted to the people in Bunloit in 1882, and to the rest of the glen in 1887.

13,802. The tenants of Urquhart have always been under lease?—There was a slight interval, but that was merely the delay in preparing the documents. The lands were let and the conditions fixed before 1882.

13,803. They would be in this position, would they not, if, after the passing of the Crofters Act in 1886, they had applied to the Crofters Commission they would have their rents fixed by them and they would be under the Crofters Act?—Some of them.

13,804. Can you tell us what proportion of them would be in that position?—A considerable number; I do not know the number, but I should say the bulk of them; certainly, the great majority of them were in that position.

13,805. Is the result of that, then, that those crofters to whom you refer are now changed into leaseholders and consequently outside the Crofters Act?—I do not mean to express a legal opinion upon a question like that, but it is certainly the result that they are leaseholders now. But I may mention that I put it to them 'You can go to the Crofters Commission or you 'can take my valuation,' and without exception they all took my valuation. It was a very good thing for them, for a great deal of money has since been expended on their holdings by the proprietor.

13,806. I think you indicated that you can give us no assistance with regard to finding land suitable for cultivation and occupation by crofters on this estate?—Yes, I said so.

13,807. And you said that the reason was that the limit of profitable cultivation is, in your opinion, reached?—Reached and gone too high. The limit has been exceeded so far that since 1887 one or two crofting holdings have been discontinued as arable land.

13,808. Of their own free will?—Of their own free will they have given up cultivating these crofts and they are now under sheep.

13,809. And the other reason you gave, I suppose as a concurrent reason, was that there were too many people on the land?—Yes, some of the crofts are too small.

13,810. But is the population too large in Balmacaan forest, do you think?—There is a very considerable population of deer in Balmacaan forest. The deer is the only animal perhaps, except rabbits, that goes into it or that lives in it; man cannot.

13,811. But man did live in it?—Never; there was not a house in Balmacaan forest.

13,812. That is not the evidence we heard to-day?—Yes. One man said that there was one house at the east end of Balmacaan forest where the deer park is now; but I say, and you can take my word for it, that no person except one or two shepherds were removed from the deer forest.

13,813. It is a question between a deer park and a deer forest?—There is a small park which was, until a few years ago, part of the home farm.

13,814. Do you not believe that the occupation of grazing attached to arable land would make the arable land more valuable to the holder?—Well, at present, I do not think it would, because you won't get for the cow what will winter her for more than three months. It would not pay. I sold a calf the other day for 10s.

13,815. And is that the average price?—That is the average price at this time of the year.

13,816. And you think it would not be to the benefit of the people in Lots to have grazing?—I do not say so; every man that has a croft should have a little outrun.

13,817. How much?—Well, I have given my view.

13,818. Your view is given practically because I presume you have had some say in the matter of what they have now?—I had the whole say in the settlement of 1887.

13,819. So that what you have done is the best expression of your opinion?—Yes. In fact, they had the pasture before my time.

Drumnadrochit. William Mackay.

13,820. And they had more pasture before?—The Bunloit people only.

13,821. And you think it was to their advantage that it should have been taken away from them?—It was only of the annual value of £22; but I do not think it was to their advantage.

13,822. How do you reconcile that with your statement that it was to their advantage to have it taken from them?—I did not say so.

13,823. How much do you say is to their advantage?—I should say that a model farm of 25 acres might have an outrun of 100 acres including the grazing.

13,824. But is it not the fact that these people had grazing and that their grazing has been curtailed?—They had, but they have got very good grazing still.

13,825. So is it down to what you think is right now?—I think it is still enough. I would remind you of this, that Shewglie was never a crofting place; the moor of Shewglie was always attached to a large farm for the last three hundred years; Lochletter the same; Drumclune the same; Divach the same; Glencoilty the same. All these are large farms. The only crofter township that lost grazing was Bunloit—Wester Bunloit.

13,826. Is that an exception to your general statement?—I have already said that I would have no objection to see the Bunloit people have a little more grazing; but I think they are fairly comfortable.

13,827. But you heard what they had to say here to-day?—Yes.

13,828. And you have no reason to doubt it represented their opinions?—I know it does.

13,829. Do you think in the face of that that it would be desirable that the amount of pasture they desire should be given?—If that could be given without hurting the forest, without hurting the interest of other people, I do not know that any great harm would be done.

13,830. Your first interest is to preserve the forest?—Not the first; there are other interests.

13,831. But do not you think the interests of the people are of more importance than the preservation of the deer forest?—Certainly, but if you can do justice to the people and to the proprietor at the same time, it would be all right. I should like immensely to get a big slice of the deer forest; but I do not think I should be very likely to get it without injuring Lady Seafield.

13,832. You are back to where you were; that because it cannot be got without taking it from the deer forest, you think it should remain where it is?—I do not know where it could be taken from the deer forest without injuring it.

13,833. And if it could, you would have no objection?—Not the slightest.

13,834. Then you said something about club farms, and you said that the objection you had to them was that some people who had a club farm, to your knowledge, did not agree as to the working of it?—Yes, two cases came within my own experience and I know of several cases where they did not agree.

13,835. And you attribute it to the faulty construction of human nature?—Yes, I would very likely quarrel myself if I was one of them.

13,836. But, taking human nature as we find it, don't you think reasonable rules could be made that there would be no quarrel?—You can't make rules which will prevent quarrelling.

13,837. You are aware that an Act of Parliament has been passed regulating these matters?—And I am aware that it is practically waste paper.

13,838. And, as a matter of fact, do you think crofters are more likely to quarrel than others?—No; I have quarrelled with people who were concerned with me.

13,839. But that is no reason why a club farm should not be established more than any other business in which men are associated?—Of course, if it is necessary to establish a club farm, then by all means have it. But what I say is that it is a most objectionable system. Give them the land that would be used for the club farm, but give each his own stock and there will be no quarrelling—at least not so much.

13,840. Apply that to Bunloit; look at the great waste of management there in each man attending to his own few sheep?—Oh, they don't do that; there is one shepherd.

13,841. But that is a club farm, is it not?—No, if you call that a club farm, I will agree with you at once. The stock belongs to each crofter individually.

13,842. But the objection which has been urged in our hearing everywhere is that the stock would be worse when it belongs to persons who can only have small quantities?—Well, there is something in that; there is no doubt that is a difficulty, but you can very easily arrange to have fresh blood brought in every second or third year just as in a club farm. I believe the Bunloit people used to have their common bull and their common ram just as well as their common shepherd.

13,843. Just one question with regard to the periods of distress you referred to. Do you know if there was distress at any time in Glen-Urquhart when it was not common all over Scotland?—I can't tell you about those old periods of distress. I can only say that these letters and documents I have referred to, show that there was distress in Glen-Urquhart. I know that in 1782 there was distress all over the north of Scotland.

13,844. But a gentleman of your wide reading must have read of this distress being in the Lowlands also at that time?—There have been distresses there, of course.

13,845. Were they coincident in date?—I can't tell you, but in the south of Scotland they were just as badly off under the small holding system in the Border counties as they are now in the Highlands.

13,846. Which shows, does it not, that a small holding, or the comfort in very small holdings, does not depend upon the latitude at all, but on the fact of its being too small?—Oh, the Lowlands of Glen-Urquhart are as fertile a place as you can get in the south of Scotland.

13,847. You see no reason to believe that the periods of distress were not common all over the country?—I think it is very likely.

13,848. You may take it that they extended as far south as Ayrshire; I have been reading of it quite recently, and I find the distress was very general, extending even to Ayrshire?—Of course, I did not refer to the periods of distress to show what they would be in future; I simply showed the condition in which the people lived.

13,849. A historical fact?—A historical fact.

13,850. But you are quite alive to the fact that with the superior facilities there are now for communication, and from other causes, they would be less likely to occur?—I am alive to the fact that, if the crop in this country fails, it is more easy now to get provisions from elsewhere, but then that does not help the croft.

13,851. Now, with regard to that point, can you tell me how much of the bread used in this locality is grown in the locality?—How do you mean?

13,852. Do the people live upon bread that is raised here?—No, you will find, if you watch the steamer at Temple Pier, hundreds and hundreds of bolls of meal coming in.

13,853. And perhaps bread?—And perhaps bread.

13,854. Does the bread eaten in Inverness grow in the neighbourhood of Inverness?—No, but they do not cultivate the High Street of Inverness.

13,855. The neighbourhood of Inverness, I said?—No, not exactly.

13,856. So that that would not apply to Glen-Urquhart any more than to Inverness as an objection to the people settling in the glen?—You misunderstood me. I simply referred to the quantity of bread purchased as an item of the additional expense which the crofter has now to meet, compared with formerly. I don't blame him for taking it at all; if he thinks that biscuit is better than oatcake, I don't agree with him, but that is his lookout. I am only pointing out that he is making this expenditure which his father and grandfather knew nothing of, and he has to pay for it out of the proceeds of a small croft. I say that if a man has any family at all, he can't do it.

13,857. But don't you see at the same time he is growing corn and selling it?—Not in Glen-Urquhart, I am sorry to say; not much. The crofter here does not sell much; he does not have enough for himself.

13,858. But the general argument against it would not hold, namely, that it would not grow bread that could be eaten by the people themselves?—Oh, Glen-Urquhart should grow very good bread.

13,859. Yes, but as a matter of fact it does not, and it is better for them to eat wheat imported from America?—They do it.

13,860. But as a matter of fact, it is better for them?—I don't think it is better for them. It may be done, but it is not better.

13,861. My point is that it cannot be used as an argument specially applicable to the Highlands, that instead of eating the bread of their own raising, they eat the bread grown in America?—Certainly; but you have to provide the wherewithall to buy that bread, and where are you to get the money?

13,862. It comes from the proceeds of the corn they sell?—They don't sell corn in Glen-Urquhart; they sell potatoes.

13,863. Mr Maccallum.—I notice that you say you are dissatisfied with the position of the crofters; they have not been able to pay their rents?—I did not say I was dissatisfied; I said I was a little disappointed at the result of what I thought my very liberal valuation.

13,864. You are disappointed with their condition?—Yes.

13,865. And the only remedy you point out is consolidation of holdings and emigration of the people?—I did not suggest emigration.

13,866. But you can show us no other way of remedying the present state of matters?—I should like to see Sir James Grant's idea of Lewiston becoming a large town carried out. Lewiston is a village down here, and there was a most elaborate scheme proposed about a hundred years ago for making it a town.

13,867. But seeing that agriculture is the great means of livelihood here, the only remedy must be emigration of the people, I suppose?—There are a great many artizans here, carpenters, shoemakers, masons. A good many of them go to the south, they go to Inverness and they do a good deal of work here. They have nothing to do with agriculture.

13,868. Do you think the reason they did not succeed is that there were too many on the land?—Too many on the crofts. The crofts, as a rule, are too small; many of them are very small.

13,869. And there is no room to be found for them on this estate?—No, I should like to see the smaller crofts extended.

13,870. And, therefore, the only thing that could be done would be that they would have to leave the parish?—Well, they might become cottars and work here.

13,871. Would that not be worse?—I do not think so; I think the cottars are very much better off than the small crofters.

13,872. Is your remedy that they should become cottars?—I have no remedy. I simply wish to point out that there is a difficulty in the present system, that many of the crofts are too small. Of course, you can cure that by the people going abroad or becoming cottars, artizans.

13,873. Well, is there a field for them becoming artizans there?—Like the people of Inverness they will have to go over the country where work is to be had. There is certainly a field for masons and carpenters in the district.

13,874. Do you really think that the surplus crofter population might live comfortably in this glen without land?—I do not know that I quite follow you.

13,875. Do you think that the surplus crofter population might live here as artizans comfortably without land?—Well, I know that the cottars in Glen-Urquhart just now, in Milton and Drumnadrochit and Lewiston, are, on the whole, in very good circumstances.

13,876. Is there room for more of them?—Yes, you can build all the way down to Loch Ness.

13,877. Well, they must either emigrate or become artizans?—I don't think there is 'must' in the matter; perhaps they would prefer to work out their own redemption as they are.

Drumnadrochit. William Mackay.

13,878. You do not think that emigration is a very satisfactory remedy?—Oh yes, and I will advise my boys when they get up to emigrate. My own brothers have done so and I am sorry I did not do it myself.

13,879. Emigration, you think, is a very good remedy?—Very good.

13,880. You have shown us that the population is decreasing at an ever accelerated rate?—Since the year 1851.

13,881. For instance, there has been a diminution of 402 in the last decade?—Yes.

13,882. Now, if emigration were to go on at any great rate, there would be a still more accelerated decrease in the population?—Well, my own idea is that the decrease in the population will very likely go on until things will correct themselves, and then it will stop.

13,883. How low would you like the population to come to?—To about what it was a hundred years ago—1600.

13,884. And you think that would be a satisfactory condition of affairs?—I think if it were reduced to 1600, there would be room for all, and pretty fair crofts.

13,885. You told us that the proprietors of the estate formerly did not like emigration?—No. I have come across reports by this Mr Lorimer who writes against emigration.

13,886. But you wish the population written down to 1600?—I wish that a man should better himself, and if he cannot do it in this part of the world, let him go to some other place.

13,887. Don't you think that more than one-half of the estate is under deer?—Well, I daresay it is under rough pasture land, but I don't think you could put three crofters into the deer forest so that they could live.

13,888. You said already that no population could live in the deer forest except rabbits or deer?—There is a little less than half.

13,889. Is there not 28,000 acres under deer?—27,000; just about half.

13,890. And 45,000 is the whole estate?—46,300; practically half.

13,891. And there are 1000 acres of woodland? Now, you say that only deer and rabbits could live in the forest. Is it not the case that at any rate sheep lived there?—Oh, yes, and cattle in summer.

13,892. Then you have to correct your statement by that, to the extent that sheep and cattle could live there?—I said, if I remember well, that deer and rabbits lived there.

13,893. Were the only population that could live there?—That lived there.

13,894. 'That could,' I thought you said?—Well, if I said 'could,' I delete the 'could.'

13,895. You would like to see crofter holdings consolidated, but do not you think that there has been too much consolidation going on with regard to the deer forest? Has it not been consolidated at too great a rate?—There has been no consolidation of deer forest from crofters' holdings.

13,896. But grazings, for instance?—I do not think so. I think these grazings are much better for the country under deer now, than they would be under sheep, and I will tell you why.

13,897. But there has been a consolidation so far as the deer forest is concerned?—Yes, but the grazings of Shewglie, Lochletter, Drumclune, Glencoilty, and Divach, which were large farms, have been converted into deer forest.

13,898. And you say that the grazing is very poor?—Yes, it is very poor; in fact, the high grazings of Glen-Urquhart are exceedingly poor.

13,899. We had it stated to the Napier Commission in a paper by the Rev. Mr Macrae, that the grazings of 10,000 sheep were added to the forest?—Well, I prefer not to refer to Mr Macrae who is now dead. But as I am asked about it, I must say that his paper is very inaccurate.

Drumnadrochit.

William Mackay.

13,900. We need not go into that point; I refer to what was given in your presence here to-day. Evidence was given to-day that the grazings of upwards of 8000 sheep were added in recent years to the forest?—That was a mere guess. The man who gave that evidence knew nothing about it.

13,901. And how many do you yourself say?—It is difficult for me to say. Mr Macdougall gave the sheep at Rusgaich at 1000; in this valuation which I hold in my hand, the stock is stated at 600, so that is 400 off his 1000 sheep—practically a third off.

13,902. Mr Sutherland.—Off that particular farm?—A third off the stock that Mr Macdougall stated.

13,903. Off that farm?—Yes. Apply the same rule to the whole.

13,904. Why?—Because he is exaggerating. He has exaggerated the stock on this farm.

13,905. Mr Maccallum.—But you were present yourself and were at liberty to cross-examine him upon any point?—I did, and he was examined by his lordship also on that point, and he confessed that he had no knowledge whatever on that point.

13,906. But he mentioned the authority on which he gave it; and now, as you find fault with that way of giving evidence, can you yourself certify everything you say as being of your knowledge?—I have given nothing to-day except what I know personally, or what I have got from old documents which I produce. I did not go to any person and ask him what do you think, or what information can you give. No one knew anything whatever of what I stated until I read it to you to-day.

13,907. But you are not able to contradict this evidence to any great extent, except that 400 which you take off?—Well, do you mean Mr Macdougall's statistics?

13,908. Yes.—I do not know exactly to what extent he is wrong over all the farms; but in the case of Rusgaich I know, for I have got the numbers.

13,909. Assuming, then, that he is right, these lands were added to the old forest?—There was no old forest; there was no forest in Glen-Urquhart before 1857. The first afforesting took place then.

13,910. There was no forest before then?—No forest before then.

13,911. And the forest was made up of sheep grazings?—Yes, large sheep grazings, with the exception of Bunloit.

13,912. And these grazings were fit to uphold a very considerable stock of sheep?—Oh yes.

13,913. Could they not do that again?—They certainly could do that again, but I say they are much more profitable and very much better to the crofters as they are.

13,914. What benefit do the crofters get from them?—The old rent of the whole lands now under forest was £628, and that was in the good old days when sheep farming paid; if you were to advertise them now, I doubt very much whether you would get them let at all; but take it that you would, and that you would get £500 for them. Well, Mr Bradley Martin now pays upwards of £3000 for the lands. He has five or six keepers, regular keepers, and he employs a great many gillies and other people in summer, thus giving employment to many more than could possibly be employed upon sheep farms. In addition to that, he spends a lot of money in the district, and buys the hay and corn of the crofters. Repeatedly during the last half dozen years I have had to give crofters time to pay their rent until Mr Martin arrived and paid for the supplies.

13,915. Mr Sutherland.—But you forget what you stated to me, namely, that they did not sell corn at all?—They sell hay, not oats for meal.

13,916. Mr Maccallum.—Do you say he pays £3000 for the deer forest?—He pays £3100 annually—Lady Seafield pays for the keepers and part of the rates.

13,917. These are large deductions?—I put the nett value of the forest at £1900. But I say the crofters derive fifty per cent. more benefit from the forest than they could possibly if it were under sheep.

13,918. I have before me a Return of deer forests, the latest Return to Parliament, and the rent there is given at £1300. How do you account for that?—Well, the total rent is about £3000. What is the date of that?—Probably Major Grant handed that in as an estimate.

13,919. How are we to get the proper figures, if these are not correct?—I am giving you my view of it, that I think the forest is worth £1700 to £1900. There is a large grouse shooting which is included in the forest, and the rent of that is about £500. That has to be taken off my figure of £1700 or £1800.

13,920. But you admit this, or rather you have of your own accord stated something to this effect, that the crofters are very good agriculturists and make the most of their lands?—Yes, on the whole, they do; I must say they are very good agriculturists and they are hard-working people.

13,921. They have improved the crofts at the present day?—Some of them have.

13,922. That being the case, don't you think that they could very probably improve some of this land now in the forest?—No, you can't improve subjects that are not improvable.

13,923. But those who, you yourself admit, are good agriculturists, say that they could do so?—No, I have not seen a good agriculturist here to-day. They are not good agriculturists who came here to-day; there were a carpenter and a blacksmith.

13,924. But we had some of your crofters?—Not the best of them. Not those who hold the best land.

13,925. It is your opinion that there is no desire to get land?—I do not know what the desire is; there is a craving for land everywhere.

13,926. You would admit that the crofters on this estate think they would do a good thing if they got the land?—They think so, but I think they are mistaken. But they have never told me they wanted land except this Bunloit township. I have been connected with the estate for the last eighteen years, and not a crofter asked me for land except the Bunloit people.

13,927. You are quite clear in your mind that the land is of such a nature that it cannot be improved?—There is no room for more arable land. The whole of the arable land has been taken in, has been reclaimed, the whole of the land fit for arable land.

13,928. Then one remark as to 'tuath' to which you referred. Did this proverb circulate in this district:—'Is treise tuath na tighearna?'*—I do not know that it did in this district.

13,929. Now, do you think it means the big farmers?—I can't tell you; possibly it means people generally, but, certainly, if it means the big farmers, there is great truth in it.

13,930. I want to get your own opinion; do you think it really applies to the big farmers?—I think it does, because the result of my researches is this, that except the big farmers, the general people took very little interest in public affairs in the olden times. The whole country side was managed by the proprietors and the big farmers, and the big farmers were consequently not only in a majority, but also stronger in every respect than the proprietors.

13,931. Is that your interpretation of the term? It is quite a new interpretation to think that it means large farmer?—Before 1808 (I am referring to Glen-Urquhart) there was only one class of farmers.

13,932. Don't you know really that in Skye, for instance, 'tuath' always means the crofting townships?—No, I don't; if such is the case, it is quite the reverse in Glen-Urquhart.

13,933. Mr Macleod.—The most of the evidence we have had to-day, in fact the whole of it has applied particularly to this Balmacaan forest. But, I think you have added, in your statement or in your examination, that there are no other farms or grazings that could be made available for small tenants or crofters?—No, there is no arable land I know in the forest.

13,934. I am not speaking of the forest now; I am speaking of farms, grazings we will call them.—Would you kindly repeat your question?

* 'A tenantry [or tribe] is stronger than a lord [or chief].

rumna-
rochit.

'illiam
ackay.

13,935. Is there any land in any grazing on the estate that in your opinion is available for crofters or other small tenants?—Do you mean arable land?—

13,936. In the way of being profitably cultivated or otherwise advantageously occupied?—Well, all the farms in Glen-Urquhart are let on lease and have been let on lease for many years as what we may call large farms. If you were to get these arable lands divided, crofters could certainly live upon them, but where are you to get the buildings for them? They would require expensive buildings, and if you pay the expense of the buildings, and charge interest upon that money, my opinion is that the farms cannot be worked profitably by crofters.

13,937. Of course, you are quite aware that we are not concerned with that question at the present time at all?—But as practical men you must take all the circumstances into account.

13,938. But we have got a special duty to perform; no doubt in the proper place and at the proper time due consideration will be given to all these things, but what I am anxious to get at is, if it is possible, putting these considerations out of sight for the moment and simply answering this question—I will give it in the exact words of the remit if you prefer it—whether there is any land now occupied for the purposes of a deer forest, grouse moor, or for other sporting purposes, or for grazing, not in the occupation of crofters or other small tenants, which is capable of being cultivated to profit, or otherwise advantageously occupied by crofters or other small tenants?—There is no reference to arable land there, I see. Well, then, I correct my last answer, and I say most emphatically that there is no land in Glen-Urquhart that could be profitably worked as mentioned in the remit.

13,939. That is so far as farms are concerned. Then you made the sweeping statement with regard to the deer forest of Balmacaan, that it had never been occupied except by deer or rabbits?—No, I never said that.

13,940. What did you say?—I said a lot about the deer forest, but I certainly did not say that.

13,940*a*. What did you say?—I said that no crofters ever resided within the forest; no tenant ever resided within the forest; and no cottar ever resided within the forest. With the exception of the deer park and those little patches that Mr Macdougall mentioned, the deer forest consists exclusively of what were grazings, sheilings principally.

13,941. Then is it a fact that the whole of the land which is presently deer forest was grazed by sheep and cattle and horses at one time?—Yes.

13,941*a*. And was it possible to graze these sheep and cattle and horses without any population being there?—Before this was deer forest the population was exactly where it is now, outside the forest, in Bunloit, in Easter Bunloit, in Divach, and all round the farms. The arable lands have not been included in the forest, if you will understand me. The old farms and holdings still exist, but the hill grazings were taken from them, and converted into deer forests.

13,942. Then were there no extensive clearances at Balmacaan itself?—There were eight tenants removed from Balmacaan for the purpose of having their holdings attached to the home farm and that was before this forest. There was not a crofter cleared in Glen-Urquhart for the deer forest proper.

13,943. Not directly?—No, nor indirectly. The forest came in years afterwards; and not only that,—if you will allow me to say so,—there is no part of the land that the crofters in Balmacaan possessed now within the forest.

13,944. I am coming to that?—There is one farm, Glencoilty, James Mackintosh, he had the westmost holding in Balmacaan and he had the whole of the grazing in Glencoilty. The crofters had what was called the Herd's Hill and that was taken from them for the purpose of being planted. It was an old plantation and it was replanted.

13,945. Coming back to these eight tenants, there were a number of cottars there as well?—Yes, I think there were.

13,946. You do not deny that there were?—I know that there were; they had no land. The cottars are still here; they are in Lewiston and other places. Drumnadrochit.

13,947. But they are not there?—But they are better off; they have better houses and everything. William Mackay.

13,948. I do not deny that at all; at the present moment we are speaking about Balmacaan, and I am anxious to know how it was that all those tenants and crofters were removed from there without any of their land being added to the deer forest. I am speaking now of the present moment. Is it not a fact that all those tenants who were removed from there, the cottars who were removed, what arable land they had or the principal part of it was added to the home farm?—Yes, that is the case.

13,949. And what grazing they had, if there was no forest, went into the sheep farm?—No, it was planted.

13,950. The whole of the grazing?—The whole of the crofters' grazing was planted. They had the Herd's Hill. I have already mentioned that Mackintosh had the westmost holding of Balmacaan, and also the sheep farm of Glencoilty, for which he paid £90; that went into the forest.

13,951. Are those tenants there now?—No.

13,952. Well, there has been that addition to the forest?—The grazings were added to the forest certainly, the same as Lochletter and Shewglie and Drumclune, but these were all large holdings and the people were not removed; the farms still exist and the people are still there, but the grazings have been taken off.

13,953. But there are none of the Balmacaan tenants there?—But they were removed before the time of the deer forest, so that their holdings could be attached to the home farm.

13,954. But their grazing, the grazing that they had when they were there, is now part of the forest?—The grazing that one tenant had.

13,955. Out of the eight?—Out of the eight.

13,956. Where is the other seven tenants' grazing?—It is planted.

13,957. The whole of it?—The whole of it.

13,958. What area will it be?—Not a very large area: perhaps 5 or 6 hundred acres or more.

13,959. Do you think it looks probable on the face of it, where there was such an enormous extent apparently of hill grazing with little arable, that all the pasture land that these seven tenants had was included in a small plantation?—I am not dealing with probabilities at all, I am stating facts, and the fact is that the whole of the grazing of the Balmacaan crofters, that is those of them who were under £30, seven of them, was planted, and that the other grazing of Mackintosh was added to the deer forest.

13,960. I do not wish to say or to suggest that you are quibbling in any way, but I say this, that it is only within recent years that we have had the term 'crofter' defined as a tenant paying under £30 of rent?—Quite so.

13,961. And when I speak of the eight tenants who, you say, were in Balmacaan, taking your own figures, I speak of the tenants that were there irrespective of the rent, because I do not know what the rent was?—Well, they were all under £30 except Mackintosh.

13,962. And you say absolutely that, except for Mackintosh's grazing, there was no part of their grazings added to what is presently the deer forest?—The deer are now allowed to go into the plantation, now that it is well grown, but the grazings were taken from them for the purpose of being planted. That is the point I wish to make. There was no grazing taken from them for the purpose of being converted into the deer forest; it was all planted.

13,963. I am quite prepared to give the estate management all the credit that arises from the fact that they did not clear out these small tenants to make room for the deer forest. But what I wish to clear up is certainly a point that has been obscured considerably, and that is that at the present moment the pasture that these Balmacaan tenants had is a part of the deer forest?—Well, it is a plantation and the deer are now allowed to go into the plantation.

Drumnadrochit.

William Mackay.

13,964. You spoke about the amount that was expended upon the estate, and I notice that you differentiate between the different expenditures?—Yes.

13,965. You put the expenditure on holdings under £30 at some £8000 odds?—Yes, something like that.

13,966. And then, on a larger class of holdings, you state the expenditure at £27,000?—Yes, that is the case.

13,967. And you state a further expenditure of £28,000?—£29,000.

13,968. What was that on?—That was on general estate improvements—roads, fences, bridges.

13,969. So that, speaking roughly, there has been an expenditure of some £8000 on holdings under £30, and a matter of £55,000 on the larger holdings and general estate inprovements?—Yes, that is the case.

13,970. Then you spoke of the area of arable land in 1808 as compared with to-day and said the increase was a little less than 400?—Yes.

13,971. Might I ask you where you get the figures of 1808?—This is the survey of 1808.

13,972. That is by Brown?—Yes, by Brown. He surveyed the whole estate, and I have got his plans as well.

13,973. And your figures for the present time are taken?—From the ordnance survey.

13,974. Thanks. I simply wanted to get that down. You gave a number of figures, with regard to the amount of rental, that had been derived from the property?—No, I don't think I did that.

13,975. I think there was a statement of the amount of the rents?—No, the abatements possibly.

13,976. But I thought you said you had a table of the rents?—No, I did not refer to detailed rents. I gave the total rental.

13,977. You gave the total rental?—Yes, I did not distinguish between the larger tenants and the crofters.

13,978. But you were to make the distinction?—No.

13,979. I thought you promised some figures?—I promised a list of the tenants and the dates of leases.

13,980. Coming back to Balmacaan for the moment, I think that was in the proprietor's hands for a number of years?—It has been almost always in the proprietor's hands for hundreds of years.

13,981. And it would not appear in the Valuation Roll?—Oh yes.

13,982. Except as a grazing subject?—The home farm.

13,983. I am not speaking of the home farm, but the forest.—What is your question?

13,984. Has the forest of Balmacaan always been let?—As a deer forest?

13,985. Yes.—It has been always in the proprietor's hands until I think 1885, after the death of the late Lord Seafield.

13,986. And I think about that date it was in the Valuation Roll?—It simply appeared as a grazing at £628, I think, being the exact rent paid by the previous tenants for the grazings.

13,987. What I want to bring out is that that £628, which we see as the total valuation entered in the roll for that area of country, only refers to the grazing rent?—Oh, that is quite true; that was always the case with deer forests.

13,988. Up to within recent years?—Up to within recent years. The exact rent that the old tenants paid before it was a forest was £626, 2s. It was entered in the Valuation Roll as a forest at £628, I think.

13,989. So that in making any comparisons between the rent paid then and the rent presently received, it has to be kept in view that as the law stood at that time, the subject being in the proprietor's own hands, only the grazing rent was entered?—Quite so.

13,990. Now you stated with regard to the question of the rent of the Balmacaan forest, you went first to draw a comparison between what could be got to-day for it as a grazing subject, that is £500?—Well, I think you would have a difficulty in getting even that.

13,991. Well, take it at £500 as compared with the £3000, but as a matter of fact you did not get £3000?—Oh no, I was putting it at £1700 or £1900.

13,992. We will take it at £1700; or, Major Grant having entered it at £1300, add the shooting £500, making it £1800?—Yes.

13,993. Well, taking the grazing rent that could be got at £500, and the grouse rent which could be got at £500, that would be £1000, and there would only be a difference between what can be got for the subject as a grazing and grouse moor subject and as a deer forest, of £300?—Would it not come to more than that? the difference is £800. You put £500 on the forest as a grazing, and £500 on the moor, that is £1000; whereas we get £1800 now.

13,994. So that the difference is £800?—Yes.

13,995. Then you built a lodge?—No, Balmacaan House is the old family house.

13,996. I thought you said you spent a very large sum of money on that?—It was built for Lord Seafield; it was added to. It was not built since it was let, I mean.

13,997. Is it your presumption that the whole value of the subject as a deer forest would disappear if it were otherwise occupied than at the present time?—I do not quite follow you.

13,998. Supposing that forest were grazed with sheep, as it appears to be at certain seasons, do you think the whole value of the subject as a deer forest would disappear?—Well, I have for argument's sake said that you might get £500 for it, but I doubt it.

13,999. But I am assuming for the moment that we would get the £500 for the grazing, and I am assuming also that we would get the grouse rent?—But in a deer forest you would not get grouse for years. There is no grouse there at present, because they kill them and keep them down. The tenant of a deer forest does not like to have grouse to disturb the deer, and they are kept down; so that, if it were discontinued as a deer forest it would take three or four years before you could let it as a grouse moor.

14,000. Then why do you value the grouse rent at £500?—This grouse rent is of ground separate entirely from the deer forest. The grouse moor is away beyond Drumbuie.

14,001. But if it is not on the forest, why are there no grouse on it?—You are referring to letting the forest as a grouse moor; that is a thing you can't do for three or four years. The grouse moor which is at present let is away from the deer forest.

14,002. In any case, it is part of the £1800?—Yes.

14,003. Supposing that we get a grazing rent of £500 and we get also a grouse rent of £500, that is £1000?—Yes.

14,004. Now, what value would you put upon the grouse you think could be got in four or five years, supposing the grouse were allowed to increase?—Well, I cannot tell you, perhaps £200 or £300. The £500 includes Lochletter and the whole glen from Kilmartin. For the £500 you get a stretch of 10 miles or more.

14,005. What I am anxious to get is this—What would be the value of the place if deer were removed?

14,006. No; what I want to get at is this, what do you consider the amount of depreciation there would be, supposing that that land were re-occupied by sheep, grazed by sheep?—Well, you would possibly get the £500 for the whole forest, you might get perhaps £200 or even £300 for the grouse; that would be £800.

14,007. So that the difference between the two would be £800 as against £1300?—Yes.

14,008. That is £500?—Quite so.

14,009. Do you know what the total rental of the tenants under £30 is?—No, I am sorry I have not got that.

14,010. You state the amount of arrears at £800 odds, and I would like to make a comparison between that and the annual rental?—There would be no difficulty in giving it.

14,011. Is it £1000?—I daresay it is, but I can give you the exact figure.

14,012. So that the tenants are less than a year in arrear?—Well, I think a year is pretty good progress in five years.

14,013. You think so?—Yes, when fair rents are fixed.

14,014. Then you consider that the larger number of the tenants in the glen were tenants-at-will in 1887 when you gave them leases?—I think so, but the list that I will give you will show you exactly how they stood. My first impression here to-day was that I gave leases to them all. I gave leases I know to the bulk of them and reduced the rents of them all.

14,015. Then about this Balmacaan home farm, is it a separate subject, or is it held along with the forest?—It is a separate subject, entered separately.

14,016. And who is it occupied by?—It is in the proprietor's own hands and always has been.

14,017. It is not an adjunct to the deer forest?—No, it has nothing to do with the deer forest.

14,018. And is it partly arable?—Principally arable.

14,019. Is there no pasture attached to it?—Practically none. There is a little attached to Clunebeg, which is worked along with it.

14,020. You expressed a very strong opinion indeed with regard to club farms?—Yes, I feel strongly about club farms.

14,021. And you said there were cases within your knowledge where they had disagreed?—Yes. There was one case of a pure club farm and another of what I call a modified club farm.

14,022. You do not think it was because there was a solicitor about that, there was a quarrel?—No, they quarrelled before they came to the solicitor. Unfortunately, people don't come to us until their quarrels have gone too far.

14,023. Might I ask, if it is not asking too much, what was the particular difference in the case you refer to; probably you might be able to give me the information without being too particular?—Well, I don't wish to mention names, but if you really want it, I can tell you where the township is and who the tenants are.

14,024. No, no, what I want to get at is what the particular difference was in this case?—Well, Cluny Macpherson (it was on his estate) formed this place into a club farm many years ago, and for a few years the tenants did very well indeed. I think there were seven or eight of them. They had their own separate houses of course, their own separate plots of arable land, and their own cattle and horses; perhaps a horse each; but they held the moorland in common and the sheep in common. They appointed one of themselves as manager, and so far as I can judge, he is a very intelligent good man and he knows all about sheep farming. Jealousies arose; they thought he was taking too much upon himself, and after a year or two of that, the factor endeavoured to bring them all together and to agree. But after a time, their blood became so hot that they would not meet annually to adjust accounts. Instead of doing that, they went into the sheriff court at Inverness for a count and reckoning and I was employed by some of them to act for them. And my own clients acted so unreasonably that I threw the thing up and said I would have nothing to do with them, after trying to bring about an arrangement. So that the solicitor in this case came rather as oil upon the troubled waters.

14,025. I am quite willing to believe that in your case. Now, can you tell us this, whether it was provided for in the arrangements they had for an annual election of manager or managers?—It was provided for an annual election of manager or managers and also for an annual audit of the accounts, but, as a matter of fact, for years the same man was appointed manager. In fact, he was really the backbone of the whole place.

14,026. I may tell you that in Skye, where there were several instances spoken to of successful club farms, that usually was the rule; that naturally enough the manager or managers continued year after year.—Yes.

14,027. But what I cannot understand in the case you have mentioned is, why, if there were seven tenants against this eighth man?—Oh no, some of them took his side. There was an almost equal division; it was a general flare up.

14,028. There was no majority?—There was no majority.

14,029. And do you think that would be likely to occur generally?—Even in Glen-Urquhart, where the people are very good and Christian, I have seen a good deal of it; quarrelling about grazings, quarrelling about the number of sheep that each ought to have. I am not going to give names, but that is going on now in a township in Glen-Urquhart.

14,030. But don't you see this club farm would be the very thing to obviate that, because there would be no individual sheep to quarrel about?—Well, of course, you can argue for a fortnight about this, but, my opinion is, that a club farm would be a mistake. You cannot have a whole lot interested in a thousand sheep without having jealousies. You may have an enormous ranche with the whole thing done by a man with a large salary. But if they are all people of the same class, their jealousies are aroused; they do not like one of themselves to be superior to them all.

14,031. I am sorry that your opinion of your countrymen should be so unfortunate?—It is not of my countrymen in particular; that is a general rule, I think, that applies all over the world.

14,032. Mr Munro.—I want to put one or two questions in order to elicit some information which I know no one can give better than yourself. I understand from evidence which you gave to-day that you were disposed to deal generously with the Seafield tenantry, while not forgetting your obligations to the Countess of Seafield?—I was.

14,033. But I suppose I may take it that in your intercourse with the tenants you very naturally looked at this matter from the landlord point of view more than from the tenant point of view?—Well, I may tell you this, that when Lady Seafield asked me to meet the Glen-Urquhart people, she said:—'I wish you to do it, Mr 'Mackay, because you know them all, you know their 'circumstances, and I give you a free hand so far as the 'fixing of rents is concerned; it is in your hands.' She objected even to my taking any person with me, but I considered the responsibility on myself too much with my small experience of farming, and I did take a skilled valuator with me. But, I may mention that in the majority of cases, the rents fixed by me were under the valuation of the skilled valuator.

14,034. What I want to be at is this, the evidence which you have given to-day has been altogether from the point of view of the relation between the landlord and tenant?—Yes.

14,035. And I wish if you would go with me for a moment and take an outside view of the matter, and consider what effect the conversion of grazing farms into deer forest has upon the prosperity of the neighbourhood and the national prosperity. Now, you told us that in forming the Balmacaan deer forest I think there were some 8500 sheep displaced?—That has been told; I took 400 off that at any rate.

14,036. Well, say 8000 along with their families and dependants?—Along with their families, did you say?

14,037. Yes.—The families were not removed.

14,038. They were continued in the arable land farms?—They were, and there they are still.

14,039. Do you not consider that there was some loss to the nation in the displacement of 8000 sheep?—Well, considering the enormous number of sheep in the United Kingdom, the loss is nothing; it cannot be appreciated. And the prices of sheep are just now such that it would be a very good thing if there was a very much greater displacement.

14,040. I do not admit your contention there, because the whole national wealth is made up of units. Therefore, supposing for example, that the whole of the landowners in the Highlands were disposed to convert their sheep farms into deer forest, do you think they would be justified in doing so without having regard to the effect which that would have upon the prosperity of the people at large?—My idea is, that so far as the prosperity of the Glen-Urquhart people is concerned, it has been rather increased by the afforestment. There is more money distributed among them than before.

Drumnadrochit. William Mackay.

14,041. But I am sure that you make some distinction between what is called the distribution of wealth and the creation of wealth?—Well, I do not care where it is created if I get it.

14,042. But what I wish you to understand is this, the population of Glen-Urquhart on your own admission, from 1851 to 1891, has decreased by some 1100. Now, does that not infer the displacement of a considerable proportion of industry or wealth-producing population from the land?—Oh, no; that is to be accounted for by the fact that as soon as a young lad comes to be seventeen or eighteen years of age, he leaves the glen. The father remains and the same industries remain, but there are not the same number of people living in each family. I remember, for instance, when I was a boy myself, the young men always went away in summer as labourers and navvies and harvest-workers, but they returned for the winter and did not go away again till the beginning of summer, so that the summer population was always lower than the population in April when the census is taken. They do not now return for the winter.

14,043. Then you do not attribute any diminution in the population in Glen-Urquhart to the creation of the deer forest?—No, I am satisfied there is no diminution from that cause.

14,044. It arises solely from the desire of the people to better their own position?—Just so.

14,045. In fact, just what induced you yourself to leave the glen?—Yes, and my four brothers.

14,046. Then about another matter. You now receive very large quantities of oatmeal imported into the glen?—Yes.

14,047. Is it not possible that a considerable proportion of the land now lying waste might be made to produce corn and feed the people, and thereby not necessitate the same importation of foreign goods?—At this moment I cannot mentally put my finger on 10 acres altogether lying waste that is fit to grow corn.

14,048. I suppose you are aware that Glen-Urquhart, in average seasons, produces excellent qualities of corn?—Some parts of it produce as good grain as anywhere in the north of Scotland.

14,049. You are aware that Glen-Urquhart has produced wheat weighing 64 bushels?—That was only for a few years, and then it exhausted the land.

14,050. Are you aware that farmers in Glen-Urquhart have in more seasons than one taken first class prizes for the superior quality of their corn?—Oh, in the low-land farms, like Drumbuie and Balmacaan, I am glad to say they have always led the van in prize taking.

14,051. And is there no other land that could be put in the same position as Balmacaan and Drumbuie?—No land that is not already under cultivation.

14,052. I think you told us you are a crofter yourself?—Yes.

14,053. How many acres have you?—I have 6.

14,054. Have you ever made out any balance sheet?—No, but I am afraid the balance would be on the wrong side.

14,055. Are you in arrears of rent?—Well, they are very lenient with me; I may say that I reduced my own rent in 1887.

14,056. What was your rent?—I really do not remember; I think it was about £5, but I can give it to you exactly. £4, 5s. and I have got a 99 years' lease of a house, for which I pay 15s. of ground rent.

14,057. It is rather an interesting inquiry to find out how a lawyer prospers as a crofter.—Well, I am afraid the balance would be very much against the profits.

14,058. But you have never made out a balance sheet of any kind?—No.

14,058*a*. Mr Sutherland.—You are not a successful crofter?—No, but it is perhaps more a matter of sentiment with me than otherwise.

14,059. Mr Munro.—You have not paid the rent of the croft out of the croft, but out of the law?—Out of the law, so far.

14,060. You have given us a vast deal of information from outside sources. Have you taken any pains to verify the facts and figures you have submitted to us?—All my facts and figures are taken from original documents. My first figures of 1545 are taken from a deed upon the public record, recorded in 1548. My subsequent figures are all taken from original documents now before his lordship.

14,061. I suppose you are aware in advertising a deer forest it is a common thing to insert in the advertisement as an advantage or inducement a diminution of the population?—I never saw that inserted. I have often seen it mentioned that there were no crofters in the forest.

14,062. Have you never seen it inserted in the 'Sportsman's Guide' that Inverness-shire was one of the most thinly populated counties in the kingdom, and, therefore, advantageous for sporting purposes?—No, I have not seen that.

14,063. It is so?—I have no doubt it is.

14,064. I will only add that I am bound to tell you that so far as my observation goes, you have given your evidence with obvious fairness and sincerity?—Thank you.

14,065. The Chairman.—You mentioned arrears amounting to £822, 15s. 1d. Would you tell me how much of that sum is due by crofters?—The whole of that is due by crofters under £30. I have not included the arrears of rents above £30.

14,066. There are such arrears?—There are very few, not worth mentioning.

14,067. Mr H. V. Maccallum.—I would like to refer you to a statement sent by the Rev. Mr Macrae, the Free Church minister, to Lord Napier's Commission, and appearing on page 365 of the Report of the Commission. Mr Macrae states that 'about the year '1867 the whole township of Balmacaan, where there ' were over 20 families who were living pretty comfort-'ably, had to be turned out in a body, as the place was ' to be directly added to the forest.' Is that statement correct?—Well, as I have already stated, I would prefer not to criticise this Statement, as the author is dead; but I may say, as the question has been put to me, that this is most inaccurate. There were 8 tenants and I do not know how many cottars; and as I have already explained, their lands were not directly added to the forest but to the home farm of Balmacaan.

14,068. The Chairman.—I think you have said all that already?—I have said all that.

14,069. I put questions to you suggested by that very sentence.

14,070. Mr H. V. Maccallum.—You are aware that has been very much founded on in the past as an instance of clearance?—I have seen it referred to several times.

14,071. Mr Macleod.—It is only fair to point out, Mr Chairman, that Mr Mackay has admitted, as I understand it, that the pasture of those tenants was added to the deer forest and is a portion of the deer forest?—But that is not the statement made here. The statement is that they were removed for the purpose of its being directly turned into a forest. They were removed for the purpose of having their lands added to the home farm and their grazings, the grazings of the crofters were planted. Now, of course, the deer are allowed to go into the plantation.

14,072. There was a deer forest formed there?—Before that, yes.

14,073. And the pasture that those tenants had was added?—The pasture that one tenant had. I have explained that repeatedly.

14,074. Very well, put it that way.—Glencoilty, for which he paid £90, was added to the forest.

14,075. There is no doubt that the tenants were turned out, not to put too fine a point upon it; they did not leave of their own accord?—No, I don't suppose they did.

14,076. They did not leave in a body?—No, they gradually got places elsewhere.

14,077. As the place was to be directly added to the forest?—Well, that is not the case. The place was not added to the forest at that time. It was planted.

14,078. There was a portion of it added to the deer forest?—Before a man was ever turned out.

14,079. But don't you think that it is a fair inference to put upon it, in justice to Mr Macrae who is not here to speak for himself, that they were turned out for the deer forest?—I may mention that Mr Macrae was not here at the time, so that his information was hearsay entirely.

14,080. And that the people would naturally take it when they were turned out and this was planted, that it was really if not directly added to the deer forest?—But it is not what the people would take it; it is what actually did happen that we are concerned with.

14,081. Mr Sutherland.—Where is the land now?—The arable land is part of the home farm.

14,082. And the rest is in the deer forest?—The rest is in the deer forest.

14,083. Mr Macleod.—That is the case now?—Yes, and I have admitted it all through.

14,084. Mr Maccallum.—You explained the discrepancy between your valuation of the forest and this by saying that Major Grant did not include the grouse moor?—Yes.

14,085. But does that explanation now stand when we hear from you that the grouse moor is not in the deer forest at all?—Yes, certainly, because the total rent paid is £3100.

14,086. But in comparing the value of it under deer with the rent that was paid when it was a sheep grazing, you say that £1800 was got for it now as a deer forest?—Well, after taking off the taxes, that is roughly the figure that I put on it. After taking off taxes and other payments, I think I said it would be about £1900.

14,087. But if you are including the grouse moor, that is not in the forest at all?—Yes.

14,088. Very well, how does the comparison stand in that way when you include a grouse moor that is not in the forest at all?—I cannot see the force of that. The grouse moor is let along with the forest, you know.

14,089. Did we not hear that it was not let at all; that is my impression?—Oh no, it is let along with the forest and is included in the rent of £3100.

14,090. Was that grouse moor part of a sheep grazing that was valued at £628?—No. It is not over that grazing at all. The grouse moor has been a grouse moor for many many years. Mr Martin has that and pays a rent of £500 for it. In addition to that he has got the deer forest.

14,091. At £1300. Why do you include the grouse moor in the comparison?—Don't you see I gave the value of the shootings that Mr Martin had, including both the deer forest and the grouse moor.

14,092. But we were talking simply of the deer forest and you included the grouse moor?—Of course, I included the grouse moor in his total rental.

14,093. But what is the use of including the grouse moor?—There is no use arguing about it.

14,094. Then your statements are of no use as facts?—That may be your opinion.

14,095. Now you say that £628 was the exact sum paid by the farmers when the forest was used as a grazing?—For these grazings; the exact sum taken off them by agreement when the grazings were taken. £626, 2s. was the figure.

14,096. They were never let separately for that sum?—Oh no, because these grazings were always attached to the arable land.

14,097. Then it is not an exact sum; it is only a valuation which is made?—The exact sum that the grazings were valued at, and the tenants agreed to the valuation, was £626, 2s.

14,098. Exactly, I only wish to point out that that is the way it has been got.—Quite so.

14,099. And there might actually have been an increase of rent?—Possibly a decrease.

14,100. Mr Sutherland.—I would be obliged if you would explain what is meant by the heading 'Judicial Rents' in this paper you have handed in?—The rents in the olden times were fixed by the baron bailie, who held a court, and the rents as then fixed were called judicial rents. I have found out exactly how they were fixed in one instance. Several people came forward and said to the baron bailie in open court, after the court was fenced:—'I will give so much for Allanmore; I will give £10.' Then another man would jump up and offer £15, and so on. Sometimes a man who offered the highest sum did not get it; the choice would depend upon circumstances.

14,101. It was what might be called an auction of the lands?—It was an offer just as you ask for offers now-a-days, and say the highest offer might not be accepted

14,102. And that is the judicial rent?—That is the way in this case, at all events.

14,103. Is that the general way?—No. Sometimes there was no competition, the rents were agreed upon by the landlord and the tenant.

14,104. What was the institution of the baron bailie court for?—Oh, the baron bailie court could hang a man; it could do many a thing. The baron was a most important person.

14,105. But I want to know—if you can give us the explanation,—how this interference with private property was allowed?—It was not an interference with private property.

14,106. What jurisdiction had the baron bailie?—He had very large jurisdiction, especially before heritable jurisdictions were abolished after 1746. He could try a person for crime.

14,107. But with regard to the fixing of the rent?—Well, he was the factor, as a rule, or chamberlain.

14,108. For whom?—For the proprietor; for the landlord.

14,109. Was he a public functionary?—Not a public functionary. There was the old heritable jurisdiction which barons had. The bailie was the man who held the court; he was the bailie as a substitute for the landlord.

14,110. And was it a public court for the fixing of the rent?—Yes, only that it was held by the bailie.

14,111. So that the Crofters Commission is not without a precedent?—Oh no, they did not fix rents in that way. They took in offers, and, of course, the baron bailie used his own judgment as to what tenant to take.

14,112. The Chairman.—If I am not mistaken, the late Mr Donald Munro, chamberlain of the Lews, was baron bailie so late as 1875, when the Bernera crofters were defended by a gentleman whom we all know, and defended successfully.

14,113. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is it not the case that the attraction to a shooting tenant in Balmacaan is the deer forest and the grouse moor,—that having the grouse moor as well as the deer forest tempts the shooting tenant to pay a high rent, and it does not follow that you would get the same rent for the grouse moor without the forest?—Yes, that is the case.

14,114. The one helps the other in the view of a shooting tenant?—Yes. The rent that Mr Martin's predecessor, who simply had the grouse moor, paid was only £250.

14,115. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—I should much prefer to have an opportunity of questioning Mr Mackay again; I am very sorry that he is not well. [The Chairman.—Mr Mackay's health is such that I cannot ask him to come back.] I am very sorry indeed, but there are one or two questions which I hope your lordship and Mr Mackay will forgive me for putting, all arising, I think, from the statement and from the evidence and cross-examination. I understood Mr Mackay to say that some of the smaller holdings have ceased to be cultivated by the tenants because cultivation is unprofitable?—Yes, that is the case. There are two in Abriachan.

14,116. I should like to ask if there are many in Glen-Urquhart?—I don't know one in Glen-Urquhart; but I may mention that one of the most respectable and hard-working tenants in Glen-Urquhart, who has got a very high place, told me quite recently that the corn never ripens, and that he would have to put it under grass. That man has got about 30 acres.

14,117. So that in point of fact there is not a single

Drumnadrochit.

William Mackay.

crofter tenant in Glen-Urquhart so far as you know who does not cultivate his holding because it does not pay?—No, I don't think so in Glen-Urquhart. Oh, I think by the way there is one away at Drumcore there,—I think he has put it under sheep.

14,118. What is his name?—Maclean.

14,119. Is it because he found that cultivation did not pay?—Well, evidently it is, because he finds that grazing pays better.

14,120. Is he a practical cultivator of the soil?—Yes, he is one of the best farmers in the north of Scotland, or in the south either, for the matter of that.

14,121. Is he the gentleman who is tenant of the farm of Divach?—Yes, and of a large farm in the south too.

14,122. Is he the keeper of the poor-house in Dumbarton?—That is the man.

14,123. Does he spend his time looking after the poor in the poor-house at Dumbarton, or does he spend his time on the croft?—I am not his keeper, I cannot answer the question.

14,124. Does he live on the croft?—No, he does not; his mother lived there till the other day.

14,125. As a matter of fact, this tenant does not live on the holding, and does not cultivate the holding?—It is all under grass.

14,126. An absentee tenant?—Well, he is pretty often there.

14,127. Now might I ask if any of the people who lived in the glen asked or petitioned for that croft when it became vacant?—For that croft?

14,128. For that croft?—I don't think so; I am not aware.

14,129. Has he not two crofts?—He has got his own old croft, and he has got the adjoining one as sub-tenant; I think the principal tenant, a widow, is still living, but I am not very certain. She was living when I last heard of her.

14,130. Was he tenant of Divach at the time when he got this latter croft?—I don't think he was, but I am not quite sure.

14,131. Now there is another point that I would like to ask a question upon with regard to the acres of old arable land in the deer forest of Balmacaan. There has been much dispute about that. Mr Malcolm, Invergarry, gave evidence before a committee of the House of Commons (I think the Colonisation Committee) in the year 1887 if I am not mistaken, and he made a statement there that there were about 3000 acres of old arable land in all the deer forests of Scotland. Might I ask if you agree with that?—I have no idea; I have never gone into the question.

14,132. Did Mr Malcolm apply to this estate for information as to the area of arable land in the Balmacaan forest?—Not to me, but he may have to the factor.

14,133. Can you tell how many acres were given by the estate to Mr Malcolm, and by him to the Colonisation Committee?—No, I do not know whether any return was made. [The Chairman.—Did any communication reach you on the matter?—No, my lord.]

14,134. Then I think I heard you make a very direct statement with regard to a place mentioned; I think by Mr Macdougall, in the deer forest—a place called Fasach-nan-Capull?—I made no statement about that; that is a place I cannot identify.

14,135. That is the place where you said there was only one acre?—I did not say there was only one acre; I asked was it not nearer one than ten.

14,136. Might I ask you how many acres of old arable land there are in your opinion at Fasach-nan-Capull?—I cannot tell you, but I have passed the place I have in view very often—although I do not know it by that name,—and it never occurred to me that there were three. I have never measured it, and I have never gone over it.

14,137. If a respectable man, a native of Glen-Urquhart, and a man who is prepared to deposit security for rents, offers to take the old arable land there at eight acres, and to pay a fair rent for it, may I ask if you will consider the application of that man for a holding there?—It is not for me to consider it.

14,138. Would you be surprised to know that the man who now lives nearest to that place is prepared to take it at eight acres?—I should be very much surprised if there were eight acres of arable land there, but, of course, the thing can be measured. I know nothing about it, and neither did the witness who spoke about it.

14,139. Now I should like to ask a question or two with regard to the £8000 odds that have been expended upon the smaller tenants. Could you differentiate a little? We had a good deal of evidence with regard to the condition of the township called Lots. Might I ask how much of that £8000 was spent upon that poor township, which is certainly, so far as the evidence goes, and so far as I can myself ascertain, one of the poorest crofting townships in the Highlands?—I cannot tell you now; I have got the information from the estate books.

14,140. Would you be surprised if you were told that there was nothing whatever expended in improving the condition of the people in Lots?—I don't know that there was very much expended in improving their condition, but the £8000 was spent upon tenants under £30 of rent notwithstanding.

14,141. Are you personally aware that there is a strong desire among the people of the glen for land, more or less?—Well, I have already stated that no one ever spoke to me,—expressed their willingness to have more land, except the Bunloit people.

14,142. Are you aware whether the cottars in Lewiston approached the estate about the year 1888 by petition for land more or less that at the time was in the hands of the estate?—In Lewiston, you will keep in view, they are not crofters.

14,143. They are cottars?—They are cottars, and they have got allotments.

14,144. Some of them?—Well, the bulk of them have. Those who are without allotments asked me in 1887 whether a part of the farm of Kilmore could not be set apart for allotments.

14,145. Who was the tenant before?—The minister.

14,146. Which of them?—Well, Mr Campbell never had it, I think; Major Grant has it now.

14,147. Who had it before these people applied?—Major Grant.

14,148. Had not the parish minister it as a farm, in addition to his glebe?—Oh yes, it has been the parish minister's farm for many ages. [The Chairman.—Has he no glebe?—He has a glebe besides. It is a very small farm—only 20 acres I think.]

14,149. In your opinion, which party would be considered by you more entitled to consideration in a matter of this kind,—the parish minister, who had a glebe, or the Lewiston cottars, who had no land at all?—[The Chairman.—Mr Mackay is not bound to answer that question.]

14,150. Was it at the time after the parish minister died, and after it was ascertained that his successor would not take it,—was it then that the cottars applied for it?—It was, but Lady Seafield had a desire to retain this for the use of the parish minister.

14,151. Did Lady Seafield vouchsafe a very kind reply to the people through Mr Mackay, solicitor, Inverness, to the effect that it was her ladyship's pleasure to concede the prayer of the petition?—No, she did not. She certainly vouchsafed a very civil reply, and said that she would take the matter into her most serious consideration; and I may go farther and say that I myself expressed my opinion that it would be a good thing to give it to them. However, the higher authorities differed.

Now I will read a letter, a copy of a letter, from Mr Mackay, solicitor, Inverness, to John Macdougall, Borlum Bridge, the correspondent in this case:—

Blairbeg, 6th February 1888.

Dear Sir.—With reference to our meeting two weeks ago, as to the desire of yourself and certain others to get a portion of the Kilmore farm in lots, I laid the matter before Lady Seafield on Wednesday last, and her ladyship agreed to let the field between the plantation and the Lewiston and Kilmore road and east to the road in front of the manse, at Whitsunday 1889

This excludes the portion of the said field immediately in front of the churchyard. The arrangement cannot as yet be made as to the manner in which the field is to be divided, and the parties who are to get lots. Please read this letter to William Cumming and others interested.

Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM MACKAY.

To John Macdougall, Borlum Bridge.

14,152. Is that a copy of the letter sent?—Yes, that is my letter.

14,153. Was it after that that this land referred to was given to Major Grant as an addition to the biggest farm in the glen?—No, Major Grant had that farm for years before that.

14,154. And has it still?—And has it still. But I now recollect that a difficulty arose as to the valuation of the crops upon the land and as to who would pay for them, and some of the applicants were absolutely unable to pay.

14,155. Too poor to be relieved?—Too poor to be relieved, if you like to put it that way.

14,156. Might I ask, generally, a question or two with regard to the home farm, and if you are not in a position to answer detailed questions, then, of course, I have nothing more to say. May I ask if you can go into figures with regard to the home farm management?—No, I cannot.

14,157. And may I ask you as representing the estate here whether I can have an opportunity if I want to-morrow to put questions to Major Grant and to the manager of the farm?—I don't know.

14,158. I have some really relevant and important questions. [The Chairman.—We will see about that when it comes up. Meantime it is not for Mr Mackay to say, and I cannot have any bargain made with Mr Mackay or anyone as to our proceedings on any occasion.]

14,159. There was one statement which I understood Mr Mackay to make,—that the shooting of the deer forest was a great benefit to this part of the country,—among other things for this reason, that the small tenants had an outlet for selling their produce to the shooting tenant. Am I right in that?—Yes, that is the case.

14,160. Is there an arrangement, or agreement, or understanding between the shooting tenant and the factor, who has one of the biggest farms in the glen?—For his farm, which you call one of the biggest in the glen, he only pays £40 of rent.

14,161. Oh, I have no doubt his rent is fair. I hope it is, and I wish every rent was fair. But he has a good farm, and is it a fact also that the manager of the home farm has also a farm of his own?—He has got a small place, Delshangie.

14,162. It is a farm?—It is a farm, it is a croft.

14,163. How many farms are larger than that?—I will give you the rent. He has got 36 acres for which he pays £30.

14,164. How much hill grazing?—No hill grazing.

14,165. And has also the late gamekeeper another large farm?—Well, he is dead. He had Kerrowdown near the pier. Of course, it depends on what you call a large farm. He had 52 acres for which he paid £50.

14,166. Now is there an arrangement or an agreement by which, if the shooting tenant requires any farm produce to buy, the home farm supplies him in the first place, the factor's farm thereafter, the home farm manager's farm thereafter, and the farm of the late gamekeeper after that?—Is there such an arrangement?—It is understood that the sporting tenant takes his produce in the first place from the home farm. There is no understanding whatever so far as the other farms are concerned.

14,167. Can you, outside the farmers I have mentioned, mention any farm in the whole estate from which the sporting tenant buys produce?—Yes.

14,168. I should like to hear it?—I don't want to mention those in arrear, but I have had people coming continually to me for the last five years and saying—"Just leave this over till I sell my hay"—even as far up the glen as Polmaily.

14,169. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Selling hay to the shooting tenant?—Yes.

14,170. The Chairman.—Depending on the shooting tenant to pay their rents?—Yes.

[ADJOURNED.]

FIFTEENTH SITTING.

DRUMNADROCHIT, GLEN-URQUHART, INVERNESS-SHIRE, July 5, 1893.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
MICHAEL HUGH SHAW STEWART, Esq., M.P.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
JAMES NOEL MULLER FORSYTH, Esq.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
REV. MALCOLM MACCALLUM.
JOHN MACLEOD, Esq.
HENRY MUNRO, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

WILLIAM MACKAY, Solicitor, Inverness (recalled)—examined.

14,171. The Chairman.—You desire to make an additional statement?—I may explain that I find that the statement which Major Grant intended to make is all embodied in my statement of yesterday, except one or two things. His is a repetition of mine to a very large extent, but I wish to make an addition or two to my statement. There are several items which your lordship wanted which I shall be glad to supply, but I do not remember exactly what they were. At the very outset I wish to refer to an application made in 1887, by cottars in Lewiston, for allotments on the farm of Kilmore sometime occupied by the minister. Your lordship will remember that I yesterday stated that in 1887 I recommended that the allotments should be granted. Major Grant yesterday was sitting at some little distance from me, and was unable to let me know then that my recommendation had been finally agreed to by the estate authorities some months ago, and that it would be given effect to at Whitsunday next. I was not aware of that yesterday. So that the letter of mine read yesterday has been given effect to.

14,172. What is the extension granted?—The bulk of the farm of Kilmore is to be divided among cottars in Lewiston in village allotments.

14,173. Is it arable land?—Arable.

14,174. And on the average how much is each to get?—About 2½ acres. Your lordship will find on going through the glen that a great many small allotments are at Lewiston already; in fact, the allotment system has been in force since the end of last century.

14,175. And have they agreed to this?—We do not know yet to what tenants these subjects are to be given, but the lands will be given to the most deserving cottars.

14,176. And how many are to get allotments?—I think there are about six or seven who applied.

14,177. Are all these to get allotments?—I think so, if they be able to take them. There are about 28 acres in the farm altogether, and, as I have said, we do not say we will give them the whole of it, but we will certainly give the bulk of it.

14,178. What is the next matter?—Your lordship wanted certain information from me yesterday, some figures, I don't remember exactly what they were.

Drumnadrochit.

William Mackay.

14,179. I wanted to examine you about the deer forest, but you said Major Grant knew more about it, and I was going to take him over that matter?—Very well, my lord. I understand I gave all the information as to the extent of the deer forest.

14,180. Mr Sutherland.—Have you any additional information to what you gave us yesterday about the deer forest?—Except the expenditure of Mr Martin.

14,181. About the deer forest?—No, I have not.

14,182. The Chairman.—The information which I mainly desire—but perhaps Major Grant is better able to give it me—is beginning with the estate as a whole, and then proceeding to particulars and the areas into which the different portions of land are divided. Now you gave me so much of that, but not the whole?—Well, Major Grant is not at present able to give any more than I gave yesterday.

14,183. Will you be able to give any more?—No, but I can send in a statement.

14,184. Please do that—a signed statement, please?—I should like your lordship to tell me exactly what you want.

14,185. You have given us so much, but not the whole information. The total area of the estate?—I have given that already.

14,183. The area under deer?—I have given that also.

14,187. The area under what may be called large farms?—Yes. The arable and grazing?—Yes.

14,188. The area under crofts, arable, and grazing, and the area under plantation?—I have given that.

14,189. I am not sure that you did?—I gave the area under wood.

14,190. Area under water and waste. I don't know whether you have that here. It is an important element on some estates, but I don't know what it may be here?—Oh yes, it is here also.

14,191. Then the rent of the deer forest, I think we have got that?—Yes.

14,192. The names of the large farmers, with the rent of each?—Yes.

14,193. I mean by 'large farms' farms above £30 of rent?—Yes.

14,194. The total rent payable by the crofters, and, with regard to the deer forest, the expectation at the beginning of each season of what the amount of sport is to be, the number of stags?—Well, there is a limit; I suppose I had better mention the limit.

14,195. Yes, the limit. Then I am anxious to get something of the history of the deer forest; perhaps Major Grant can give us that now?—Are you disinclined to be examined, Major Grant?—[Major Grant.—Not at all, but I have just to repeat the same information.]

14,196. Well, I want this, Mr Mackay. We begin with the total area of the forest, the origin of the forest, with its total area, then the additions made from time to time?—I can give you that in a few minutes.

14,197. Very well. The extent of these additions, and where they were taken from?—I am afraid we will have to write a separate statement as to deer forest.

14,198. Containing the formation of the forest, the additions made from time to time, the farms or other subjects from which these additions were taken, and the rent or estimated yearly value of each?—Yes.

14,199. Then I would like also the number of cottars on the estate?—I think I gave that yesterday.

14,200. Perhaps you have given us it?—Yes, I gave 108 cottars.

14,201. Just so. Passing from these matters, you gave us the expenditure on the estate from 1852 to 1893; can you give the rental for that period?—Yes, to 1892 I think it was. Do you wish it every year? I can give it every year.

14,202. Every year. Then I think you mentioned a rent of £628?—That was the value put upon the grazings taken from the farms to make the forest.

14,203. Upon the whole of the grazings?—Upon the whole of the grazings.

14,204. How is that rent arrived at?—Well, it was valued at the time; I think Mr George G. Mackay was the valuator, whom your lordship has no doubt heard of.

14,205. Was that the sum added to the rent of the deer forest to make the total rent of the enlarged deer forest?—That was the total rent of the whole lands converted into deer forest, including the original forest.

14,206. Then how do these figures compare with the rents of the lands before they were afforested?—I can give you that.

14,207. Mr Macleod.—I cannot see how he can give that.—Of course I can; our books are exceedingly well kept.

14,208. What I want to arrive at is this. The £628 was not a rent,—it was a valuation?—Yes.

14,209. And it was a valuation made for the proprietor?—Oh no, for the tenants as well; there were two parties to the bargain.

14,210. But it came out in evidence yesterday that there was a particular addition made to the forest from the grazings of the township of Bunloit, Wester and Easter?—There was no addition made to the forest from the grazings of Easter Bunloit.

14,211. Was not there?—Well, from Bunloit; it came out in evidence that, when rearranging the rents of these tenants, a man had his rent increased?—No, I don't think so.

14,212. Instead of being decreased?—I don't think so. There was a readjustment, as I mentioned, of all the holdings on the estate at that time, and if his rent was increased he got more land. Between 1855 and 1860 the whole estate was surveyed, and the holdings to a great extent readjusted. Every one who lost an acre of grazing that went into the forest got a reduction of rent for it.

14,213. Mr Maccallum.—Did the farmers get a reduction of £628?—I will send you a statement about that,—I think they did, amounting to £626, 2s. £628 is the amount that was returned for the valuation roll, putting £2 on it.

14,214. Mr Macleod.—But you cannot tell us exactly how that valuation was arrived at?—Not just now, but I think I will in this statement of mine. My impression is that neither Major Grant nor I can tell exactly,—he is new to the estate, and I am not very old,—my impression is that the place was valued by Mr George Mackay.

14,215. The Chairman.—Is that an independent valuation made by a skilled man?—Quite an independent valuation.

14,216. It was accepted by the estate?—Accepted by the estate and by the tenants. As a matter of fact, the whole estate was valued by Mr Mackay,—every holding.

14,217. And that was a part of the proceeding?—Yes.

14,218. Mr Sutherland.—May I ask if that is the Mr Mackay who had to do with the Rosehall estate?—That is the gentleman. He was the tenant of Divach at the time.

14,219. Mr Macleod.—Would you be able to supply this information,—whether that £626 odds represents the difference between the old rents of those tenants who had their grazings curtailed or entirely taken away, and the new?—Well, I will give you a short statement giving the rents of the lands before the afforestment, and the rents after, so that you may see the difference.

14,220. The Chairman.—Do you wish to say anything more?—Nothing more.

14,221. I think I have mentioned the principal things I wanted to get from you?—The only thing I would add, not to interrupt you, my lord, is this, that according to his bank book, which I have seen, Mr Bradley Martin spends on an average £10,000 a year in this district, including the town of Inverness.

14,222. That includes the rent?—That includes the rent, of course, the £3100 of rent. The whole of the sum I refer to, I may say, is spent in Inverness and Glen-Urquhart, every penny of it; it covers nothing from the South.

14,223. You mean that he buys locally?—He buys locally, but principally in Inverness.

Drumnadrochit. William Mackay.

14,224. I suppose there are no places of purchase here?—Not many. Of course, that includes workmen about him, and the hay, &c.

14,225. Could you give me an idea how much he spends per annum in wages?—Perhaps Major Grant can help you?—Unfortunately Major Grant has not made out a statement, but we will give you this expenditure under the various heads.

14,226. When does his lease expire?—I wrote a new lease for him last year, for three years. There is this season and the next to run.

14,227. Mr Maccallum.—Will the statement show how much of the expenditure goes to the crofters?—[The Chairman.—We will be able to judge from the nature of the expenditure whether the crofters will benefit]. We would like to know how much is purchased from crofters, as compared with what he gets from the large farmers and the home farm?—We will endeavour to give you that. The home farm, I may mention frankly, as I said yesterday, supplies the shooting tenants as far as it can, but it is a small farm for such an estate, and the bulk of the supplies are bought from outside. With respect to an insinuation made yesterday that after the home farm the factor's farm came, I spoke to the Major this morning, and asked about that. Major Grant said 'well, I will tell 'you this, I was the last man last year who sold hay, 'because he would not give me enough. He went to 'the other farmers and the crofters before he took mine.'

14,228. Mr Sutherland.—The statement was, if I remember rightly, that an agreement was entered into, and you did not deny it?—I did. I said it was only in reference to the home farm that he was to take his supplies; every shooting tenant does that, you know.

14,229. The Chairman.—I understand Mr Mackay's answer to be a denial of the insinuation?—The second insinuation? It was insinuated that there was an arrangement by which after getting supplies as far as possible from the home farm, the shooting tenant was next to get them from the factor's farm, then from the manager's farm, and after that from the late gamekeeper's farm. I say that the statement about his going from the one to the other is absolutely untrue.

14,230. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the expenditure, you say you derived your knowledge from the bank book. But does Mr Martin not pay any other accounts which may pass through the bank book?—Not from the north.

14,231. You see it would be difficult for us to contrast the figures unless you could also give us a statement of the expenditure of the crofters?—What do you mean by that?

14,232. Whatever they expend on household expenses and otherwise.—Of course, I cannot go to every crofter's fireside and ask how much it costs him to live through the year.

14,233. Mr Munro.—I suppose that the shooting tenant spends the £10,000 mainly in the gratification of his own pleasure?—I have no doubt if he did not like it he would not spend it.

14,234. Does he spend any of it in improvements or other useful work?—Well, he is very generous.—I do not think, my lord, that that is a subject that we have any right to go into.

14,235. The Chairman.—I doubt the propriety of pursuing this farther.—I should prefer personally not to go into it farther.

14,236. Mr Sutherland.—You volunteered a statement as to the expenditure of a gentleman who is in the occupation of this land; and the proper comparison would be the expenditure of the people from whom this land was taken?—I cannot give you that.

14,237. Mr Maccallum.—You volunteered the statement of the expenditure yourself?—Oh yes.

14,238. You were not asked to give it?—I volunteered it.

14,239. Mr Macleod.—We are entitled to know how you make it up.

14,240. Mr Munro.—I take it that your object in making the statement was to show that it is an advantage to the estate to have that expenditure?—That there is a lot of money spent in the district that otherwise would not be spent in it; that is my sole object.

Drumnadrochit. William Mackay.

14,241. But I wish to say that there is not much of that £10,000 spent in permanent improvements or other productive labour; it is principally spent on luxuries?—Well, it is a very good thing to spend money on luxuries; somebody benefits.

14,242. Mr Macleod.—The people do not benefit by these luxuries; they have no luxuries to sell?—Oh, they have, you would be surprised.

14,243. The Chairman.—Does any commissioner desire that Major Grant should be examined, or are we satisfied with the information afforded by Mr Mackay; or does Major Grant desire to be examined himself?

14,244. Major Grant.—Mr Mackay's statement is really the same as mine; we compared notes, and my statement is contained in his.

14,245. Witness.—This is really Major Grant's statement as well as mine; I have given you the whole of it.

14,246. Mr Sutherland.—I have only to remark, my lord, on the inconvenience of being referred yesterday, when Mr Mackay was under examination, to Major Grant for certain information, and of, therefore, postponing questions on that account.

14,247. Witness.—It was only at the very outset that I referred to him.

14,248. The Chairman.—Do you desire Major Grant to be examined, Mr Sutherland.

14,249. Mr Sutherland.—Oh no, I have no desire.

14,250. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Might I be allowed to ask the witness one or two questions?—Mr Mackay has made an absolute denial. He said that a certain insinuation was absolutely untrue. I would like Mr Mackay to state, apart from the insinuation to which he refers, in order that that point may be thoroughly cleared, is it a fact that there is an agreement between the estate and the shooting tenant, that the shooting tenant shall buy and will buy the farm produce from the home farm? Is that absolutely true or absolutely untrue?—I admitted, my lord.

14,251. That it is absolutely true?—Don't put words into my mouth, Mr Macrae; I know how to answer. [The Chairman.—You must allow the witness to answer.] The lease provides, my lord, that the shooting tenant shall take his provisions, or whatever farm produce he requires from the home farm at current prices. You will find that provision in every shooting lease where there is a home farm at all.

14,252. Would Mr Mackay now give us the names of the lands that have been in the occupation of tenants at one time, but that have within the last sixteen years been added to the home farm?—Within the last sixteen years?

14,253. Sixty?—Well, Balmacaan, the upper Balmacaan lands, were added to the home farm. These were all. But the farm of Clunebeg, which was for many years in the hands of Mr Mitchell, a non-resident tenant—Mr Mitchell, C.E., Inverness—is now in the proprietor's hands.

14,254. Is there an estate regulation against the letting of lands on this property to absentee tenants?—I do not think so, but I will put in a copy of the regulations.

14,254*a*. Mr Sutherland.—But surely you know if there is?—I don't think there is, but I should prefer to refer to the regulations themselves.

14,255. The Chairman.—A witness is always entitled, when a question is put bearing on a document, to refer to that document?—These are the estate regulations. (Hands in document.)

14,256. Mr Donald Macrae.—Has the estate in any case within your knowledge given the preference to an absentee tenant over a native tenant living in the glen, in the matter of letting land?—The estate has never in my knowledge given preference to an absentee tenant.

14,257. Did the tenant of Divach, who is also governor of the poorhouse I think in Dumbarton, get the preference over any native in regard to the croft on the hill there a few years ago?—He was selected as the tenant of that farm, but he is a native of the glen; his forefathers have been here for hundreds of years, and he has got a house in the glen in which his mother was living at the time.

Drumnadrochit.

William Mackay.

14,258. Is he a pluralist farmer?—He has got his own original croft, and a sub-tenancy of another croft near it; and he has the farm of Divach.

14,259. And he has farms elsewhere in the country?—He has got a farm, I understand, in Dumbartonshire.

14,260. And he is an absentee farmer?—No, he goes from place to place.

14,261. He is still governor of this institution in Dumbarton?—I really cannot tell you; I don't know much about his private affairs.

14,262. What time of the year does he occupy this farm?—I cannot tell you, but he is there pretty often.

14,263. Does he occupy it two months in the year?—I cannot tell you.

14,264. Does he occupy it one month in the year?—I cannot tell you.

14,265. I should like to ask some questions with regard to the home farm. I should like to ask the names of the tenants who sell any produce or who have within the last five years sold any produce direct to Mr Bradley Martin?—I gave you a reason yesterday for not divulging the names of the tenants with whom I had to do, and I am not going to do it.

14,266. Will you give the names privately to the Royal Commission?—Yes, I will give a list privately, on condition that it is not to be published, my lord. [The Chairman.—That is giving it privately.]

14,267. Very privately. Will you consent to my seeing that list?—No. I am perfectly willing that all the commissioners should see it, but no outsider.

14,268. Is the home farm worked to a profit?—No, I believe it is not.

14,269. How much does the proprietor lose by it every year?—Well, she loses so much that if you are willing to give a very good rent for it, she will let it to you.

14,270. My lord, I should like to know how much the proprietrix has lost by this home farm each year?—I must decline to answer that question. [The Chairman.—I don't think the witness is bound to answer that question at all.]

14,271. There is a portion, my lord, of that farm, the portion that was taken from the people, that certainly was worked to a handsome profit to the proprietrix during the time these people had it. And our contention is that the same portion, and more, could be worked to a profit so far as the proprietrix is concerned.

14,272. The Chairman.—But, Mr Macrae, you did not lay the basis for your question on that footing. You simply asked him the general question whether the home farm was being worked to a profit, and he declined to answer that question, as I think he is quite within his right in doing. [Witness] I said it was not worked to a profit, but I must decline to give the loss, or to give any particulars.

14,273. I must say I don't think you are bound to disclose any particulars with regard to Lady Seafield's private expenditure.

14,274. Mr Donald Macrae.—Might I ask whether the portion called Balmacaan, to which we have been referring, and which has been taken from the people, has been worked to a profit since the people were evicted?—That portion has been amalgamated with the home farm for the last thirty years, or for the last twenty-five years, and it is impossible now to separate the profits of one field from another.

14,275. Was that land to which I refer, worked to a profit to the proprietrix during the time the people had it as tenants?—Oh, but it could not have been worked to the benefit of the proprietrix if the people had it you know.

14,276. Was that land used to a profit to the proprietrix during that time?—Do you mean did she get any rents?

14,277. Yes?—Well, she got rent occasionally, but a good deal of arrears had to be struck off.

14,278. You mentioned that there were eight tenants. Could you tell us whether they were all in arrear?—I cannot tell you.

14,279. Would you be surprised to know that the majority of them were not a penny in arrear?—Well, I cannot speak about that particular time, but I know that in 1853 almost every tenant in Glen-Urquhart was in arrear.

14,280. How many years since they were evicted has the home farm been worked to a profit?—I cannot tell you, but I know that I was consulted with in the last two months, as to letting the farm.

14,281. Has it been worked at all to a profit any year since the people were evicted?—It has certainly, but there has been very great depression, you know, within the last few years. It used to be worked to a profit.

14,282. Was the rent of that farm reduced to what the estate considered a fair rent at the time the others were reduced?—Yes.

14,283. How many years back is it since that farm has showed the last profit?—I cannot tell you.

14,284. Will you undertake to send in a statement bearing on that question?—I don't think so; I don't think I will.

14,285. Well, I am very much disappointed, my lord, at the answers which Mr Mackay has given, and I am also very much disappointed that the manager of the home farm is not there to give information; because a very direct statement is made before the Royal Commission here that this deer forest is a great blessing to the people in this particular respect, that the shooting tenant buys produce from these tenants; and now we are refused to get the names of the tenants from whom the produce is bought.

14,286. The Chairman.—Did you send any notice to Mr Garland that you wished to examine him?

14,287. Mr Donald Macrae.—I gave notice to Mr Mackay last night before the Royal Commission here that I should like it very much. [Witness.—I never heard it, my lord.]

14,288. The Chairman.—Mr Macrae stated he would like to ask some questions about the home farm.

14,289. Mr Donald Macrae.—Regarding the management of the home farm, and I asked Mr Mackay if I would have an opportunity of examining the manager, and of getting certain information, and he said he would undertake that it would be given.

14,290. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I never heard you say anything about the manager of the home farm.

14,291. Mr Donald Macrae.—Perhaps I did not mention him by name, but I said I would like to have an opportunity of asking him questions.

14,292. Witness.—I did not even hear that.

14,293. The Chairman.—Oh yes, I heard that.—Very well, my lord.

14,294. Mr Donald Macrae.—Well, I must say, my lord, that I am very much disappointed with regard to this matter. I think we are entitled to ask for it.

14,295. The Chairman.—If you wish to obtain farther information which the Commission deems relevant, you are at perfect liberty, as on any other occasion, to ask the attendance of such witnesses as you think can best give that information.

14,296. Mr Donald Macrae.—Well, I am entirely in the hands of the Royal Commission in this matter; but here a direct statement has been made that the deer forest is a great benefit to the glen, because, among other things, the farm produce of the tenants of the glen is bought by the shooting tenant; and here by the witness for the estate we are told that we shall not be supplied with the name of one single individual who sells his produce to the shooting tenant?—I did not say so; I declined to supply it publicly, but I have undertaken to supply his lordship with a statement for the private use of the commissioners.

14,297. But I want to point out that Mr Mackay totally objects to my seeing the names of any such?—Certainly; you have no right to see it.

14,298. I am under the painful necessity of asking Mr Mackay this question in conclusion. I am sorry to have to ask the question.—[The Chairman.—What is the question?]—I shall give the question this moment. Is it the fact that the farm manager sells some of the farm produce of the home farm to a tenant here and there in the glen, and binds himself that within a certain time he will buy it back from them with a profit; and does it happen thus that there is an appearance in some transactions that produce is bought from native tenants, when actually and really there is nothing but a transfer of produce from the home farm nominally?—I don't believe that is the fact, and I can certainly say that Lady Seafield is not aware of that fact, if it is a fact. [The Chairman.—Have you heard of it before?—I never heard of it before.]

14,299. Well, so far as we are concerned, we are boycotted in regard to this information.—I am very sorry to say we are practically boycotted, and I cannot ask any further questions.

14,300. The Chairman.—Do you wish to examine Major Grant?

14,301. Mr Donald Macrae.—If he undertakes to give evidence with regard to the home farm,—to speak with the knowledge that the manager of a home farm ought to possess.

14,302. Major Grant.—I decline to give any undertaking.

14,303. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I must say I think, since this charge is brought here, that the gentleman who has just spoken ought to have given the manager of the home farm notice that he was going to bring this question forward, because this is a very serious charge that he has made. I think he should have given notice before he brought forward such a charge as he has now made.

14,304. Mr Donald Macrae.—My lord, I have been taken quite as much by surprise as any member of the Royal Commission could have been. I was told here yesterday that Mr Mackay was not to be here at all to-day.

14,305. Witness.—Are you sorry to see me here?

14,306. Mr Donald Macrae.—I am very glad to see that Mr Mackay is better; I am delighted that he is able to be here.

14,307. The Chairman.—I rather imagine Mr Mackay did not intend to appear again to-day. Witness.—That is the case, but my experience here yesterday has benefited me so much that I have been able to come back.

14,308. Mr Donald Macrae.—I had thought one of the delegates from the glen would be under examination when I came in, and I find that the Royal Commission are still investigating matters that were before them yesterday. I certainly thought that Major Grant and the manager of the home farm would have been here to give evidence to-day, after the remarks I made yesterday when Mr Mackay declined to answer any questions with regard to the home farm.

14,309. The Chairman.—Mr Macrae, what is your foundation for that charge—the charge implied in your question to Mr Mackay?

14,310. Mr Donald Macrae.—Am I under examination, my lord?

14,311. The Chairman.—No, no, you can answer or not, just as you please.

14,312. Mr Donald Macrae.—I am refused an answer to the questions I have put, and while I am not under examination as a delegate am I going to stand to be examined as if I were? I undertake to give the Royal Commission every assistance, but I refuse to answer questions while I am refused answers to my questions.

14,313. The Chairman.—I must ask Major Grant the question. Do you refuse to be examined about the home farm, Major Grant?

14,314. Major Grant.—Yes, my lord, I do.

14,315. The Chairman.—You do?

14,316. Major Grant.—Yes. It is a private matter. I refuse to answer any incompetent questions.

14,317. The Chairman.—The question of competency of evidence, of course, rests with the Commissioners; but do you refuse to be examined upon any matter with regard to the home farm?

14,318. Major Grant.—Well, I think it has been answered already. Drumnadrochit.

14,319. The Chairman.—That is another thing, but are you willing to put yourself under examination with regard to all relevant questions. William Mackay.

14,320. Mr Mackay.—My lord, I will undertake this, that an account for the last year will be sent to your lordship, showing whether there was a profit or not.

14,321. The Chairman.—That is another matter. Are you willing to be examined and give an answer to all relevant questions with regard to the home farm?

14,322. Major Grant.—Yes, my lord, I would rather not, because I consider it is a private matter of Lady Seafield's.

14,323. The Chairman.—It is not what you consider, but what the Commission consider admissible evidence. Now, are you willing to answer all admissible and relevant questions?

14,324. Major Grant.—No, my lord.

14,325. The Chairman.—You are not?

14,326. Major Grant.—I beg pardon; I have misunderstood the question.

14,327. The Chairman.—Are you willing to answer all admissible questions?

14,328. Major Grant.—Yes, my lord.

14,329. The Chairman.—Kindly stand forward.

MAJOR WILLIAM GRANT, Factor for the Countess Dowager of Seafield (70)—examined. William Grant.

14,330. The Chairman.—How long have you been factor on this estate?—For nineteen years.

14,331. When you came to the estate, was the deer forest in existence?—Oh, yes, all except the grazing of Drumclune, which was added to it after I came—I think the year I came.

14,332. Can you tell me what the rent of the forest was in the year you came?—Not without reference to papers. [Mr Mackay.—The statement that I have undertaken to produce, my lord, will show that.]

14,333. Very well. Now in what year was Drumclune added?—In 1872, I think.

14,334. Can you tell me what addition was made to the rent then? or perhaps that will appear in the statement?—That will be in the statement. The sheep were taken over from Drumclune at valuation.

14,335. Now some questions have been asked with regard to the home farm. What is the extent of the home farm?—Well, we will get that from the paper that is promised. But let me ask this; the home farm, I understand, is in the hands of the proprietrix?—Yes.

14,336. Is there any agreement with regard to the furnishing of supplies by the home farm to the shooting tenant?—The lease expresses it.

14,337 The lease sets forth the obligation?—That the home farm will supply him as far as its proceeds will allow; and then Mr Martin gets the home farm manager to buy in from the country to supply the deficiency.

14,338. Where does he buy in?—From the farmers round about.

14,339. Does he buy any from crofters?—Yes. I paid a crofter the day before yesterday for 303 dozen eggs for Mr Martin.

14,340. 303 dozen eggs from a crofter?—Yes, John Cumming, Balnaglack,—I think that is the name. Or James Cumming, it may be.

14,341. Has Mr Bradley Martin any dealings with the crofters direct?—No, all through the home farm.

14,342. Now do any transactions so far as you know take place of the nature indicated by Mr Macrae's question?—No, my lord, as far as I know, I do not think so; the accounts are audited every year by the Commissioner.

14,343. Have you ever heard of such a transaction?—Never.

14,344. That is to say, a kind of fictitious transfer by the home farm to the crofter, and then a re-sale by the crofter to the home farm on behalf of the shooting

Drumnadrochit.

William Grant.

tenant?—I never heard that. I am sure I must have heard of it if anything of the kind had happened.

14,345. If it exists, you have no knowledge of it?—No knowledge of it whatever.

14,346. The manager of the home farm is Mr Garland?—Yes.

14,347. Is he here to-day?—I don't think so; he is working. [Mr Garland.—Yes, I am here.]

14,348. Would you stand up, if you please. You are quite willing to be examined, I suppose?

14,349. Mr Garland.—Oh, I am not prepared, but Mr Mackay is here representing me, and he has all my books and all the returns I keep.

14,350. The Chairman.—I am very glad you are here, however. [To witness]. What rent does James Cumming pay?—I think he pays £12, he has two small places.

14,351. You mentioned a transaction in eggs. Does the home farm get other produce than that from the crofters?—This is merely for the gamekeepers department,—for feeding pheasants.

14,352. But, of course, that was paid for by Mr Bradley Martin?—Yes, that was paid by me on his behalf. I keep a bank account for my payments on his behalf.

14,353. Are all payments made through you?—To the gamekeepers,—not the coals and the like of that for the cover shooting which he pays himself.

14,354. Are many of these payments through you made to crofters?—I pay merchants and others, but I pay also the home farm. Just the other day I gave a cheque to Mr Garland for hay, £35, that he bought from a farmer.

14,355. But suppose produce is obtained from crofters, how are they paid? Who pays them?—Mr Garland. He has a statement of accounts which he hands in to me every time that Mr Martin is here, showing full details, and all that appears in the home farm accounts, and that is audited by the Commissioner.

14,356. Who is the Commissioner?—Mr Logan of Edinburgh,

14,357. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You heard the question put by Mr Macrae, I suppose? At any rate, as regards the 300 dozen of eggs, it is not very likely that they would be sold previously to Mr Cumming before they were sold by him to you?—No, I do not think so. Very likely he has been gathering them up from other people.

14,358. They did not originate from the home farm, at any rate?—Not from the home farm at all.

14,359. You mentioned something about covert shooting. Does the shooting tenant come here in winter?—He comes here about the 8th of August, and generally stays on till the month of February or March.

14,360. So that he is here not only through the stalking season, but there is a certain amount of expenditure about the house through the whole autumn and winter?—Yes.

14,361. As a rule?—Oh, yes.

14,362. Mr Sutherland.—I wish to ask you one question, Major Grant. The manager has quite his own discretion as to whom he shall buy from outside the home farm?—Certainly, he could buy from whom he likes.

14,363. And you do not interfere in any way with his discretion?—None whatever.

14,364. He buys from whom he likes?—From whom he likes.

14,365. Now then with regard to the 3636 eggs that one man provided, they are supplied by the country round about?—Round about as far as this man can gather them; he could not have that number himself, of course.

14,366. Then as to the price obtained for them?—7d. a dozen.

14,367. How does that compare with the prices they could get for them in Glasgow or Edinburgh?—I don't know.

14,368. Have you any reason to suppose that they get a bigger figure for them than they would by sending them to Glasgow or Edinburgh?—I don't know what the price is in big towns, but 7d. a dozen is considered a very good price here.

Drumnadrochit.

William Grant.

14,369. But you could not say exactly what profit it is to them to sell them here rather than send them away?—No. Of course, it is less trouble to sell them here. [Mr Mackay.—They are not bound to sell them here. Witness.—Oh, no.]

14,370. Then, with regard to the deer forest, you stated the time when Drumclune was added to the forest?—Yes.

14,371. What forest was in existence in 1872?—All except the Drumclune grazings.

14,372. And what was the year of the formation of it for the first time?—1857 I think it was, 1857 or 1858.

14,373. And what was the extent of it at first?—The first afforested was Glencoilty.

14,374. What was first made into forest?—Glencoilty grazing, and the high lands of Lochletter and Shewglie; a year or two afterwards Rusgich was added, which had been in Mr Mitchell's hands.

14,375. And when was the last addition made to it?—1871 I think, 1871 or 1872. I remember that the sheep were down here that were taken over at valuation; a great number of them died, I remember.

14,376. You heard the estimate made as to the probable number of sheep that used to be carried. Have you anything to say as to that?—An old man who was well acquainted with the forest told me it carried 8000.

14,377. So that substantially the figure given is correct?—8000 or thereabout.

14,378. Mr Munro.—You allowed to-day that the home farm was carried on at a considerable loss. Now will not that loss be an item falling to be deducted from the gross rental of the deer forest?—Certainly; it will come off the income of the estate.

14,379. The gross rental of the forest is over £3000, and Mr Mackay has promised to furnish a statement showing what the net rent is which her ladyship receives after deducting the value of grazings, wages, and so on, also the loss on the Balmacaan farm.—Well, I have myself been farming at a loss lately,—a considerable loss, and the farm of Kilmore, which her ladyship has now sanctioned to be broken up in lots, I lost £100 by in the last six years.

14,380. But you admit that this item of loss on Balmacaan farm must necessarily fall to be deducted?—Oh, certainly, from the revenue of the estate.

14,381. Mr Maccallum.—With regard to the grazings incorporated into the deer forest, were the sheep taken over at valuation in every case?—I don't know what was done, I know the Rusgich were, I saw the accounts, and I suppose the rest were also. Rusgich was, and Drumclune, but I can't say what was done with the others.

14,382. Could you provide the exact figures as to the number of sheep taken over at valuation?—I don't know, it is in my office. [Mr Mackay.—I think that is rather a good suggestion, my lord; I will try to get that]. It may be in the estate office at Cullen.

14,383. It is desirable that we should have the exact number taken over?—Oh, certainly.

14,384. Mr Macleod.—As to this announcement that was made by Mr Mackay to-day about the proposed extension of grazing for these. [Mr Mackay.—No, no; new allotments] new allotments, have you had any communication from Lady Seafield?—I arranged it last March, when my accounts were examined by the Commissioner; I said I wished to throw up this farm, as I was losing money by it. Then she said you had better give it to the people; break it up as far as it will go among the Lewiston householders. That would give about 2½ acres to each.

14,385. Mr Sutherland.—Are you in a position to state the conditions upon which you are to give that land to the cottars?—No, I am not. There may be crops to be taken over at valuation,—first and second year's crops,—and unexhausted manure, and things of that kind.

14,386. The Chairman.—This expression of willingness on Lady Seafield's part to assign this land to the Lewiston crofters was made in March last?—March last. But, then, of course, I said it could not take effect until next year.

14,387. Mr Maccallum.—And the application was made in 1887?—In 1887; but we kept it on, hoping probably the minister would take it.

14,388. And it was in your occupation from that time till now?—Till now.

14,389. Mr Donald Macrae.—I understood the Major to say that quite recently he bought 3636 eggs from the tenant.—I did not say I bought them; I paid for them.

14,390. Paid for them. Is the gentleman to whom payment was made James Cumming, general and provision merchant?—I don't know whether he has a shop, but he has some little bits of land.

14,391. Is he a general and provision merchant?—I have not been near his house for years.

14,392. Would Major Grant be surprised to know that this 'tenant' to whom he paid is a general and provision merchant who sells eggs just as he sells butter or yellow cotton?—Well, I suppose he must pay the tenants round about him for the eggs; he would not get them for nothing.

14,393. The Chairman.—Is he a crofter under the Act of Parliament?—Yes.

14,394. Not under lease?—Oh, yes, he is under lease; they are all under lease.

WILLIAM GARLAND, Manager of Balmacaan Home Farm [about 60]—examined.

14,395. The Chairman.—How long have you been manager of the home farm?—For twenty-two years.

14,396. That farm is in the hands of the proprietrix?—Yes.

14,397. Mr Macrae, do you wish to examine this witness?—Mr Macrae.—No, I leave him entirely in your Royal Commissioners' hands.

14,398. You heard the question put by Mr Macrae as to the transactions between you and the crofters?—Yes, I heard the false statement.

14,399. Is there any foundation in fact for the insinuation contained in that question?—Well, I was not prepared to be examined to-day, my lord; I depended on Mr Mackay and Major Grant. [Mr Mackay.—Is there any foundation?]—No foundation.

14,400. Mr Macrae.—Will Mr Garland give the names of the parties from whom he buys produce?—I have got nothing to do with it, sir.

14,401. I think, my lord, the factor stated that it was Mr Garland who made the transactions.—Yes, that is all right.

14,402. The Chairman.—You are asked to give the names of those from whom you buy produce. It is my duty to tell you you are not bound to give these names unless you choose.—Oh, I can do it easily, if I had got time; if I was made aware of it I could do it easily. [Mr Mackay.—You could get them from your books?—Witness. Easily that. Mr Mackay.—I have undertaken to send in a statement privately.]

14,403. Will that satisfy you, Mr Macrae?—[Mr Macrae.—Perfectly satisfied.]

14,404. Mr Sutherland.—I just want to ask you this question, Mr Garland. You have heard what Major Grant said, with regard to purchasing supplies for the shooting tenant outside the home farm. You have an absolute discretion in that matter?—Yes.

14,405. You can buy from whom you like?—From whom I like outside.

14,406. And you exercise your own discretion?—Yes.

14,407. And no person is responsible for what is done in outside purchase, but you?—Nobody.

14,408. Mr Munro.—I think I overheard you remark that you heard some false statements made here to-day. By whom were these false statements made?—Some gentleman round here.

14,409. What are the false statements you refer to?—Witness to Mr Mackay. What was that again, Mr Mackay?—[Mr Mackay.—Do you mean the question that was put to me by Mr Macrae.]

14,410. The Chairman.—(Question No. 14,298 read over twice to witness). Is there any foundation for that statement?—Untrue, my lord. There is a merchant at Milton to whom I give my surplus produce at a very nominal price, and when the family comes to Balmacaan House, I take stuff from him at double or it may be three times the price in the quiet season when he buys from me. I am not getting money from the merchant for what I give him in the slack season, I balance with him at the end. That is all the statement.

14,411. Mr Munro.—You say you sell this produce to the merchant at a nominal price?—The price is low at the time.

14,412. What do you mean by a nominal price?—Of course, the country rates are very small,—say eggs may be worth 5d. or 6d. in the quiet season when he takes my surplus, but they may be worth 18d. or 20d. at the time the family is there.

14,413. Do you mean to say that you sell eggs at 5d. or 6d. a dozen, and buy the same eggs back again at 1s. 6d.?—Not the same eggs; but I buy eggs, or whatever I require, and balance things at the end of the season.

14,414. Mr Gordon.—It appears to amount to this simply, that you sell your surplus produce at the time being, and do not get paid for it at the time, and when you have occasion to buy back, there is a contra account, and the balance of money is paid?—That is so.

14,415. Mr Munro.—But, of course, you are getting the market value for the thing you sell?—Their market value at the time, but I would rather prefer money.

14,416. Mr Maccallum.—Do you actually buy back what you sell to the tenants?—Not at all.

14,417. It is not the same thing you buy back?—It cannot be.

14,418. Mr Donald Macrae.—Your lordship might ask this witness perhaps, did he ever sell anything but eggs, that he bought back again.

14,419. The Chairman.—You see he did not buy eggs back, Mr Macrae. He sold eggs or whatever he had to sell at the current prices, and he said he balanced up with the man at the end of the year.

14,420. Mr Donald Macrae.—Did he sell hay and buy it back again?

14,421. The Chairman.—You hear the question?—Untrue, my lord.

14,422. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Mr Chairman, I should very much like in view of what has passed, to ask Mr Macrae one or two questions, with your permission.

14,423. The Chairman.—Are you willing to be examined, Mr Macrae?

14,424. Mr Donald Macrae.—Certainly not.

14,425. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is it not in our power to put him into the witness-box.

14,426. The Chairman.—Yes, we are entitled under the remit to call for information from any quarter.

14,427. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I beg to ask that Mr Macrae be examined.

14,428. The Chairman.—Would you kindly step forward, Mr Macrae?

14,429 Mr Donald Macrae.—Would your lordship allow me notice?

14,430. The Chairman.—No, I think that is not necessary; we are dealing with a matter with which you are perfectly familiar.

14,431. Mr Donald Macrae.—I certainly would be better prepared after notice to answer the question. I know what the question is.

DONALD MACRAE, 'Balallan,' Plockton—examined.

14,432. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I should like to ask if the insinuation you threw into your question to Mr Mackay was of your own knowledge, or merely from hearsay?—Oh, from hearsay.

Drumnadrochit. Donald Macrae.

14,433. What you picked up in the neighbourhood?—In the glen.

14,434. How long have you been in the glen?—Since Friday.

14,435. You are not a native of the glen?—No.

14,436. Have you been in the glen before?—Yes.

14,437. On business connected with the Commission?—No.

14,438. Are you paid for your services in collecting evidence?—Yes, just as Mr Mackay is paid by the landlord party for collecting evidence, exactly in the same position. Except that he is paid by the landlord party, and I am paid by the people, by subscriptions openly acknowledged in the public prints.

14,439. How do you mean that Mr Mackay is paid for collecting evidence?—He is factor and law agent for this property; he is agent for this property, and factor for a neighbouring one.

14,440. Yes, but he is paid as law agent and factor?—Exactly so, and I am paid as agent and factor for the Land Law Reform Association of Edinburgh and London.

14,441. Have you any other duties than collecting evidence for this Commission in your capacity as agent?—I collect evidence; I assist in collecting evidence; I assist in summarising the evidence; I assist particularly in disabusing the minds of the people, where that is necessary, of false notions, erroneous notions they may have with regard to the powers and functions of this Royal Commission; I assist them also in undergoing examination, and, generally, I assist in equipping them for putting their information in an intelligent manner before the Royal Commission.

14,442. Allow me to say that I think you ought to be very careful what insinuations you bring into your questions against a man's private character?—I made no insinuation; I meant no insinuation. May I be allowed to make a full answer with regard to the statement of Mr Shaw Stewart? My answer is this. I should be very sorry to make any insinuation against any honourable gentleman. I had this repeated to me at second-hand, possibly at third-hand, in the glen. I was very anxious yesterday evening and expressed my desire and anxiety to examine him, to hear examined the manager of the home farm, with the view to bringing out particularly this point, that the home farm does not pay the landlord, while when the people had a particular portion of it, it did pay to that extent. That was particularly what I had in view. Then, I was told that the factor would not give evidence, that the farm manager would not give evidence.

14,443. Mr Mackay.—No, I beg your pardon; I deny that, my lord.

14,444. Witness.—Mr Mackay refused to answer questions.

14,445. Mr Mackay.—I refused to answer a certain question.

14,446. Witness.—I was under the painful necessity of putting certain questions, but I meant no insinuations. If such insinuation appears to the members of the Commission to be contained in my questions, I most sincerely withdraw it.

14,447. Mr Mackay.—And apologise.

14,448. Witness.—Oh, certainly, I would; but I have nothing to apologise for; I think that for bringing out the truth I ought to be complimented, rather than have to apologise.

14,449. The Chairman.—You are satisfied there is no foundation for the insinuation contained in your question?—Perfectly.

14,450. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the question of insinuation, it is a matter of opinion, no doubt; but do you think there is any insinuation contained in a question such as attributes the failure of the crofter system to the indolence of the people?—I think it is not only an insinuation, but a vile reflection upon the character of the noblest race on the face of the earth.

14,451. And are not you aware, as a matter of fact, that such insinuations have been made frequently before us?—Perfectly.

14,452. Against a whole race of people?—A whole race.

14,453. Mr Macleod.—Is it a fact that you have done what you could to facilitate the work of this Commission?—Most decidedly, sir, and I believe that unless I had appeared in this glen within the last five days I believe that two delegates would not have appeared before your Royal Commission to give evidence.

14,454. Is it a fact that you found this hearsay evidence with regard to those sales of produce very widespread in the district?—Very widespread, and one farmer told me that he was losing heavily year by year, and that he never got a single ounce bought off his farm by the estate. And he pointed out particularly that if the produce of the home farm would fail, there were other farms in reserve behind the home farm, and that he was going to the wall, and that he never had an opportunity of selling an ounce of his produce.

14,455. And was the object of your question to settle this matter one way or the other?—To settle it finally. I found fault, I severely censured those who approached me with this and who had not the moral courage themselves to come before the Royal Commission to state what they were stating to me in private; and I felt bound in the interests of truth ultimately to put the question, with a view to having it finally settled.

14,456. Mr Munro.—I suppose I may take it that your sole object in coming to the glen is to assist the Commission?—Most decidedly, and I may mention that last Saturday I went to this Bunloit district of three townships. There was not the remotest possibility that any of them would have come before the Royal Commission, with the exception of a landless cottar, one Donald Mackintosh,—there is not the remotest probability that one of these tenants would have come before the Royal Commission; and at last I infused,—I managed on Saturday night at 9 o'clock to infuse courage into them by telling them that if they would stand shoulder to shoulder and come in a body as delegates on an equal level they would be heard; and it was by getting them in a body,—they had not the courage to appoint delegates, but when I told them that if they came in a body Sheriff Brand would be very glad to see them I found that whether rightly or wrongly they were afraid of coming, but in a body they had less fear.

14,457. I take it that you found considerable difficulty in inducing them to come forward and give evidence?—Extreme difficulty. I mention this case as a case where no delegate would have come at all unless I had been there, and unless I had encouraged them to come in a body.

14,458. To what cause do you attribute that difficulty?—To years and ages of tyranny and oppression; most decidedly.

14,459. That is a system of intimidation?—I think that in this glen in particular a grievous mistake from the moral point of view,—I think a grievous mistake was comitted in the year 1887, when these people were induced to sign leases, instead of being encouraged, as the tenants were in other parts of the country, to demand their rights as conferred upon them by the Crofters Act. This had a most prejudicial effect in this glen, in my humble opinion.

14,460. The Chairman.—We are getting away from the point which you were brought here to speak to.

14,461. Mr Gordon.—May I ask this one question.—Did you find any strong evidence of poverty in this Bunloit place when you went there?—In this glen?

14,462. Yes.—I think this township of Lots.

14,463. I am asking about Bunloit?—Exactly so. I think that place is one of the poorest places I have ever visited. There are places on the west coast where poverty is more apparent, but in those places you have more courage and more manliness; here keeping in view the moral aspect of the case, and the material position of the people, I think they are as poor a people as I can see within the bounds of the country.

14,464. Do you mean poor in spirit, or poor in purse?—Poor in body and poor in soul.

14,465. Did you find material discontent?—Strong discontent, strong discontent, sir,—very strong, and especially with regard to these leases. They feel sorely and they feel keenly that instead of being under the Imperial laws they are under the laws of the estate.

14,466. But you should know that the leases,—the Chairman will put me right if I am wrong,—the leases given in 1887 would not prevent them from coming under the Crofters Act if they chose?—Mr Charles Murray of Lochcarron repudiated and cast to winds every legal document by which the people on his property were bound, and he made feuars and leaseholders welcome to the benefits of the Crofters Act if they chose.

14,467. I merely state a question as to what you have said. They can come back to the Crofters Commission if they choose, irrespective of their leases, if they were not under lease at the date of the Act?—I did not try to question them with regard to the terms of their leases; but they feel.

14,468. But you are quite entitled to go back and question them yet?—I mean to do it. I mean to visit the glen pretty frequently after this.

14,469. Mr Mackay.—Do you know any tenant in Glen-Urquhart who was induced against his own will to sign a lease?—No.

14,470. You do not?—No.

14,471. Are you aware that if the crofters in Glen-Urquhart were simply under the Crofters Act they would not be entitled to any assistance whatever from the proprietor?—They are not entitled.

14,472. Answer my question; are you aware of that?—I am aware; and I am aware that they are not entitled to any assistance as they are,—to no assistance whatever except what the estate is bound to confer by the lease.

14,473. Exactly?—They would be in exactly the same position.

14,474. Are you aware then, I will put it this way, that since 1887 as before, that tenants building houses are supplied with timber, slate, windows, and other material by the proprietor?—Before the leases?

14,475. Since 1887, since the leases were entered into?—Exactly so.

14,476. Are you aware of that?—Exactly so.

14,477. Are you aware of that?—I am aware not only of that, but I am aware also that these houses,—not only the timber but the houses themselves,—become the property of the proprietor at the end of the lease.

14,478. You don't know that?—I saw the leases.

14,479. You don't know that?—I saw the leases. [The Chairman.—He has given his answer.]

14,480. Are you aware that they would not be entitled to such assistance from the proprietor if they had been simply under the Crofters Act?—I know that they believed.

14,481. Never mind what they believed; I want to know from your own personal knowledge, are you aware that if they were simply under the Act they would not be entitled to such assistance from the proprietor?—I know that and I know more. I know that if they were under the Act they would have security of tenure, and be as independent as the proprietor, and their improvements would be their own,—any improvements they made would be their own for all time coming, and they could will their tenant-right.

14,482. They can will their tenant-rights now?—I am not aware of that.

14,483. I know Glen-Urquhart very much better than you do; I know the people of Glen-Urquhart, I am one of themselves, and I am proud to say they are the most independent people I have ever met.

14,484. The Chairman.—We are a little away from the main point, but I put this question to you. Is it your belief from the investigations you have made, that the crofters with whom you have conferred would prefer to be under the Act rather than under the leases?—Most decidedly, they would prefer being under the Crofters Act.

DONALD MACKINTOSH, Cattle Dealer, Bunloit (40). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.

Drumnadrochit. Donald Mackintosh.

14,485. The Chairman.—Which Bunloit are you in, Wester or Easter?—Well, I cannot speak the English, my lord.

14,486. Your examination may not take very long, would you kindly begin in English?—I would rather have the Gaelic, my lord.

14,487. Mr Donald Macrae.—He has very little to say, my lord.

14,488. The Chairman.—I was going to see if I could not abbreviate the matter and save time. Tell us your age in English at any rate?—40.

14,489. I suppose you were here yesterday?—Yes.

14,490. And you heard the evidence?—No, I did not give my evidence yesterday.

14,491. But you were present in the school here?—Yes.

14,492. And you heard what the other witnesses said?—Yes.

14,493. Do you agree with their evidence?—Oh, yes.

14,494. Have you any addition to make; is there any additional statement you would like to make, or may we take your evidence as agreeing with what we heard yesterday from the crofters?—I agree with it, but I am not in the same list; I have only half an acre altogether.

14,495. Are you a cottar?—Yes.

14,496. What rent do you pay?—10s.

14,497. Well, I think you said, Mr Macrae, he has very little to say.

14,498. Mr Donald Macrae.—His uncle was evicted from Balmacaan, and he knows places in the deer forest that would suit him immensely well.

14,499. The Chairman.—Oh, yes, we have heard a good deal of evidence yesterday, you know, and we are going to look at it.

14,500. Mr Donald Macrae.—He may mention some places that were not mentioned.

14,501. The Chairman.—Is there anything particular that you wish to tell us about the deer forest?—I have nothing to say except what Mr Macdougall said yesterday.

14,502. That is what I thought; I think we may take you as simply concurring in the evidence given by Mr Macdougall, and keep in view that we are all of us going to see the place ourselves, and will be very glad to meet any of you and receive any explanations on the ground which you think it desirable to afford. Would you be prepared to take land, if suitable land could be got, and be put into the position of a crofter?—Yes.

14,503. Arable land and grazing?—Yes.

14,504. And could you pay a fair rent for such a holding?—Oh, yes.

14,505. Without any assistance?—Oh, I would try.

14,506. You could build a house and steading and proceed to stock and work the land?—Oh, yes.

14,507. You would undertake all that risk?—Yes, I would.

14,508. And you would look to being able to pay rent without assistance from outside?—Yes, I would try to do that.

14,509. And do you think you could?—Oh, yes.

14,510. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is it a long time since you wanted land in the forest? Have you wished for land in the forest for a long time past?—I was not speaking about the forest.

14,511. Is there not land in the forest?—There is some good land.

14,512. But how long is it since you wanted some land there? For how long have you wished to have some land there?—I did not have any desire to get land from the forest since the forest was formed.

14,513. Do you want to get it there now or do you not?—Yes, if the forest is broken down, I would be glad to get part of it.

14,514. I want to know this; how long have you

Drumnadrochit.

Donald Mackintosh.

made up your mind that you would like to take up land in the forest? How long is it since you first made up your mind to take the land in the forest?—Ever since I heard that the forest was to be broken down to be occupied.

14,515. Will you tell me how long you have heard that; for a few weeks past, since a few weeks ago?—I heard it a considerable time before that.

14,515*a*. Last year?—I believe I did.

14,516. Before last year?—I do not remember very well just now.

14,517. Who told you the forest would be broken down?—Oh, none.

14,518. How did you get the idea, who put the idea into your head?—Oh, we are seeing things.

14,519. It is what you see in the newspapers, and until you saw this, until the newspapers put it into your head, you had not any idea of asking for land in the forest?—I was asking land in other parts of the estate.

14,520. In what parts?—I was asking land in Bunloit opposite where I am, and I was also asking land in Divach.

14,521. Arable?—Yes.

14,522. Not pasture?—No, pasture forbye the arable.

14,523. You wanted both arable and pasture?—Yes.

14,524. Which do you want most, arable or pasture?—I would like to have them together.

14,525. You say you asked for this land; whom did you ask for it?—Major Grant.

14,525*a*. When did you ask him?—About four years.

14,526. Four years since?—Yes.

14,527. And what did he tell you?—He told me that he would see about it.

14,528. I suppose he told you there was a difficulty of finding it?—But I did not get it.

14,529. Do you know of any arable land, that is not in occupation at present, that you would like to take up?—No.

14,530. You don't. There is no land in the neighbourhood?—No.

14,531. That is not in occupation?—Not in the meantime.

14,531*a*. And, therefore, if you had any arable land given you, it would have to be somebody else's?—Yes, unless we got a bit of the forest.

14,532. Now, I want to know, did you have a meeting the other day about asking for land in the forest in Bunloit?—I was at the meeting.

14,533.—Did Mr Macrae, on the part of the Land League, tell you that if you all spoke up together you would probably destroy the forest?—Oh, well, very little Mr Macrae said, but they were bound to keep the meeting except Mr Macrae was going there at all.

14,534. The Chairman.—I did not catch your answer.

14,535. [The Interpreter].—They were to hold the meeting, I think he means, whether Mr Macrae went there or not, but Mr Macrae was there.

14,536. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Did Mr Macrae take a leading part in addressing the meeting?—Yes.

14,537. And did he advise you to tell the same story, and ask for the land in the forest, and that you would probably get it if you did?—Is that the kind of thing he said?—First, they had their own opinions.

14,537*a*. But did he address you in that form?—He spoke, in a manner, in that way about the forest.

14,538. Mr Sutherland.—You were asked a question with regard to applying for the deer forest, and you were asked also who put the idea into your head. May I ask you if it was not the presence of the forest itself that put the idea into your head?—If others were getting portions of the forest it would be as necessary for me to get it as any other.

14,539. But was it the presence of the forest itself that made you think of getting it,—the fact that the land was devoted to rearing deer that before had been in the possession of people?—Ay, it was long since it was in my head that I should like to get some land. I was very much confined in the place I was in, and required to get land.

Drumnadrochit.

Donald Mackintosh.

14,540. In fact, it was in your head since ever the deer forest was made?—Yes, I should have a part of it before now.

14,541. And it was no man from outside that put the idea into your head?—No, no.

14,542. Mr William Mackay, agent for the Countess Dowager of Seafield.—The land which you applied for in Divach, four or five years ago, was the farm of Divach?—Yes, sir.

14,542*a*. You made an offer for the whole farm?—Yes.

14,543. Do you remember what rent you offered?—I did not offer a rent at all.

14,544. Well, do you know what the rent is, including the cottage?—The cottage following is it?

14,545. Yes.—£120.

14,546. And that is the farm that you offered for?—Yes.

14,547. The Chairman.—What rent were you willing to give?—Any rent they would get from another man.

14,548. You were willing to enter into competition for the land?—Yes.

14,549. And you would have given £120?—Yes.

14,550. You were quite able to pay that?—Oh, well, I would try if I could get it.

14,550*a*. Mr Donald Macrae.—Your lordship might ask him if his father was in the same place before, and his grandfather.

14,551. The Chairman.—Which place?

14,552. Mr Donald Macrae.—That place that he applied for—Divach

14,553. The Chairman.—Was your father in Divach?—Yes, and my grandfather before.

14,554. What rent did he pay?—£60.

14,555. And your grandfather, what rent did he pay?—I think it was £60.

14,556. Mr Donald Macrae.—Is all the land that your father and grandfather had in the farm of Divach to-day?—No, nor the half of it.

14,557. What has been done with the rest of it?—Just spread with deer.

14,558. The Chairman.—Is it farm or forest?—Forest, they had just to make it forest.

14,559. Mr Donald Macrae.—Who built the house that you live in in Lots?—My father.

14,560. Did he get any assistance?—Not a penny.

14,560*a*. And if you would get a holding in the forest, do you know a suitable place in the forest? Have you a suitable place in your eye?—Oh, yes, Glencoiltie will do me fine.

14,561. Would you be able to build a house there?—Yes.

14,562. And steadings?—Yes.

14,563. And stock it?—Yes, and stock it.

14,564. And would you be willing to pay any rent that an independent body of men would fix as a fair rent?—Yes.

14,565. I come now to the meeting. I am sorry to have to refer to the matter, but I must refer to it at very considerable length, my lord. When I went to the district of Bunloit on Saturday, on whom did I make straight?—Me.

14,566. Was your name in before the Royal Commission before this?—Yes.

14,567. Was the name of any other person from that quarter in before the Royal Commission?—No, not one.

14,568. But I told you not to tell them at all who I was?—Yes.

14,569. Did I enter into conversation with anybody before the meeting?—No one.

14,570. Did I speak to you the whole time?—Yes.

14,571. Did the meeting meet in the school before I went in, or did I drag them after me?—Oh, you were going in behind them, the most of them were all in before we went in at all.

14,571*a*. And you and I went in together?—Yes.

14,572. Did I tell you not to tell who I was?—Yes.

Drumnadrochit.

Donald Mackintosh.

14,573. Was it they that spoke first, or was it I?—They; they spoke first.

14,574. Did I say a word until the last man of them had the last word about their grievances?—No.

14,575. Can you give me the name of the first man that spoke?—Ewen Mackintosh.

14,576. He was the chairman?—Yes.

14,577. Do you remember what he said?—Oh, well, I cannot mind. [The Chairman.—He cannot recollect.]

14,578. I will ask you this. Did he say that in 1859 or about that time, the hill-grazing was taken from him and made into a forest?—Yes, he said so.

14,579. Did he mention the number of sheep he had before then?—Yes.

14,580. What was it?—60, I think, or 100; I am not very sure.

14,581. The Chairman.—Looking to what has come out, you are quite entitled to ask him as to the share you took in the proceedings, but I can hardly allow hearsay evidence as to what passed in the meeting generally.

14,582. Mr Macrae.—I want to show that the whole evidence of their grievances came out at the meeting before I spoke.

14,583. The Chairman.—You must take that generally.

14,584. Mr Macrae.—Did one of them say that he had 150 sheep before then, and that he has only 10 now?—I think so.

14,585. Did they speak about the deer doing damage to their crop?—Yes.

14,586. Did one of them say that he saw, two nights before then, 15 stags eating his corn?—Yes.

14,587. Did I offer to speak, or was I asked to speak?—You were asked to speak.

14,588. What did they ask me? Tell us what they said in Gaelic now?—That, if Mr Macrae could tell them a better manner of telling the story than they themselves were telling, they would be glad to hear him speak.

14,589. And what did I tell them to do; what way did I put before them for putting forward their case? They asked my advice, and what advice did I give?—There is nothing better for them to get than the pasture for their cattle.

14,590. What did I ask them to do?

14,591. The Chairman.—What did Mr Macrae advise you to do?

14,592. Mr Macrae.—As a meeting?—Just to go on with the meeting as they were asking.

14,593. What is the next step I told them? They told their grievances themselves; what was the next step I wanted them to take? I want your answer without suggesting anything. I told them the Royal Commission was to sit on Tuesday.

14,594. The Chairman.—Are you able to answer the question?—Yes, but I do not mind of it.

14,595. Mr Macrae.—Did I ask each township to appoint two men, and that one of them would speak and that the other would say he concurred?—Oh, yes, that is right.

14,596. Did they begin to appoint the delegates then?—Yes.

14,597. And did I walk out as soon as they began to appoint the delegates?—Yes.

14,598. The Chairman.—I think that is quite enough.

14,599. Mr Shaw Stewart.—How was it they came to ask Mr Macrae to give them his advice if they did not know who he was?—They did not know at the beginning, but they knew towards the end of the meeting who he was.

Duncan Grant.

DUNCAN GRANT, Mason, Lewiston (43).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

14,600. The Chairman.—Did you hear the evidence of Macdougall?—Yes.

14,601. And do you concur in that evidence?—Yes, I agree with what he said with regard to the lands he spoke about, but that is not the place I am going to speak about.

Drumnadrochit.

14,602. What land do you wish to speak about?—I am sent here to speak for the cottars at Lewiston.

Duncan Grant.

14,603. Well, we will be glad to hear what you have to say.—I have a letter signed by twenty; I have it here.

14,604. What is the representation you are to make to us?—There are thirty-five cottars in Lewiston, and this letter is signed by twenty.

14,605. Let me see the letter.—(Document produced). That is simply a list of names on the back of the secretary's intimation. What do you wish to say on their and your own behalf?—We wish to say that we are confined in that place; we have no land except a garden, the most of us.

14,606. Anything more?—Several of us have small crofts, but none except four have enough to keep a cow all the year round.

14,607. Anything more?—The best croft in the township is in the occupancy of Mr Mackay as he himself told you.

14,608. Mr William Mackay.—I always thought it was the worst, my lord.

14,609. The Chairman.—That is always the opinion a crofter has.

14,610. Mr Sutherland.—Do you know any suitable land on which you could get additional holdings?—Plenty of it.

14,611. Where is it?—Kilmore would suit the place, it adjoins my end of the township, and Kilmore would be suitable.

14,612. Did you hear what Mr Mackay said here to-day about the intention of dividing the land among them?—I was not in.

14,613. Well, Mr Mackay intimated that about 28 acres of land was to be divided among the people there.

14,614. The Chairman.—What Mr Mackay said was that Lady Seafield has communicated her willingness to allocate to each of the Lewiston crofters.

14,615. Mr William Mackay.—To certain cottars, my lord.

14,616. The Chairman.—To certain cottars in Lewiston,—do you include this man?

14,617. Mr William Mackay.—I don't know, my lord; I do not know the names of the cottars.

14,618. The Chairman.—To certain cottars in Lewiston—whether you are included or not I cannot say—additional arable land, from the farm of Kilmore.—That is but a small portion for each that is wanting land in Lewiston.

14,619. That is a matter of opinion.

14,620. Mr Sutherland.—Would you yourself, or any of those whom you represent, be willing to come bodily out of Lewiston, and take a new holding, if such land could be got?—Some of those for whom I speak would be quite willing to do that to-morrow, but I built a house, a goodish house, which I would not like to leave, and on that account I myself would prefer to stay in the village.

14,621. Mr Macleod.—Do you know of any other land, that you think might be made available for those twenty, but the Kilmore farm?—Yes, plenty.

14,622. Where?—Clunebeg there, beside us.

14,623. Who is it occupied by now?—It is now added to Balmacaan.

14,624. The home farm?—Yes.

14,625. Is there any other land?—There is the one half of the farm of Borlum; Macleod, who was the tenant of Borlum, told me he would be glad to give it up if he got compensation.

14,626. Is it a sheep farm or an arable farm?—He cultivates it when it won't yield grass for sheep. [Mr Mackay.—It is an arable farm.]

14,627. Do you know of any other lands?—There is no land near unless they were to leave Lewiston, but there is plenty of land in the forest, and also in the place from which they were sent at Balmacaan.

14,628. Mr Mackay.—You are a mason, are not you?—Yes.

14,629. And you work always at your trade?—Yes.

Drumnadrochit.

John Chisholm.

JOHN CHISHOLM, Labourer, Lewiston (42).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

14,630. The Chairman.—I suppose you can speak English?—Gaelic better.

14,631. You heard the evidence of Duncan Grant?—Yes.

14,632. And do you concur in his evidence?—Yes.

14,633. Have you any addition to make to it?—No.

14,634. Well, I have no further questions.

John Macleod.

JOHN MACLEOD, Merchant, Invermoriston (40)—examined.

14,635. The Chairman.—What is your age?—With your lordship's permission I would deliver an address, a very short address, in my own way.

14,636. Can you tell us your age?—40 years. Of course, I meant to bring that out in the address. I will bring out the result of my age in the address, which will be very brief.

14,637. Are you the proprietor of Glenmoriston estate?—No, my lord.

14,638. Do you carry on business as a merchant?—Yes, my lord.

14,639. Well, have you a written paper?—I will deliver it from memory, with your lordship's permisson.

14,640. Very well?—Lord Brand, and ladies and gentlemen.

14,641. Well, I am not Lord Brand, to begin with?—Sheriff Brand, ladies and gentlemen, at your request I now stand forth to speak. Yes, to speak with mingled feelings of pain, sorrow, and delight, on behalf of myself and my family, and also on behalf of my poor and desparately oppressed and shamefully trodden-down countrymen. But, perhaps, you will allow me to preface what evidence I have to submit this day by particularising, in the first instance, my own pinched and straitened circumstances and the persecution which, during those years, I have experienced at the hands of Mr Grant of Glenmoriston and the Dowager Mrs Grant of Glenmoriston and their flunkeys, and all through no fault of mine. My name, which I have already submitted to this Commission, is John Macleod, age 40 years, merchant, and son to John Alexander Macleod, son to Finlay Macleod, son to John Macleod, son to Roderick Macleod, who was son to John Macleod of Raasay, and chief of the clan Macleod. I choose to make this statement in order to prove the fallacy of the oft-repeated presumption on the part of Mr Macleod of Dunvegan in designating himself under the name and appellation of Macleod of Macleod, which, in truth, does not belong to him. That title belongs to, and is the hereditary property of my late father's family, and, as such, we have no thought or intention of selling our birth-right for a mess of pottage.

Another very remarkable and most peculiar feature in this case is when Mr Macleod of Dunvegan was giving evidence before this Commission in the Island of Skye, some eight or nine weeks ago, where, in speaking upon the subject of the various landed properties sold there in his and in his predecessor's time, Mr Macleod, no doubt, thought discretion to be the best part of valour when he would have observed such complete and conservative silence in regard to the Raasay estates.

But to proceed with the question of tyranny, in regard to the estate of Glenmoriston, I should here mention that the Glenmoriston family and myself got on together tolerably well indeed until shortly after the arrival in the glen of their present low, mean, and mischievous factor, and the rapscallion satellites from Strathspey, who very quickly began a crusade of the most unprincipled, underhand, artful, and pernicious character in the frequent attempts to turn the inhabitants of the land adrift, and usurp their place and position in the glen. They have tried that same game very hard against myself, and I should very likely never come to know about it at the time but for the injudicious mental proclivity of Charlie Stewart, the Glenmoriston forester. That was an attempt to usurp my home, and place a business in the glen, in which they did not succeed, however. And when they failed in that game they then prevailed upon the proprietor to run an opposition against me, the putting up of which premises cost the estate something between £30 and £40 sterling. Those premises are now occupied as a public reading-room and library at Invermoriston. I should not have thought much about that opposition provided, however, that the busines transactions in the glen from year to year were sufficiently capable of keeping two shops going, which it never was, and is not now. I have been frequently hampered and exasperated by the Glenmoriston factor and his underlings, so very much so indeed, that I feel certain that nothing but the fear and wrath of an Almighty God prevented me from committing that which would cause the ears of every person upon the Glenmoriston estate to tingle. I had been advised to set fire to the timber woods upon the estate, with the view of bringing the proprietor to a proper knowledge of my grievances and to enlighten his mind as to the iniquity and the amount of prejudice and ill-feeling that has gone out against him and his unprincipled officials. But, my lord, I would never consent to advice of that sort, for I am not ashamed to own that I am a God-fearing man and a peaceable and law-abiding subject of our noble and most illustrious sovereign, Queen Victoria.

Drumnadrochit.

John Macleod.

Those systematic and pernicious and underhand dealings, on the part of the Glenmoriston officials, have been carried on for the past series of years, the which culminated in the most strenuous endeavour to have me perforced and scundered out of my native parish by the pitting against me of such mighty, violent, and tyrannical measures sufficient to exasperate and madden the most pious and patient-minded individual. In calling your lordship's attention to the last clause of the sentence just cited, I wish to draw your lordship's attention chiefly in regard to the cursed trouble and annoyance which, during these two years referred to, I have been compelled to undergo at the hands of James Bruce, who is, in my firm opinion, employed as a tool by the laird of Glenmoriston and his factor for the express purpose of bringing about my destruction and ruin. A man who hides himself under the ecclesiastical cloak of religion, yea, and that too with the evident concurrence of the parish ministers of Urquhart and Glenmoriston. I have had, on more than one occasion, my wife suddenly pitched into a most dangerous and critical state of health, which occasioned myself and my family long weeks of domestic trouble, sorrow, and anxiety. But, my lord, I am determined to make Mr Grant of Glenmoriston to smart for all this mischief and trouble yet, by compelling him, with all my influence, to make him liquidate all these accounts incurred in this manner. I was on various occasions forced to intrude myself into the presence and privacy of Mr Grant of Glenmoriston for the purpose of obtaining protection through him, and I am sorry to say that, on all these occasions, I invariably found that representative of a noble line of chieftains to be as stubbornly austre, stubborn, and obdurate as the rich man mentioned in the parable. I have had recourse likewise unto the local and chief constables, and unto the county council clerks—Messrs Anderson and Shaw—for the purpose of bringing this, my grievance, before the County Council board for adjustment. But, these county clerks, they prefer to follow out their own self-willed and ambiguous authority by completely ignoring and throwing my letter and complaint aside.

But now, in proceeding to speak in regard to the tyrannical and agrarian iniquities inflicted upon the poor and desperately oppressed and shamefully trodden-down countrymen, I wish to draw your lordship's attention to the enormous extent of arable and pasture lands that has been converted into deer forests and rabbit-warrens, to the no small discomfort and poverty of a patriotic, peaceable, and law-abiding people. And, as a consequence of this, I need only ins'ance to your lordship that, although within about three or four weeks ago when four meetings were duly notified and convened in the parish, yet there should not be found at these meetings one man who possessed the moral courage to stand forth and signify his willingness to come forward to give evidence before this Commission for the emancipa-tion of himself and his family from state bondage; owing, no doubt, to the scandalous iniquities and pernicious bye-laws of landlord and factor. I might here mention the names of some of the places in my parish that have been converted and appropriated in this fashion, viz., the arable land of Baile-'n-uillt, and the hill pasture and grazing lands of Achnaconeran, which extends between the hamlet of the latter name and Alltsaigh. Some spell it 'S a y' which is incorrect. Again, I instance part of the lands of Alltsigh at the east end of the parish.

14,642. Mr Gordon.—Another Alltsaigh?—The same Burn so to speak, but this is a hamlet at the foot.

14,643. Lower down?—Yes, together with those of Talamh-mhicheil (I am spelling the place names in English character here), Rhu-na-strone, and Fasaig lands, in its near vicinity; all of which lands were at one time kept in cultivation, and successfully brought under the power and operation of the cas-chrom and the primitive highland plough. Then comes the land of Factoryfield, which has been utilised for some years past as a rabbit-warren; but which, with Baile-'n-uilt already referred to, has been recently reclaimed within the past twelve months, in consequence no doubt of the anticipated visit of this and the Commission of 1886. I now direct your attention to the arable and pasture lands of Levishey, distant about 1½ miles west from the Invermoriston hotel, and which virtually forms part of the Invermoriston forest. Then come the lands of Upper and Lower Blairie upon the one side, with those of Tomnagharabham and Blair-nay-cuilcean upon the west side of Blairie burn, all of which lands I should say, not with certainty, lie at an altitude of 100 or 150 feet above the level of the sea. About two miles west from this place may be seen the arable and pasture lands of Coir'-iar-airidh, which forms part of the Dundreggan shooting ground, and about which one of the poets had a song so very sweetly in his own native tongue, one of which, with your lordship's permission, I will recite one stanza in Gaelic.

14,446. The Chairman.—Oh, certainly.

Mo rùn Coir'-iar-airidh 'sam biodh an liath-chearc
Gu stùrdail, fiat, air feadh nan tom;
'San coire rùnach 'sam biodh na h-ùbhlan
Am faight an driùchd 'ruith air 'n t-shiucar phronn.
Bithidh muighe 's càbag ann La-Fheill-Martainn
A's crodh ga'n dàir ann mu na chrò
'Sa Righ is airde cuir buaidh a's gràs
Air an linn a dh' fhag thu aig Hànah Dhonn.

Witness.—I, for one, should delight to see the day when the prayer of these beautiful words would be literally enjoyed in the glen.

14,645. Some of us would like to hear that in English if you could give it?—I am not quite prepared, my lord, to give you a perfect translation of this. I could do it, but I am sorry to say that I must not commit myself by giving the promise of doing it so very quickly.

14,646. Mr Sutherland.—You may hand it in perhaps.—Perhaps, Mr Mackenzie, the Secretary, would undertake to do it.

14,647. The Chairman.—Go on with your paper in the meantime?—I now instance the arable lands of Dundreggan, Inverwick, and Aonach, comprising probably about 200 acres in all. The former two farms and part of the latter are virtually the deer forest, the tenants who occupied those farms having been evicted some fourteen or fifteen years ago, and quite within my own recollection; together with several others both at the foot and the upper end of the glen. After the last place mentioned and lying at the north-west of it, opens up an immense prairie or plain, about three miles in length, and averaging, I should say, between half-a-mile and three quarters of a mile in width, which comprises hundreds of acres of arable land, and which was tenanted some sixty years ago by a happy, shrewd, and industrious class of Highlanders, but which Highlanders were evicted from their homes and holdings in the time of Mr Grant, who was factor for the then Glenmoriston. That was the present proprietor's grandfather.

14,648. Mr Gordon.—About sixty years ago?—Yes. Of course, I am not giving these statements for certain,—the date, I mean. I am going back as far as I have been informed by others, because it was before my day. The name of the plain which I have referred to is Coirre-Dho.

14,649. Is that in Ceanna-Chnoc?—Yes.

14,650. That is away up to the top of the forest?—Yes, that is at the west end of Beul-ath-Do at the foot of the river Doe, extending from the river Doe to Craskie. At Coirre-Dho there can be seen a great many ruins of the old dwellings in a perfectly demolished state, and the plain itself, looking to the traveller, looks a perfect wilderness. There would be nothing there to break the monotony of the dead but the noise of the deer or perhaps the bird of the Coire-Dho when he gets upon his wings. I might here now instance a few names of those persons who have been evicted, both within my own recollection and previous thereto. I might mention the first to begin with was Macrae, who was farmer of the crofter field down at Alltsigh, at the east end of the parish; also Peter Maclaren, at the upper end of the glen.

14,651. Is that in Glenmoriston?—Balnadrum or Balnacarn, either of the two names; of course, as a rule, there has been only one Maclaren in the glen, he was always addressed as Peter Maclaren.

14,652. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Are you speaking of a living man?—I am speaking as a living man.

14,653. I see you are living, but I wish to know?—I speak both of the living and the dead.

14,654. I wish to know which of them is Maclaren?—Maclaren, he is a living man, unless he has gone within the last four hours.

14,655. And Macrae?—I cannot say for certain about Macrae; I presume he has gone to the majority. Then comes Donald Macdonald, Inverwick; he has gone over to the majority, but left a representative behind him who is come up to the years of manhood, and who, perhaps, will be shortly hence doing as others did before him, entering the blessed bonds of matrimony. But, my lord, it would appear to me that the law of matrimony is a prohibited thing in our parish, for when a young man marries either a lady in the glen or a lady outside his parish, he must,—lo and behold,—quit; there is no further connection between him and the glen. Not even so, but the filial tie between parent and child must be broken up. Is it not a hard thing, gentlemen,—I speak through the chairman, through Sheriff Brand,—is it not a hard thing, gentlemen, that in a highland parish and amongst Highlanders, a patriotic, a peaceable, and a law-abiding people, that we should be contemned and trodden down under foot in such a manner? I say it is a disgrace to the community, and I cannot help getting a little excited over this as a Highlander.

14,656. I beg your pardon, but you have not told us how marriages are prohibited in the glen.—I will adduce myself as an illustration in this case. If I have attained to years,—well,—suitable for entering into marriage for a working man,—but for a capitalist, of course, he can enter marriage you know at any time he likes after 16,—is not that the case?

14,657. You have not told us how marriage is prohibited.—I am just bringing that about. But a working man, on the other hand, he perhaps will be 23 or 25 or 28 or perhaps 30 summers he may allow over his head before he can enter into these blessed bonds. Why?—Simply, because he has not capital to sustain himself and the partner of his affections.

14,658. The Chairman.—Have you finished your paper?—The next thing after the last given—I have given you Maclaren, have I not?

14,659. Oh, yes.—Down to Macdonald, Inverwick. After this comes a living man, Peter Macdonald, Levishey, who was virtually turned out of his holding, and which holding now is converted into what I maintain is part of the Invermoriston forest.

14,660. The Chairman.—Have you any other name?—The next name which I instance, and which puts the blood of a Highlander—

14,661. Give us the name first.—To the proper heat, Allan Ferguson, a man who, I am sorry to say, died of starvation in the very centre of a Christian land and among the Christian people, simply, because he would not put his hand to his hat or raise it up for an upstart in the form of a factor.

Drumnadrochit.

John Macleod.

14,662. Have you any more in your paper, Mr Macleod? We are anxious to get on with the business you know.—Well, that is Ferguson; the next one which comes is Hunter. I put these down briefly, but there are more which I might perhaps recollect on before the meeting is dismissed.

14,663. Mr Gordon.—What is Mr Hunter's first name?—Andrew Hunter. Would you please give the names as you have them?

14,664. The Chairman.—Macrae, farmer.—Macrae, farmer; that is Alexander Macrae, Alltsigh.

14,665. Peter Maclaren, Balnacarn; Donald Macdonald, Inverwick; Peter Macdonald, Levishey; Allan Ferguson, whose place you did not mention.—Allan Ferguson, Dundreggan.

14,666—And Andrew Hunter, what is his place?—Inverness, in the meantime.

14,667. Yes, but what was the local place?—Invermoriston. And with that you may include my name, because there has been a very strenuous attempt to evict me out.

14,668. You mean your own name?—My own name, but, as a Highlander, I defy Glenmoriston, and I defy his factor or anyone else to turn me out.

14,669. Does that conclude your paper?—That concludes my paper; I am open now for any examination.

14,670. Mr Munro.—What is your occupation?—My occupation has been very limited of late. From my earliest infancy I have been brought up to the profession of a country merchant. I am not ashamed to own it; I think it is a very respectable trade.

14,671. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I don't understand; you say country merchant, do you mean a general merchant?—Yes.

14,672. And you have no special acquaintance with the cultivation of land?—Would you put the question again?

14,673. Have you any special knowledge of the cultivation of land?—I have a good superficial knowledge.

14,674. Superficial knowledge?—Yes.

14,675. Because you tell us of hundreds of acres of arable land, and it is rather important to know whether you are an authority upon what is arable land.—Well, sir.

14,676. You have only a superficial knowledge?—I think I gave you a very clear statement now. Take a square mile now, how many acres are in that?

14,677. Oh, yes, I don't dispute your ability to count.—But you must understand I had the permission of these places, and, as a consequence, I am not going to give you a certified statement. It is certain so far as I have given but not thoroughly limited you know.

14,678. I understand perfectly; I don't doubt your capacity to judge of the quantity of the land, but I only wish to find out how far you are reliable as an authority on the quality of the land, because there is a great difference between arable land and land that is not arable?—Well, I will answer that by giving you a very good one in return. Any man may judge an English cow, but I always prefer a Highlander for a Highland cow, and, certainly, a Highlander for the statement you find of land.

14,679. Your knowledge of the cultivation of land, I think you said, is superficial?—Yes, because the land is of different value around there, because it is not of the same quality.

14,680. Thank you, that is all I wanted to know.

14,681. Mr H. V. Maccallum.—Do you occupy the same premises as your father did?—I do.

14,682. At the same rent as he paid?—I do.

14,683. How much rent have you paid for the last three years?—How much rent did I pay?

14,684. For the last three years?—May I ask, my lord, if he has been informed that I was in arrear?

14,685. The Chairman.—No, you may not ask. Answer the question.—Yes, would you put it again please.

Drumnadrochit.

John Macleod.

14,686. How much rent have you paid during the last three years? I put the question myself, Mr Macleod.—How much rent?

14,687. Yes.—Well, I am sorry to say that I cannot give you a decided answer as to that, insomuch that—

14,688. Have you paid any?—Certainly, but not directly, not directly, because with and through the proprietor's authority I made improvements. It is a very small cabin I occupy.

14,689. You mean you are keeping the rent against the improvements; is that what you mean?—Yes. I made improvements with the proprietor's authority, but as I am now to say and state, putting it very graphically, I took Glenmoriston to be a gentleman of honour, and I took him at his word, but he was saying afterwards—I don't think he would do so directly of himself—but evil counsel takes the best of men astray.

CHARLES MACDONALD, Farmer, Knocknangeal, Inverness, and Baile-nan-carn, Glenmoriston (64)—examined.

Charles Macdonald.

14,690. The Chairman.—What rent do you pay for the farm of Baile-nan-carn?—£70.

14,691. Are you under a nineteen year's lease?—Yes.

14,692. When does it expire?—Well, I have only run three years.

14,693. What is it you wish to say?—I just wish to say very little. I consider the land is more adapted for grazing than cropping. The first year I went there I took the crop, but the result was that I lost the whole of it, for after it was cut the flood came and destroyed it. I remember seeing some of the fields under the river halfway. I don't believe that any one can depend on cropping in Glenmoriston. The grazing is the only support with us; when I saw that, I put my farm under grass, altogether, because it is no use to be labouring on crops.

14,694. May I ask, were you requested to come here, or do you come here of your own motive?—I came here just.

14,695. Were you requested to come?—No, I never saw anyone till I saw Mr Burgess here yesterday.

14,696. Did he ask you to come?—Oh, no, he never did.

14,697. Did he speak about your coming?—No.

14,698. Did anybody?—Not as far as I am aware of; I only spoke incidentally to Mr Burgess of it.

14,699. Mr Sutherland.—Are you the farmer of Baile-nan-carn?—Yes.

14,700. What is the height of the farm above the level of the sea?—I daresay the arable land will be close to 400 feet, but I am not exactly sure.

14,701. You are quite right; 423 feet it is marked on the map. Is all the land you put under cultivation about that level; does any of it ascend much higher than that?—I believe not.

14,702. It is almost all on the same level, is it?—Well, not exactly on the same level.

14,703. But it does not fall a hundred feet, does it?—Oh, I don't think so.

14,704. And are you aware of the height at which cultivation is carried on successfully in this neighbourhood?—But it is a different climate here.

14,705. What is the difference in the climate?—A great deal. Frost is very heavy yonder, and rain is heavy.

14,706. Then do you get good weather at all?—Oh, yes, very good weather.

14,707. You get your share of the good weather that is going?—Yes.

14,708. And you get your share of the bad weather that is going?—Yes, perhaps more than other people would get sometimes.

14,709. On the same level?—Yes.

14,710. And in the same latitude?—Yes, it is a wet climate in winter time.

14,711. Is it wetter than places further west that are under cultivation?—No, I do not believe it; I believe that Kintail is worse.

14,712. And yet successful cultivation is carried on there at 400 feet? Is it not within your knowledge that that is the case?—I do not think it would be very successful; grazing is the only thing to the west from Invermoriston.

14,713. Is there not land cultivated farther up the glen than Baile-nan-carn?—Oh, yes.

14,714. Successfully?—Well, there is no complaint.

14,715. They have not let the land out of cultivation?—But there are lots of crofters there, and they told me that they did not make a boll of meal for the last three years.

14,716. But they cultivate the land and they pay a rent for it?—They do their best, but they have some sheep up; unless they had that I do not believe they could do very well.

14,717. You said you thought it was very fit for grazing.—I said so.

14,718. And the amount of arable land necessary would be the proportion of arable land that would carry through the grazing?—Well, you know it is no use to be working arable land unless it pays.

14,719. But if that could be found, you believe that small grazing farms could be carried on successfully there?—I do not know, it is according to the time altogether; you will make good and bad perhaps. Last year we lost money, and, if this weather continue, we may still.

14,720. But there is nothing essentially different in in the climate and circumstances of Glenmoriston from what is applicable to the rest of the country taking it over all?—Oh, no, there is a far better climate here than Glenmoriston.

14,721. Of course, the climate varies every mile, for that matter?—Yes.

14,722. Then, with regard to the floods taking away the corn crops.—Well.

14,723. Did they carry them away every year?—Oh no, I cannot say that.

14,724. You have just good years and bad years with regard to that like everywhere else?—You must watch. Perhaps they will go and perhaps not; you must watch yourself.

14,725. You must do that whether the land is good, bad, or indifferent?—And in winter time, although you put your land in good order, the river will come out and perhaps carry away all the substance.

14,726. In England that happens very often?—Well, well, I believe it may.

14,727. And in the Lowlands of Scotland.—Yes.

14,728. And in Strathspey.—Perhaps.

14,729. So that Glenmoriston is not peculiar in that respect, is it?—Well, you know all the arable land in Glenmoriston is on the level near the river, and when the river comes very rapidly it will go over most of it.

14,730. As a matter of fact in all Highland glens the best land is on the river bank?—Yes.

14,731. So that it is in the same category as other glens?—There were some patches of old land, perhaps, in the high hills, but you would not get anyone to go there to live now.

14,732. Higher than the hills here?—I do not know, perhaps they were as high.

14,733. How do these people go there; did they go of their own free will?—In the old time they used to go.

14,734. Of their own free will?—Yes.

14,735. Was it because they could not get lower land to cultivate?—No, they took their stock up to the higher glens, and left the low land to go into grass for the wintering.

14,736. You mean to tell me that of their own free will, they chose the high ground rather than the low ground?—At some time of the year, perhaps in July and August.

14,737. But you are talking just now of out-pasture; I am talking now of places for homes and settlements?—Oh, there were no settlements in that time, but only for a while in the old time. I never saw any of it, but I was told of it.

14,738. You made the general statement that, in your opinion, Glenmoriston was better fitted for grazing than agriculture.—I say that. Drumnadrochit.

14,739. Well, I am wishing to know upon what grounds you make that statement. You have stated one, that the climate was bad, and another, that it was subject to flooding?—Yes. Charles Macdonald.

14,740. But you make the general admission, for all that, that it is just subject to the same conditions as other Highland glens?—I do not know that.

14,741. Is it worse?—I believe it is, and Strathglass is pretty bad.

14,742. But, in the face of all that, there you see land cultivated higher up than yours?—I am sure of that, I am quite sure of that.

14,743. Mr Macleod.—Have you always been a farmer?—For a good long time.

14,744. Have you been for more than this lease?—Yes.

14,745. Just for this lease?—For the last twenty or twenty-five years.

14,746. You have had a farm?—Yes.

14,747. How many years did you continue cropping this particular farm?—Only one year, I got it from the tenant going out.

14,748. As a matter of fact you never cropped this piece of ground yourself at all?—No.

14,749. You had made up your mind that it would not do before you went into the place?—Well, I made up my mind it would be more expensive to me than I would like; I thought I would be better with grazing.

14,750. That was your view?—That was my view.

14,751. But, of course, you think it does suit as grazing?—I think it is doing pertty well as things go; we must winter our stock you know, and take them down to the low country.

14,752. Is the whole of the glen being grazed at the present time?—Well, a good deal; of course, the whole of it is being grazed, deer forest and all.

14,753. There is a portion of it a deer forest is there?—Of the glen?

14,754. Yes?—Yes.

14,755. Is it a large portion of it?—Oh, yes, pretty large.

14,756. Is it the larger proportion?—I would say so.

14,757. Is it the better portion of the glen?—Well, perhaps there is some better, and perhaps there is some worse, but the higher ground in general is in the deer forest.

14,758. The higher ground?—The higher hills.

14,759. But there is low ground as well?—Oh, well, there is not much low ground.

14,760. In the deer forest area?—No, of course, there is always a low ground; the ground when you come to the lodge, is lower than the high.

14,761. That is certainly true?—But it is not very low for all that.

14,762. But I want you to give us some information, seeing you have tendered yourself, if there is any comparison to be made between what is under deer forest and what is being grazed?—I daresay there is fully as good land under deer, perhaps fully better, than of grazing in some parts, but not other parts perhaps.

14,763. I think that there was a brother of yours, Mr Macdonald, examined before the Napier Commission at Inverness?—Very likely.

14,764. The late Mr Duncan Macdonald?—I believe he was.

14,765. He expressed certain views there as to the deterioration of the land due to large sheep farms,—that is, very large sheep farms; he did not refer to moderate sized grazings, but to the very large farms?—I don't remember very well.

14,766. Admitting that he did express that view, would you be inclined to agree with him?—Well, I cannot say, I could not tell you. Oh, well, I think a moderate farm might do as well as a big one. Unless you have a living it is no use; what is the use of putting a man on two or three acres?—You are just going to starve him; you would make him twenty per cent. worse than he was before.

14,767. It would depend on whether he had any land before?—If you are going to do that better give them 20 acres and a 100 sheep. They cannot live under that. Give them that at a fair rent, and try to make them better.

14,768. You think they would manage that way?—I think so.

14,769. Your own farm, I take it, is a moderate sized farm?—Not very big.

14,770. It is £70, I think you said, of rent?—Yes.

14,771. And on the same occasion your brother referred to deer forests, and expressed very strong opinions as to their formation in this particular glen, and his belief that it was to the detriment of the community. Have you got any views yourself on that subject?—No, I told you I was very much against deer forests two years ago, but I have changed my mind. I saw clearly stock is not paying, and if you are going to put the ground now under sheep where is the wintering for them?—And they cannot live yonder without wintering. And then, you know, you would spoil the whole country; you will take down the property to nothing. Perhaps where they are getting £1000 for deer forest they would not get perhaps more than £600 for sheep; that would make a big difference for the country. I was entirely, a few years, against deer forests, but I see stock is not paying now.

14,772. On account of your having to find wintering for them elsewhere?—Well, you know, too, low ground is taken up very much by sheep; between fencing and sheep, the low ground is taken up very much, and perhaps the high level as well; but the land is not paying to work it very well.

14,773. May I ask whether you are cultivating your own farm at the present time, or rather working it to a profit?—I am working the low farm; I am keeping it on to winter.

14,774. May I ask if you are working it to a profit?—'Deed no, I am telling you that, and far from it.

14,775. You would not be prepared to take this year, or very recent years, as a fair average of your experience during the last twenty or twenty-five years?—I would be very glad with this year, it is very well promising; with pasture there is nothing better than an ordinary dry year.

14,776. You would not be prepared to say that you have been working to a loss all these years?—That is what I have been doing for the last two or three, but I cannot say always that I have been losing.

14,777. Then the view you take is, that, on account of the bad price there is for stock, and the high rent that can be obtained for land as a deer forest, that it ought to be let as a deer forest?—Well, unless the people are pressed to get the land, you know. I think,—it is my own opinion,—that you cannot put the land to better advantage than the way it is in the meantime, unless there be a change in the price of stock.

14,778. Your brother's view was that, even supposing the proprietor got a higher rent than he would get for it as a grazing subject, that the community did not benefit to the same extent when there was a deer forest as when there was a small grazing farm; what is your view?—Well, it is my view in the meantime that there is no way to put the land better than what it is in the meantime, at all events as regards the high hills, whatever you do with low land. That is my opinion.

14,779. The Chairman.—The view which your brother expressed is this. Mr Macdonald:—'The ewe 'hoggs were wintered at home fifty years ago. Now, 'however, the hoggs (wedder) must be wintered in the 'low country.' Do you agree with him?—I believe that is quite right.

14,780. 'The extent of land is the same now as it 'was fifty years ago on another farm in this district';—by this district I suppose he means the Inverness district;—'there was a mixed ewe and wedder stock 'of 1800 wintered at home,'—that must be a narrower district than the Inverness district, what farm is your brother talking about here?—Baile-nan-carn, I was born there myself.

Drumnadrochit. Charles Macdonald.

'To-day, however, this same land'—some land that your brother knows about—'which maintained 1800 'can maintain only 1500 head, and that only during 'summer. The hoggs have to be sent away for 'wintering. There are farms in the district the soil 'of which has deteriorated to an even greater extent 'than that of the above.' That is a quotation, and then he goes on—'At the time the hills were cleared 'of cattle and horses to be put exclusively under deer, 'there is evidence that the pastures were vastly richer 'then than they are now. I am of opinion that the 'change from mixed farming to exclusive sheep farming accounts for this.'—Do you agree with that?—There may be something in that; and another thing, a crop is not so valuable now as it was sixty years ago, because you could buy a boll of meal at one time for 50s.

14,781. Mr Macleod.—But you will admit that there is a very much higher price got for cattle to-day than sixty years ago?—Well, it was a poor place then, you know.

14,782. Mr Maccallum.—How was the farm that you have now occupied before you took it; was it of the same size that it is now, occupied by one man?—Yes.

14,783. And do you know whether it was ever occupied by crofters or small tenants?—Well, I believe there were two or three people in it at one time a good many years ago.

14,784. You think there were two or three?—Perhaps four at one time.

14,785. But you are quite familiar with the place, and I suppose you could give some decided opinion on the point as to the number of holdings that now constitute this one?—I know there were three or four people in it. I heard that. I cannot tell that I remember.

14,786. Are the ruins or remains of these houses there still?—There are plenty ruins of houses there, byres and what not.

14,787. Showing that it was occupied by small tenants?—Oh, undoubtedly, I have no doubt but there was some of that.

14,788. And do you know how they removed from the place?—Well, I cannot tell you very well. I do not think Glenmoriston would change any tenant as long as he paid his rent; at least I never heard of it.

14,789. Then you do not know the cause of their removal?—Not exactly, I am not sure of it. I heard causes, but I cannot be sure.

14,790. Did you hear anything about the cause of their removal? is there no tradition about it in the glen?—There may be a little of that; I do not know it, but there may be a little.

14,791. The Chairman.—Tell us shortly what is the tradition?—Perhaps big tenants were anxious to get the place, and perhaps they would put the small tenants into a less place.

14,792. Mr Maccallum.—You think that a probable explanation?—Ay.

14,793. Of course, these small tenants cultivated the arable land?—That is more than I can say; very likely.

14,794. But don't you know whether or not?—I am sure they did that all over the country at one time.

14,795. There is evidence of that?—Yes.

14,796. And then after it was consolidated into one farm it was still cultivated?—Yes.

14,797. For how many years?—I cannot say.

14,798. It only ceased to be cultivated when it came into your possession?—It was cultivated then, when I got it.

14,799. But you ceased. The reason you gave up cultivating was that you thought it would not pay?—I thought I would be better with the grazing, and I may work it yet.

14,800. But you did not give it a trial?—I understand fine what a subject I had; it won't work with me at all.

14,801. But people cultivated it before and paid rent?—That is the position; if you can get a better place than you have you would take it, and if I could cultivate it I would work it.

14,802. Are you resident in Glenmoriston?—No; sometimes I may be there, and sometimes in the low country.

14,803. Has that anything to do with your not cultivating it?—No; if you will pay me, I will do anything that will pay.

14,804. There is no suggestion of my paying you at all.—I am not going to work the land to please everyone.

14,805. But you admit that you are not resident, and it would not be so convenient for you to cultivate it being not resident?—Why not, why not?

14,806. Though you are not there to work it?—I will put a man there to work it.

14,807. I point out this: you are not there to supervise the cultivation?—Many a thing I do to-day without being in every corner.

14,808. But, being resident there, would you not be in a better position to cultivate it than a man away in Inverness?—No, I would make it pay better than any man, the way I do it.

14,809. I am putting the thing in an impersonal way. Would you not be in a better position to cultivate it to profit than—being a non-resident?—I would buy the meal in Inverness far cheaper and with far less bother.

14,810. You don't follow the question. I want to know whether you would be in a better position to cultivate it to profit if you were resident in the farm?—I would see the work going on.

14,811. And is not that very important that you should see the work going on?—Yes, certainly.

14,812. And a non-resident farmer is in a very different position that way, not being able to see the work going on?—I don't know, if he has a good man at the head of it.

14,813. If he has a good man resident, that requires two?—A good man, and give him the whole charge and put him over it.

14,814. And is not it likely that, if it was let to a man who would reside there, he would cultivate some of the land?—Very likely.

14,815. Does not the arable land deteriorate if it is not cultivated? when arable land is not cultivated does it deteriorate or not?—It is gaining ground when you leave it out, it is gaining strength and making body,

14,816. Is the pasture getting better?—Yes.

14,817. It is better of being left out?—Yes, you can put it down; my place is better to-day than the first year I put it down.

14,818. And you do not approve of cultivating arable land?—Every man according to his own place.

14,819. But does not land go under fog if it is left long out of cultivation?—Some does, and some does not so bad.

14,820. But you will find that it will not prove so good for pasture if it is allowed long out of cultivation.—Oh, but I daresay there are some places very apt to do so, but there are other places not.

14,821. Mr Munro.—You have told us that you are a native of Glenmoriston?—Yes.

14,822. How far does your memory carry you back?—Perhaps about fifty years.

14,823. Do you remember the time when there were no deer forests in Glenmoriston?—I do not know but I do, but I could not be exactly sure; it is my opinion that I mind to see stock in Ceanna-chnoc.

14,824. How was the land occupied before it was converted into a forest?—It was under sheep,—the hills.

14,825. Are there not evidences at the present time to show that it was occupied by a considerable number of small tenants?—Well, I will tell you this, since I remember they are all there yet, except two places, and they are let to a tenant.

14,826. You do not mean surely to tell us that there are as many acres of cultivated land in Glenmoriston to-day as there were fifty years ago?—I believe it is, except the place I am talking about.

14,827. I suppose you will be prepared to admit that your brother, the late Mr Duncan Macdonald, was recognised as an authority upon the land question generally, and also as to the whole of Glenmoriston?—I know that he was there, but I never paid much notice to him.

14,828. But you know that he was a man who paid very considerable attention to the whole question as regards Glenmoriston?—Oh, yes, he was that.

14,829. If I told you that the question was put to him before the Lord Napier Commission whether there were evidences of the glen having been possessed by small tenants before, and he replied in the affirmative, would you be prepared to accept his statement as correct?—My statement is that I do not know a place on the glen, but it is carried on the same way as it was fifty years ago, except two places that is, Inverwick is not ploughed, and Dundreggan is not ploughed.

14,830. Mr Sutherland.—Was he older or younger than you, your brother?—He was younger than me.

14,831. Mr Munro.—Levishie was ploughed, I remember it myself. In addition to the farm of Balnacarn, which you have in Glenmoriston, you have farms elsewhere?—Yes.

14,832. How many?—One or two.

14,833. How many?—Two.

14,834. Kindly name the two?—Knock-nan-gael and Culcabock.

14,835. What portion of your time do you spend in Glenmoriston?—I intend to spend more of it. I intend to spend my life there if I am spared.

14,836. I suppose you will be prepared to admit that residence on any subject must give a distinct advantage to the cultivation of that farm? Surely a man that is resident is worth something for the making of a profit on the farm?—Well, it is trying to do that we are, make profit if we can, and sometimes losses.

14,837. In addition to your farming operations, do you conduct a large business in Inverness?—Well, I am out of that now.

14,838. Could you tell us what effect the displacing of sheep farms and their conversion into deer forests has had upon the letting of wintering in the low parts of the country? I put that question to you because I know you are a good authority in that matter.—I know that wintering is very dear.

14,839. What effect has it had upon the letting of wintering; has it depreciated the letting value of wintering in the low parts?—Not a bit, how can that be done and the most of the people keeping stock?

14,840. Would you be prepared to acknowledge that your brother, Mr Duncan Macdonald, was a good authority on that subject?—Yes, but that time is passed, and things have altered now.

14,841. What you wish to convey is this, that up to 1882 deer forests had a depreciating effect upon the letting-value of wintering upon the low lands, but that since then the condition of things has changed?—Very much. I believe before they commenced themselves to get sheep on the low ground that they were suffering a little. That is since they commenced themselves wintering.

14,842. There must be less demand for wintering now than some years ago?—There was a great demand for the last two or three years.

14,843. But surely the displacing of a considerable number of sheep must have had a very serious effect upon the letting-value of the low parts of the country?—I do not think so, because I think we have as many sheep as ever we had, and how can you say that?

14,844. Had you as many sheep in Glenmoriston as ever you had?—No, but we have the low ground, and they are making up the double and perhaps more.

14,845. Mr Sutherland.—But, why had the tenants of the low farms to begin keeping sheep themselves?—Because they thought it would pay them better.

14,846. Is it not because Glenmoriston was converted into a deer forest?—No, I do not think so, because these were paying pretty well, but I believe they are getting so numerous, there is no such demand.

Drumnadrochit. Charles Macdonald.

14,847. Mr Munro.—Surely the more numerous the sheep farms the greater the demand must be for wintering?—Certainly.

14,848. That is an admission of the whole case?—That is what I am at. It is a big difference between this time and fifty years ago; there is no connection at all in the time.

14,849. Mr Gordon.—The reason why wintering is dearer now is that more sheep are kept on the arable farms than five or six years ago?—Certainly.

14,850. Is there any difficulty of a man with wintering getting it let?—Not as far as I know.

14,851. There is plenty demand for the wintering?—Plenty demand.

14,852. What sort of stock do you keep upon Baile-nan-Carn; is it a breeding stock; can you winter your hoggs?—A little of both.

14,853. Can you winter your hoggs?—Not one of them, not even the two-year olds.

14,854. Is it a place that you could, as a practical man, recommend being broken up into four holdings of £20 apiece?—I would not like to be one of the four crofters.

14,855. Do you know the place called Coire-Dho?—Yes.

14,856. Would that be a good place for sheep?—Oh, yes, I believe so; I believe sheep would do there.

14,857. Good summering?—Yes, very good summering.

14,858. Can you winter there?—Well, you cannot winter young sheep there.

14,859. You would have to take the hoggs down?—Oh, yes.

14,860. Do you know the general height of Coire-Dho?—I cannot tell you.

14,861. Do you know the height of Loch Cluanie?—No.

14,862. Well, it is about 640 or 650 feet.—Well, I would say that.

14,863. That is the lowest part of the deer forest that would come down to Loch Cluanie?—Yes.

14,864. Is there any other part of the forest lower?—It may be lower at Ceanna-chnoc.

14,865. At the mouth of the river?—Yes.

14,866. But the bulk of the forest is higher than that?—Oh, yes.

14,867. Do you know the ruins up in Coire-Dho; they are about a mile and a half above Coire-Dho?—I was there at one time, but it is a long time.

14,868. That is about as low a part as in the deer forest, is it not?—Yes, in that direction.

14,869. Well, at that point the height is 800 feet.—You will not get one to-day that will possibly live there.

14,870. Do you think if that ground was put under sheep, it would be readily let as a sheep farm?—I daresay it may let, but at what, that is the thing. I know no man would take a sheep farm at the present time except at a very low rent.

14,871. Do you happen to know what the rates are in that quarter just now, the public burdens? Do you mind how much they are in the £?—No, I do not know; I forget them now.

14,872. Supposing that this forest, now let at £3000 a year, or £2000 odds, was done away with and put under sheep, what would, in your opinion, be the reduction in the rent?—What do you mean?

14,873. Between a forest and a sheep farm?—Oh, there will be over a thousand pounds I think, or perhaps twelve or fifteen hundred.

14,874. What do you think it would be worth for a sheep farm, roughly?—If you mention the district to me.

14,875. The forest that Lord Tweedmouth has there.—That is Tomchraskie and Ceanna-chnoc.

14,876. The top of these places; he has not the lodge I think?—I do not know, but it would be quite dear at £600 for a sheep farmer.

14,877. Do you happen to know what Lord Tweedmouth's rent for the deer forest is?—No, I do not. Drumnadrochit. Charles Macdonald.

14,878. We will get that by-and-by, but it would make a considerable difference to the rates?—It would make a considerable difference to many a thing.

14,879. If they did away with the forest?—Ay.

14,880. If you lost that extra rental?—Of course, if the country was in the position that they were too scarce of stock or anything of that I would not object to have a crofter put in the deer forest, but when there is plenty stock, otherwise, I do not say they should do it.

14,881. But so far you know the country would you recommend sheep being put on and deer put off?—Well, I hardly can do that meantime; at one time I was very anxious to get the deer forest done away with, but I have changed my views when I saw the sheep were doing so bad and under value for them. I considered the property would be ruined.

14,882. The sheep farmer would be ruined if he had it?—I considered the property would be ruined if you put them under sheep at the present time.

14,883. The Chairman.—Is there a larger stock of sheep in the country at this time than has ever been before, would you say?—I cannot say that exactly. I am not sure, but I think there is a good heavy lot of stock in the country this year.

14,884. And much demand for low ground wintering?—As far as I know, but I believe there is; indeed the sheep are not paying well for the last two or three years, and very likely there are some of the low farmers try to get out of them, and they get more for the wintering than they are able to get out of the sheep. I heard some of them talking about that.

14,885. You carried on business for many years, I understand, as a butcher in Inverness?—Yes.

14,886. And you are now settled as a farmer in Glenmoriston?—Yes, between Glenmoriston and down here.

14,887. Mr John Macleod, Invermoriston.—During your sixty-four years, may I ask about what length of time you have been absent out of Glenmoriston?—Oh, a long time; but I was back and forward.

14,888. I do not mean an occasional visit.—[The Chairman.—How long have you been out of Glenmoriston except as a visitor?—Thirty-three years.]

14,889. Now, might I ask you by what authority you came to the conclusion that the lands of Glenmoriston were not fit for arable cultivation?—I did not say but the land was fit, but I said the climate was not very suitable.

14,890. Seeing that you have been simply an absentee from the parish.—[The Chairman.—He says he did not say the lands were unsuitable, but the climate is unsuitable.]

14,891. Might I ask Mr Macdonald now, in regard to the produce of the lands, have not you seen as good potatoes raised throughout the parish of Glenmoriston as you have seen even down at Glen-Urquhart here, or even Inverness?—Some years I might see good potatoes there, but you could not depend. They are looking very well indeed, but one night of frost will just make them useless.

14,892. You must understand they cannot always depend at Glen-Urquhart even?—Oh, yes, I do not think Glen-Urquhart ever missed potatoes, whatever failed. Look you to Temple Pier.

14,893. Now, in regard to the cereal crops, is it not a fact that you have seen as good corn crops in Glenmoriston, at Invermoriston, Tomchraskie, Achalean, and Inverwick, as you have seen in any part of the east country?—That may be some years, but what shape you will be in some other years?

14,894. Retracing your memory eight years back, what sort of crop had they down in the east country,—well to put it brief, about Inverness,—if I recollect it was eight years ago?—I do not remember; perhaps a short one.

14,895. Retrace your memory further back, fourteen years ago; what like was the crop then?—I cannot remember.

14,896. Was it the fault of the land, or the crofter, or the farmer?—All what I said about it was this that there is no living for a poor man for a few acres of land unless he gets grazing along with it. Unless he gets 20 or 15 acres and about 100 sheep, how can you expect a family to live? It may keep them going, labouring at it, but they must have something to fall back upon.

14,897. Do you admit the fact that there is ample land throughout the length and breadth of the parish of Glenmoriston capable of fixing families in a comfortable and very respectable position?—Where are you to put them?

14,898. The Chairman.—The question is, is there ample land, in your judgment, within the length and breadth of Glenmoriston capable of settling families on a comfortable footing? That is the question.—Well, if you will break down leases you may get at the land there; but it is a cold district, and I could not expect that they would thrive very well without getting the hill there.

14,899. He says if you break down leases there is land to be got, but the hill must go with it?—That is all my opinion.

14,900. Mr Macleod, Invermoriston.—Would Mr Macdonald answer this question now. Who is the present tenant for Easter Inverwick, once occupied by the late Mr Donald Macdonell, a very respectable member of the family?

14,901. [The Chairman.—Well, never mind his family].—Witness.—He is taken away; it is no use to be saying anything about him now. I suppose the sportsmen had that place ever since the tenant of Inverwick.

14,902. You have answered that fairly. Now, in your own unbiassed judgment which, think you, would be more Christian and better for the nation, looking to the defence of our country in the first place?—[The Chairman.—What is the question please?]

14,903. Which, think you, is the best to have the land divided among a patriotic, peaceable, and law-abiding people for their comfort, don't you see, and for the defence of our nation, than for the rearing and cultivation of deer, rabbits, and such?—I will say this if you will make them comfortable give them such as will keep them alive, and I will be glad to keep them in it. But to put a poor man into a farm, to a corner of land, what is he going to do there? It it just to starve him, and make him ten times worse than he is.

14,904. Might I put this question? I am sorry to put it, but to bring out the evidence clearly I wish to put it. You say that you came down here without being asked by anyone. Now, may I ask if you came here chiefly on your own behalf or chiefly through sincerity for the benefit of your countrymen at Glenmoriston?—I was at Inverness whatever, and I followed my neighbour, Allan Macdonald, Baltombuy. I came along with him; I got a grand chance along with him.

14,905. Had you any selfish object in view in coming?—[The Chairman.—I don't allow that question.]

14,906. I will put it in this general way; if he could be kind enough to say in what interest he appears. I do not mean to insinuate anything at all, with regard to his motives, if he would kindly state in whose interest he appears?—I only came and gave my opinion, my own idea of the way the glens might be worked.

14,907. In whose interest are you giving your own ideas?—In my own, as well as others.

14,908. It is for your own interest?—Yes, certainly, for my own interest.

14,909. Mr Sutherland.—I am very sorry to interrupt you, but this is an elucidation of a point which I did not make very clear before. You state that you allowed your farm at Baile-nan-Carn to go out of cultivation, but that it was cultivated by the tenant who was there before you. Now, can you tell whether the tenant who was there before you had a low farm?—I don't think so.

14,910. So then you would be influenced, Mr Macdonald, in letting the farm of Baile-nan-Carn out of cultivation by the fact that you had a low lying farm that you could get your wintering on? Were you influenced by that consideration?—I would not take Baile-nan-Carn at all unless I had wintering for it.

14,911. Would you tell me if you were influenced in letting this farm out of cultivation, by the fact that you had a low lying farm?—I let out the farm in grazing hoping it would pay me better.

14,912. If you had not had the low farm, would you have let it out of cultivation?—I do not think it is safe for any one to have a sheep farm unless he had a low ground.

14,913. Do you think you would have allowed your farm to go out of cultivation if you had not had a low farm?—Perhaps not.

ALLAN CAMERON, Crofter, Dundreggan, Glenmoriston (44)—examined.

14,914. The Chairman.—What rent do you pay?—£6, 15s.

14,915. You are under lease I suppose?—Yes.

14,916. When was the lease entered into?—About six or seven years ago. I don't know the exact year.

14,917. What had your rent been before that lease?—The same.

14,918. How many leasehold crofters are in Dundreggan?—There are four crofters.

14,919. What stock have you got?—Well, I and another crofter are about the smallest. I have got 40 sheep and 2 cows and some stirks.

14,920. How many acres arable have you?—It is considered about five acres.

14,921. Have you a horse?—Yes.

14,922. Are you anxious to obtain additional land?—No, I don't want any more.

14,923. You want no more land?—No more land, I only want to get plenty work.

14,924. Who requested you to come forward?—I came of my own accord.

14,925. I am not suggesting that anybody forced you to come, but did anybody suggest to you to come?—No, none. We have been considering it for some time back, and a few of us came here to see the Royal Commission, because it is here it was to be held.

14,926. And you came here to say that you wished no more land?—I wish no more land than the land I have got in Glenmoriston.

14,927. What extent of grazing have you?—My share of the grazing is to carry 40 sheep.

14,928. You have a share of the grazing along with the other crofters of Dundreggan?—Yes.

14,929. Have they each about the same number of sheep?—Some are higher and some lower, but none lower than me except one.

14,930. What is the largest number held by any Dundreggan crofter?—There are two crofters about the same, as far as I know, Widow Grant, and one Lachlan Sinclair.

14,931. How many have they?—They will be having about the double of that.

14,932. They have about 80 sheep?—Yes.

14,933. Each?—Yes.

14,934. Mr Forsyth.—Then you come here as wishing to state that you are on the whole satisfied with your present position?—Yes.

14,935. Is that what you want to say?—Yes, regarding land.

14,936. Have you any idea that your condition could be improved by additional grazing?—Well, I can't see it, sir, because I am central in the place, and I have got that grazing extending over to another proprietor's march.

14,937. Do you find any difficulty in working your arable land successfully there?—Yes, we do; very commonly. We are very unfortunate with frost sometimes when the crop is in good ear, and sometimes with floods again.

Drumnadrochit.

Allan Cameron.

14,938. Between frost and floods you have difficulty with the crops?—Yes.

14,939. Have you difficulty in securing them when there is no frost?—Yes, such as last year we had a great difficulty in getting it secured.

14,940. That is owing to the weather?—Owing to the wet weather.

14,941. Do you find then that your existing holding is the best size to assist you in getting a living in Glenmoriston?—No, it does not keep me living; I only count it as a home and only get my work from the shooting tenants.

14,942. Then you think that you would prefer your present situation to a large holding, say such as 20 acres of arable which we have heard spoken of as a self-supporting holding, with corresponding grazing?—I am more content with how I am situated.

14,943. How do you get your living otherwise? How do you make up the deficiency?—I always in the season attend as a gillie with the shooting tenant.

14,944. You find that suits you better?—Yes.

14,945. You get wages during the shooting season?—Yes.

14,946. And you find with that that you can make a fair living?—Just a fair living, and something of a home I have.

14,947. Then you look upon your holding as a home that gives you a certain amount of produce for the support of your family?—I have no family, but for all, I have quite enough to get from the holding what will supply the cattle; and I don't get that sometimes, because I generally have to get hay and potatoes and such like from Glen-Urquhart.

14,948. Mr Sutherland.—When did you send in your name as a witness to be examined here?—It was this morning that we thought of it.

14,949. Had you a meeting of the tenants there at which you were appointed to represent them?—No.

14,950. You are here on your own initiative entirely?—Yes, in my own interest, and for the district.

14,951. Speaking only for yourself?—Yes.

14,952. Then you say that you depend on the shooting tenant for the greater part of your livelihood?—Yes.

14,953. Then you will be in favour of maintaining the shooting tenant in his present position?—Yes.

14,954. You said that last year you had great difficulty in securing your crop?—Yes.

14,955. Was that the case, do you know, all over the country?—All over the country; all over the glen.

14,956. Not only over Glenmoriston, but over every other part of the country as well as the harvest was late and wet?—Yes.

14,957. Can you give me any other instance of any year when you were under so great destitution?—The year before, the very same.

14,958. And was the bad harvest general all over the country the same?—Yes, it got very much damaged with the flood.

14,959. Are you aware whether your neighbours are of the same opinion as you are with regard to not desiring more land?—I can't say, but so far as is known to me from my crofter neighbours I did not hear any complaint.

14,960. And do you cultivate the land you have now?—Yes.

14,961. Every year?—Every year.

14,962. Why do you cultivate it seeing it is so bad?—Well, we can have nothing at all unless we cultivate it. Some years we get a little, and other years we are deprived of it through misfortune.

14,963. Do you make great losses through the washing away of your crops?—Sometimes.

14,964. You would be very sorry to want the croft?—Oh, yes, I would not live without it, only I find it is a home.

14,965. Do you think you would be better off if you had more land?—I am not meaning or wishing to have more.

14,966. You are not yourself personally?—Not myself personally.

14,967. But you speak for yourself only?—Only for myself.

Drumnadrochit.

Allan Cameron.

14,968. Mr Maccallum.—How long have you been in your present holding?—From my birth I may say.

14,969. And had you a lease of it from the beginning, since you got possession of it?—I can't say from the beginning; during my father's time I did not own it.

14,970. Had he a lease of it?—Yes, and his forefathers were there, and I am there now on the same site.

14,971. Did they hold the land on lease or were they tenants from year to year?—I can't say.

14,972. Can you tell us the exact date of your present lease?—I think it is about seven years.

14,973. Was it after the passing of the Crofters Act do you know?—I don't remember; no, I think it was before that; not to make it sure.

14,974. You did not pay much attention then to the Act, and to the rights that it conferred upon small holders?—No, because I thought I had myself such like as the holdings they were granting at the time.

14,975. But there are some benefits conferred by the Act such as security of tenure for instance?—We did not count to that.

14,976. You did not pay any attention to that?—No, I did not pay much attention to that.

14,977. Or to the Act at all or the privileges conferred by it?—No.

14,978. And you don't know whether this lease was entered into before or after the passing of the Act?—I can't say for certain.

14,979. Now would you take more land if it were offered to you on fair conditions?—Well, in my present position if I was to take that it would injure my neighbour. I could not get it otherwise.

14,980. But let us suppose land were available, would you think it a benefit to get it?—Well, it did not strike me much to have more land.

14,981. You tell us that you came altogether on your own initiative?—Yes.

14,982. And in your own interest?—Yes, and in the interests of the district.

14,983. Then what had you in view in coming?—Just to hear and see from the Royal Commission partly.

14,984. But didn't you come to give information?—Yes, on account of what I heard Mr Macdonald here say—the last witness, Mr Macdonald, farmer.

14,985. It was after that you thought of it?—Yes, to confirm what he said.

14,986. Did you make up your mind to come before Mr Macdonald's evidence was given?—Oh, yes, we did make up our mind to come before he appeared.

14,987. Before he gave his evidence?—Yes.

14,988. And when exactly did you make up your mind to give evidence?—I can't say; I was not particular; I was not very particular.

14,989. You were not particular about it, but surely you can tell us when you made up your mind on that point?—(No answer.)

14,990. The Chairman.—The question is, when did you make up your mind to come here and give evidence?—I have been making up my mind for some time past.

14,991. When did you begin to make it up?—Just yesterday like.

14,992. Mr Maccallum.—Are there people in the glen who have not land, I mean cottars who have not any land?—Yes.

14,993. Do you think that you express their mind, that they don't want land?—Oh, no, I don't speak in their behalf at all.

14,994. But simply just for your ownself?—Yes.

14,995. But you think the holding you have is a great benefit to you?—Yes.

14,996. And you would not like to be deprived of it?—No, I would not like to part with it, nor to be without it.

14,997. Then you would not like any interference with the deer forest?—No.

14,998. And the reason is?—Because I get my living from it.

14,999. Do you get employment all the year round?

—Not all the year round, but I get most of the season, —fully through the season,—and some labour about in the spring and summer.

15,000. How long are you engaged in the year taking an average?—Twelve weeks in the season engaged, and sometimes in the summer when there is work.

15,001. And you are afraid that if the deer forests were vacated in any way or holdings granted from them, that twelve weeks' work would be lost to you?—Yes.

15,002. And that is your great reason for objecting to the interference?—Yes, it is because I get my living from it.

15,003. You think though that there is good pasture in the deer forest?—Oh, yes, there is good pasture in parts, and in parts not.

15,004. And the glen is capable of raising good crops?—Well, the glen is just on the run as I have told you already; it is subject to these floods and frosts all over.

15,005. Now can you tell us when you suffered from frost?—Last year greatly; our potatoes were gone entirely.

15,006. The year before that?—The year before that they stood pretty well.

15,007. The potatoes were very good?—Yes.

15,008. And it is only an occasional loss you suffer through frost?—Yes

15,009. But the place is not very high?—Well, it is considered pretty high too, but there are higher places; I am not so high in the glen as others.

15,010. Mr Munro.—Did no person suggest you should come here to-day?—No.

15,011. You came here entirely of your own accord?—Yes.

15,012. And you came here to tell us that you were contented with your lot?—Yes.

15,013. Perfectly contented?—Yes.

15,014. It is long since I met a man like you. You say you want no more land yourself?—No, of the the kind I have.

15,015. But I suppose you are prepared to admit that there are many others who do want land?—Oh, yes, there may.

15,016. Mr Gordon.—Were your potatoes frosted in 1888, five years ago?—Oh, yes, they were completely.

15,017. Were they frosted in 1885?—I can't remember because they are very commonly spoiled with the frost; very often.

15,018. You don't find that you can grow potatoes with certainty?—No, we can't.

15,019. Your principal reason for wishing to have a croft is not so much for profit as for the convenience of having milk and butter and cheese?—Yes.

15,020. That is to say it is rather for the produce of the cow than for the profit?—Yes; I have had no profit.

15,021. You don't make much profit off it?—No, nothing.

15,022. The Chairman.—Did you give in your own name to be examined or did you not?—Not very particular like that; I did not object to doing it.

15,023. Stop now, did you give in your own name for examination, or did you not, yes or no?—Yes, I did upon this point that I have related.

15,024. But generally?—Yes.

15,025. Or was your name given in by Mr Macdonald, Inverness?—Oh, no, sir, no.

15,026. Did you give in your name in writing?—No.

15,027. Then, how did you give it in?—By word.

15,028. I have it here in writing?—Oh, there might be a writing about it.

15,029. There might be writing by whom?—I don't know the name.

15,030. Is it Mr Charles Macdonald of Inverness?—I can't say. [Mr Sutherland.—Did you communicate with our Secretary?]

15,031. Do you know Mr Mackenzie here?—No.

15,032. Well, you know him now. Did you give in your name to him?—Yes, I did say that I was to come here.

15,033. When?—Yesterday evening.

15,034. Mr Mackenzie says no, that you did not?—Well, I believe it was sent in to him.

15,035. But I asked him and he says no?—Oh, I did not give it to him.

15,036. Then why do you say you did?—I gave it to him.

15,037. He says you did not and I believe him and not you?—Well, I beg your pardon, I did not give it to him.

15,038. To whom did you give it?—I can't say exactly.

15,039. Then you can't explain how your name reached me?—No.

15,040. I have it here and you answered to the name when called. Is it so that you can't explain how your name reached me? Never mind other people, I am talking to you as to facts which must be within your own knowledge you know. Can you explain how your name reached me or can you not?—(No answer.)

15,041. I should like an answer to that question?—I gave my name to some party that I am not very well acquainted with.

15,042. Who is the 'some party'?—This gentleman (indicating Mr H. V. Maccallum of the Highland Property Defence Association).

15,043. Is it Mr Maccallum?—I don't know his name.

15,044. You gave your name to a gentleman whose name you don't know?—Yes, my lord, I don't know his name.

15,045. Were you asked to give in your name?—No, but I may say that I would like to come before your lordship, and to express my own opinion of the holding I have.

15,046. Did you come here to give evidence with the view of preventing other people getting land if land could be legitimately obtained?—No, I did not.

15,047. You are employed as a gillie?—Yes.

15,048. Is that your main source of livelihood?—Yes, partly, for the most of it.

15,049. What wage do you get?—Well, 6s. a day with my pony.

15,050. And some allowances besides, perhaps?—Yes, sometimes.

15,051. How long does that 6s. a day continue usually?—Well, it mostly continues for three months.

15,052. What is the name of the shooting tenant?—Mr Bannatyne.

15,053. How are you employed during the rest of the year?—We get some wood carting to do.

15,054. From whom?—From the proprietor.

15,055. How much of the year are you occupied with that?—Well, we have been more occupied for the recent years than for the last two or three winters; there was not such a demand upon the wood.

15,056. But going back two or three winters, how long were you employed during the slack season?—The whole of winter and part of spring.

15,057. What wage had you on the average for that?—We cannot exactly tell you the average, but we were paid by the ton to drag and cart it.

15,058. What payment do you get per ton?—It is according to the distance we have to cart it.

15,059. What is your average making from that employment?—It would run about 5s. a day.

15,060. How much of winter are you so occupied?—That would be according if the winter was fair; if it was stormy we could not get on with it.

15,061. On the average you would be employed four months?—About four months.

15,062. Continually during that time?—Yes.

15,063. Allowing for weather, of course?—Yes.

15,064. At 5s. a day?—At 5s. a day.

15,065. Then have you not other sources of employment?—Nothing particular, except a day here and there if we were not employed by the shooting tenant.

15,066. What were you doing these odd days, labouring?—Yes, if it was to be got, but it is not easily got.

15,067. You would, of course, take labouring wherever it could be got?—Yes.

15,068. Are you in arrears of rent?—No.

15,069. How long have you been tenant of this holding?—From my birth.

15,070. I think you have said that already.

Drumnadrochit. Allan Cameron.

15,071. Mr Maccallum.—You said that no one suggested to you to come to give evidence. Now, will you tell me how did you happen to give your name to a gentleman whom you don't know even by name, in order that you might be brought before the Commission?—Well, it happened we were just talking about it outside, and this gentleman came about and asked if I would like to give any evidence, and I said yes.

15,072. Well, in that way did he not suggest to you that you should give evidence?—No, he did not. [Mr Munro.—You suggested it yourself, did you?—Yes.]

15,073. How did you think he would be the means of communicating your name here if you did not know anything about him? How did you make him the medium of communication with this Commission?—I cannot answer that question.

15,074. The Chairman.—The question is why did you not come frankly forward yourself to the Secretary and communicate your name as one desirous of giving information?—Well, I don't consider myself to be of very great interest; but I meant to give an account of how I was employed myself and kept up on the place.

15,075. Mr Maccallum.—And how did you select Mr Maccallum as your medium of communication?—He happened to be about.

15,076. And did you say that you would be willing to give your name?—He did not force me to give my name.

15,077. But did he suggest to you to give your name?—No.

15,078. And you just gave your name without knowing whether he had any connection with anybody here?—Oh, I did know he had a connection; I had seen him here yesterday.

15,079. Did you know he had any connection with any association?—Yes, I did.

15,080. What did you know about him?—[The Chairman.—Answer the question?]—I took him to be a man of business in the Royal Commission.

15,081. Did you know that he was acting as agent for a landlord association?—No, I did not know at the time.

15,082. You were not aware of that at all?—No.

15,083. Or that he was acting in the interests of proprietors?—No.

15,084. Do you really, distinctly, say that?—Yes, I must say I did not know for whom he acted.

15,085. Did he make that known to you?—No.

15,086. He did not make it known to you that he was acting in the interests of proprietors?—No, I don't think he did.

15,087. Mr H. V. Maccallum.—My lord, I have a personal explanation to make which it seems to me desirable that I should make at this stage. There is nothing really to hide in this matter at all. The circumstances are these:—When I came here yesterday afternoon I met Mr Burgess, the factor, who said that certain crofters and tenants from Glenmoriston had volunteered certain information. I asked him what was the nature of the information. He told me,—he said in fact that the information was that they really did not wish to move, but as he had an official position in connection with the bank and also as factor, and it might be thought that he had induced these men to come forward in some way or other, he said to me, 'What would you advise me to do,' knowing I represent the Highland Property Defence Association. I said to him 'Well, I think it would be 'better if men would give in their own names themselves' and he said 'Well, I don't know if they have 'got paper or can write it out.' 'Well,' I said, 'that is a 'matter of no moment; get a list of the names and get 'one of them to hand it in to Mr Mackenzie.' That was done and that is all about it.*

14,088. Mr Munro.—Did that take place here in Glen-Urquhart?

15,089. Mr H. V. Maccallum.—Here in Glen-Urquhart yesterday when I met you, Mr Munro, at the bank.

15,090. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—And your course of action was suggested to you by Mr Burgess.

* The list of names was handed in by Mr Charles Macdonald, the preceding witness, and not by Cameron.

15,091. Mr H. V. Maccallum.—No, it was not.

15,092. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—He took your advice?

15,093. Mr H. V. Maccallum.—He took my advice.

15,094. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—He asked your advice?

15,095. Mr H. V. Maccallum—Yes, but my course of action was not suggested by him.

15,096. Mr Munro.—How did the men happen to be here?

15,097. Mr H. V. Maccallum.—Because they volunteered this information; they came up of their own accord. I thought it was very nice of them, and I wish others would do the same.

15,098. Mr Sutherland.—You said 'we' in your statement, or 'they.' You used the plural number in speaking about the crofters at this place I presume?

15,099. Mr H. V. Maccallum.—No, I said that I wished others would do the same throughout the Highlands. I may have said 'we' in reference to myself, because I represent a very important association.

15,100. Mr Sutherland.—But I thought you referred to others than this gentleman?

15,101. Mr H. V. Maccallum.—Oh, no, I am not referring to him at all.

15,102. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—Might I ask your age?—[Witness].—I am not prepared to answer any questions from you.

15,103. The Chairman.—His age is 44.

15,104. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—What is your name?

15,105. The Chairman. — His name is Allan Cameron.—[Witness].—Allan Cameron.

15,106. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—Is that the parental name?—Yes, that I took to myself.

15,107. Is that the parental name?—It has nothing to do with you at all.

15,108. We wish facts here; is that the parental name?—I am not prepared to meet you at all.

15,109. The Chairman.—Stop, you must not run away.

15,110. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—You admit that you are a Cameron?—Yes.

15,111. Have you a perfect knowledge regarding the prestige and esprit de corps of the ancient Camerons?

15,112. The Chairman.—I cannot allow that question.

15,113. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—It is a very important question I am bringing about. I am tracing Mr Cameron to one particular point.

15,114. The Chairman.—Well, what is the point?

15,115. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—Did you comprehend the force of the first part of the question which I put?

15,116. The Chairman.—I must say I don't comprehend it.

15,117. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—Well, Mr Cameron, you said you came here to-day, and that you don't desire to obtain more land?—Yes.

15,118. Now, is it not a fact that, like the Cameronians of old, you would like to be an independent Highlander?

15,119. The Chairman.—I can't allow that question, it is not relevant to our present inquiry.

15,120. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—I fear, my lord, that there is something at the back of this which I would like to clear up. [To witness].—Is it not a fact that you would not like to be dependent upon anyone?

15,121. The Chairman.—We are all dependent on each other you know, more or less.

15,122. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—Now, Mr Cameron, you have failed to answer these questions, but I will put another. To your perfect knowledge, is it not a fact that there are plenty lands, hundreds of acres, throughout the estate of Glenmoriston, as good as what you get down in the parish of Glen-Urquhart here, if it were only distributed on the people to establish them in a comfortable way?—I know there is not anything of the soil of Glen-Urquhart in Glenmoriston.

15,123. I am perfectly aware of that. Of course, we can't transfer the soil from the one parish to the other; that is not the question at all. But is it not the fact that the land up there—I don't say all—but is it not the fact that the land up there produces as good a crop as the lands down here do?—No.

15,124. Is it not in many cases, now?—No, it does not bring the same produce.

15,125. Would you please specify the places that you mean?—Every place in the glen; it never carries the crop of Glen-Urquhart.

15,126. Are you aware of the fact, or would you be surprised to hear it, that even on the home farm of Invermoriston in my younger days—you know my age—that the farm of Invermoriston was yielding some of the best crops that would defy even the east country here; such is not the case now. [The Chairman.—Do you know about that, Cameron?]—No, I am not much acquainted about the low farm of Invermoriston; I live eight miles farther up the glen.

15,127. You say with regard to the frost that it is very prevalent there?—Yes.

15,128. Is it the fact that it comes every year in six?—I did not say so.

15,129. Can you specify the interval between one frost and another?—Yes.

15,130. Between a severe frost and when another severe frost comes? [The Chairman.—The interval?]

15,131. Yes, these frosts which he has experienced in his time?—Didn't we experience frost last year?

15,132. That is one year; now retrace your memory back?—About five years before, we would have suffered the same loss.

15,133. That was three years of plenty?—And so forth.

15,134. The Chairman.—I cannot allow that line to be pursued any further.

15,135. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—One more question. The question was put to me, when I was up for examination, if I had any knowledge of agriculture. I am simply going to bring this out. Are you aware of the fact that even the influence of frost could be abated by the use of one plough besides another?—No, I am not aware of that.

15,136. The Chairman.—I don't follow your question.

15,137. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—Are you aware that the influence of frost could be abated by the use of one plough besides another?—I don't know.

15,138. Can you specify the difference between a high coulter plough and a small, what we call a hand plough?—I never used a high coulter, I always use a small plough.

15,139. Are your aware of this fact that if you put down your potato seed with a level surface you resist the force of the frost, whereas if you use a high coulter into drills the effect of the frost is still greater?

15,140. The Chairman.—Can you answer that?—No, I can't.

15,141. I can't answer it either. Now that will do, I cannot allow any more.

15,142. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—Thank you, my lord.

Alexander Macdonald.

ALEXANDER MACDONALD, Crofter, Dalchreichard. (Examined in Gaelic, through an Interpreter.)

15,143. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

15,144. Are you under lease?—Yes.

15,145. What is the date of the lease?—Six or seven years ago.

15,146. What is your rent?—£19.

15,147. Your name has been given in as wishing to give evidence; what is it you desire to tell us about?—We were desirous of coming down.

15,148. For what purpose?—In order that we might see the Commissioners.

15,149. Anything more?—No.

15,150. Then we may abbreviate your examination. I think that will do. Drumnadrochit.

15,151. Mr Macleod, Invermoriston.—May I put one question? Alexander Macdonald.

15,152. The Chairman.—No, I think it is quite unnecessary.

PETER BURGESS, Factor for Glenmoriston (43)—examined. Peter Burgess.

15,153. The Chairman.—Have you a written statement, Mr Burgess?—Yes.

15,154. How long have you been factor in Glenmoriston?—Eighteen years.

15,155. Where were you before?—At Invergarry. I was accountant in the Caledonian Bank there.

15,156. Is your statement in your own handwriting?—Yes.

15,157. And signed?—Yes.

In 1809 the number of holdings on the property was only 40. At present there is but one farm let at a rent of over £200 per annum. The whole of the arable land is still occupied and cultivated to the best advantage. There is but a very small extent of it within the area under deer forest, and that is cultivated and grazed by the keepers. The largest extent of arable land occupied by one tenant farmer is only about 60 acres.

The holdings are principally small and many of them do not produce sufficient grain and provender to maintain the families of the tenants and their stocks. The smaller tenants depend on a livelihood chiefly from acting as gillies and labourers on the estate. For a considerable number of years back many of them have got employment in cutting and carting birchwood during the winter months, but there is scarcely any demand for that kind of timber now, and there is a probability that the labour in connection with it may cease altogether. Should that happen, the smaller tenants will have a great difficulty in making a livelihood in the district. The tendency, therefore, should be, as opportunity arises, to join two and two of the existing small holdings together rather than to increase their number. Indeed, there is no means of increasing the number of small holdings on this property. The whole of the arable land is already occupied, and there is not nearly sufficient of it to winter the stock of sheep presently on the property.

In my opinion a model property should be divided into a few large farms, if the property is adapted for such, but the bulk of the holdings should range from a size which would give employment to a pair of small horses to a size which would require a pair or a pair and a half of ordinary sized horses. The smaller sized holdings should grow on each what would support a family until some of them were able to spread out to other employment. Small crofters and cottars should generally not be more numerous than would enable at least the head of each family to get employment in his own neighbourhood.

For several years back the proprietor has carried out at his own expense the bulk of the permanent improvements on this property, and I find that the cost of fully equipping a holding with suitable buildings for man and beast, erected of stone and lime and roofed with slates or corrugated iron, equals six to twelve or more years' rent according to the size of the holding; the expense being larger in proportion as the holding becomes smaller.

Some sixteen years ago I consulted a practical sheep farmer who knew the ground intimately in regard to the rent which might be got for the grazings of the deer forests if they were let as sheep runs. He went carefully into calculations in my presence and his estimate was that we could not expect more than £800 or £850. The rents then obtained for sheep farms cannot now be got. I may say that Knockie, the largest sheep farm on the property, is let including arable land at an average of 11d. per acre. Another farm, Achlean, is let at 9d. One crofting township, that of Baltombuy, is let at 8d.; another, Dalchreichard, at 8d.; another, Dundreggan, at 9d., and there is one ordinary sized farm, Balnacarn, which is let so low as 5d. an acre.

15,159. That is grazing?—Grazing and arable included.

15,160. What is the size of the holding can you tell us?—It is a £70 rent, and there would be probably 40 acres of arable in it. The forest ground, on the other hand, is let at an average of 1s. 7d. per acre; and the same under sheep, according to this gentleman's estimate which was very close to my own, would only fetch 3d. per acre. The ground is not well adapted for grouse, and the shooting over it, if under sheep, would not be worth more than the grazing rent, together £1600 or about one third of the sum for which it lets as deer forest. It is clear, therefore, that these lands cannot meantime be turned to better account than they are at present. If put under sheep, the decrease of revenue would mean ruin to the property, as it could not be properly maintained, and it would at the same time be the means of increasing the parish rates by one-fourth.

Having been born and brought up on a croft, and having taken a practical part in all the different kinds of labour in connection with crofting and farming, I may be allowed to say that in my opinion the manner of living in the Highlands has changed so much within the last generation or two that a whole glen or countryside under crofts cannot be made a success in these times. Long ago, off a few acres of arable land and a little outrun, a family did make a living of a kind, no doubt pinched for want of food when the crops failed owing to bad seasons, autumn frosts and other causes. There were very few draper's or baker's or butcher's accounts in those days. From a few fleeces of wool, washed, carded, spun, and dyed at home, and woven by the local handloom weaver, the family clothing was made. That for the male members of the family was made up by an itinerant tailor who was paid in meal or potatoes, and the women made up their own clothing and the men's underclothing. The first pair of shoes I remember having were made by my father—who was not a shoemaker to trade—and when they became worn out and the soles began to come away from them I wept, thinking I would never see another pair. The implements of husbandry were with few exceptions of local make, many of them being made at home. This was the general custom in my early days before the country was opened up by railways. There was no tea seen expect occasionally on Sunday, and no loaf bread except when a stranger visited the place. The food, as a rule, was porridge and milk for breakfast, potatoes and milk, potatoes and herring, or water or whey brose with milk and bread for dinner. The supper varied according to the season of the year from porridge and milk as for breakfast to brose made from cabbage or greens in the autumn, and from turnips in winter, with mashed greens and bread, or turnips and bread, after the brose. Not infrequently the supper consisted of gruel and bread or sowans and bread. Porridge was made from the remains of the greens or of the turnips the following morning for breakfast.

At the present time mostly every article of clothing is bought as well as much of the food consumed, and these cannot be paid for out of the profits made from a croft. And the times are not such as to encourage farming even on a larger scale. Produce was seldom lower in price. For the last two seasons cast ewes and shot lambs would scarcely pay their expenses to market; and wethers and other classes of sheep have been very cheap. Wool, which usually paid the rent of a sheep farm a generation ago, sells at less than half what it did then; and I read in the newspapers the other day that potatoes sent to the London market barely paid carriage and charges. In one instance they did not.

Drumnadrochit.

Peter Burg

It is well known that old arable land which has been out of culivation for many years will, even though thin and at a high elevation, give fair crops for two or three years if the seasons are favourable, but the soil very soon becomes exhausted and not remunerative to labour. By a high elevation I do not mean a hard and fast line of so many feet. Land in a dry climate such as Morayshire where the rainfall averages 30 to 40 inches will, if properly treated, continue to yield better crops than the same class of land at a lower level by 200 or 300 feet in our wet climate where the rainfall is 70, 80, and in some cases over 100 inches. In dry seasons the farmyard manure applied does not become pulverised, while in wet seasons the substance is washed out of the soil; yet the crops sometimes obtained would mislead a theorist or one not acquainted with the facts and circumstances. I have seen such soil broken up and limed after being seven or eight years under grass, yield oats weighing 44½ lbs. per bushel; but that soil will not now pay the expense of keeping it in heart and the expense of labour, and it has been under sheep for several years back.

Considering, therefore, the cost of providing buildings and stock, the quality of the soil in the Highlands, the uncertain climate, the low price of farm produce, the extra burden to the ratepayers, the dearth of labour, and the cost of living now as compared with older times, I am firmly of the belief that it would be imprudent to plant crofters, or even small farmers, in isolated corners which were at one time occupied by industrious tenants who had to give way under changed circumstances.

There are many Highland properties for sale from time to time and, if there was any reasonable expectation that a crofting community would be a success, capitalists would very soon discover it and find an outlet for their money in that direction. The law of supply and demand will most effectually regulate the purpose to which land should be applied, whether arable or moorland.

15,161. The Chairman.—You said that there were 55,000 acres of the estate you represent under sheep?—Under deer.

15,162. I thought you said 75,000 under sheep, and 55,000 under deer?—75,000 is the total extent of the property.

15,163. How much is under sheep?—The difference, 20,000, is between sheep and arable land.

15,164. How many farms are on these 20,000 acres, exclusive of crofters under £30 of rent?—Eleven.

15,165. Eleven farmers?—Eleven tenants above £30.

15,166. Just give us their rents?—I find there are eight only, my lord.

15,167. Eight, not eleven, above £30. Now what are the rents of these tenants?—They are as follows:—

Tomchraskie, Peter Fullarton, £50.
Balnancarn, Charles Macdonald, £70.
Torgoyle, Thomas Dott, £30.
Dundreggan and Easter Inverwick, J. F. G. Bannatyne, £55.
Invermoriston, Robert Sinclair, £72.
Mains Farm—in the proprietor's own hands, valued at £31, 7s. 6d.
Aonach, James Macpherson, £200.
Knockie, Lord Lovat, £250.

15,168. You say that the crofts at rents not exceeding £30 are too small?—The large majority of them.

15,169. What is their average size?—About ten acres, taking the average.

15,170. Ten acres arable?—Yes.

15,171. And they have grazing besides I suppose?—The whole of them.

15,172. And they all keep sheep?—Yes.

15,173. And do they keep horses?—Yes, I think the whole of them have at least one horse.

15,174. Would you be in favour, if it could be properly carried out, of consolidating a number of these holdings and giving the consolidated holding to a single tenant?—As a croft became vacant, I would be inclined to add it or join it to its neighbour.

15,175. Now what farms do these holdings march with?—The crofting township of Dalchreichard has five tenants. The rent of one is £10, 1s. 1d., of another £9, 16s. 3d., of another £8, 6s. 11d., and of another £19. I expect the last is two crofts added together.

15,176. What I want to get from you is, which of the farms mainly do the crofting townships march with?—The crofting farms and the large farms are on opposite sides of the river. In fact, the large farms are on the south side of the river, the crofts all on the north.

15,177. Are all the farms above £30 on the opposite side of the river from the crofts?—Only those above £100.

15,178. What river is that?—The river Moriston; and I may say as we are talking of the river that the land is lying very close to the river, which is slow and stagnant, and that accounts, I rather think, for the frost that the tenants complained of.

15,179. What are the bounds of the crofting townships on the other side away from the river; is it forest?—The township of Dundreggan borders the forest on the east side. One forest is on the east side of the township of Dundreggan.

15,180. And what are the other boundaries of the townships?—One £70 farm adjoins Dalchreichard township to the west, and the large farm of £200 is on the opposite side of the river.

15,181. And both the large farms, the one in the hands of Mr Macpherson, and the other in the hands of Lord Lovat, are on the opposite side of the river?—Yes, Mr Macpherson's is; Lord Lovat's is on the south side of Loch Ness.

15,182. It is in a different district?—Yes, right opposite Invermoriston on the south side of Loch Ness, in a different district.

15,183. Have you considered any mode of dealing with crofters who were obliged to leave their holdings in order to make room for consolidation?—No, we had no instance of that.

15,184. You admit you say that it would be a good thing to consolidate a number of these holdings so as to make them large enough?—We have been carrying that out as holdings became vacant.

15,185. By death or otherwise?—By death or the tenant choosing to leave of his own accord; one crofter left for a £50 farm for instance, and the croft was added to his neighbour's.

15,186. But you don't suggest any remedy? I suppose a process of consolidation were carried out, do you suggest any way of disposing of those who are deprived of their holdings?—No, I have not had occasion to consider it.

15,187. But is there not land upon the estate which might be allocated to them?—Not any, the arable land is too little just now for the requirements of the district and has ever been so for the population.

15,188. In your opinion as a skilled man the arable is too small as it is?—That is so, and I see it was so long before my time; in the last Statistical Account it is stated that Glenmoriston never produced sufficient to support the population.

15,189. How is that; has it a backward disposition?—It is a very narrow glen.

15,190. And you say the whole of the available arable is taken up?—It is.

15,191. And there is not enough?—No.

15,192. But might we not take it in this way, that there is improvable land upon which crofters might be settled and turn that land into arable?—I don't think there is; I am sure there is not.

15,193. Has there been any extension of the arable by these large farmers during the last twenty years?—None, the last land that was improved was by the grandfather of the present proprietor, 16 acres of moor at one place, and I am not sure what the extent was in another place. In fact it is attached to a large farm, and I don't know what extent it was, but the other was 16 acres.

15,194. That is the last?—That is the last, and that was certainly before 1848.

15,195. But is this not the case that the crofters have by reclamation extended the area of their arable?—No, they have not, since 1848.

15,196. Not since 1848?—No, there was not improvable land in it for them.

15,197. Would you say that that is not from indisposition to do it, but because the land is not there?—No, it is not, they would be very anxious to do it I have no doubt if the land was there to improve.

15,198. Is the arable land of the crofters' holdings exhausted or is it kept well up?—It is not well up.

15,199. Is it as well up as the farmers?—Not as a rule.

15,200. Do they follow a system of rotation?—Yes, they do, but in some cases where the soil is very thin, which it is in many parts, they leave out a field for a time until it gains heart.

15,201. The crofters do that?—Some of them do. I have seen it done by one at least.

15,202. What is the average altitude of the arable?—I may say that with the exception of the home farm and a small bit attached to the hotel it is all above the 400 feet level, between 400 and 500 feet.

15,203. Has there been land added to the deer forest in your time?—There has been part of the farm of Tomchraskie.

15,204. How much was added from Tomchraskie?—Between 7000 and 8000 acres, if I remember. I think it was stated in a return to Lord Napier's Commission.

15,205. Between 7000 and 8000 acres of grazing?—Of hill ground.

15,206. Hill ground?—Entirely.

15,207. Of what character was it? black hill ground, high land or low ground?—High ground, the low ground was kept for the tenant of Tomchraskie who still has it. 7106 acres as far as I could judge.

15,208. Would the crofters where you are factor be benefited by an extension of their grazing?—Some would, no doubt, if they were to depend on the croft itself for a living, but those of them who depend on outside work prefer the small holding, because they would not have the time to engage in other work if they had the larger holding.

15,209. But apart from that question I suppose I

Drumnadrochit.

Peter Burgess.

may take it that grazing land of some value is obtainable from the forest for that purpose?—Not without destroying the forest.

15,210. Was the forest not a pretty good forest before Tomchraskie was added to it?—I have no doubt it was.

15,211. Then would not the forest be as good as it was before if the Tomchraskie lands were taken from it again?—No doubt, but the addition of the Tomchraskie lands to the forest increases its value very considerably; it was cleared by the tenant of the holding for putting it under deer. It was cleared by the shooting tenant, who rented the grazings.

15,212. But would not the forest be as good as it was before Tomchraskie was added to it if it were taken from it again?—No, Tomchraskie ground adds to the value of the forest.

15,213. Quite, it adds to the value of the forest, but suppose you take away Tomchraskie you would still have as good a forest as before Tomchraskie was added to it?—No doubt.

12,214. Therefore, the forest would not be destroyed?—It would not be destroyed.

15,215. What addition was made to the rent, if you remember, of the forest when Tomchraskie was added?—Tomchraskie was added, as I said, by the shooting tenant, and the whole rent of the farm was £400.

15,216. What rent effeired to the part added to the forest?—The part now let which I may say Glenmoriston gave as a privilege to the present tenant because he was a crofter of his own at £20 or £30 lower rent than he could get from outsiders, yields now £50; well, say £80 would be a fair rent, that would have to be deducted from the £400.

15,217. What is the rent of the forest?—Lord Tweedmouth's rent is £2500.

15,218. And may we take £400 of that as representing the rent of the Tomchraskie portion of it?—No, £320.

15,219. The grazing rent?—The grazing rent.

15,220. And the shooting rent?—The shooting rent is very little; as I said before it is not adapted for grouse.

15,221. But it is adapted for deer?—It is adapted for deer. I think I said in my statement that the shooting rent, as a rule, would average about the same as the grazing rent; but I may say that the £400 or the £320 could not now be got for the farm as a sheep grazing.

15,222. What would you expect to get for it now as a sheep grazing?—I don't think we would get £200.

15,223. Have the crofters on that estate made any application to you for additional land either arable or grazing?—None whatever; one township, Achnanconeran, some years ago, expressed a wish to have their holdings extended, and the tenant of the neighbouring land left it, and at that time we had an opportunity of giving them the 16 acres of arable land which I said were improved by the grandfather of the present proprietor, and some extra outrun. They got that in my time.

15,224. And have there been any applications since?—None.

15,225. Now, how many cottars are there on the estate?—There are about ten cottars of all kinds, paying a rent of £1 to £6, and there are fourteen small cottars who merely pay a nominal rent of 1s. for a house stance, and some of them having a garden pay 5s. I may say that it was since I took charge of the property that I suggested there should be any nominal rent paid.

15,226. Have these people, either the cottars paying a rent such as you mention or these people paying 1s., made application for land?—One did, that is all.

15,227. In your time?—In my time.

15,228. Are they a considerable burden upon the crofters?—No, I don't think so; they are not numerous; the glen is a long one, and they are not numerous considering the length.

15,229. And are they much scattered over the glen?—They are scattered over a distance of nine miles or so.

15,230. Have these cottars paying a rent of £1 to £6 or so, any land?—No, only a garden.

Drumnadrochit.

Peter Burgess.

15,231. And, as a rule, have they stock?—None.

15,232. Have they no stock feeding upon the crofters' ground?—None; no, I don't think there is any now. Some of them are tradesmen; two of them are blacksmiths, one is a tailor, another a shoemaker, and Mr Macleod, merchant, and a few labourers.

15,233. You have no desire, I suppose, to see crofters on the estate leave the place if accommodation could be afforded them?—Not the slightest; we do not wish any of them to leave who can remain; we would wish to get as many as would be required for the proper supply of labour to the district.

15,234. Well, and not only so, but would you not be disposed to keep all tenants there for whom accommodation could be found reasonably?—Quite so, without sacrificing any other interests.

15,235. You are not prepared to make any sacrifice?—Not to a large extent; of course, we have to make a sacrifice with those we have now, we try to retain a certain number and we make a very considerable sacrifice indeed, because the proprietor builds houses now, here and there, and I may say for the houses he builds he will never see any return.

15,236. Has he built all the houses?—He has built within the last few years a number of crofters' houses, and some offices.

15,237. A considerable number?—One here and there, a few, and I suppose it is his intention to continue that without any outlay whatever to the crofter except the carriage of the material. He never asked him to pay a penny of interest upon that outlay.

15,238. What outlay has he made, roughly, say within the last ten years, upon such places?—About £2000, I should say.

15,239. On crofters' buildings, dwelling houses, and steadings?—Between crofters and cottars.

15,240. I mean below the level of farms?—Below the level of farms it averages £200 a year, some years not so much.

15,241. Has he got no interest on all that?—Some cottars pay a rent, that is how the cottars' rents are so high; some of them are up to £6.

15,242. Does the expenditure on the crofters' buildings yield no interest?—No interest. He never charged one penny of interest to a crofter.

15,243. Are these tenants holding under a lease, or are they under the Act?—Under lease.

15,244. The whole of them?—The whole of them with one exception.

15,245. Are the cottars under lease?—Some are and some not.

15,246. And these people paying 1s. how do they stand?—They have no lease, they are all at will.

15,247. You mentioned the names of tenants, Fullarton, Macdonald, Dott, and so forth; are these present or prior tenants?—Present tenants.

15,248. Then none of these farms of the rents you mention are in the proprietor's hands except Mains Farm?—Only the Mains Farm; that is the only farm in his hands.

15,249. And do all these tenants hold under nineteen years' or fifteen years' leases?—Nineteen years' leases.

15,250. Mr Munro.—You mentioned that the average rent you derive from deer forest was 1s. 7d. per acre?—That is so.

15,251. Is that calculated upon the gross rental or the net rental?—On the net rental.

15,252. You have made up that calculation by deducting all the burdens that the landlord has to pay in the shape of wages?—The landlord pays no wages; the tenants do that entirely.

15,253. But you have deducted the cost of upholding the forest, and the public burdens?—The tenants pay the public burdens also, that is to say the tenants' part, the proprietor pays one half.

15,254. You get a net rental from it?—A net rental.

15,255. That is different from other deer forests I think?—No, I think it is the general rule when they are let on lease.

15,256. Mr Macleod.—How many large farmers did you say there were?—Eight.

15,257. How many of those are resident?—Five practically; well, I may say that the proprietor is resident, he is a large time of the year there, and he has the home farm in his own hands. The shooting tenant has a £55 holding.

15,258. How many are occupying farmers then, I will put the question in that form?—Four, and four are—

15,259. There for a part of the year?—There for a part of the year, and absent for another part.

15,260. Then with regard to the crofters and cottars that are under lease, are they nineteen years' leases?—Nineteen years' leases.

15,261. Do they expire all at the same time?—No, they don't; so far as I recollect they don't.

15,262. The witness who was examined here to-day was not able to give the date?—So far as I recollect, but I can give the date if it is wished, it was in 1886 or 1887 that they entered into leases.

15,263. They were not under lease before then?—Some were and some not.

15,264. Were the majority under lease?—No, the majority were not under lease.

15,265. Till then?—Till then.

15,266. I was not able to hear you, Mr Burgess, but I think you gave the information to the Chairman as to the crofter townships that march with the deer forest?—I think so.

15,267. You gave that information?—Yes, I did.

15,268. Have you ever considered whether it would be possible to enlarge these crofters' holdings that in your opinion are at the present time too small, by adding to the pasture portion of them rather than consolidating them?—I don't think it is possible to do that without hurting the deer forest.

15,269. Do you think that it would injure the deer forest to a greater degree than it would benefit the tenants?—Very much more, and besides the deer forest is very much more remunerative to the landlord. The deer forest ground is very much more remunerative to the landlord although on the whole it is the highest and most inferior ground.

15,270. That is the position you take up?—That is the position I take up. The farms and crofts are let all under 11d. an acre and the deer forest ground is let at 1s. 7d.

15,271. So that you found your objection to extending your grazings on the fear that a larger rent can be got out of it as a deer forest?—To some extent, yes.

15,272. But to what extent?—To the extent that taking anything from the forest would deteriorate it.

15,273. But it is altogether a question of rent with you, isn't it; that is your position?—To a considerable extent it is.

15,274. But to what extent is it not then?—To this extent that the ground is not asked for, and it could be only given at a sacrifice.

15,275. But that would be again a question of rent?—Yes, it is a question of rent.

15,276. It resolves itself practically into a question of rent?—Yes, it does, and also there is not the slightest doubt that a forest brings a very much larger amount of money into the district, to the tenants of the district, than the land would if under grazing, under sheep grazing.

15,277. You think that the more the deer forest area is increased the greater benefit it is to the smaller tenants?—No, but what I mean is this, the fact of the ground being under deer forest now brings a larger amount of money, circulates a larger amount of money in the district than would be circulated if it were under crofts or under tenants of grazings.

15,278. It circulates a larger amount of money?—Yes, certainly. The tenant of the shooting circulates more money in the district, in the country, than the tenant of the ground would do if it were under sheep.

15,279. But what I am anxious to know is this, would it not be possible to a certain extent to reduce the area of the deer forest, which appears to be a very large area, without materially injuring the shooting?—I don't think it is possible.

15,280. Might I ask the limit of stags?—There is no limit; the only limit now under the lease as far as I remember is that there are no more stags killed during the last year than during the three preceding years.

15,281. What was that?—Well, I can't tell, because it has not come to an end yet, but he may not during the last year of his lease kill more than during the three preceding years.

15,282. Do you know on an average the number of stags that have been killed?—I can't give the exact figures.

15,283. Give us a rough idea?—I have no idea what Lord Tweedmouth killed on his ground since he got it; Mr Bannatyne kills, I think, an average of about eighty, and Lord Tweedmouth, I should say, should kill about the same number if he worked the ground as much as the tenant did.

15,284. We might take it as an average of about 150 stags?—About 160, and Glenmoriston himself kills about 15; that would be 175.

15,285. We might put that down as the average kill of stags?—I should think so.

15,286. Mr Gordon.—With regard to that portion of the farm of Tomchraskie that was added to the forest, what kind of land is it?—It is high and dry land.

15,287. Black?—No, it is mostly hilly, there is not much of it flat.

15,288. Black, I said?—Oh! black, yes, black ground.

15,289. Would it be suitable for carrying sheep by itself?—It might carry a few in the summer time, but it would not winter any.

15,290. Would it be suitable for a sheep farm without the lower part of Tomchraskie let to this tenant?—No, it is not suitable for a sheep run without low ground, and there is not low ground enough to winter the stock that is in Glenmoriston now; they have at present to send them away to winter.

15,291. Suppose that the forest of Ceanna-chnoc and Corriedho was put under sheep again, is there a sufficient amount of wintering within the limits of the forest for the stock that the forest would summer?—No, it would not winter any.

15,292. At any rate, you could winter very few?—Very few indeed, if any.

15,293. You would not be able to winter hoggs?—Certainly not.

15,294. Then, as regards the sheep carrying properties of the estate, they have not, at all events as regards wintering, been at all reduced by the letting of this high ground of Tomchraskie?—Not at all.

15,295. Mr Maccallum.—You gave some statistics I think of the number of tenancies during the century, and I think you said the number continues very much the same?—Very much the same.

15,296. Can you give the statistics as to population relating to the glen during the century?—I can't, but I am aware as a fact that it is decreasing.

15,297. It is decreasing?—I know it is decreasing.

15,298. And all the forest land was used as grazing in connection with the arable land?—The forest land was no doubt to a very large extent, I don't think the whole of it ever was under sheep. There is some of it I believe would cause more deaths through the rocky nature of the ground than the grazing would be worth, and so far as I can trace there is part of it that was never let as grazing.

15,299. Would you give us the date of the formation of the forest?—Of course, I can't give you the date of the formation of that part I refer to, but there were 19,760 acres or so turned into deer forest previous to 1850, 28,000 acres between 1862 and 1868, and I mentioned already that 7100 acres were added in 1881.

15,300. You cannot give us any idea I suppose as to the number of sheep that were maintained on these

Drumnadrochit.

Peter Burgess.

grazings that were converted into deer forest?—No, I cannot, they were all with the exception of that small piece under deer before I had to do with the property.

15,301. Do you think now that the deer forest if it were again grazed by sheep would fetch a good rent as a grouse moor?—I know it would not, because it is not adapted for grouse; the farther west you go, as a rule, the grouse shooting becomes worse on account of the climate I believe, and the nature of the hills; the ground is not adapted for grouse.

15,302. Is there such a very great difference between this and Glenmoriston?—A very great difference; there is certainly.

15,303. The distance is not very much?—But the difference is great nevertheless.

15,304. And we find that the land here fetches a very high rent as a grouse moor?—I know it does.

15,305. It is very much less in extent than you have, and it fetches £500?—Yes, but it is very much superior ground.

15,306. There is something like 18,000 acres here that fetches a rent of £500 as a grouse moor?—When tenants come to ask me what grouse they expect, "O," they say "surely we should get more than that over such an extent. I mean I would rather have a place where I would get the same number of brace in one third of the area, rather give three times the rent, because I would only have one-third of the walking."

15,307. But, then it is let just now as a deer forest, and, of course, grouse would be a disadvantage; and I suppose grouse are kept down on that account?—Part of it is let as deer forest; but 20,000 acres, except the arable land, is under grouse, whatever grouse it produces.

15,308. I beg your pardon?—What is under sheep now should, of course, have a grouse stock.

15,309. Do you get any rent for that?—Yes, we do. It is not separate, however, from the other; each shooting tenant, with the exception of the proprietor himself, has a piece of grouse moor.

15,310. There are 20,000 acres not included in the forest?—Yes.

15,311. Can you estimate the value of that as a grouse shooting?—It is not in my opinion worth more than £500 although it is the best grouse ground.

15,312. But, then you must remember that the deer forest extends to 55,000 acres?—Yes.

15,313. Surely that would be very much more valuable than the 20,000?—The ground best adapted for grouse is now under sheep and that makes the difference.

15,314. Taking Invermoriston there,—the difference between it and here is very great; the forest of Invermoriston would not it be suitable now as a grouse moor?—No, it would not.

15,315. What do you estimate then the rent that you would get for the whole of your forest as grouse moor?—I think I stated already that it would be about the estimate of the grazing rent which I and the other gentleman I consulted put at about £800.

15,316. What would you consider the sporting value as a grouse moor?—I thought you meant as a grouse moor.

15,317. Yes, I ask now as a grouse moor, you gave £800 as a grazing rent?—Exactly, the grazing rent and the sporting rent would be about the same.

15,318. Oh, yes, £800.?—Yes, or £1600 in all.

15,319. Mr Sutherland.—As compared with what?

15,320. Mr Maccallum.—What is the rental you get from the forest?—£4600 paid by tenants, and the proprietor has a bit in his own hand which is valued, if I remember right, at £370.

15,321. The Chairman.—About £5000?—A little under £5000.

15,322. Mr Sutherland.—Would you kindly give me an idea of the forest we have been talking about, is it one forest or two forests?—Two forests and a little bit Mr Grant himself has; two tenants in the meantime.

15,323. Are they all in the county of Inverness?—All in the county of Inverness bordering on Ross-shire.

15,324. The march comes to the Ross-shire boundary?—Yes.

15,325. But none of it goes beyond?—No.

15,326. What are the names of the forests?—North Ceanna-chnoc occupied by Lord Tweedmouth, and South Ceanna-chnoc by Mr Bannatyne who has a bit of Invermoriston forest and Dundreggan and Inverwick. In fact the boundaries have been very often changed, and the names of the forests changed, and the area changed.

15,327. I find it very difficult to follow you. Then there is besides the Invermoriston forest proper?—Invermoriston or Glenmoriston, and Mr Bannatyne has a very large extent of that now.

15,328. I cannot speak so definitely when I don't know the boundaries of the forest, but you have stated the extent of it at 55,000 acres?—Roughly, that is so.

15,329. And of the whole estate as 75,000?—Yes.

15,330. Leaving 20,000 acres between graziers and cultivators of the soil?—Yes.

15,331. Can you give me any idea of the population on the 20,000 acres?—I think it is close on 400.

15,332. And can you give me an idea of the acreage occupied by the eight large farms you have enumerated?—The farm Knockie, I may say that I have no plan of it nor does the ordnance survey show it.

15,333-4. What is your opinion as to the approximate area of it?—5400 acres.

15,335. And the areas of the other farms?—About 4500 acres; Baile-nan-carn 3276; Torgoyle has only about 9 acres of arable; Tomchraskie has about 41 acres of arable and 1200 of pasture.

15,336. We will take it 1200 only?—Oh, I see it is 1200 acres including the arable. Invermoriston, Robert Sinclair has the inn, of course, as well, the area is about 200 acres. Mains Farm about 140 or 148. Mr Bannatyne's besides the forest 187, of that about 57 is arable. Aonach 5092.

15,337. That is about 15,000 acres, and that leaves then about 5000 for the remainder of the population?—Yes, if these figures are right.

15,338. You have got practically an estate of 75,000 acres of which 55,000 are occupied by two persons?—No, by three.

15,339. Who are the three?—Two forests and the proprietor who has a small bit.

15,340. Just so, then you have got 16,000 acres occupied by four resident farmers, or eight farms altogether, and for the remainder of the 400 of population you have a balance of 5000 acres?—Yes.

15,341. That is the distribution of the population of the estate upon the land?—Yes.

15,342. And, in view of these circumstances, don't you see any way of making a more equitable and just distribution of the people upon the soil?—None, considering the qualities of the soil.

15,343. In the interests of the people themselves?—In the interests of the people themselves; so far as I can understand they see themselves that nothing better can be done.

15,344. And they think that the present distribution of the land is right and proper?—That is so, so far as my experience goes.

15,345. Then you said yourself that you would like to see the people on the estate, and you give the reason as being that they would be useful for labour to those who held the land?—Well, for that among other reasons.

15,346. But I rather gathered that that was the principal reason why you would like to see them?—Well, I didn't give any other reason, I said we would require to get that number on.

15,347. That it was a necessity for the beneficial occupation of the land by the others that so many should be left?—It is a necessity to have the labour in the district.

15,348. It is not the welfare of the people who remain that you had in view so much as the welfare of the few who had the land?—Of course, we have the welfare of the people in view and always try to keep them as well as we can in a comfortable position.

15,349. But merely to be adjuncts to the prosperity of others who had already a great deal of land?—Not at all, we wish to have as many as we can keep on the ground we have in comfort; whether they are really required or not.

15,350. And the distribution I have indicated already is the one that you consider the best for the welfare of the people?—There is no other distribution that I can think of, considering the small extent of arable land on the property.

15,351. That is the 55,000 acres for the three people, the 16,000 for the four people, and the balance of 5000 for all the rest of the people?—Yes; of course I would require to check these figures.

15,352. But they are approximately right?—Yes, I only give them as approximately right.

15,353. Then you stated that certain land was valued for you as being worth 3d. per acre?—No, I did not say so,—yes, that is so.

15,354. What land was that?—That is the whole of the land under deer forest now with the exception of that part added to the forest of Ceanna-chnoc in 1881, the whole.

15,355. Except that part added to the forest of Ceanna-chnoc?—In 1881.

15,356. What would be about the value of the part that was not added to the forest; have you any idea?—You mean the whole of the forest except what was added in 1881?

15,357. No, you said that you had an estimate that certain lands would let as grazings for 3d. per acre?—Yes.

15,358. And what became of that land?—It is under deer now and was under deer at that time.

15,359. Well, possibly my note was wrong, but what I thought was that you said you wanted an estimate made of land that was now in the possession of a grazier to be added?—No, no, what occurred to me was that it might become necessary to put the deer forest under sheep, and I consulted a man who knew every inch of the ground and an excellent sheep farmer, as to what rent we should get for the forest if turned into a sheep grazing or into sheep grazings.

15,360. That is the estimate he gave you?—That is the estimate he gave me.

15,361. Did you concur in that yourself so far as your qualification went?—Very nearly.

15,362. Was your estimate lower or higher than that?—It was slightly lower. He put it between £800 and £850, and I estimated we would scarcely reach £800.

15,363. What sort of grazing had he in view; was it a grazing on a large farm or on a small farm?—The grazings of our deer forest.

15,364. But you were contemplating a change of the land from deer forest to grazing?—Yes.

15,365. What sort of grazing had you in your mind?—Large farms, of course.

15,366. And what your statement comes to is that you cannot let pasture to large farmers at present above 3d. an acre?—That is the estimate for the ground now under deer.

15,367. Quite so, I understand that,—that if it were let to a large farmer you would not get more than 3d. per acre for it?—That is so, and we have some land just now let at 5d.

15,368. And is it just then for you to let your land at 5d. per acre when it is only worth 3d. per acre for grazing purposes?—What land is only worth 3d?

15,369. You say you made an estimate that this land that was added to the forest and which is now in the forest would only be worth if changed into a grazing 3d. per acre?—Yes.

15,370. Then you say that the other land you have rented now as grazing you get 5d. and 6d. an acre for it?—Yes, because it is better grazing land than what is in the forest.

15,371. And what were you getting for it before; you have an idea what the old grazing rents were?—[Mr Gordon.—Does the land you speak of include arable land?—Yes, it includes arable and pasture, the old rent as far as I can discover was £674.]

15,372. Your statement is that 3d. per acre cannot be obtained or is the utmost that can be obtained for the land as a grazing?—Yes.

15,373. Then there was a suggestion made that perhaps there was no arable included in that; land that could be made arable or land that had been arable?—In the forest?

15,373*a*. Yes, in this part of it that was only worth 3d. per acre?—There is none there.

15,374. And you stated that in the forest itself all the cultivable land is already cultivated by the gamekeepers?—Yes, cultivated or grazed, there may be a small patch of it grazed.

15,375. Then is that the principle on which you select the localities in which the gamekeepers are placed, that it should have arable land there?—No, it happened that the shepherds and the tenants of the farms occupied these sites when the forests were grazed, and the keepers took up the old sites and the old gardens and the old patches, and are still kept on there.

15,376. As to the shepherds who preceded the gamekeepers, were the localities in which they lived selected with reference to the suitability of them for cultivating land?—I have not the slightest idea; of course, they selected the best localities for convenience and comfort.

15,377. That is to prevent as little walking to their duties as possible?—I have no doubt of it.

15,378. Isn't that a rational arrangement?—I have no doubt it was.

15,379. But the fact that there is arable land there at the present time is no proof is it that all the land in the forest is occupied in that way?—But I am aware as a fact that there never was any more.

15,380. But how do you account for the fact that the gamekeepers are settled down on the very places where the only arable is; is it accident or design?—I have no doubt it is design, because they would select the best site for a house where they could get a small patch of land as well as considering the convenience of the situation.

15,381. But is not the first consideration proximity to the land with which he is to deal as a gamekeeper or as a shepherd?—That is no doubt a consideration.

15,382. Is it not the principal and only consideration?—I don't know; if the house exists it would be taken advantage of in preference to leaving it to be demolished and building another.

15,383. Carrying yourself back to the shepherd, would his residence have been selected from any house being there before?—Oh, I suppose it would have been erected for the convenience of the shepherd.

15,384. No doubt, and the same convenience that attaches to the shepherd would also attach to the gamekeeper?—To a large extent.

15,385. So that the amount of arable in the forest is not determined in any way by the location of the gamekeepers' houses?—No, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that the gamekeepers' houses are where the land was cultivated. There never was land cultivated anywhere else.

15,386. Around the gamekeepers' houses the land was made cultivable?—No, it must have been capable of cultivation before it could be cultivated.

15,387. But wherever they were planted they cultivated land?—I don't think so in every instance.

15,388. Well, not in every instance, possibly, but generally you would admit that that was a very rational way of proceeding. Then you made some remarks as to the food that the people had there?—No, what I said as to the food is what I came through myself. I was not born there; I did not make reference to the food the people used in that district; it is only the food that is consumed by the crofting population a generation ago when I was young myself.

15,389. Were you talking for all the crofters in the Highlands?—No, but I was talking of what I experienced myself.

15,390. But you said you were not born here?—Yes.

15,391. Where did you experience it?—Where I was born.

15,392. Where was that?—Strathspey.

15,393. And that was the food that the people in

Drumnadrochit.

Peter Burgess.

Strathspey ate at that time?—Yes, that was what I ate myself.

15,394. But supposing that were so, you don't mean to imply that provided people were planted there now that is the sort of food they would use?—No, certainly not. I say now the manner of living has changed so much that they could not live upon the same size of holding that they did at that time.

15,395. Because?—Because they have to buy almost everything that they use in the shape of food and clothing.

15,396. The standard of living is higher?—There is no doubt living is more expensive.

15,397. How is that standard of living brought about, have you any indication?—I really can't tell you; of course, as education spread and communication was opened with the south it penetrated the north.

15,398. And is there any possibility of this lessening in the future?—I don't think so.

15,399. And would all the accumulative benefits derived from these improvements not be available to the people if they were put back now?—Which benefits?

15,400. The benefits you have just enumerated, the change from those conditions to the present conditions when you admit the standard is higher?—I am not sure that it is a benefit to them in any way; it is a more expensive way of living certainly.

15,401. But whatever is more expensive to them is just better to them like other people is it not?—I don't think it is, so far as the capability of living in a small holding is concerned. They lived very comfortably at that time with the food they did use, and were quite as healthy as they are now. They lived for certainly, I should say, a very small fraction of what it costs them now.

15,402. But the standard of living you say has been raised?—Well, I don't know whether it is raised or lowered, I think the living was quite as good then as it is now.

15,403. And their means has not increased now?—No.

15,404. Because their holdings are too restricted?—Taking the holdings to be the same, I believe a holding now does not produce what it did then because the soil has become exhausted.

15,405. Therefore, the greater necessity of increasing the holdings?—Certainly.

15,406. So that it is altogether an argument in favour of increasing the holding?—Yes, I think that is most desirable wherever it is possible.

15,407. You indicated as a cure the consolidation of existing holdings. Am I doing you any injustice in supposing that?—No, so far as it is capable of being done without interfering with the present tenants. I said I would never wish to shift a tenant against his will, but when a croft became vacant that it should be added to its neighbour.

15,408. How far would you carry that, Mr Burgess?—Until they came to be the size which I indicated, that would keep a pair of small ponies employed, to a larger size of a pair to a pair and a half.

15,409. But you would keep the area under large holdings as they are now, deer forests included?—I would certainly keep a number of them if so be that it was not convenient to break them up to the size of farm I have stated, and in many cases it is impossible; the farms in many cases are not capable of being broken up, there is no arable for the families to live on.

15,410. But you have heard what the people themselves believe regarding it, when here yesterday and to-day?—Oh, well, of course, I am not talking of that generally.

15,411. What effect would it have then on the population of the estate you administer?—I don't think it is possible so far as that estate is concerned because the arable land in that property never maintained the population.

15,41. Then what you have been indicating refers to other estates but not to your estate?—To Glenmoriston estate I refer, but I say that the Glenmoriston estate never produced grain or food enough for the population of itself.

Drumnadrochit.

Peter Burgess.

15,413. But that would not be a difficulty because you yourself have indicated that the grain comes from another quarter?—No, I did not indicate that.

15,414. I thought that was one of the benefits that you pointed out that modern improvements brought to the people?—No, I never mentioned so.

15,415. But isn't it a fact?—No doubt it is a benefit to them to get their grain more conveniently than they did in the olden times.

15,416. But you cannot help us in any way by pointing out land within these deer forests—for I am not going to mention the grazings but the deer forests—where the purpose for which we were appointed could be carried out?—I don't think there is an inch of ground that could be beneficially taken from the forest now.

15,417. And you can give us no help in that direction?—Not in that direction.

15,418. Mr Maccallum.—I wish a correction of the figures I got from you. I now learn that the estimate of £800 for the forest was given before the portion of Tomchraskie was added to the forest?—Yes.

15,419. So that the value of that portion has to be added to the £800?—Yes.

15,420. And the tenant of Tomchraskie got a reduction of £320 when it was added to the forest?—No.

15,421. When the portion was taken?—No, the tenant of Tomchraskie of that time added it to the forest himself; but that tenant has left and the low ground of Tomchraskie, the arable land, and a considerable stretch of hill ground is let to another tenant at £50; however, that is a low rent. I estimate the rent at, at least, £80. A preference was given to a crofter in Glenmoriston to go into that farm.

15,422. Didn't you mention £320 as the value of the grazings?—That was the value of it when it was put under deer, but certainly not the value of it now; it would not fetch anything like that.

15,423. Then that falls to be added to the £800?—The value of the land now has to be added to the £800.

15,424. Which makes £1120?—No, I say it would not fetch more than £200.

15,425. But at the time it was added that was the valuation of it, is not that so?—That was the valuation at that time.

15,426. And that would make £1120, and to that has to be added again the sporting value of £800 of the grouse moor?—Yes. But I say that £1120 is too much; it would not fetch that now.

15,427. Might I just ask you this further question: With what view was the valuation of the forest land made?—With the view of turning it into a sheep run if so be that it would be necessary to do that. I think that one at least of the forests was unlet for one year, and it occurred to myself that if that went on for a term of years we would be under the necessity of trying some other principle.

15,428. It was not with the view of letting it as a sheep farm?—Yes, if nothing better could be done.

15,429. And not with the view of showing that deer forests are more profitable than sheep grazings?—No, certainly not, but with the view of putting it under sheep, with the sole view of putting it under sheep.

15,430. And you had that in view because you found a difficulty in letting the forest?—Well, one forest was unlet for one year.

15,431. And you were afraid you might have to put it under sheep?—Yes.

15,432. Mr John Macleod, Glenmoriston.—With your permission I would like to put a question.

15,433. The Chairman.—We have had a very exhausting day. [Mr Macleod.—Well, I have been at the trouble of coming down from Glenmoriston, a distance of 14 miles, and these questions which I purpose to put to Mr Burgess are very important and will be the means of bringing out very clear evidence with regard to the estate.]

15,434. The Chairman.—I think we have had a very long examination of Mr Burgess and my view is that we don't wish any further information from him. He has been under examination for two hours I suppose.

15,435. Mr Sutherland.—Could you give us a copy of the plans of the estate?—Yes.

15,436. Mr Forsyth.—We would like to get the marches also?—Yes, I will give it to Mr Watson.

[Adjourned.]

SIXTEENTH SITTING.

GLENSHIEL, July 11, 1893.

Present:—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
Michael Hugh Shaw Stewart, Esq., M.P.
Angus Sutherland, Esq., M.P.
James Noel Muller Forsyth, Esq.
George Gordon, Esq.
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

Alexander Macrae, Crofter, Inverinate, Kintail (44) —examined.

15,437. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter at Inverinate?—Yes.

15,438. What rent do you pay?—£8, 2s.

15,439. Can you give us an idea of the size of your holding?—Arable land about 3 acres 1 rood.

15,440. 3¼ acres or so. Have you any outrun?—About 2 acres 2 roods and some poles of outrun.

15,441. Have you hill grazing?—Yes, in common.

15,442. What extent of hill grazing?—About 758 acres.

15,443. How many shares in the hill?—Six.

15,444. Have you one share?—One share.

15,445. You have not had your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission I think?—Yes.

15,446. What was the old rent?—The last rent we were paying was £9, 4s. and it was reduced to £8, 2s. That was for a few years. The rent we were paying about eight years ago was £15.

15,447. How long have you been a crofter at Inverinate?—I have been only a crofter since five years.

15,448. Was your father in the croft before?—My father was in the croft before.

15,449. He was there for many years?—Yes, he was there for his lifetime.

15,450. Have you a written statement?—Well, I was asked by the delegates from the district from the parishes of Glenshiel and Kintail to make a statement on their behalf.

15,451. You are a delegate from the crofters in the parishes of Glenshiel and Kintail?—Yes.

15,452. Appointed at a public meeting?—At a public meeting.

15,453. To represent their views?—Yes.

15,454. Can you give me the date of the public meeting?—This month; on 1st July.

15,455. Appointed at a public meeting held during this July?—Yes.

15,456. Would you read the statement?—I will begin with the farm of Lienassie.

15,457. Is that inside or outside the forest?—Outside the forest, this is under sheep.

15,458. What do you wish to say about it?—I could not say the exact date at which there were crofters on Lienassie, but there must have been crofters on it.

15,459. Allow me to interrupt you. You say there must have been crofters; upon what do you base that belief?—There is a great deal of old arable land.

15,460. And are there the remains of buildings.—Yes, well, not to-day, but there were; the proprietor has improved lands down below where there were buildings.

15,461. Give us your statement about it then?—I could not say more about the low farm of Lienassie, but it is a good farm suitable for crofters' holdings?—

15,462. Do you know the size of the farm?—Well, the acreage I could not say.

15,463. Do you know the rent of it?—Not the exact rent this year, but the rent in former years, since a few years whatever, was about £230. [Sir Henry Macandrew, factor for Sir Kenneth Matheson of Lochalsh.—That is the rent.]

15,464. What is the name of the farmer?—Alexander Maclennan.

15,465. Can you give me any idea of its extent?—There is a great deal of improved land, and I would say there would be about 150 acres in all on the farm.

15,466. Of what?—Between land cultivated and old arable.

15,467. Land run out or old arable?—Just so.

15,468. How much of that is land cultivated and how much is old arable?—There are about 120 acres that is cultivated in rotation.

15,469. And you think there are about 30 acres of old arable?—I would think so.

15,470. I understand you to say that land is suitable for crofters?—Oh, yes.

15,471. Does it march with crofters' land?—No, it does not.

15,472. What does it march with?—It marches on the west side with the farm of Ruarach, on the north with Killilan [Cill-Fhaolain], and on the east with the deer forest.

15,473. And there is a fence there I suppose?—Yes.

15,474. On the west?—On the west, Ruarach.

15,475. Well, on the south?—Inchero [Innse-'chrò] and Morvich.

15,476. These are villages are they?—No, deer forest.

15,477. Fenced there also?—Yes, there was a fence put up there some years ago; it is broken down now. The deer forest was part of Lienassie until about eleven or twelve years ago.

15,478. There has been land taken from the farm of Lienassie and incorporated with the forest?—It is made a forest.

15,479. How much was made forest?—Well, the acreage I could not say, but there were two hirsels of sheep. There were two shepherds on it.

15,480. Two shepherds in the part of the farm that is now forest?—Yes.

15,481. Had each of these shepherds a hirsel?—A hirsel.

15,482. Do you know what was the size of each hirsel?—Well, I could not say exactly.

15,483. Do you know the names of the shepherds?—Yes, that were there last.

15,484. What were their names?—One Alexander Maclennan.

15,485. And who was the other one?—Roderick Morrison.

15,486. Now, do you remember the date when these hirsels were taken from the farm and added to the forest?—It was about eleven years ago. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—1881 was the year. I can give you the exact acreage if it is for your convenience now.]

15,487. If you please, it would save us again?—[Sir Henry Macandrew.—7150 acres.]

15,488. That is the extent afforested?—[Sir Henry Macandrew.—Yes.]

15,489. Anything else you wish to say?—That land was formerly in possession of tenants, small tenants.

Glenshiel.
Alexander Macrae.

15,490. Are there indications of old arable on that land?—Well, yes.

15,491. Observe my question; are there indications upon the ground added to the forest showing there is old arable?—Yes, partly on one of the hirsels called Achadh-a'-chuirn.

15,492. What is the name of the other hirsel?—There were so many names on the hirsel that I could not give an exact name.

15,493. You are quite sure about Achadh-a'-chuirn at any rate?—Oh, yes, and formerly the tenants of Inverinate had part of that land.

15,494. Part of this very land added to the forest had formerly been in the hands of the tenants of Inverinate?—Yes, until the beginning of the century.

15,495. How do you happen to know that?—By hearing it. I heard it from my father.

15,496. He was an Inverinate tenant?—He was.

15,497. And did he tell you that at one time he had a right of grazing?—No, he was born in the year 1808, and it was taken from Inverinate before that time.

15,498. Then was his father in the holding?—His father was in the holding.

15,499. Had your grandfather then the right to it?—Yes.

15,500. Do you remember whether your father told you when the right of grazing was lost?—The exact date?

15,501. Well, about the time?—The latter end of the last century.

15,502. Do you wish to tell us anything more?—And part of it added to the farm of Camuslunie, a part of the deer forest.

15,503. A part of land which the tenants of Camuslunie had is now added to the forest?—Just so.

15,504. Was it changed from crofters' hill grazing into forest land?—No, into sheep farms.

15,505. First into sheep and then into forest?—Yes.

15,506. Camuslunie is down the loch a bit?—It is at the head of Loch Long.

15,507. Was it added to the forest in 1881?—Yes.

15,508. And had it been changed from hill grazing, crofters' grazing, into farm about the end of last century?—No, it was forty-one years ago.

15,509. Can you give me the extent of that land?—I could not.

15,510. Is there old arable upon it?—No.

15,511. Is there any indication—I need not ask you; there is no indication of old buildings upon it?—Only one I believe. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—A smuggling bothy.]

15,512. Oh, we don't go into that. Do you wish to tell us anything more of Camuslunie?—The people of Camuslunie wish to get this land back.

15,513. I quite understand that, I take that for granted, if it can be got properly and legitimately?—And there was another part of it that was the farm of Keppoch on the north side of Loch Duich. He had part of the deer forest also.

15,514. I will come to that. Does the land taken from Camuslunie and added to the forest march with the crofters' present land at Camuslunie?—Oh, it is far away.

15,515. How far?—They are here, and one of them is to speak upon that subject; he knows about it.

15,516. It is a great pity to call a witness for one single question if you can answer it yourself?—It will be about eight miles I should say.

15,517. And what interposes between the land taken and made forest from Camuslunie and the township of Camuslunie?—There is a small farm, Coillerie, and a part of the Lienassie farm.

15,518. Then did these lands of Coillerie and Lienassie farm at one time form part of crofters' land?—Oh, yes, they were crofters' land, and this part of Lienassie farm they call it Mamag, it is to the north side of Lienassie farm.

15,519. Coillerie is not forest now, I understand you to say?—No.

15,520. It is a farm?—Yes, one tenant has it.

Glenshiel.
Alexander Macrae.

15,521. Do you know the name of the tenant?—Yes, his name is John Renwick.

15,522. Now you were going on to speak about Keppoch?—Well, I said that part of this deer forest was a part of the farm once.

15,523. That is what I thought you were coming to. Keppoch is a farm still I suppose?—It is.

15,524. Who is the tenant of Keppoch farm?—Alexander Maclennan, Lienassie.

15,525. He has got Keppoch also. Part of that farm was made forest, was it?—No, it was taken from it long ago; about the beginning of the century.

15,526. What was done with it?—It was a sheep farm, part of the Lienassie farm.

15,527. Part of the Lienassie farm was taken and made sheep farm belonging to Keppoch farm?—No, part of the Keppoch farm was made a sheep farm, put into the Lienassie farm, and then it was afforested in 1881.

15,528. Part of the Keppoch farm was transferred to the Lienassie farm, and then from the Lienassie farm made part of the forest, is that so?—That is so.

15,529. Now do you remember when that part of Keppoch farm was put into the Lienassie farm?—No, it was the beginning of the century; it would be on to the year 1820.

15,530. Was the same portion that was transferred from Keppoch farm to Lienassie farm, the portion transferred from Lienassie farm to forest? Was it the same land or practically the same land?—The same land as the rest, the same as the land that was taken from Inverinate and from Camuslunie.

15,531. You say that part of the land made from Keppoch farm into Lienassie and from Lienassie into forest was so made in 1881?—Yes.

15,532. And is that land suitable for crofters?—Well, it would be for crofters, for a club farm.

15,533. It is not suitable for cultivation then, I suppose?—Well, three tenants would live very well on the north side of it at Achadh-a'-chuirn. They could keep two cows each.

15,534. Then is that the only portion of it suitable in your judgment for settlement?—Yes.

15,535. But the whole of it is for consideration, I understand you to say, for grazing purposes?—For grazing purposes.

15,536. Sheep grazing?—Sheep grazing,—splendid grazing.

15,537. What kind of sheep?—Cheviot, it would do cheviot, or black-faced still better, it was a cheviot stock that was on it.

15,538. When it was made into forest?—Yes.

15,539. Now you have told us distinctly of Lienassie, Camuslunie, and Coillerie, and Keppoch. Any other farm?—The farm of Killilan.

15,540. Stop a little. I must go back a bit. The land that was taken from Camuslunie and added to forest, had it one hirsel or more than one hirsel?—Two hirsels,—no, one hirsel.

15,541. Then the part of Keppoch farm that was added to Lienassie and then to forest, had it one hirsel or more?—The part that was added to Inverinate, it was a hirsel partly.

15,542. The part added to Inverinate?—The part that belonged to Inverinate.

15,543. Had one hirsel?—Yes, and this part that belonged to the farm of Keppoch.

15,544. It had one hirsel, that is two in all, is that what you mean?—No, these were one hirsel, and then what the Camuslunie people had down to Achadh-a'-chuirn was one hirsel again. Two hirsels in all were made into the deer forest.

15,545. One being Achadah-a'-chuirn, and—?—Yes, and the other was the land that was taken off Keppoch and Inverinate.

15,546. Are there any other farms you would like to mention to us?—Yes, the farm of Killilan.

15,547. Who is the tenant there?—Stephen Brown is the present tenant, and part of it was made a deer forest fifteen years ago.

15,548. That is to say added to the Kintail forest?—Well, Mr Winans had them at one time; he had the two forests, I believe he has the two of them still. On the Killilan farm there were crofters in the beginning of the century.

15,549. Is there old arable there?—Oh, yes.

15,550. Are there any remains of old buildings?—Well, there are old buildings; but they were broken down some years ago and new buildings made.

15,551. Are the remains of old buildings visible?—Not many.

15,552. There are some?—I believe there are some; there is a good while since I was in the way, but there were some.

15,553. Can you tell me the extent of land from Killilan added to forest?—The acreage I could not say, but I could give you the hirsels, as I know that farm well.

15,554. How many hirsels?—Four.

15,555. Had they names?—The hirsels of Mulbuie, Riochan, Coire-each, Carn-na-breabaig.

15,556. Can you give me the stock of each hirsel?—Well, the exact stock I could not give, but I could give the number of hoggs that were wintering.

15,557. How many were wintering?—About 2300; from 2200 to 2400.

15,558. Over these four hirsels?—Yes.

15,559. Do you remember the names of the shepherds?—Oh, yes, those that were there at the time.

15,560. Just give us the names, Mulbuie hirsel?—Albert Renwick.

15,561. The Riochan hirsel?—I don't remember well the name of the Riochan one, I think it was Duncan Macrae.

15,562. Coire-each?—Robert Macrae.

15,563. Carn-na-breabaig?—Donald Macrae.

15,564. The land of all these hirsels was added to forest?—Added to forest.

15,565. Fifteen years ago?—Yes, fifteen years ago.

15,566. Was that in connection with the formation of the Winans forests?—It was Lord Lovat that got it, but he let it to Winans when it was cleared.

15,567. Did Lord Lovat get the land of the whole of these hirsels?—Yes.

15,568. On lease?—On lease.

15,569. And he added it to Winans forest?—Yes.

15,570. And has Lord Lovat got it yet?—Well, it is Winans that has got it just now. I am not very sure who is in the lease.

15,571. All these hirsels were added to—what was the name of the forest?—They call it the Riochan forest.

15,572. Or Killilan forest?—Well, part of it was called Killilan. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—Patt and Killilan is the name of the forest.]

15,573. Thank you. I want to know this for my own information for I may be wrong about it. Is that the same forest as the forest into which part of the farm of Lienassie was incorporated?—[Mr Watson.—Not the same. The one is called Glomach forest, the first one that was taken off the Lienassie farm; and the other two he is now speaking about were Patt and Killilan.]

15,574. These are the only ones that are mentioned?—[Mr Watson.—That is the one he is now speaking about, Patt and Killilan.]

15,575. Any other farm?—[Witness.—The low farm of Killilan.]

15,576. Who is the farmer there?—Stephen Brown.

15,577. What do you wish to say about it?—There were small tenants on it at the beginning of the century, until it was cleared about the year 1814 I believe; I don't know the exact date.

15,578. That date is sufficiently specific if it is correct?—There were three tenants at Killilan, one at Fadach, I am not so sure how many at a place called Cragaig.

15,579. Any more?—Carnoch.

15,580. You mentioned one?—Ach-a'-ghairgein.

15,581. But you don't mention it again?—Well, I can say it over again.

15,582. I don't wish you to miss any by reason of the difficulty of the word?—[Mr Mackenzie.—Ach-a'-ghairgein].—That spelling would do, but that is not the way I would spell it.

15,583. Is that the word, Sir Henry?—[Sir Henry Macandrew.—I don't know.]

15,584. Mr Mackenzie has given me the name. Was there one or more than one there, do you think?—I could not be sure whether it was one or more.

15,585. Then you mentioned these places?—And there was one at Carnach, and one at Daoimhlig, and one or more at Coire-dhomhainn.

15,586. Is that all?—That is all.

15,587. These were all on the low part of the farm of Killilan which is now forest?—No, it is not forest now, it is under sheep that low part of it.

15,588. Are there traces of old arable upon these lands?—Yes.

15,589. Any remains of buildings?—Yes, there are remains of buildings and there are buildings. There are shepherds' houses and there are remains of buildings at this place I called Ach-a'-ghairgein.

15,590. How many shepherd's houses are there there?—There is a shepherd's house at Coire-dhomhainn, there is a shepherd's house at Carnach, there is a shepherd's house at Fadach, and at Killilan also.

15,591. How many hirsels are on that portion of the farm of Killilan?—There are two at Coire-dhomhainn and one at Mulbuie, to the west of Mulbuie.

15,592. Any more?—It is not the Mulbuie hirsel, it is Black-Corrie they call the hirsel.

15,593. There is a hirsel at Black-Corrie with a house at Mulbuie?—Yes.

15,594. Any more?—And there is a house at Carnach.

15,595. Is there a hirsel?—Yes.

15,596. Any more?—And a hirsel at Fadach and two hirsels at Killilan.

15,597. That is seven altogether?—Just so.

15,598. And is that land suitable for settlement, or suitable for hill, or suitable partly for each?—Oh, it is suitable for tenants, every place that I mentioned.

15,599. For settlement?—Yes.

15,600. And some of it for hill?—Oh, certainly for pasture.

15,601. Can you tell us what extent of land would be taken from the farm? suppose that land cut off the farm, how much would the farm lose, or do you not know?—Oh, the whole of it is under sheep; that is the whole farm. That is the part of the farm of Killilan that is not afforested.

15,602. Any other farm you desire to mention?—Well, there are a number of tenants.

15,603. I ought to ask you, there is a farm house I suppose on Killilan?—There is.

15,604. And steading?—And steading.

15,605. And some arable land?—A good many acres.

15,606. Which are at present under crop?—No, very little of it under crop.

15,607. The rest is under grass?—All under grass.

15,608. Could you tell us what sheep stock the farm of Killilan carries altogether?—I could not say the exact number, but I well remember it will be over 3000 at peesent.

15,609. What cattle stock, does it carry?—There is a herd of black cattle; I am not very sure of the number 15,610. With steading accommodation for them, of course, and so forth?—Certainly.

15,611. Now, do you desire to ask our attention to any other farm?—Well, about this farm itself I am not done with it.

15,612. I beg pardon?—The whole people of the country of Kintail and Lochalsh considered it a great hardship when this part of Killilan was cleared, as old Mr Brown was the best man for the country that ever crossed the Grampians.

15,613. This man?—The late Adam Brown.

15,614. It does not sound a Highland name?—Although he was a large farmer and though we would much prefer to see the land under tenants as formerly, still he was an excellent man to the country. He would buy our lambs, he would buy our wool, he would buy our ewes, and when his manager would come to lift our lambs 'Don't be hard on the poor 'people's lambs on shotting them.' He would buy our wool, and if he would get more for the wool than the buying price he would return half the profit, as he has done. I can tell that as a fact; and our ewes also he would buy them, and it was a great saving for the country. Now we will have to go to Inverness to sell our lambs, and we can't sell them there, there is no demand for lambs now, all the hill farms are cleared; the wedder grounds are cleared for deer, so we consider it a great hardship that we have not a market for our lambs. When there is a bad trade, as there is in the meantime, the low country farmers won't buy them and now what are we to do with our lambs? And if the land was under sheep as it was fifteen years ago and before that, these farmers would buy our lambs, and we consider it a great hardship. That is what I have to say about the farm of Killilan and also for the people of the country. It is a loss to them too.

15,615. Is there a want of land experienced in the district?—Yes, there is.

15,616. Is there a desire on your own part and of those whom you represent to obtain additional land?—Most certainly there is.

15,617. Is this desire for additional land in the shape of grazing land or arable and grazing or both?—Well, for the arable, there is not so much arable in the country, but still we would require some arable land; but the pasture land, it is on the pasture land that we depend.

15,618. You are mainly concerned about it?—Just so.

15,619. Then do you think that if you had additional pasture land you could dispose of your sheep stock?—Well, there would be more demand for our lambs. If the land was under sheep, the hill land—

15,620. There would be more demand?—Certainly, for lambs.

15,621. From what quarter?—For wedders for the hill.

15,622. But from what quarter would the demand come?—From the tenants that had the hill grazing.

15,623. Do you mean farm tenants or crofter tenants?—Well, small tenants, if they had the land they would have to buy wedders like large farmers.

15,624. But suppose the small tenants who had this land were crofters, would the demand for this stock come from them, do you think?—Yes, most certainly, they would have to stock the land the same as large farmers.

15,625. And would buy from you or others?—Yes.

15,626. Now, do you wish to say anything more about the farm of Killilan?—No, but there is a stretch of excellent land, it belongs to the parish of Kintail, called Lougard and Mam.

15,627. We are coming to that. What is the name of that other place you were going to mention?—It is on the east side of Loch Long, they call it Bundalloch [Bun-da-loch]; that is a congested district.

15,628. You represent Bundalloch, do you?—Well, I am authorised to represent it.

15,629. Is there congestion there?—That there is.

15,630. How many tenants are there?—There are twenty tenants that have a bit land that would be plenty for four or five.

15,631. And are there cottars besides?—There are a number.

15,632. How many?—Well, the exact number I could not say, but there are a good many of them.

15,633. In addition?—In addition.

15,634. And they are in need of additional land?—Oh, yes.

15,635. Do you mention any land that is contiguous to them or near them?—No, no, they are on the north side surrounded by Camuslunie and by Keppoch and by Carr.

15,636. What is Carr?—A township.

15,637. Do you indicate any land that would be suitable for them?—Killilan is the place for them.

15,638. Do you account for that congestion in any way; has it just arisen in course of time or was there any pressure brought to bear to produce it?—Most certainly.

15,639. What was that?—Such a fine country as this is, surely the people would not flock together when they had the glens, unless compelled to do so.

15,640. That is very likely so, but are you able to mention any facts connected with the matter?—Well, I know there are people who were gathered down, from the glens, some of them came from Coirre-dhomhainn, and some down from where their forefathers were at Mamag.

15,641. They have been gradually gathered in there?—Yes, and up from Longard and down from the head of Loch Duich here, and from several places.

15,642. Are any tenants of Bundalloch willing to remove if they could get holdings elsewhere?—Oh, yes, there is no mistake about that.

15,643. You were going to mention Longard?—Yes it is a part of the parish of Kintail, and part of it belonged to the farm of Airdantoul in this parish about the latter end of the last century.

15,644. Is Longard a township or a farm or what?—It is a farm, the farm that Mr Robertson, Comar, had; it belongs to the Chisholm. The part of it called Beinn-Fhionnlaidh, the tenant of Airdantoul had it. And part of it belonged to Bundalloch.

15,645. The township of Bundalloch?—Yes, and so it was divided among the township in the lower part for summer grazing.

15,646. What were the names of the townships that had it for summer grazing besides Bundalloch? You say that this land was divided among certain townships?—Yes.

15,647. Including Bundalloch? Besides Bundalloch, can you mention the name of any township that shared the grazing or part of it?—Yes, Dornie, I believe, as I was told.

15,648. I must ask you, told by whom?—Well, there was a man in our township (he is dead and gone now) that knew a good deal of the history of the country, and I was told by him, but I must say in truth that I forgot all about it until it was revived in my memory by going about for evidence to lay before your lordship.

15,649. If you were told by a man who is now dead the evidence is admissible. Now, besides Bundalloch and Dornie, any other townships that had part of this farm of Longard?—I could not say.

15,650. Dornie is down on the side of the water?—Yes, marching with Bundalloch and with Carr.

15,651. How is that land occupied now?—There are sheep on it yet, but it is to be cleared I believe to be turned into a deer forest.

15,652. That is what is being said in the district is it?—Just so.

15,653. Is that part of Comar farm?—Yes, certainly.

15,654. And the statement is going about that it is to be made into forest?—Just so.

15,655. Is the whole of it on The Chisholm estate?—The whole of it on The Chisholm estate.

15,656. Do these townships, Bundalloch, Dornie, Carr, and so forth, or any of them, march with this land?—No.

15,657. None of them march?—No, it is far away.

15,658. What is the nearest point?—The nearest point to Bundalloch of these lands is I would say 11 or 12 miles.

15,659. What is it you propose with regard to that land; how would you invite us to deal with it; suppose it otherwise assignable or open for consideration, what is it you ask us to do; you say it is 11 miles away?—Oh, yes, certainly, but I am quite sure there are people who could be got to go.

14,660. I was asking you, and I thought you were giving your own attention to these congested townships?—Oh, yes, it would do to add it to a township that would work it, but I don't say that people would go there and live on it; I would say it should be added.

15,661. Added to what?—Added to one or two or three of these townships.

15,662. Which townships?—To the township of Bundalloch; they would have to be removed from Bundalloch.

15,663. You don't propose to add land 11 miles away to the town of Bundalloch, but you would flit the township of Bundalloch?—Yes, or a good number of them.

15,664. Is there land suitable for cultivation at this place which would do for tenants transferred from Bundalloch?—There is, I believe, but I was never through it; I saw part of it.

15,665. Are you able to speak upon that point of your own knowledge?—Not of my own knowledge.

15,666. But still you desire to convey to our minds this, that you believe there is such land?—Oh, there is such land.

15,667. You admit, I have no doubt, that there is a difficulty in land being 11 miles away from the people you are considering?—I would not send these people up there as long as there is land nearer them.

15,668. You are putting it that there is no land?—No, I don't admit that there is no land; there is land; there is land for tenants.

15,669. I am speaking of Bundalloch you know?—Yes.

15,670. And you are pointing me to this place 11 miles off. I think I asked you already, you said it would be by transferring some of the tenants of Bundalloch to this place 11 miles away?—Yes, I would send some of them there.

15,671. Now, do you wish to say anything more with regard to this farm of Longard?—No.

15,672. Have you any other farm to bring under our notice?—Well, the township of Dornie is a congested township too.

15,673. It is next to Bundalloch?—It is next to Bundalloch.

15,674. And marches with Carr?—And marches with Carr.

15,675. What would you do with it by way of extending its wings?—Well, I would send a certain number of them up to this beautiful glen up here, Ach-a-ghiurain and Achadh-nan-gart.

15,676. Is that a farm?—It is not in Sir Kenneth Matheson's property, there is plenty of land in Sir Kenneth's estate.

15,677. Where on Sir Kenneth's estate?—The lands of Killilan and Longard and Màm. There is plenty of land for all those I would remove from the townships of Dornie and Bundalloch.

15,678. Is Màm a farm?—It is part of Longard.—[Sir Henry Macandrew.—That is Chisholm's property. —Witness.—It is.]

15,679. The one runs into the other. I suppose Dornie is as far from Longard as Bundalloch is?—Oh, farther up.

15,680. And how far is Dornie from Killilan?—I would say between four and five miles.

15,681. How far is it from Màm on The Chisholm estate?—It is part of this farm of Longard.

15,682. We have got rather away from the farms; have you any other farm you would wish to mention beside these?—The township of Inverinate is a congested district.

15,683. It is congested is it?—Yes.

15,684. How many crofters are in it?—There are six that have sheep in shares, and five with small lots having the grazing of a cow, but no sheep.

15,685. How many crofters do you think Inverinate would properly accommodate?—Four.

15,686. What would you do with the cottars, would you take them all out together or leave some of them?—There are five cottars besides the five that have the grazing of a cow.

15,687. Six crofters, five cottars with grazing, and five without grazing?—Certainly.

15,688. That is sixteen?—Yes.

15,689. What would you do with them, the cottars without grazing and the cottars with a cow; would you leave them there, or would you transfer them?—Certainly; I would consider it a hardship to take the land from them that have it.

15,690. How would you deal with them?—There is land marching with Inverinate.

15,691. What is the name of that land?—Ruarach.

15,692. That is the farm?—It is.

15,693. With grazing land upon it, of course?—Yes, and there is part of Inverinate added. There are two Inverinates, Easter and Wester, and as the marches were running in the olden times part of Wester Inverinate is added to Easter Inverinate, which was taken from Wester Inverinate about the beginning of the century by Mr Kenneth Mackenzie, the laird of Applecross, that got this estate about that time.

15,694. Part of Wester Inverinate was added to Easter Inverinate?—Yes.

15,695. Of course, you don't propose to take land from Inverinate I suppose?—I would.

15,696. Would you take the land from Wester Inverinate?—From Easter Inverinate.

15,697. And restore it to Wester Inverinate?—And, then, I would take the rest of the people of Inverinate away to Ruarach.

15,698. Are you of opinion, Mr Maclennan, that there is—?—I am a Macrae, my lord.

15,699. I beg your pardon,—that there is sufficient land at Ruarach to relieve adequately the congestion of Inverinate?—Not altogether if we did not get some of Easter Inverinate. Four are plenty for Ruarach.

15,700. But you wish Wester Inverinate to take some from Easter Inverinate, and how do you propose to deal with Easter Inverinate?—The four remaining would require it, but still we would require some place for the other eight.

15,701. I want to know from you what you would do with the poor people in Easter Inverinate, if you are going to take their land?—Oh, plenty of land; but not on the estate I would say if we don't send them to Lienassie.

15,702. Now, do you wish to mention any other farm?—Not more in the parish of Kintail.

15,703. Are you able to speak of any other parish?—Yes.

15,704. Which one?—The parish of Glenshiel.

15,705. Whose property is that, Sir Kenneth's?—No, Sir Allan Mackenzie of Kintail.

15,706. What land in the parish of Glenshiel do you wish to speak about? It seems that there has been some understanding that those representing the estate of Kintail would not require to attend in the morning, and they are not here, therefore, I won't take you just now with regard to the parish of Glenshiel, but continue afterwards, if you would be good enough not to go away?—Yes, my lord.

15,707. Is there anything else you wish to say to us with regard to the Matheson property and the parish of Kintail, or do you think you have mentioned all the material circumstances connected with these farms or with the forest?—Not with the forest, with the forest of Glomach.

15,708. What do you wish to say about the forest of Glomach?—I say that it is a loss to the country that it has been afforested, and I am able to prove it.

15,709. Well, give us your proof?—As I said, there were two shepherds constantly on the farm cleared. There were two men wintering, and they were mostly engaged all the year round. The shooting was let to a shooting tenant every year at Dorusduan, and he would require one or two horses and one or two gillies; the man and a horse would get 30s. a week for two months, and then four shepherds that were on the farm I would say all the year round, and now as it is there are only two gillies on this part afforested, and there is not a penny of their money spent in the country, not a farthing of it. And I think that is a loss to the country.

15,710. What would you do with the forest of Glomach?—Well, I would do this to it. I would send two or three tenants up to Achadh-à-chuirn, and I would give them the hill grazing.

15,711. You mean to live there?—To live there.

15,712. And you would give them the hill grazing?—Yes.

15,713. Anything more?—And then there is land up in Glen-Affaric again that the people of Kintail had in the olden times for summering their cattle.

15,714. These were the sheilings?—Yes.

15,715. Which of the Kintail tenants had sheilings at Glen-Affaric in days of yore?—The people of Inverinate. There is a place they call it Glen-Gniomhaidh.

15,716. Inverinate had shielings in Glen-Affaric, yes, go on?—The north side of the glen, the people of Inverinate had it.

15,717. Glen ——?—Glen-Grianan, and the south side of it again was added to Inchcro, but that will come on again; it will be examined again for the Glenshiel parish.

15,718. You can give us that again with regard to the parish of Glenshiel, but I want to ask you this question about the parish of Glenshiel. Has not Sir Kenneth Matheson property in the parish of Glenshiel?—Oh, yes, at Airdantoul.

15,719. What land is that, farm land, or what?—Yes, a sheep farm.

15,720. The sheep farm of Airdantoul?—Yes.

15,721. Is there any land there that comes within your view as suitable?—Oh, splendid land. There are about 200 acres I would say, or 150, we will call it 150, fit for cultivation.

15,722. Do you mean old arable?—Old and land under cultivation.

15,723. Which is which, how much of the one and how much of the other?—I would say that there would be close upon 80 or 90 acres.

15,724. Enclosed?—Yes.

15,725. And the rest is old arable?—Yes.

15,726. Is there any other land in the parish of Glenshiel belonging to Sir Kenneth?—The farm of Drudaig, five tenants.

15,727. You mean small tenants?—Yes.

15,728. What rents do they pay?—They have it in common as a club farm; the rent will be—

15,729. Under £30 I suppose?—No, it is above £50 I believe.

15,730. For each?—No, for the whole. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—£40 and £10 for the wood.]

15,731. These people belong to the crofter class?—Yes, and then there are sixteen tenants on Wester Achnaturd.

15,732. Is that a club farm?—No, twelve of them have just an acre, barely an acre, and four have up to two acres and the grazing of a cow. They got it nine or en years ago,—nine years ago.

15,733. Do you wish to ask our attention to any other lands in the parish of Glenshiel belonging to Sir Kenneth Matheson, or do you think you have fairly exhausted the matter?—I think that is all the land.

15,734. If there is anything you remember afterwards you can mention it?—Very well.

15,735. Do you carry on any business besides being a crofter?—Yes.

15,736. What is that?—I will be wintering hoggs by contract.

15,737. How many hoggs did you winter last winter?—4000.

15,738. And the winter before?—Not so many, above 3000.

15,739. And the winter before that?—About 3000.

15,740. Now, tell me, where did you winter these hoggs on contract?—I wintered them about Beauly and on to the Black Isle down about Munlochy and near Dingwall.

15,741. Whose land were you on?—Is it the name of the farm you ask?

15,742. Yes?—It was a farm at Beauly called Barnyards, and Balvattie, Kilchrist, and Balvattie, and at Munlochy I had the farm of Colonel Smith, and I had a farm in Ferintosh they call Teanahinch and Drumvournie. I also had Mr Peterkin's farm of Dunglass.

15,743. Whose sheep were these?—From several parties.

15,744. Were they from crofters?—Well, I had hardly 200 from crofters.

15,745. And were the rest from farmers in the district?—Yes, a lot from Mr Maclennan, Lienassie, and from Macrae, Airdantoul, and Mr Brown, farmer, Killilan, and from Mr Logan, farmer, Auchtertyre, Lochalsh.

15,746. And you collect these sheep and see to their safe transference down to the low country, and their safe wintering, and bring them back to the owner?—Some have to send them down.

15,747. However, it is done, and you charge according to your contract?—Yes.

15,748.—Mr Shaw Stewart.—With regard to Longard farm, what did the tenants who grazed sheep there in the summer do with their sheep in the winter?—The same as they used to do with them before. They were wintering there every year.

15,749. I am asking you where they wintered them?—At Longard.

15,750. At Longard?—Certainly.

15,751. Will they winter their whole stock?—Yes.

15,752. But did they as a fact?—Yes, and the best sheep in the north of Scotland, that is another thing.

15,753. I don't dispute the value of the sheep, and it is beautiful summer grazing I know, but are you sure that they were able to winter the whole of the stock that they grazed there in summer?—There is hardly any country that can do that.

15,754. But never mind about any other place, just tell me exactly?—Yes, it would winter every hoof but the hoggs.

15,755. Supposing the Bundalloch tenants found their way to a new township, how would they find money to build their houses and to stock their land?—Let them get the chance first.

15,756. Well, but have you no practical answer to give to my question besides that? I am asking you as a practical man?—I am sure there are some of them that would be able to do it, and some not.

15,757. That is just what I wanted to get. How would the inland townships manage about manure for the arable land?—There would not be the least difficulty about it.

15,758. How would they get it?—Manure?

15,759. Yes; from their own stock?—Certainly.

15,760. They would be able to keep enough stock to manure the land sufficiently?—I don't see that they could keep much stock.

15,761. But you think they would be able to keep enough to treat the land properly?—Yes, I am quite sure.

15,762. Are the Inverinate crofters and cottars in great poverty now?—Some of them are, and some not.

15,763. How do they mostly live, I mean what work do they get, fishing or what?—Fishing and working through the country, some of them wintering in the wintertimes, and clipping and working among the sheep through the summer and every kind of work.

15,764. But the fishermen would not wish to inland?—There are plenty of fishermen that woul live very glad to get the chance. d be 15,765. Of living inland and taking up an inland croft?—The fishermen in this country, the most of them, are crofters.

15,766. I know most of them are crofters by the sea. I am speaking of the idea of moving them some distance from the sea?—There is no doubt a good many of them would prefer to be near the sea.

15,767. The most of them would, wouldn't they?—Oh, yes, and a good many of them would go away from the sea too.

15,768. But would not most fishermen prefer to have their homes near the place they get their livelihood from?—I was inquiring of several of them, and their mind to me was, that they would go anywhere in the country if they would get land.

Glenshiel. — Alexander Macrae.

15,769. Give up the fishing, in fact?—Give up the fishing.

15,770. Speaking about wintering generally, should you say that wintering is more difficult to get now than it used to be?—Well I have been going to the low country for the last twenty-six years. Five years ago it was easily got, and six years ago and four years ago very easily got, but for the last two and three years not so easy, and I will tell you the reason why. The price of grain was so low and the price of sheep so high, that the low country farmers have gone in for sheep, and so now when I went first there were not between Invergordon and the town of Inverness three farms on which I would see sheep kept all the year round, and the fact is now that the most of these farms, a good many of the big farmers have sheep. That makes a difference.

15,771. There are a great many more sheep now on what used to be arable land, cultivated land, but that is not a very promising state of things?—Yes.

15,772. For those who wish to take up more sheep on the hills, if there is more sheep on the low grounds?—We have seen as bad times before, and good times coming after.

15,773. But wintering sheep is a pretty profitable business now?—Not at all.

15,774. You don't really mean it is not a profitable business; it is fairly profitable isn't it?—A very bad season last season. Turnips have gone with the frost, it was not a profitable season.

15,775. Mr Forsyth.—I want to ask you a little about this Easter and Wester Inverinate. You told me that land had been taken from Wester Inverinate and added to Easter Inverinate in the beginning of this century, didn't you?—Yes.

15,776. And you think that the Wester Inverinate people should have that back again? That the Easter Inverinate people should get what they had before, and the other people be moved, isn't that it?—There are no people on Easter Inverinate.

15,777. I only wanted to get that plain. They lost their land in the beginning of the century, but there are no people?—It is in the hands of the proprietor.

15,778. You gave the impression in your remarks that there were people there, and that you thought the land should be as it were handed back from the one set of people to the other, but you now say that there are none?—Yes.

15,779. The Chairman.—I understood that you did.

15,780. Mr Forsyth.—It looked that on the evidence and I wished to bring it out.

15,781. Mr Sutherland.—I understand you are county councillor for this district?—I am.

15,782. And you have had means of knowing, not only the state of the people, but their opinions also; you have had opportunities that very few possibly would have?—Certainly.

15,783. Then with regard to the distribution of the population here, am I right in supposing that the greater part of the population is distributed round the shores of Loch Duich and Loch Long?—Yes, they are.

15,784. Could you give us any idea of the population?—Yes, I forgot that. In the year 1818 there were 718 above 12 years of age, and in the year 1831 there were 1240, in the parish of Kintail, and the population in 1891 was 588. That is the present population.

15,785. Could you tell me how many families are comprised in the 588, the usual number, I suppose divided by five?—About 100 families.

15,786. Am I right in supposing that these 100 families are within a triangle, two sides of which are Loch Long and Loch Duich, and the other the boundaries of the farms you have indicated?—I don't understand.

15,787. All that population is situated, generally speaking, within Loch Duich and Loch Long on the west, and the boundaries coming down by the river Elchaig and across here to Morvich, is that so?—Yes.

15,788. Those 100 families or probably 130? They have got in their occupation all the land within that circle?—They are just packed together where they are.

Glenshiel. — Alexander Macrae.

15,789. But is all this within this circle in the possession of the people who are scattered round the shore?—No, they have not that circle, the farm of Ruarach is in the hands of a farmer.

15,790. And what more?—The farm of Keppoch.

15,791. Two large farms?—They are not large.

15,792. But they are big; they occupy the half of this circle?—Not at all.

15,793. Is the remainder in the hands of the 100 families we have referred to?—Yes.

15,794. Comparing the area in the occupation of these 100 families with the Glomach forest, is it larger or smaller?—Smaller.

15,795. These 100 families have got less land?—Less land than the deer forest of Glomach.

15,796. And who is the lessee of that?—Mr Winans.

15,797. And has Mr Winans got more than the Glomach forest?—Yes, Killilan.

15,798. Any more than that?—He has Glen-Affaric down to Knockfin.

15,799. And does that exhaust all he has got?—No.

15,800. Am I safe in assuming that he has twenty times as much land as these 100 families?—Fifty times.

15,801. Fifty times as much, and that is the lesson as to the distribution of the land in this locality?—The area of Kintail is 78,000 acres. I would say the crofters of this parish have 5000 acres.

15,802. And it is upon that general consideration you have based your assertion that there is congestion of the population?—Certainly.

15,803. Now you have indicated in your evidence the processes by which these lands became deer forest; the general principle is, isn't it, that they were first of all cleared of the people for the purpose of making sheep farms?—That is so.

15,804. And that afterwards, and in this case pretty recently, the sheep farmers were cleared out and succeeded by the deer forest?—That is so.

15,805. Without going into further details, that is the general process that has been going on?—Yes.

15,806. Have you any idea as to the number of deer that can be supported on a certain piece of ground as compared with the number of sheep? What is the rule here with regard to the acreage that is allowed for feeding a stock sheep?—Well, the farm of Killilan when it was all under sheep I believe was over 20,000 acres.

15,807. And how many sheep were there?—Between 7000 and 8000.

15,808. That is four acres we may say liberally to each sheep. Now, have you any idea how many deer would be in that area?—No.

15,809. You have never had the data have you?—No, I am accustomed to deer, but I could not say.

15,810. Are you aware whether there is any rule as to the number of acres that a deer requires for sustenance?—No, there could not be any rule.

15,811. So you have no idea how many deer could be maintained upon this acreage that kept 20,000 sheep?—No.

15,812. Have you a general idea?—Well, at the time it was tenanted by the late Mr Adam Brown he had the whole farm and the shootings besides, and he was getting £900 for the shooting.

15,813. He was sub-letting the shooting was he?—Certainly, to two shooting tenants, and they would be getting I believe between 30 and 40 deer.

15,814. Killed?—Killed during a season among the sheep.

15,815. But you have not heard that those experts in deer forest matters have got a common rule as to the number of acres required for the maintenance of a stock deer?—No, I could not say.

15,816. You never heard it?—No, Mr Winans' gillies are counting them; surely they should know.

15,817. Are they counting them?—They are trying to do it.

15,818. Now with regard to the pasturage of Loch

Glenshiel. Alexander Macrae.

Longard, you said that it was in the occupation of the people to the best of your knowledge some time ago, as summer grazing?—Oh, yes, it was. It belonged to this country and it was the laird of Gairloch that sold it to The Chisholm. I am not sure which of the Mackenzies of Gairloch, but it was formerly in the possession of the Mackenzies of Kintail.

15,819. And as a matter of fact it is very much nearer the west coast than the east coast, isn't it?—It is.

15,820. The natural distribution of that land would be with the people of the west coast?—Certainly.

15,821. What is the distance from here where we are now sitting to Loch Longard; you said it was 12 miles from the Loch, but we are very much nearer it here are we not?—No.

15,822. I should say so; the map shows that?—I don't know that we are; it is straight on from Bundalloch. By taking a short cut it would be about ten miles from here to the march.

15,823. Then, with regard to the difficulty of using it as a grazing, you have admitted already that it was only a sheiling or the summer outgrazing in olden times?—Oh, no, it was under sheep, and there were shepherds there, and I should have the names of the shepherds that were there in 1818.

15,824. But was it as a sheep farm it was let then?—Yes, certainly.

15,825. But I understand that at one time the tenants of these townships you refer to had it as a sheiling or outgrazing in summer?—Yes, sending their sheep there in summer.

15,826. But supposing it was possible to give to the congested people here these grazings, would the want of contiguity be any obstacle that could not be overcome?—Easily overcome.

15,827. Could it not be used as a club farm entirely for the benefit of these people?—Yes.

15,828. And whatever benefit would accrue there after grazing, they would just get it as well at Bundalloch as if they were there on the ground?—Certainly.

15,829. Then, with regard to the difficulty of wintering, it is at present part of the Comar grazing now?—Yes.

15,830. There is a sheep stock on it now?—Yes, and good sheep.

15,831. You say that except the hoggs they are wintered there now?—Every hoof of them.

15,832. You don't know the ground, I think you said, personally?—No.

15,833. So you are not able to tell us how much of it could be reclaimed and made into arable land?—No.

15,834. We have been over it ourselves and seen it so that we are able to judge. The head waters of Glen-Affaric you have referred to also?—Yes, that is Glen-Grienan down to Alltbeath, and as far as Ath-nam-Muileach.

15,835. You know the land there?—Yes.

15,836. What is your opinion as to its quality?—My opinion of it is that it is about the best in the north of Scotland.

15,837. Do you think any area of it could be made arable down on Athnamuloch?—Well, a few acres, not much.

15,838. Why only a few acres do you consider?—Oh, well, it is so low lying.

15,839. Isn't it better low lying?—Certainly, but it could not be easily drained.

15,840. The difficulty of draining?—Yes.

15,841. But you would have no fear if it could be occupied and drained properly, but crops could grow on it?—Plenty of crops would grow to summer the cattle, and what more would they want.

15,842. But supposing it was going to be made into new settlements altogether, could people be planted there with a prospect of raising crops? Yes, certainly, there is plenty of land at Coulan and at Allt-beath also.

15,843. And have you seen the crops that the keeper there raises?—Certainly, I did, splendid potatoes and good hay. Glenshiel. Alexander Macrae.

15,844. And you think that that is land that could be very profitably occupied by the people down in this congested area that we were talking about?—Certainly.

15,845. And you are of opinion that people could be got who would be perfectly willing and very glad to get the opportunity, do you believe that?—I believe that.

15,846. Then, with regard to the wintering of hoggs, you have had a great deal of experience I understand We have heard before now that one of the reasons why wintering is high is that the farmers in the lowlands, down in the low lying grounds in the east coast, have themselves taken to rearing sheep. Is that within your knowledge?—Yes, that is a fact.

15,847. And you have explained how in your opinion that has come about by the prices of grain having come down?—Yes.

15,848. But has the price of sheep not also come down?—Yes, now, but they are trying to get clear of them as quick as they can.

15,849. But do you not think that the fact that the clearing of the sheep farms and the turning of them into deer forest has necessitated these people raising sheep themselves in the winter?—Certainly, that is the very reason why they did it.

15,850. Because as a matter of fact they were not getting sheep from the Highlands to winter as the Highland pastures were being transferred into deer forest?—Certainly, they would let half their pastures if it was not for themselves raising so many sheep.

15,851. And you never heard yet of deer being sent down to winter grazing?—(No answer.)

15,852. Do you think that what I have mentioned had something to do with the farmers in the lowlands raising sheep themselves?—Oh, yes.

15,853. Do you know anything about the area of the parish of Glenshiel?—I do.

15,854. What is the area of the parish of Glenshiel?—58,000 acres.

15,855. How many acres of that do you know were in the occupation of the native people until the recent extension of grazings?—16 acres until ten years ago, not a tenant paying a farthing of rent to the landlord.

15,856. Do you seriously assert that in the year 1882 there were only 16 acres in the occupation of the native population?—That is a fact. The farm of Airdantoul, the farm of Drudaig, and the farm of Ratagan, and the forest of Cluanie, and the farm of Achadh-nan-gart, and the forest of Inchcro, that was all the number of souls that were paying rent to a landlord in this parish, or that had the grazing of a cow, until the year that I mentioned.

15,857. The Seaforth Highlanders, I understand, were raised here?—A good many of them.

15,858. The great majority of them; and did these men that you know that held all this land ever give any contribution to the army?—Oh, certainly.

15,859. The large farmers?—Oh, the large farmers.

15,860. The deer foresters?—There were none in those days.

15,861. Did Mr Winans come here and shoot when he had this forest?—Never.

15,862. Was he ever near here?—He never showed his face here, never as far as I know. I saw him myself, but it was at Glen-Strathfarrar.

15,863. But, generally speaking, you think that land can be found in this parish and in its neighbourhood within the terms of the inquiry that is remitted to us? You think such land could be got?—Every acre and yard of this parish is fit for small tenants.

15,864. And you believe also that the necessity and the desire to have such land exists on the part of the people?—Certainly, there is.

15,865. And you are quite ready yourself or to get some one to show us the land that is suitable in that respect?—Well, I cannot, there will be plenty able to do it.

Glenshiel.
Alexander Macrae.

15,866. Mr Gordon.—You say that the people of Bundalloch and Inverinate would move, if they got the chance, to Loch Longard?—I did not say the people of Inverinate; they will get plenty of land near them.

15,867. Who did you say?—Bundalloch and Dornie would go to Killilan and Longard and these places.

15,868. How would they go to Longard; what road would they take in moving their stock?—The way of Carnach.

15,869. They would go past Camuslunie?—Yes.

15,870. And past Carnach?—Yes, and up to the point.

15,871. And follow the old drove road to Longard?—Yes.

15,872. I want to put you right in regard to that distance. You say you think it is about 10 miles?—10 or 12 miles.

15,873. I can tell you it is more than 15 miles; you will agree to that?—Well, I can't say exactly.

15,874. Do you know anybody that would be willing to move from the townships you have mentioned up to that place?—So they tell me.

15,875. Tell us the names of the people who would be willing to move?—Well, several of them told me. They said to me,—they didn't tell me they would be willing to go there, but they told me they would be willing to go anywhere. They did not mention places.

15,876. Would you be willing yourself to take a croft up at Longard?—I need not go up there.

15,877. Possibly, but would you be willing yourself as a common sense man to settle down at Longard in a croft?—I would go there as a tenant having a good share of a club farm there. It is I that would. I don't care for a croft.

15,878. But you would not propose to settle crofters at Longard would you?—Give them the name of small tenants, 'crofters' is a word not known in this country.

15,879. 'Small tenants,' I have no objection; how many acres of arable land could they get?—Well, a crofter, say two or three cows; and they could support two or three cows and a pony on four acres.

15,880. Four acres of arable land?—Yes.

15,881. How many small tenants would you propose to settle on that extent?—On Longard only?

15,882. On Longard and Màm?—I would give it to six.

15,883. What rent do you suppose they would pay?—The area would do for ten.

15,884. I quite acknowledge there is plenty of room for six tenants there; what rent would you suppose these six tenants would pay?—It is not for me to say; I am not going to say a rent.

15,885. Do you say that advisedly, that you won't specify any rent?—Yes, I do; I leave that to other judges, because I don't know what year the rent would be put on it. Maybe it is a good year and maybe a bad year.

15,886. Have you ever been there?—No.

15,887. Therefore, you know nothing about it?—I know plenty about places that I was never in.

15,888. You may know about it in your own mind, but you are not able to instruct us about a place you never saw yourself?—Yes, there are plenty of places that I was never in that I could tell you of.

15,889. Well, I have seen it in different days; have you any idea what like that place is in winter?—Surely it is like other places. I was in higher ground than it in the winter.

15,890. You may, but I don't know if you were ever in much stormier grounds. Now, you talked about Glen-Affaric, and that is a very pretty glen?—Yes, it is.

15,891. You spoke of Glen-Gniomhaidh; do you know the height of the glen?—Do you mean below or above?

15,892. Well, say a mile in breadth in the glen; what height would it be then?—The low part of it.

15,893. You know Caimbàn?—I know Caimban.

15,894. What is the height of Caimbàn?—800 and 900 feet above sea-level.

15,895. It is all that. Well, Caimban is at the foot of Glen-Grianan, you will acknowledge that?—No, it is much higher.

15,896. Where do you put the foot of Glen-Grianan?—It is a number of yards besides feet below Carnban.

Glenshiel.
Alexander Macrae.

15,897. Where does the foot of Glen-Grianan end according to your idea?—It is running from the foot of Loch Coulavie.

15,898. Do you say it goes down as far as Alltbeath?—Not so far as Allt-beath.

15,899. Well, do you know the height of Alltbeath?—I could not say exactly.

15,900. You mentioned no place there above that?—Yes, I mentioned Coulan.

15,901. I don't think there is any part of Glen-Grianan that is less than a 1000 feet in height even at the bottom of the valley. Allt-beath is 900 feet. Now, with regard to the possibility of making arable holdings in a country of that kind, do the keepers usually cultivate only the best and driest spots of the place, or do they cultivate all and sundry?—The fact of it is that they cultivate only small patches near their houses.

15,902. You have passed down through Glen-Affaric?—Several times.

15,903. And you have seen some cultivation at the top of the loch where the keeper lives?—Yes.

15,904. Would you possibly get any more holdings suitable for crofters to settle upon beyond what the gamekeeper occupies?—Did you go up the track of Robb?

15,905. Yes, I went up?—Isn't there plenty of arable land between Allt-beath and the top of the loch?

15,906. There is no arable land at all. There are some green flat haughs and some very good grazing?—In my opinion there is plenty arable land.

15,907. Is your opinion that that green flat ground should be made arable land?—Certainly, it is my opinion.

15,908. Is it subject to flooding or not in winter?—Floods in winter? Maybe if a flood would come like the flood we had two years ago.

15,909. I could easily understand a man with your practical experience would propose to grow grass upon that ground, but I don't think—.—Oh, yes, and grow crops.

15,910. Are you really of opinion crops could be grown there with safety, without danger of frost?—There is danger of frost in any high place. It is liable to frost.

15,911. I think the low places would be more liable to frost than the high yonder. From your own personal knowledge of Glen-Affaric would you recommend people to go and stay there and cultivate that flat ground?—It is not cultivation I look to; it is pasturage.

15,912. But if you plant crofters you must have some arable land?—Just a few acres to keep as I said three cows and a pony.

15,913. But would you recommend them to plant potatoes upon that green ground?—I would, because I have seen the best potatoes that ever I saw growing at Allt-beath.

15,914. And do you think it would be safe to plant potatoes at Allt-beath; I don't think Allt-beath is quite so frosty as some places lower down. Now, with reference to the distribution of population in this parish, you say the 500 people are confined mostly to the shores round here. The population of Glenshiel I think you said?—392 is the population of Glenshiel.

15,915. You said the parish contained 518 I think?—That is Kintail.

15,916. That population is confined mostly to the low ground?—Well, yes; there is a number of shepherds up the glen.

15,917. And the extent of ground which this population occupies is less you said than the forest of Glomach?—I said that of the population in the parish of Kintail.

15,918. Quite so, I quite understand you. Now, would you make any difference between land at the seaside and land up on the forest of Glomach, as regards suitability for maintaining a population?—The place that I said I would put people on in the forest of Glomach is not above 150 feet above sea-level.

15,919. Which part of the forest of Glomach is that?—Up at Achadh-a'-chuirn; well, it may be more than that, but is it not high.

15,920. I don't think there is 100 acres of the forest of Glomach that is less than 500 to 600 feet, and the great bulk of it is over 1000 feet in height?—Yes, but look at Carnach it is just the same.

15,921. How many people would you put into the forest of Glomach to-morrow if you had it all to yourself?—I was going to add this to Camuslunie, that is part that was taken away from them Fraoch-Choire.

15,922. What number of the population do you think you could take up in the way of redistributing it over this part of the country. How many of your 518 people could you send up to Glomach?—Well, I didn't study the number of people that I would send up. [The Chairman.—But you are asked to say if you can.] I would send three up to Achadh-a'-chuirn and I would give them the forest of Glomach.

15,923. That is 15 people of your 518 that you could send up even if you had it in your own hand?—I was giving the benefit of Fraoch-Choire to the Camuslunie people.

15,924. I am not disputing the propriety of giving it to the people, but it would not take away many of the present population from the low part of the parish?—It is only a small bit.

15,925. I suppose the same thing holds good of the portion of Killilan that has been afforested; the Killilan and Patt forests?—Certainly.

15,926. You mentioned I think about 20,000 acres in them?—I could not say whether it is more but it cannot be less.

15,927. Well, it is more than double that. There are more than 50,000 acres in Killilan, Patt, and the present grazing of Killilan?—Between the present grazing farm and the deer forest?

15,928. And the deer forest of Patt.—Are you sure you are not taking in part of Glen-Strathfarrar that is added to Patt.

15,929. I am taking in just exactly what belongs to Sir Kenneth Matheson (shows witness a plan). This included your 7000 or 8000 sheep.—How many acres?

15,930. I don't know, it is about 14 inches long by 4?—Well, you will never make 50,000 acres of it.

15,931. It is over 60 square miles—Take it at 18. You will never make more than that.

15,932. How many sheep do you think that would keep to the acre?—I know the stock that was on it; it was sometimes up to 10,000 I was told, but I have never seen that on it.

15,933. Ten thousand?—Yes, it was once, but the sheep were hardier then; they were a cross-breed from the old sheep they had in the country, but now the sheep are softer.

15,934. And how many people do you think the sheep farm of Killilan would take; how many holdings would you propose to divide it into?—I would give them the whole farm and I would send 20 crofters to it.

15,935. And how many sheep would they be able to keep?—They would be able to keep—they would winter between 6000 and 7000 sheep—about 6000 sheep and would summer thousands more.

15,936. How many thousands more?—I would say easily 3000 more.

15,937. That would be altogether a stock of 9000 sheep?—No, it would be only 6000, they don't always count the stock. They don't count the hoggs in the stocks until they are a year old.

15,938. But you would have your hoggs away wintering?—They are never counted sheep stock.

15,939. I quite understand they are not upon the ground, but I am talking now of the capital. 9000 sheep would belong to those 20 people. Now are there 20 people you know in this part of the country that could afford to stock that farm?—Not of crofters.

15,940. What would be the value; you say you would divide that 9000 by 20. That would be 450 sheep to each of them. Would you have any difficulty at all in finding people in this quarter of the country, small tenants that could rise the price of 450 sheep and put up their buildings and buy their cows and horses?—A few could be got, but I believe not 20.

Glenshiel. Alexander Macrae.

15,941. And how would you do with the rest of the farm when you broke in upon it; what is your scheme for dividing a farm of this kind?—A club farm.

15,942. But you cannot have a club farm without men to form the proprietary?—No, but still——

15,943. Do you know 20 men to make up the number of your club farm?—There are several people that have not much themselves that could easily find it.

15,944. That is not exactly an answer to my question. How are you going to find the owners of these sheep; you must make up your number to fill the club farm?—Yes, but I would divide it into more than one farm, I would consider I would make several farms, but still it would require the same money for all that.

15,945. It would require the same money. Have you any scheme in your own head. You propose to break up this farm and to make it into a club farm either in one or two lots. Now, have you any scheme where you would find the people to occupy it?—The first thing to be done is to open up the land.

15,946. The first thing to do is to find the people to occupy the land before we break it up?—I don't think so. There are plenty people who can get money who have not it themselves.

15,947. They would not get it for nothing, like any other place. But you don't know any people who would occupy all this farm?—Not enough that have the need of going there in the congested district; but I am sure that 20 would be gathered from the country.

15,948. Would it not be better to take as much land as is required for the people rather than to force the people into a speculation which they have no capital for?—But I would not force them in if they would not be willing to have it.

15,949. But you propose to take the whole farm you must find means of occupation in some form?—I would give the low part under sheep to 20 and it would winter about 3000 sheep, and I would get other 20 that would take the upper farm.

15,950. The upper farm?—The forest as a club farm, and they could work it from their present holdings.

15,951. Do you mean to say that you will find first the 20 people to occupy the present grazing farm of Killilan of the present small holdings in Kintail?—Yes.

15,952. Could you give me the name of a few of them?—Well, the names of them, there is no occasion to give the names in the meantime.

15,953. I would like to get the names because it is a sort of proof positive that you know what you are speaking of?

15,954. Surely, sir, you won't know the names.

15,955. The Chairman.—Can you mention any names?—My name is Alexander Macrae and I would go as one.

15,956. Mr Gordon.—I have no doubt of that. I don't take you as a typical crofter, but I think you are an independent gentleman. No, I am not, I am earning my bread like any other common man.

15,957. The Chairman.—Have you any other name?—There are several at Bundalloch that said to me that they would be willing. There is one John Macrae and a good many. It is not my business to give all the names.

15,958. Mr Gordon.—I am not saying it is your business to give the names, but you say you could occupy the whole of this farm profitably by 20 different holdings. Now, I would like to know if you have it in your mind's eye who the people are that would join you in taking it?—I consider the first thing is to open up the land to them.

15,959. The Chairman.—Mr Gordon's question is to whom would you open up the land?—To crofters who are in need of it.

15,960. Well, who are they: tell us that?—

15,961. Mr Sutherland.—Those who appointed you; you are a delegate, are you not?

15,962. The Chairman.—I am sorry I interrupted the witness, he is in the hands of Mr Gordon.

15,963. Mr Gordon.—I am not pressing far in the matter, but the object of my inquiry at him is to see whether his scheme of breaking up a farm of this kind is the best scheme, or whether it would not be better to take a part of it?—Well, the grazing farm, as I said, would do for 20, and I say that 20 could be got in the country to go there, it is not my business to give names.

15,964. I think it your business to answer legitimate questions.

15,965. The Chairman.—Are you or are you not able to give any names besides your own?—I could give you the names of them who are in the need of land.

15,966. No, that is not the question put?—Or those who are able.

15,967. Willing to go and able to stock, that is the question?—Oh, I could not say as to their ability to pay.

15,968. Mr Gordon.—Do you still persist in saying that it would be advisable to take the whole farm of Killilan rather than a part of it only, sufficient to give an extension of grazing or holdings to those people who can occupy them profitably?—Well, in my view, I consider that it would be occupied profitably by 20, the low ground and the upper ground, the forest by other 20.

15,969. That is hardly an answer, but I won't press him further, my lord.

15,970. Mr Maccallum.—Do you anticipate that there would be any difficulty in letting this farm of Killilan if it were offered in the way that you propose as a club farm and 20 to be united together in holding it?—Well, I may say this is my point; I could not say that they have the means, but I say that of the people, 20 could be got that would be willing to go there willing to get land.

15,971. You don't want to enter into the question as to how much means they possess, but there is a great desire to get such holdings as this?—Well, I say that.

15,972. And you think that a proportion of them would be able to take such holdings?—Well, I think a certain number of them would be able to pay. I know that there are a good many of them anxious to get land that would not be able to pay.

15,973. And although you make this proposal with regard to the Killilan farm, you would also be willing, I suppose, to add any suitable part of it to the holdings that presently exist, to these congested townships for instance?—Yes.

15,974. What is the rent of Killilan farm as at present occupied?—I could not say the rent at present [Sir Henry Macandrew.—£600], but it was let fifteen years ago at £900. It was formerly £900.

15,975. And you did not give the arable acreage of that farm?—I could not give the exact number of acres, but there are a good number of acres.

15,976. Can you give any idea of the number of acres that are actually cultivated?—Not many acres at Killilan now. It is waste land now.

15,977. And can you give any idea of the number at all of old arable?—I am not sure, there would be over 100 acres about Killilan itself.

15,978. That is not now cultivated?—Yes.

15,979. You thought that some of the Inverinate crofters might be transferred to Ruarach I think?—Yes.

15,980. What is the size of that farm?—It would winter between 400 and 500 sheep. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—£75.]

15,981. And the rent is £75?—Sir Henry says so.

15,982. And then you thought also that they might get land from Easter Lienassie?—Oh, yes.

15,983. How is that land occupied just now?—It is in the hands of Mr Maclennan, the present tenant.

15,984. Is that part cultivated?—I can't tell you.

15,985. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to this desire on the part of the people to take holdings, you were appointed a delegate to represent their opinions here at a public meeting, were you not?—I was.

15,986. Were there any resolutions passed at that meeting?—The only resolution that was passed to make known that they were wanting land.

15,987. And you were chosen for the purpose because you knew their opinions on that point well?—Certainly.

Glenshiel. — Alexander Macrae.

15,988. And were appointed to express it?—Yes.

15,989. The Chairman.—Now it may be convenient I think, Mr Mackay, if I ask this witness (to save him coming back as you are here now) a few questions with regard to the land belonging to The Chisholm in the parish of Glenshiel.—[Mr William Mackay.—To Sir James Mackenzie's Trustees.]

15,990. To Sir James Mackenzie's Trustees, I beg your pardon. You know Sir James Mackenzie's Trustees' land?—[Witness.—I do.]

15,991. Do you ask our attention to any land belonging to the Trustees of Sir James Mackenzie, in the parish of Glenshiel?—The farm of Inchcro.

15,992. Is that a grazing farm?—It was a grazing farm in the hands of small tenants at the beginning of this century.

15,993. And is it now in the hands of one farmer?—It is a deer forest, Morvich and Inchcro deer forest.

15,994. Is that under Mr Winans?—Not just now.

15,995. It is under Sir Allan Mackenzie himself?—Yes.

15,996. There is land there in your opinion suitable for grazing?—Yes, it is good pasture land.

15,997. Is there any land suitable for cultivation?—Yes, there is about 100 acres or between 80 and 100 acres.

15,998. Of old arable?—Of old arable.

15,999. Where is that exactly?—Lying between the point of Inchcro and Glenlic, on the side of the river Cro.

16,000. Is it old arable haugh land?—Oh, yes, it is quite green as yet, it can easily be seen that it was cultivated.

16,001. And is it in your opinion suitable for settlement?—It is.

16,002. How far is it from here?—About three miles Inchcro.

16,003. Any other land belonging to Sir Allan Mackenzie?—The farm of Morvich again.

16,004. What do you say about it?—The farm of Morvich was occupied by 16 tenants until the year 1820.

16,005. Small tenants I suppose you mean?—They had the farm of Morvich and they had six cows and four followers and a pony.

16,006. Is there old arable upon that land?—Oh, yes, it is not cultivated, but small patches that are cultivated this year, a park of 18 acres was given to 16 crofters just now.—[Mr William Mackay, factor for Sir James T. Mackenzie's Trustees.—21 acres]. [Witness.—Well, that is news to me.]

16,007. The Chairman.—Well, whatever the area, 18 or 21 acres, it was assigned to 16 crofters?—16 crofters.

16,008. That was last year?—This year at Whitsunday.

16,009. By Sir Allan Mackenzie? Now to whom was that extent of land assigned, who were the crofters that got it?—There are 16 of them. The Morvich crofters, they are not crofters, they were cottars.

16,010. Now, besides that land that was assigned and which is now in the hands of these cottars, is there other land on Morvich?—Between the land they got and up glen I was estimating there would be about 154 acres.

16,011. Of old arable?—Yes.

16,012. And is it suitable for a similar purpose?—For a similar purpose.

16,013. Either for settlements or for extension of grazing?—Both.

16,014. Does that land march with the Morvich land, the cottars' land?—Yes.

16,015. Any other land now in this part of Sir Allan Mackenzie's estate?—This farm of Invershiel.

16,016. Invershiel farm? Who is the farmer?—Maclennan, Lienassie, and Macrae, Airdantoul. They are in partnership. Invershiel and Achadh-nan-gart and Cluanie are the three farms held by them.

16,017. These three places are held in partnership by Maclennan and Macrae, Airdantoul?—Yes, Macrae is a farmer on Sir Kenneth Matheson's estate.

Glenshiel. — Alexander Macrae.

16,018. Are they in a joint lease?—I could not say as to that.

16,019. Now is there land there?—Yes, there is.

16,020. Old arable?—Old arable. Until nineteen years ago last Whitsunday, the farm of Achadh-nan-gart was let separately to one Macrae, and the farm of Invershiel and Cluanie were let separately to the late Donald John Macrae.

16,021. Well, then, what happened nineteen years ago to Achadh-nan-gart?—This Donald John Macrae took the whole three farms, and about seven years ago—he died sixteen years ago, and the widow was keeping on the farm, and she could not keep it on and the proprietor would not give her a reduction as I was told, and she had to part with the farm and to sell the stock herself. If she had continued the lease until it expired, the proprietor would be bound to take the sheep over on valuation, and it was reported that when she would retire Mr Winans would take it. So she had to sell out the stock, and when the stock was sold out Winans would not take it.

16,022. And it is now under lease to Maclennan and Macrae?—Yes.—[Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Duncan Macrae, Justice of Peace, Airdantoul.]

16,023. Are there buildings on Achadh-nan-gart?—Yes, there is a farm steading.

16,024. Is there anybody in it?—Yes, there is a gamekeeper.

16,025. A keeper to whom?—To Sir Allan Mackenzie.

16,026. But the steading is not carried on as a farm, is it?—No.

16,027. Then, on the farm of Cluanie, is there a steading?—No, that farm was in connection with Invershiel always.

16,028. And there is no building on it?—No.

16,029. Are these three farms of Invershiel, Achadh-nan-gart, and Cluanie worked as one?—Worked as one farm.

16,030. A grazing farm?—A grazing farm, and small patches here in possession of a few cottars; small patches round about below the road here, and the grazing of a cow.

16,031. Never mind that just now. Can you tell me the stock upon these three farms at present?—About 4500 or so.

16,032. How many hoggs do they winter?—They don't send them away to winter. They are blackfaced sheep and they are wintering them at home.

16,033. I am not saying where; but how many did they winter?—About 1200 hoggs I should think.

16,034. I am not pinning you to a figure. Are these wintered at home?—Yes, but they were not sold last year.

16,035. Are they wintered at home?—Yes.

16,036. Where are they wintered?—On the farm among the sheep.

16,037. Do you know the rent of it?—At present about £350 or so.

16,038. Do you know as to these farms held as one farm, is it a lease for a term of years?—Last year the lease was out in nineteen.

16,039. Mr William Mackay.—Perhaps I had better tell you that the rent is £625.—[Witness.—But that is for this year.]

16,040. Mr William Mackay.—And for last year. Oh, no, for this year only.

16,041. What was the former rent?—[Mr William Mackay.—Upwards of £300.]

16,042. What was the former rent?—[Mr Maclennan, Lienassie.—The rent the trustees of Donald John Macrae were paying under the will was £1150, and they got a reduction from Sir James T. Mackenzie of £200.]

16,043. Macrae paid a rent of £1150?—[Mr William Mackay.—That is only a matter of £8.]

16,044. Are you of opinion Mr Macrae, that there are traces of land upon these three farms combined into one farm suitable for crofters?—Yes, I am of that opinion.

16,045. Considerable tracts of old arable?—There are. Glenshiel. — Alexander Macrae.

16,046. And tracts of grazing?—And tracts of grazing as well.

16,047. Are these lands in the neighbourhood; what crofters are they nearest?—There are no crofters at present on the estate.

16,048. Oh, there are none on the estate?—No.

16,049. Do you wish to tell us anything about any other farms or any other land upon this estate in Glenshiel, in the parish of Glenshiel?—There is the farm of Ratagan.

16,050. Is that Sir Allan Mackenzie's?—No, it belongs to Mr Baillie of Dochfour.

16,051. That is another estate?—In the estate of Sir Allan Mackenzie these are all the lands.

16,052–3. Sir Henry Macandrew.—You stated that there must have been small tenants on Lienassie?—Yes.

16,054. What ground have you for saying that?—That there is old arable land there and.—

16,055. And how long ago do you think?—I told his lordship that I could not say the exact date on which there were crofters on it.

16,056. You don't know that it has been let to one tenant since 1715?—I well believe it. It was long in possession of the Macraes of Inverinate.

16,057. I think the witness was going to say that Lienassie had been divided into places under other names?—Yes, I say that there was part of the farm of Lienassie that was on other places later than the date you mentioned.

16,058. There have been additions to the farm of Lienassie?—There were.

16,059. But there was no part of it left under a separate name as a separate holding except what has been added to it?—There was part of it on Inverinate, even of the farm of Lienassie at present.

16,060. At what date?—Yes, the latter end of last century.

16,061. 1715 is a good long time before that?—It was the Macraes of Inverinate that had it, and on that they never crossed over the burn at Dorusduan. But they had Lienassie.

16,062. The Inverinate tenant?—Yes, Macraes.

16,063. That is Finlay Macrae of Inverinate who had a wadset of the place. Now, coming to the Glomach forest you told us that different parts of it had been held at one time by crofters?—I did.

16,064. What crofters held it?—The crofters of Camuslunie and the crofters of—well, it was the Rev. John Macrae, the minister at Glenshiel, had part of it, and the tenants of Inverinate had part of it.

16,065. How many tenants were in Inverinate at that time?—Well, as I was told, it was three.

16,066. And were they joint tenants?—Well, maybe it was one of them that was in for it, but they had equal shares.

16,067. But were they joint tenants?—They were joint tenants.

16,068. Or did they pay separate rents?—Certainly, they did.

16,069. They paid separate rents?—They paid separate rents.

16,070. To the landlord?—I could not say to the landlord.

16,071. Now was that a sheiling, was it as a sheiling they had it?—As a shieling.

16,072. And they sent their cattle there in the summer?—They did.

16,073. And that was before the time of the introduction of sheep farming into the district?—There were sheep but not the same kind of sheep as there is to-day.

16,074. Now I suppose that applies to all these places in the forest that you have been speaking about; they were really summer sheilings, is that so?—I believe so.

16,075. Now you told us that small tenants could be settled in the Glomach forest; that they could cultivate it profitably?—I did 16,076. How many did you say, I didn't notice exactly?—Three.

16,077. In the whole forest?—I was going to give back to the Camuslunie people this Fraoch-Choire that was taken from them.

16,078. You would give them the sheiling and you would settle three more tenants?—Yes, at Achadh-à-chuirn.

16,079. Is there any land there fit for cultivation?—There is.

16,080. Was it ever cultivated?—It was.

16,081. What rent would they be able to pay?—I am not appointed as a valuator; I could not say the rent.

16,082. You cannot say what would be a fair rent for three tenants settled there?—No, I could not, Sir Henry, say that.

16,083. Now, could you state the amount of money that would be required to stock the place?—It won't require very much this year, but the exact figure I could not say.

16,084. How many sheep would you give them?—When Fraoch-Choire was taken from it I believe 600 or 700 blackfaced would be about it.

16,085. Between the three?—Yes.

16,086. Can you state what would be a fair rent for the Camuslunie people to pay for the sheiling that you would give them?—I could not say what a fair rent would be. A fair rent this year is not a fair rent next year.

16,087. Do you know what rent is paid for it now?—For Camuslunie? The Glomach Forest?—No.

16,088. Would £550 be an extravagant rent for the small tenants to pay?—It would.

16,089. Now, as to the Patt forest, do you state that there is any land within the limits of the Patt forest suitable for the occupation of small tenants?—No, I did not say that; I said that it would do as a club farm added to a township on the low grounds.

16,090. It would do as an addition to one of the existing crofter townships?—Yes.

16,091. Is there any land in it fit for cultivation?—Not much, there are a few acres, but not much.

16,092. Is there any land in it that ever was cultivated?—There is that was ever cultivated.

16,093. Where?—There was land cultivated at Patt, there was land cultivated at Coire-each, there was land cultivated at Beneveig, there was land cultivated at Mulbuie.

16,094. Was that shepherds' lots?—Shepherds' and maybe herds' in the olden times.

16,095. Was there ever anybody permanently residing in that forest except shepherds and smugglers perhaps?—Yes.

16,096. Where?—At Patt.

16,097. Do you know when the house at Patt was built?—There is a good number of years, I could not tell the exact date, but I know that there were people staying there before the house you mean was built.

16,098. It was built for a large sheep farmer, is that so?—I could not say, I was under the impression that it was built for the shooting tenant.

16,099. Then that is the only house you mention as being there?—No, that is not the only house; there were several houses.

16,100. Where?—At Patt.

16,101. Who lived in them?—One Donald Macrae lived there once, and one Alexander Macrae lived there once.

16,102. That is occupied now?—Well, the son of this Alexander Macrae is there yet.

16,103. That is the smuggler I was alluding to. [The Chairman.—We are not going into the matter of smuggling.]

16,104. Is that the only other one?—Yes.

16,105. How many tenants would you consider suitable to turn that into a club farm?—It would be a good help for 20.

16,106. Can you state what stock it would carry or did you state that?—It would be plenty for it to winter 2000.

16,107. And can you state what money would be required to stock it?—I would stock it this year with £1200 and less.

16,108. For 2000 sheep?—Yes, good sheep.

16,109. Would they be cheviot or blackfaced?—Both of them; I could buy cheviots cheaper than blackfaced this year.

16,110. Would they be ewes or wedders?—Ewes and wedders, but I would put wedders on it.

16,111. Well, I will ask you some questions about wedders by-and-by. Have you any idea of the death-rate among the sheep when it was occupied by Mr Brown?—Yes.

16,112. It was the wedder ground farm; was that so?—Oh, yes, I have an idea.

16,113. Do you know what it was?—Well, I saw myself 2300 hoggs wintered in the low country, and I saw 1260 tops and 320 shots leave the farm as three year olds.

16,114. Are you aware of this, that of the wedders bought in and put on there, only 63 per cent. were sold as mature wedders?—63 as tops.

16,115. No, altogether?—That might happen for a class, Sir Henry.

16,116. I am talking of the wedder class?—For a class of them for a year.

16,117. But I am talking of the whole occupation; that of the number of wedders put on the ground, only 63 per cent. were sold off?—Yes, that was a class.

16,118. No, of the wedders?—For a year.

16,119. No, for every year, as the general result of Mr Brown's farming?—That does not happen anywhere.

16,120. Now, suppose Mr Brown came here and told you that was the fact, would you say it was true?—No, I believe Mr Brown was a truthful man, but I believe Mr Brown would not say it was the same death-rate he had every year.

16,121. If I showed you a letter from Mr Brown, saying that, would you believe it? I don't say that it was that every year, but on the average?—On the average is it?

16,122. Yes.—Oh, there would be some years that there would be a heavy death-rate, but I would not consider that a great loss. I have seen worse than that we are not complaining very much of it.

16,123. You would not consider 37 per cent. of deaths, one with another, high?—(No Answer.)

16,124. You have told us about the farm of Ruarach; you propose to put four crofters on that?—Yes.

16,125. That would displace the present tenant?—Oh, well, there are tenants at Inverinate that were displaced before from Ruarach.

16,126. But it would be the fact if you put four men there, the present tenant would have to go?—Is it under lease?

16,127. But assuming it was not, and you had your way, that Sir Kenneth appointed you to manage his estate and you put four tenants there, you would have to get rid of the present tenant, isn't that so? That would be three additional men, that would be provided for three?—Four.

16,128. The present man would have to go?—[Mr Sutherland.—He might have a share.]

16,129. But there would be only three additional people provided for. Would they have a shepherd, your three to four tenants?—Well, they could do without him, and they could have him.

16,130. And how many servants are there on the farm at present?—Of Ruarach?

16,131. Yes.—Two, a shepherd and a servant girl, as far as I know.

16,132. Two servants?—Or maybe there is a herd.

16,133. Are there three servants?—I am not very sure if there is a herd boy.

16,134. Well, there are two?—There are two whatever.

16,135. They would have to go; the four crofters would not require two servants?—No, they would not require to hire them, but would require their services.

16,136. They would do the work themselves?—Yes.

Glenshiel.

Alexander Macrae.

16,137. So that that farm would maintain four crofters, and it is now maintaining a tenant and two if not three servants?—But four crofters with five of a family is quite different.

16,138. Mr Maclennan, the present tenant, is a bachelor I believe, but I suppose sometimes the servants are married, isn't that so; the servants are married in this country?—Yes, and in every country.

16,139. And sheep farmers too sometimes. If you were to give this to four crofters, you would displace at least three other families. Would that be any great benefit to the country?—I don't admit the three families.

16,140. You didn't think of it at all I daresay, but it is the fact. [Mr Shaw Stewart.—He says he does not admit that there would be three families]. [Witness.—Three families for a servant girl.]

16,141. I am talking of men servants who may be or may not be married, of course, as crofters may or may not be married. You would admit that the present tenant and two men servants would have to be displaced?—Yes, certainly.

16,142. Well, that would not be a very great gain. Now you mentioned Killilan farm. You spoke of 20 tenants?—Yes.

16,143. You would put 20 tenants there. Now, how many shepherds are there at present?—Two at Coire-dhomhainn, I believe; but there is one married man, his son is herding part of the hirsel, and there is a shepherd at Mulbuie, he has a family, and a shepherd at Carnach.

16,144. Never mind whether they have families or not, that may be an accident, but there are two shepherds at Carnach?—One at Carnach.

16,145. How many more?—One at Mulbuie and two at Coire-dhomhainn.

16,146. Any more?—One at Fadach, two at Killilan.

16,147. And are there any more servants on the farm—men servants?—Yes

16,148. How many?—There is a ploughman.

16,149. Any more?—A servant girl.

16,150. I am not referring to that, only men who are capable of being the heads of families. Well, that is 8, so that the number of people provided for there would be 12; you see that. Now, I think these were the only places you mentioned on Sir Kenneth Matheson's estates here where room could be found for small tenants?—Airdantoul.

16,151. You didn't mention that nor Lienassie?—I did, I say that Lienassie is fit for crofters, and I say that Airdantoul would keep a number of crofters.

16,152. Well, we will take Lienassie. Do you propose that it should be taken and given to small tenants too?—I say it would keep a number of tenants.

16,153. But would you propose to take it from the present tenant and give it to them?—I don't think that is within our inquiry, the inquiry of the Commissioners. The inquiry is as to the land suitable.

16,154. Well, is the land suitable?—It is suitable.

16,155. How many tenants would it keep?—Ten.

16,156. Now, how many shepherds are there?—Three.

16,157. Any other servants?—Yes, there is a ploughman and a herd.

16,158. That is five; Mr Maclennan himself, six; so that is four additional men that could be provided for there?—And three at Màmag.

16,159. Who has that?—Lienassie.

16,160. That is in the forest?—No.

16,161. Well, that is seven then, we will take it; is that so?—Yes.

16,162. Now that is all the land; we have discussed all the land in the parish of Kintail not already occupied by small tenants? [The Chairman.—Belonging to this estate].—And Keppoch.

16,163. Yes, and Keppoch, I beg your pardon. How many would that take?—Oh, four.

16,164. How many shepherds are there?—Two.

16,165. Well, that is two more that would be provided for. Now, do you know that Keppoch was advertised for a long time before it was let to Mr Maclennan?—No, I did not know that.

Glenshiel.

Alexander Macrae.

16,166. Will you take it from me that it was?—Oh, certainly, certainly, I don't doubt it at all.

16,167. And that nobody offered for it, you did not hear of any smaller tenants offering for it?—It is quite different.

16,168. It was in the proprietor's hands for a year wasn't it?—Yes, it was for a year.

16,169. For the year 1891?—And it was advertised?

16,170. It was advertised and it was let for £80, which was very considerably less than the previous rent?—Well, is that all in this parish now?—Yes.

16,171. All the rest of the farms are occupied by small tenants, and there is no room for anybody in addition, is that so?—Not in the townships.

16,172. On the townships that are occupied there is no room for any more?—No.

16,173. Now you told us that the Bundalloch people would be able to stock additional land if they got it?—I could not say the number.

16,174. Do you know that the proprietor advanced them money to stock their present holdings; you have heard that I suppose?—Yes.

16,175. And do you know how many of them have paid it back? [The Chairman.—He very likely does not know that].—I know as well, Sir Henry, that they were rack-rented.

16,176. I will state that myself. [The Chairman.—You may ask him, perhaps he will take it from you. As far as I can see it is not within the scope of this Commission.]

16,177. I will give it in my own statement, my lord. You mentioned the farm of Airdantoul?—Yes.

16,178. That is on the Letterfearn property?—Yes.

16,179. How many small tenants would you put there?—12.

16,180. Where would you take them from?—From Letterfearn.

16,181. How many shepherds and servants has Mr Macrae?—There are two shepherds and a ploughman.

16,182. That is eight people from Letterfearn you would put there, eight additional people you would put on it. Now is this within your knowledge that the farm of Drudaig was offered to the crofters of Letterfearn?—And didn't they take it? Haven't they?

16,183. No, there is only one crofter. Is that within your knowledge, that Mr Maclean pressed it on these people and that only one crofter in the township is now a tenant of it?—On Drudaig?

16,184. Yes, the other four as you know are not crofters, have no other holding on the estate, although they are relatives of the crofters in the district. You know that the letting of that farm has not relieved a single bit of the congestion in the district, and that because the crofters themselves declined to take it? [The Chairman.—Do you know that?]—Oh, five of them have it.

16,185. Were they crofters?—Still worse if they were not crofters they were cottars there.

16,186. One of them is the son of a crofter?—Well, they are all tenants now.

16,187. They are tenants now, but were they tenants, before?—No, they were not tenants before; they were cottars. Of course, one of them, Murdo Macrae, was a crofter.

16,188. Where?—At Letterfearn.

16,189. He has his croft yet?—Yes.

16,190. That is one; now, as to the others?—Alexander Macrae.

16,191. What is he?—He has a croft at Letterfearn.

16,192. I don't know their names exactly; but you say Alexander Macrae has a croft?—I say that.

16,193. And a separate house?—Himself and his sister; his house was burnt and he is living now at Drudaig.

16,194. Was he a tenant of that?—Yes, he has a share of it.

16,195. Was it not his sister that was the tenant?

—Well, it is him that is in for the working the share of Drudaig.

16,196. The Chairman.—Does it not come to this that although crofters did not get that land other small tenants—cottars—got it?

16,197. Sir Henry Macandrew.—No, they were not cottars.

16,198. The Chairman.—What were they?

16,199. Sir Henry Macandrew.—They were relatives of the crofters, sons or nephews living with people who were crofters, but only one had a croft, this one man. However, the point I wish to bring out was that it was offered to the crofters?—Mr Christopher Macrae had a house but no croft, and Alexander Maclennan was a crofter.

16,200. But he had no croft at that time when he took that.

16,201. The Chairman.—It was offered to crofters and they did not take it. Friends of the crofters residing on the land took it except one who was a crofter. That seems to be the English of it.

16,202. Sir Henry Macandrew.—You don't propose to take the farm of Leacachan?—No, I would not.

16,203. And Saraig you would not touch?—No.

16,204. Don't you think it would be a disadvantage to the country if there were no considerable farmers in it?—I say there would be that, should the people get land and plenty of it I say there would be that still.

16,205. Wouldn't it be a disadvantage that there should be no single considerable farmers in the district? You told us a great deal of good Mr Brown did to it?—Any considerable farm?

16,206. Mr Brown did a great deal of good?—I say that on the system he was going.

16,207. He was a considerable farmer?—Yes, and to my knowledge he was a very good man, an excellent man, but I would say I would rather see the land with the people.

16,208. Now, do you know why Mr Brown gave up the forest land?—Because the proprietor chose to make a deer forest of it.

16,209. Do you know that it was because it was unprofitable, and that he freely gave it up?—There is no fear about that Sir Henry, because a farm that Mr Brown had for £450 the rent was £1350, and he was getting £900 for the shooting, and how could you say he was not working it to profit? He made lots of money there, thousands and thousands and twenties of thousands at Killilan.

16,210. Do you know whether it is the fact that wedder farming about that time became unprofitable? [The Chairman.—About what time?]—The time Mr Brown gave it up—1878.

16,211. Is that the fact?—I say they came down at that time, but they were profitable afterwards.

16,212. Is it not the fact that wedder farming has been given up to a great extent?—So it has, but why?

16,213. And if Mr Brown told you that he found the wedder farming entirely unprofitable, and that he was glad to get rid of it, I suppose you would believe him?—Well, he did not tell me that.

16,214. But if he did, you would believe him?—Well, I would believe him.

16,215. Mr William Mackay.—You know that the parish of Kintail originally included what is now the parish of Glenshiel?—I do.

16,216. And that the old estate of Kintail included the whole of both parishes?—Yes, I do know that.

16,217. You also know that the Seaforths had also the whole of the parish of Lochalsh?—I do.

16,218. And very extensive estates away in the direction of Brahan and the Black Isle?—I do.

16,219. Do you know that the Seaforth Highlanders were raised on the whole of those estates?—I heard that.

16,220. And not on Kintail only?—Oh, certainly not on Kintail only.

16,221. Well, you told us that at one time there was not an inch of land, I think you said, or an acre in the parish of Glenshiel in the hands of a native?—I did not say that now.

16,222. I understood him, my lord, to say that?—I said that there was not an acre.—[The Chairman.—He said every acre and yard of this parish is fit for small tenants.] Glenshiel. — Alexander Macrae.

16,223. Oh, yes, but before that. I think you said that there was not an acre of land in the parish of Glenshiel in the possession of a native at one time?—In the possession of crofters ten years before.

16,224. You modify it now. In 1882?—Yes.

16,225. That is, there were no small tenants upon the estate?—No, paying rent to the landlord I said.

16,226. Of course, you know that Invershiel was in the hands of a native farmer, Macrae?—Oh, I never said that; small tenants I said, I never said that.

16,227. You know that he was an old soldier, don't you?—Yes.

16,228. Do you know his brother was a soldier too that was killed in Egypt?—I have heard that too.

16,229. You know that Achadh-nan-gart was in the hands of a native, Donald Macrae?—Yes.

16,230. And that Morvich was in the hands of a native, Alexander Macrae, and afterwards his son Patrick Macrae?—Not his son.

16,231. Well, a native; was Patrick a native?—Not a native of Kintail, although originally a native of Kintail.

16,232. You mentioned that Inchcro was in the hands of small tenants?—I did.

16,233. Do you remember that?—No.

16,234. When was it in the possession of small tenants?—In this century, the early part of this century.

16,235. What authority have you for that?—Well, I told his lordship there that my father told me of it. That is my authority for it.

16,236. And did he remember it?—No, my father was born in the year 1808.

16,237. And he did not remember the small tenants?—Well, yes, he remembered, not so many as there were there in the latter end of the last century, but there were tenants, they could not be small, there were three of them whatever.

16,238. At Inchcro?—Yes.

16,239. There were three tenants?—There were in this century.

16,240. You don't think there would be more than three?—Yes, in last century.

16,241. Well, how many tenants were there during 1700, during the eighteenth century?—I could not say the very number, but I know there were more than three.

16,242. Could you give us any idea of the number?—No.

16,243. You don't?—No.

16,244. Would you be surprised to learn that in 1715 there was only one tenant on Inchcro?—One tenant?

16,245. One tenant, yes?—Paying direct to the landlord.

16,246. One occupier of land?—Maybe that was the one that was in the rental for it, but there was more than one tenant.

16,247. But you don't know that of your own knowledge?—I was told of it by several old people in the country that that was the way; that one would go in and take a farm, and then that there would be so many then that would go in, and still they would have equal shares.

16,248. Then about Morvich, I think you said there were 16 tenants there?—I said that.

16,249. Until the year 1820 I think you said?—Well, about that, I could not be exactly sure, between 1817 and 1820.

16,250. Who told you that there were 16 tenants in Morvich?—One Alexander Macrae, that is now dead, was the first that told me of it, but I heard of several since, and he was there himself as a young boy in his father's house as one of them.

16,251. Were these 16 tenants at Allt-a'-chruinn and Cairngorm, where the cottars are now?—Not at that time.

Glenshiel.
Alexander Macrae.

16,252. Were they not the fathers of the present cottars?—The people there are the descendants—some of them at any rate are the descendants—of those that were there.

16,253. But are you sure that those 16 held any land?—I am sure they were tenants.

16,254. And that continued until 1820?—About that.

16,255. How far were there 16 tenants, how long were they there do you think, or their forefathers?—Well, I could not say how long they were there, but I am sure there are several ages since the Macraes and Maclennans were at Morvich.

16,256. And you think those 16 tenants or their forefathers were there for ages?—For ages.

16,257. The Chairman.—Is Macrae or Maclennan a clan name in Morvich?—Yes.

16,258. The headquarters were at Morvich?—Well, there were a good many of them there.

16,259. Mr William Mackay.—Well, in this rental of 1715 there are just two tenants in Morvich, Farquhar Macrae and Alexander Macrae. Do you believe that, if His Majesty's rental of 1715 says so?—You know that Seaforth at that time left the country.

16,260. Exactly, and that is why the rental was taken. But do you believe that this rental is correct? It was taken on oath I am told?—I believe it might be the case that there were only two tenants that were in for it, but there were more than two tenants.

16,261. There were no leases then it appears. Now I show you an old retnal of 1756. Would you believe that according to that rental after Seaforth came back when he got his land again, would you believe there were only two tenants there, Rev. Donald Maclennan, and John Maclennan?—It might be the case, but that does not show, but there were tenants. [The Chairman.—There might have been far more afterwards].—Yes, and at the same time, my lord.

16,262. I come then to the next rental of 1857, when Morvich was in the possession of one man, do you know that?—But how was it let when the tenants had it between them up to 1818?

16,263. I cannot give you a rent?—It would not suit your purpose.

16,264. I don't think there could have been any more you know. There is only one in 1856, do you know?—Oh, yes.

16,265. Do you remember 1856?—Well, hardly.

16,266. Well, I will put you to a year that you will remember. In 1870, you remember that there was just one tenant, Patrick Macrae?—Yes.

16,267. And away back as far as you can remember there was only one tenant?—As far as I remember.

16,268. Now the farm of Invershiel you remember has always been in the possession of one tenant?—Always since I remember it.

16,269. And the farm of Achadh-nan-gart and Ach-a'-ghiurain belongs to Invershiel.

16,270. It did not at one time; it belonged to Achadh-nan-gart. It now belongs to Invershiel, so that there were only two tenants as far as you can remember between Invershiel and Cluanie?—Two tenants.

16,271. Now you mentioned at Inchcro how many acres did you say of land?—Well, I could only give a rough guess. I came down through it the other day; coming down from Alltbeath I came down through it to see it, and I was calculating just that there would be between 80 and 90 acres on the Inchcro side.

16,272. That is all the way up Glen-lic?—Yes, on the Inchcro side.

16,273. On the Inchcro side of the river Cro up for four miles?—Yes.

16,274. You include, of course, the whole of the meadow land along the river bank?—Land that was cultivated.

16,275. But do you include the meadow land along the river bank or the green?—No.

16,276. Now, how do you know that there was any of that land up in Glen-lic cultivated?—There are signs, the fields are there, they will speak for themselves.

Glenshiel.
Alexander Macrae.

16,277. Do you remember any of that land being under cultivation?—Not up the glen; I remember a bit being cultivated at the shepherd's house at Glen-lic.

16,278. And that is cultivated now?—No, there is no house there.

16,279. Do you know that Glen-lic is very subject to floods?—It is like every glen, when there are heavy floods it will come out.

16,280. Did you know that sometimes it is altogether under water, Glen-lic?—No, I did not know that.

16,281. As to Achadh-nan-gart you say there is considerable arable land there?—There are a considerable number of acres between Ach-a'-ghiurain land and Achadh-nan-gart.

16,282. Part of Ach-a'-ghiurain is in the hands of the cottars?—It was; is it now in their hands?

16,283. You did not know that the cottars have the peat of the forest of Ach-a'-ghiurain?—I am glad to hear it.

16,284. Now, how many cottars would you put at Achadh-nan-gart; you said it was suitable for crofters, small tenants?—Between Ach-a'-ghiurain and Achadh-nan-gart.

16,285. Yes, just on the farm of Invershiel, taking all the arable land, how many cottars would you put; you would require to give them arable land as well as grazing? That is the only arable land on the farm you know, Ach-a'-ghiurain and Achadh-nan-gart?—It would support 30 families.

16,286. How much arable land would you give to each of them?—Well, I would divide what there is among them, say four acres, or if it would make seven for them, good, or if it would make ten for them, good. I would make four acres apiece.

16,287. That would make 120 acres arable land. Is there anything like 120 acres of arable land on the whole farm?—Yes.

16,288. Have you ever measured it?—Certainly not, I did not, but I don't say that 120 acres could be put together on it between Invershiel and Cluanie.

16,289. Well, you know that the arable lands down here are in the hands of the cottars?—Yes; I would take them in.

16,290. Well, how many acres are there do you think?—On this part between this and Invershiel below the road you mean?

16,291. Yes, quite so?—Well, there is a long stretch of it, but it is very narrow; I would count that as 8 acres.

16,292. Well, 8¾ acres is the exact sum. Well, now, how many acres are on Ach-a'-ghiurain, take it on the way up?—Oh, but there is more than that at Invershiel.

16,293. Where?—The park at Invershiel and other lands.

16,294. But that is under cultivation already, it is in the hands of the tenant?—Well, but I take it in.

16,295. What is the extent of it then?—Between three and four acres, and I would get five acres at Eilean-nan-Gall and three acres over at Allt-a'-chruinn.

16,296. That is in the hands of tenants or cottars?—Yes, still the better.

16,297. The Chairman.—Surely you would not take land from cottars; their complaint is that they have not enough of land?—Well, but we are making up the number of acres on the farm.

16,298. Mr William Mackay.—But what I want is the number of acres available for new tenants. These are held already you know by cottars?—That is not held by crofters.

16,299. The Chairman.—As I understand they are held by crofters or other small tenants?—They are not crofters.

16,300. Mr William Mackay.—But they are cottars; you call them cottars yourself?

16,301. The Chairman.—Allow me to try to bring it to a point. Exclude from your consideration for the moment land in the hands of crofters or cottars. You can speak to it afterwards if you wish. Now dealing with arable not in the hands of crofters or other small tenants or cottars?—We will begin at Camus-nan-Gall, five.

16,302. Mr William Mackay.—Isn't that in the hands of cottars?—No, no.

16,303. Where is the next?—Three or four on Invershiel.

16,304. But that is in the hands of a tenant, Mr Maclennan?—He is not a small tenant nor a crofter.

16,305. It is under cultivation though?—He is cutting grass in it, but it is not under cultivation.

16,306. Well, take it, where is the next?—That is nine, and there are acres above the houses here opposite the bridge. I would say I would get four acres up there.

16,307. Opposite General Wade's bridge up here, four acres there?—Yes, that is 13 and between Ach-a'-ghiurain and Achadh-nan-gart.

16,308. How many on Ach-a'-ghuirain, keep out, remember, 17 acres already held by the cottars. There is not much left?—No, at Achadh-nan-gart.

16,309. But Ach-a'-ghuirain, don't run away from Ach-a'-ghiurain, you say there are considerable quantities. I want to know what it is?—Well, I was taking in—

16,310. There is no land except the 17 acres at Ach-a'-ghiurain that you could give to tenants?

16,311. The Chairman.—Do you know of lands other than these 17 acres available?—There is land at Achadh-nan-gart.

16,312. Mr William Mackay.—There is none on Ach-a'-ghiurain. Well, take Achadh-nan-gart, how many at Achadh-nan-gart?—30 acres.

16,313. Would you get 30 acres?—Yes.

16,314. Mr Gordon.—There is an enclosed field there.

16,315. The Chairman.—His statement is 30 acres.

16,316. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is any of it under cultivation?—No.

16,317. Mr William Mackay.—Of that there are 3 acres under cultivation, cultivated by the shepherd?

16,318. Mr Sutherland.—May I ask if that is the land that is visible from the road?—[Mr William Mackay.—Yes.]

16,319. We have seen it all.

16,320. Mr William Mackay.—Yes, you have seen it. Is there any other arable land that you could give?—There is land up at the shepherd's house up at Strath-Cluanie.

16,321. Isn't that upon another estate?—No.

16,322. Well, how much is it?—Another place, a shepherd's place above us.

16,323. Would you be surprised that there is only a rood at the first place?—I would be surprised because there is more.

16,324. Is it just a bit of a garden?—There is a good stretch down near the river there. I would get 3 acres at the shepherd's house there.

16,325. The Chairman. — I must ask you to abbreviate this, Mr Mackay. We have seen it all.

16,326. Mr William Mackay.—I am sorry, my lord, to detain you, but these plots are all that you can find on this estate. [To Witness.]—And you would divide these 43 acres among thirty tenants?—But I was taking in the whole of the arable land.

16,327. The Chairman.—I don't think this need be continued.

16,328. Mr William Mackay.—Very well, my lord. There is just one question. Do you know how many shepherds and servants are on this farm of Invershiel and Cluanie?—Yes, there will be seven shepherds.

16,329. Well, I think there are eight. Will you take it from me that there are eight, and do you know that four of these are married and have houses of their own, and families?—Yes, and I know, but that they would take a good stretch of the land.

16,330. The Chairman.—Mr Macrae, have you any questions?

16,331. Mr Donald Macrae.—No, my lord, with the exception perhaps of the question of rent on this large farm of Invershiel, Achadh-nan-gart and Cluanie. It was ascertained that the rent some few years ago was £1100, that at the present moment it is £600 odd, and I think Mr Macrae said that a very few years ago it was £300. Perhaps Mr Maclennan, Lienassie, will be able to tell us, or Mr Macrae himself, what foundation he had for saying the rent was £300.

Glenshiel. — Alexander Macrae.

16,332. Mr Mackay.—Oh, I will explain that in a minute if Mr Macrae will take it from me.—[Mr Donald Macrae.—Decidedly]. The rent of the farm used to be £1100. For a time it was in the hands of the proprietor, Sir James Mackenzie. It was not paying, and he got tired of it, and he let it to Mr Maclennan and Mr Macrae. In any case there was no stock on it when they took it.—[Mr Maclennan.—No.] And as your lordship is aware, it takes years to get up a stock. In respect that there was no stock upon the land the rent was fixed at a very small sum, £300 odds.

16,333. Mr Donald Macrae.—That satisfies myself because Mr Macrae made that statement and Mr Mackay found fault with him for saying it.—[Mr William Mackay.—Now it is £625.]

16,334. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I want to clear up this point. Are all the lands that you have spoken of arable land? Do those come under the terms of our remit, viz., lands at present under grazing or deer forest?—Yes.

16,335. Or does it include some that is cultivated by shepherds and others, because that is an important point?—Cultivated by shepherds.

16,336. Have you included in the lands which you have pointed out to us any patches of land that are cultivated by shepherds or other people, or is it entirely under grazing or deer forest?—Yes, in the deer forest, but not on the sheep farms.

16,337. But does any of the land you have mentioned as suitable for us to go and inspect, does any of it include land at present under cultivation by anyone?—Yes, most certainly, on all the farms that I spoke about there is some land under cultivation.

16,338. The Chairman.—That is not the question. Put the question again if you please.

16,339. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I want to understand this clearly. You pointed out to us certain arable lands in the different glens hereabout?—Yes.

16,340. Do all these acres that you tell us about come under the terms of our remit? We are strictly confined to lands which are under grazing, grouse moor, or deer forest; we cannot look at any land that is cultivated at present?—Not in the possession of crofters or small tenants, but not shepherds?

16,341. We cannot look at any land that is cultivated by anybody; all we have to look for is land that is at present under grazing, grouse moor, or deer forest; the chairman will correct me if I am wrong. [The Chairman.—Yes, that is so,] and I want to know whether in the lands you have pointed to, you have included some portions that are at present cultivated by some one, never mind who?—Oh, yes, I was doing that.

16,342. Oh, well, then that is an important point. Thank you.

16,343. The Chairman.—What lands do you include?—I was giving the estimate of all the old arable land, and land under cultivation on these farms.

16,344. You were including both old arable, land presently under cultivation by farmers, and land under cultivation by shepherds?—Yes.

16,345. The whole of it?—The whole of it.

16,346. Were you also including land under cultivation by crofters or cottars?—No.

16,347. Mr Sutherland.—I just ask only I think three questions, on three separate points. Sir Henry Macandrew asked you if you were aware that Lienassie [is that the name of the place), Lienassie was advertised and the small tenants did not apply for it. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—Keppoch]. Oh, Keppoch, well, are you aware of the terms of the advertisement?—No, because I never read it.

16,348. And is it within your knowledge that it was offered to small tenants in any way, or to be subdivided, or taken from them as a small farm?—I never heard that. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—I never said that.]

16,349. The suggestion was that the crofters did not apply; what I wish to bring out is that the crofters did not get an opportunity of applying, because it was not offered to them as crofters. Was the general belief not that the Keppoch farm was to be let as a whole farm?—Certainly, that was the belief. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—Allow me to say I don't think that is warranted. It would be readily let to a number of joint-tenants.]

16,350. But were reasonable means taken to let the people understand that it would be let to crofters?—Witness.—Never.

16,351. Now you were asked about the number of tenants that were in Inchcro and there was some difference of opinion between you and Mr Mackay as to the number of tenants. You stated there were 16 tenants?—At Morvich.

16,352. On Morvich was it? And Mr Mackay asked if you would be surprised to know that since the year 1715 there was only one tenant there. Was that not the statement that was put to you?—He said two.

16,353. But you didn't agree as to the number of tenants?—No, I didn't agree with him.

16,354. Well, don't you think that you scarcely understood each other as to what tenancies were? Do you think that there may have been a tenant or there may have been occupants there who were not tenants?—Well, I understand that a man that is in the possession of land is a tenant.

16,355. But I rather gathered that Mr Mackay meant as a tenant, a man who was on the rent-roll?—That is it, that is the difference.

16,356. Was it not possible for a man to be there, occupying land without being on the rent-roll at all?—Yes, and so there were.

16,357. You believe that?—Certainly.

16,358. You were asked regarding these if you knew that of your personal knowledge. Can any person know of his personal knowledge of what happened so far back as that?—No.

16,359. So that when you don't know of your personal knowledge that there were not more, Mr Mackay could not know of his personal knowledge that there were. Is that not so?—(No answer.)

16,360. Mr Maccallum.—In giving the number of arable acres of Inchcro, you did not include anything that is cultivated?—Well, the time of Winans they were not cultivating any, but the keeper that is there this year, maybe he is cultivating a little.

16,361. You are not aware of the extent that he cultivates?—Well, he has planted a few potatoes.

16,362. But that is all. But you gave a pretty considerable area, 80 and 100 acres. Now is all that in one place or is it distributed?—Oh, distributed.

16,363. Can you give the names of the places separately where the arable land is to be seen?—No, I don't know the names of the places separately.

16,364. Then in Morvich you gave an area of about 154 acres?—Yes.

16,365. Does that include anything that is cultivated just now?—Well, I was keeping out this part of 18 acres that was given.

16,366. Yes, exclusive of that part?—The keeper there has planted some potatoes this year and some corn.

16,367. And is it just one keeper?—Yes, one keeper.

16,368. That is cultivating, and you think that there are altogether about 150 acres of arable land?—I should think so.

16,369. And you have to deduct the 18 that were given to the crofters?—No, I deduct that.

16,370. You have deducted the 18, and the small patch that was cultivated by the keeper?—No, I was not taking that into account.

16,371. We have to deduct that from you in getting the acres with which we can deal.

16,372. The Chairman.—Have you any knowledge yourself of what was said or done by the landlord towards letting Keppoch in whole or in part to crofters or cottars?—I could not say until I heard.

16,373. Have you any knowledge of the matter yourself?—No.

16,374. What is your own personal desire in this question of available land; what do you yourself desire to obtain?—Well, I would take five or six acres of arable land and the grazing of 150 sheep.

16,375. Where would you get that five or six acres?—I want to get to Inchcro.

16,376. And where would you get the grazing of 150 sheep?—It is on the club farm system. I cannot say, should I go there, how I could take what would keep 150 sheep.

16,377. Yourself?—No.

16,378. You would be one of a club?—Certainly.

16,379. And how many would you have in the club suppose you had the making up of the club?—Seven.

16,380. I understand then you are very much in favour of the club system?—I am.

16,381. Have you seen it working to advantage?—Well, our township were working on the club farm system for the last twenty-seven or thirty years.

16,382. To advantage?—Well, I could not say; we were working it very well whatever, but I could not say to advantage.

16,383. We are at cross purposes as to the meaning of the word. Are you of opinion that it is much more advantageous to work according to the club farm system than each man to hold and work his own stock?—I am certainly of that opinion.

16,384. More profitable?—More profitable.

16,385. You would like to see an extension of that system in the Highlands?—I would. It is the only way that I can see at present that the land could be worked.

16,386. Now, suppose you had the matter to deal with yourself, and had the necessary powers, would you be in favour of new settlements here, or would you not rather be in favour of extending the grazings to existing crofters?—Yes, where that could be done.

16,387. Which do you think would be the better course to take, having regard to the land on the one hand and the people on the other?—Well, if it could be done where they are.

16,388. Which would you do?—Oh, I would say to remove a certain number out of a township to create new holdings.

16,389. You think that could be done?—Yes.

16,390. And would you also look to the extension of the grazings of existing crofters where that could be done?—Yes, I say the crofts that would be vacated could be added to those which were left.

16,391. But about extension of grazings, if you had the power do you see your way to extending the grazings of existing holdings?—Well, in a number of these places that I mentioned I cannot see how there can be any extension of grazing but at Inverinate.

16,392. Then is Inverinate the only place where you could see your way to extend the grazing?—Yes, where it is contiguous.

16,393. But do you see your way to extend the grazing where it is contiguous?—Yes.

16,394. In a practical way?—Yes.

16,395. Does any one else in this district carry on the business you carry on of sending hoggs to the low country by contract?—Not in this country.

16,396. You are the only person?—Yes, in Kintail.

16,397. Mr William Mackay.—May I ask if the Commission take steps to ascertain the extents of arable land on the various estates for themselves, or whether it is necessary for me in the case of this estate to get the place measured?

16,398. The Chairman.—No, not necessary to get it measured. We can easily ascertain that with sufficient accuracy; we have at least not had to measure it yet (I cannot say what we may have to do) and we have not had any difficulty in understanding for our own purposes the extent of land under cultivation which was brought under our notice or which was attached to farms brought under our notice.

16,399. Mr Mackay.—I should be surprised if your lordship would find 10 acres where the witness says 154.

MURDO MACRAE, Camuslunie, Kintail (68).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

16,400. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

16,401. What was your old rent?—Is it to Sir Alexander Matheson, the father of the present proprietor?

16,402. Were you dealt with by the Commission?—Yes.

16,403. What was your old rent, and what is your new rent?—£10 is the present rent. At one time I paid Sir Alexander Matheson £20. Sir Alexander reduced the rent from £20 to £10, but the Commissioners did not reduce it from £10. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—And he has appealed.]

16,404. Do you wish to get more land?—Yes.

16,405. Where do you think the land is available?—A corrie in the hill that was taken from the township, Fraoch-Choire.

16,406. Is it a part of a farm just now?—It is to-day a part of Mr Winans' deer forest; it marches with The Chisholm lands.

16,407. Is it part of the forest of Glomach?—Yes, the forest of Glomach.

16,408. Do you remember when it formed part of the grazings of Camuslunie?—Yes, I myself used to send my cattle, sheep, and horses there, and bring them back again.

16,409. Was it used as a sheiling or as a permanent grazing?—It was as a summer grazing.

16,410. Not a sheiling?—They were not using it as a sheiling in my recollection.

16,411. How many years is it since you lost it?—I think about forty years ago.

16,412. Do you speak for the rest of the township of Camuslunie?—There is a letter sent in from somebody who was secretary for the township stating that I and another represent the township.

16,413. Who is the other man?—Christopher Macrae.

16,414. All the township ask for is an extension of their grazing into the corry?—I think so, they wish to get Fraoch-Choire back again.

16,415. And that would satisfy them?—I think they would be satisfied, but if we got land from the forest nearer us than Fraoch-Choire, we would be willing to let Fraoch-Choire alone.

16,416. What part of land in the forest nearer than Fraoch-Choire do you point to?—A place above Achadh-a'-chuirn called Craig-Daoimhlig.

16,417. Is that near Loch Leitreach?—It is at the east end of the loch.

16,418. Then in the case of your getting Craig-Daoimhlig you give up any application for Fraoch-Choire?—If we got Craig-Daoimhlig and a part of Lon-Mhurcaidh, I think we would give up our claim to Fraoch-Choire.

16,419. What part of it?—The part of it that marches with Craig-Daoimhlig, up from Achadh-a'-chuirn.

15,420. May I take you as saying that none of the crofters in Camuslunie wish to leave the township?—I didn't hear any of them say a word as to that. I am not aware that any of them wish to leave.

16,421. Sir Henry Macandrew.—What distinction do you make between a sheiling and a summer grazing?—I can't tell that.

16,422. In your recollection did they just send their sheep and cattle and horses there to graze for summer and take them back?—Yes, I sent them there to Fraoch-Choire. It was the eild cattle they sent there, not the milk cows.

16,423. They sent them up in summer with the herd and brought them back at the end of the summer?—Yes, at the end of autumn. Glenshiel.

16,424. What rent would they be willing to pay for Fraoch-Choire if they got it again and for this other place that they want?—As we did not get a reduction of rent at Camuslunie, we thought we should get it as a township grazing for the rent we are now paying. Murdo Macrae.

16,425. What rent were they paying when they had that place?—I think the rent of the whole township was £140.

16,426. When?—When we had Fraoch-Choire.

16,427. And what is it now?—£80.

16,428. Did Sir Alexander Matheson expend a great deal of money on their place and improve land for them?—Yes.

16,429. Did he give materials for building new houses to several of them?—Yes, to some of them.

16,430. Did he offer the whole of them lime and wood and slates and £20, if they would build houses for themselves?—[The Chairman.—£20 each?—Sir Henry Macandrew.—Each].—Some of them were not wanting it; we built pretty good houses at our own expense.

16,431. When did they build them?—I can't give you the date; I am not up to dates, the dates of years.

16,432. Do you know when Camuslunie was made into a township for small tenants?—No.

16,433. Do you know that it was at one time in the possession of one tenant?—I heard that it was.

16,434. And was it formed into a township by Sir Hugh Innes?—I cannot be sure as to that.

16,435. How many bachelors are there in Camuslunie?—[The Chairman.—You are not bound to answer that unless you like.]

16,436. Are you a bachelor yourself?—No.

16,437. The Chairman.—Have you a family?—Yes.

16,438. Sir Henry Macandrew.—How many bachelors are there?—I don't know at what age they should be counted bachelors.

16,439. Mr Sutherland.—Regarding the rent, you stated that when you had the summer grazing the rent was £140?—That is my opinion; when Mr Lillingstone was the proprietor I think that was the rent.

16,440. Had they Fraoch-Choire grazings in the year 1882?—It is forty years since we lost Fraoch-Choire.

16,441. How do you explain that the rent of the township was in 1881 £160, after the grazing was taken away?—Yes, that is so. After we lost Fraoch-Choire the rent was increased.

16,442. The grazing was taken away and the rent was increased?—Yes, and some of our low lying ground was put under wood, planted. There are two parks under plantation.

16,443. Then, with regard to there only being one tenant at one time, was it the tenants themselves that went in and sub-divided?—I think that is so, but I don't know.

16,444. And no person tried to prevent them sub-dividing the land?—I have no record of that.

16,445. Did you hear where the people came from that went there?—They came from different places; I cannot tell the places from which they came first.

16,446. Then what knowledge have you that they went in there, the people themselves, and made those small holdings. Have you any knowledge that they actually went there of their own accord?—I think it was the proprietor who gave them permission to go there.

16,447. Sir Henry Macandrew.—Was the land re-divided, when Sir Alexander Matheson bought the estate, and given to a smaller number of tenants than before?

16,448. The Chairman.—Do you remember whether the land was re-divided and given to a smaller number of tenants when Sir Alexander Matheson got the estate?—Yes, I know that.

16,449. What reduction was made on the number of tenants by Sir Alexander?—At that time the township was divided into twelve shares and each tenant had a share, then at the redivision it was reduced by four and the township divided into eight shares.

Glenshiel.

Murdo Macrae.

16,450. Now, when the township was divided into eight shares, what became of the four?—They were sent away from it.

16,451. Do you know where they went to, or what became of them?—Although originally each tenant had one share, at the time when Sir Alexander came in there were as many as two on one lot.

16,452. They were equalised into eight, but were any of the tenants put away?—Yes.

16,453. How many were put away or induced to go away?—I think eight tenants left the township at that time.

16,454. And where did they go?—Two of them went to Bundalloch, one went to Dornie.

16,455. Were they divided out among the other townships?—Three of them remained in the township as small cottars. One of them went to a place in Lochalsh, Ceann-na-moine.

16,456. And the remaining one?—I believe that four remained in the township.

16,457. Sir Henry Macandrew.—Was it after the reclamation of land and the expenditure of money on the place that the rent was raised, and are you aware that £1150 was spent in reclaiming land?—Yes, but I did not remember that so much as that was spent upon it. [The Chairman.—Are you satisfied that there was a considerable amount spent whatever it was?—Yes, I know that he expended a large amount of money.]

16,458. And do you know further that the increase of rent was interest upon that expenditure?—We thought it was.

16,459. Mr Sutherland.—Was the rent decreased the time the summer grazing was taken from you?—A little, I can't tell how much.

16,460. And was the expenditure referred to made upon your holdings?—I think it was.

16,461. The Chairman.—In what way was it spent on the holdings, was it on the reclamation of land?—Yes, there was a part trenched there and dykes were made.*

Christopher Macrae, Crofter, Camuslunie, Kintail (over 60.) (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Christopher Macrae.

16,462. The Chairman.—What is your age?—I have no writing on it by your leave, but I left sixty years behind me.

16,463. What is your fixed rent and your old rent?—[Mr Watson, surveyor.—£20 and £10.]

16,464. Was your old rent £20?—Not at the time we had Fraoch-Choire; £140 was the rent of the township and it was too much.

16,465. It was reduced by Sir Alexander to £10, and then raised from £10, raised to £10, 10s. by the Commissioners?—Yes, and I don't know why; I have nothing but the same as the other tenants.

16,466. Did you hear the evidence by Murdo Macrae?—I was listening, but I am somewhat deaf, and I did not hear him very well.

16,467. Do you agree with him as far as you heard him?—I don't agree with the amount said to have been expended on the township.

16,468. What do you say as to that?—Seven years after Sir Alexander bought the estate there was a settlement, a rearrangement. At that time some land was taken from us and the rent was increased, and it was agreed that £800 would be expended on the township at that time, there was so much land to be reclaimed, but that land has not been all reclaimed.

Glenshiel.

16,469. We are rather drifting away from our main inquiry; all that would be fully gone into before the Crofters Commission I have no doubt.

Christopher Macrae.

16,470. Sir Henry Macandrew.—The Commission put 10s. on each of the men who got new houses.

Ewan Maclennan, Dornie, Kintail (68.) (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Ewan Maclennan

16,471. The Chairman.—You wrote a letter to us?—'I wish to intimate that I should be able to give the 'Deer Forest Commissioners some information regarding 'at least some of the forests in this district, my great-'grandfather, grandfather, and father were all tenants of 'part of what is now the deer forest of Morvich, and I 'myself have lived all my life in Kintail and am now an 'old man. If you think it well to call upon me to do 'so I should be happy to lay before the Commissioners a 'good deal of such evidence as they are in search of.'

16,472-3. Did you write that letter?—No, but I ordered it to be written.

16,474. What is it you wish to tell us?—I have no English, but I will tell my story in Gaelic.

16,475. Are you a crofter in Dornie?—Yes.

16,476. Your old rent was £3, 17s. 6d. and your fair rent is £3. What is it you wish to tell us?—I wish to tell the Commissioners that this place Morvich was at one time in the occupancy of my ancestors, my great-grandfather, my grandfather, and my father.

16,477. As grazings?—My great-grandfather had the one side of Morvich himself and a piece of The Chisholm land along with it, the principal part of Glen-Affaric.

16,478. Was that as sheilings or as permanent grazing?—My great-grandfather lived in Morvich, and The Chisholm lands he had as summer grazings.

16,479. Had your great-grandfather a croft in Morvich?—Had he not Morvich altogether and the glen above it?

16,480. Mr William Mackay.—He says that I told exactly to-day how the matter stood. Possibly, my lord, he was one of the two tenants in 1756. Was your great-grandfather one of the two tenants of Morvich estate, Donald Dearg Maclennan?—That is what they were telling me.

16,481. And who was the other tenant of Morvich?—His four sons were there.

16,482. Was there a John Maclennan there?—Yes, his eldest son was Kenneth, and John was another, and Ewan was another son.

William Grant, Cottar, Letterfearn, Glenshiel (53.) (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

William Grant.

16,483. The Chairman.—Was your rent fixed by the Commissioners?—I have no rent, I am not a crofter.

16,484. Are you a cottar?—Yes.

16,485. Have you some stock?—No.

16,486. Do you pay any rent?—No, I would not get the chance.

16,487. Are the subjects you occupy situated on somebody else's croft?—On a brother's holding.

16,488. What is the brother's name?—George Grant.

16,489. Do you wish to obtain more land?—Yes.

16,490. Where do you say the land can be got?—There is plenty of it on the estate of Letterfearn, plenty of it in the township where I was born of Letterfearn in Easter Achantourd.

16,491. Is that a township?—That is the township in which I was born; there were nine crofters there, and land was taken from them in 1852. My father was paying rent to four proprietors for the same house and he was never a penny in arrear, and I would not get land to plant a creel of potatoes when other cottars got land.

16,492. Anything more you wish to say?—In the

* According to an old shepherd who accompanied the Commissioners when Killilan Farm, &c., was inspected, the old townships in Glen-Elchaig were the following:—On the right or north bank of the Elchaig, and following the course of the river to the sea, there were—Daoimhlig, Carnach, Leitear, Cracaig, Ach-a'-ghairgein, Glas-choire, and Fadach. On the left or south bank the townships were—Carn-na-breabaig, Achadh-a'-chuirn, Mamag-uachdrach, Mamag-iochdrach, Coille-Righ, and Camus-laoinidh.

township where I was born I saw nine crofters in 1844 produce 800 barrels of potatoes and some oats, and the land to-day under cultivation will not take a peck of barley seed; it was added to the farm of Leacachan in the year 1852.

16,493. It was added to the farm of Leacachan and is it part of the farm of Leacachan now?—Yes.

16,494. Under grazing?—Yes.

16,495. Does that land march with the township of Letterfearn?—Yes, it is in the heart of the estate of Letterfearn. There are two farms east of it marching with Mr Baillie's estate.

16,496. What are the names of these?—Saraig is the name of one of them; there were two tenants there in the year 1831, that was the year they left it, and in Leacachan there were four, they left it in 1832.

16,497. Will you show us the land to which you refer when we come to your district?—I will show you the ground where they could not cure as much hay as the land would produce, and they had to remove it; and there is nothing growing there to-day but rushes.

16,498. Mr Sutherland.—How many families are in Letterfearn?—24 families with small crofts scarcely worth speaking about, and there are four more small patches, it would take about a barrel of potato splits to plant them, and there are six without any.

16.499. 34 Families altogether?—Two of them are on the glebe.

16,500. Have they got any hill grazing at all in the township of Letterfearn?—In 1884 the tenants of Wester Achantourd got land for the grazing of twelve cows, but it was so small it would be enough for it to graze six cows. The cattle are hand fed with provender brought off the ground late and early.

16,501. How far back does that grazing extend, does it go back to the county march?—No, the greater part of this land restored was the arable land of the Wester Achantourd tenants before the hill of Wester Achantourd was attached to Drudaig. The hill of Wester Achantourd was added to Drudaig in 1850.

16,502. Have the people of Letterfearn got any sheep?—No, they have no place where they would have sheep.

16,503. No sheep at all?—No, they could not let a cat out, if the cat would eat grass.

16,504. Sir Henry Macandrew. — (Through the Chairman.)

16,505. Did you get an opportunity of taking a share of Drudaig Farm?—Not from the factor.

16,506. The Chairman.—But did you get it from anybody?—The men who got Drudaig would take me in as a partner, but when I spoke to the factor on the subject he would not answer me.

16,507. To whom did you speak?—Mr Roderick Maclean, the former factor. I afterwards spoke to Sir Henry, and he told me that everything was closed up, that there was nothing for me now, but that he would keep me in remembrance. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—It was before my time the farm was let.]

16,508. Mr Donald Macrae.—May I be allowed to put a question? Would your lordship ask him if he can corroborate the statement by Mr Alexander Macrae, the first delegate, that ten or eleven years ago at the time of the visit of the Lord Napier Commission there was no native in this parish of Glenshiel that occupied an inch of ground, that there was not an inch of the area of the parish occupied by small tenants except 16 acres?

16,509. The Chairman.—I would rather put it as a substantive question. [Mr Donald Macrae.—All right, just as your lordship pleases.]

16,510. What extent of this parish ten years ago, according to your knowledge, was in the hands of small tenants?—The year that the first Royal Commission came here, there was not one poor man who had the grazing of a cow from the proprietor throughout the whole parish of Glenshiel. There was only 14 acres of land let to tenants, and there were six or seven tenants who had small patches of land where they could plant a few potatoes.

16,511. Mr Donald Macrae.—With regard to Wester Achantourd, how many there have land?

16,512. The Chairman.—How many have land in Wester Achantourd?—Twelve, and three of these have two crofts.

16,513. Mr Donald Macrae.—What amount of arable land have those who have two crofts?—About two acres. the land is so bad that there are not two acres where there is any depth of soil. There is some of the land we have in which potatoes have been planted continuously for sixty years, not a grain of oats sown within that time. I know land myself that has been under potatoes for forty years. They are obliged to do this on account of the scarcity of land.

16,514. How much arable land have the other nine?—Barely an acre each; and those in Easter Achantourd that got land are far from the sea; there is a wood plantation between them and the sea. They have to carry the sea ware on their backs through this plantation to the land. [The Chairman.—Explain to him we will see the place.]

16,515. How many years is it since this hill grazing was taken from the township and added to Drudaig?—1850.

16,516. During the time that your township had that grazing before it was taken away from you, how many cows was it allowed to carry?—24 cows.

16,517. Did you get the whole of that back or did you get only a part of it back?—I did not get it myself, but the men who got land restored only got the sixth of the land that was taken away.

16,518. How many cows did you calculate that that sixth part would carry?—The souming fixed for it was twelve cows, but it was too small for six cows. It would maintain or graze five cows and five calves.

16,519. Would you mention places in the farm of Airdantoul where there is old arable land suitable for tenants to be settled?—The whole of Airdantoul is suitable for crofter settlements.

16,520. Could you mention special places?

16,521. The Chairman.—I must say it is hardly fair of you getting questions in English which you fully understand. You answer them in Gaelic before they are translated. It is not quite fair to us that. I don't wish to press any witness unduly in the matter of English?—I have forgotten my English.

16,522. Oh, indeed, you have not, because you have very smartly answered these questions?—I would have to gather up my English.

16,523. Mr Donald Macrae.—Could you mention special places in Airdantoul suitable for small holdings?—Yes, the west end of it, Camus-nan-Gall, Rudha-Sear, Pairce-na-Dalach, Airidh-ghairgein. A piece that is marching with Drudaig on the east side of it. There is a park there that would be good for one crofter.

16,524. What is the name of the place?—Aonadh. There were three tenants formerly in Airdantoul. It was in 1844 they left it.

16,525. Do you know the farm of Ratagan?—I know a part of it.

16,526. Is it a grazing farm or an arable farm?—They are both there; there were crofters there also.

16,527. Mention the places?—There were tenants in Ratagan itself in 1816 and 1820. There were ten in Cille-chaduinard they were there in 1812 and 1816; but I don't know when they were sent away.

16,528. Do you know how many tenants were in Cille-chaduinard in 1812 or 1816?—I can't state the number, there were a great many ruins of houses there.

16,529. Are they visible to-day?—Yes, some of them are still to be seen.

16,530. Any other place where there were tenants of yore?—I am not well acquainted with the other parts of it.

FARQUHAR MACRAE, Cottar, Letterfearn (62)—examined.

16,531. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter or a cottar?—A cottar.

16,532. Do you pay any rent?—No.

16,533. Have you any land?—No.

Glenshiel. Farquhar Macrae.

16,534. Is your house situated upon somebody else's croft?—Yes.

16,535. Whose croft is it upon?—It belonged to small tenants.

16,536. What is the name of the tenant?—Achantourd.

16,537. Is your house upon another man's holding?—Yes, on Alexander Macrae's and two or three more, William Forbes and Alexander Macaulay.

16,538. Are you desirious of obtaining additional land?—Certainly.

16,539. Can you point us to land; can you show us land?—Exactly.

16,540. Where is it?—Any amount of it.

16,541. Never mind the amount, I want the locality?—In Airdantoul.

16,542. Wester Airdantoul?—Yes, it would do; any part of it.

16,543. Did you hear the evidence of Mr William Grant?—Yes.

16,544. About Airdantoul and about Achantourd and Ratagan?—Yes.

16,545. And do you agree with that evidence?—Yes.

16,546. He has explained the matter fully, hasn't he?—Yes, my grandfather was in Achantourd.

16,547. Had he the whole of it?—No, he had only his share of it.

16,548. Was there a township there?—Yes.

16,549. An old township of Achantourd?—Yes, there were nine crofters in it.

16,550. Was that Wester Achantourd?—Easter Achantourd.

16,551. And were there some tenants in Wester Achantourd?—Yes, there are small tenants in it yet, my father was there.

16,552. Were there small tenants in Ratagan?—There were at one time.

16,553. Not in your recollection?—No, but I knew men who were there.

16,554. Is there land in these places suitable for crofters?—Yes.

16,555. And you will show us that land when we come to your quarter?—Yes.

16,556. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Are you allowing for arable land or grazing?—I am allowing for both. I applied two or three times for places, but I didn't get them.

16,557. I don't understand that you point to land near your present house?—Oh, yes.

16,558. Close by?—Yes.

16,559. Arable land?—Yes, there is Achantourd arable land and sheep grazing.

16,560. Near your present holding?—Just close to it.

16,561. Could you stock it and work it?—Yes.

15,562. Without help?—Yes.

15,563. May I ask what you have been working at for the last ten years?—I was away out of the country.

15,564. In what country?—In New Zealand.

15,565. Were you sheep farming there?—I was shepherd.

15,566. In the South Island?—Yes, Otago.

15,567. I know the place?—Well, I was for many years in it, but I was thirty years before I left home. I was paying my father's rent when I was at home, and I was paying my father's rent after I left home.

16,568. The Chairman.—Sending home money?—Sending home money.

16,569. And if you get a croft now you could put up the buildings, and put the stock on the land?—Certainly, my lord.

16,570. Without any assistance from anybody?—Without any assistance.

16,571. Mr Sutherland.—There are 34 families, you heard, in Letterfearn?—Yes.

16,572. On whose property is Letterfearn?—On Sir Kenneth Matheson's.

16,573. And I see here that they have got only twelve acres, including five acres taken from the farm of Leacachan, and granted by the proprietor to the crofters at the inspection. I presume that was the inspection by the Crofters Commission? [Sir Henry Macandrew.—That applies to only three or four of them].—I don't think there is so much as that.

16,574. Did the whole of the crofters in the township apply to the Crofters Commission, can you tell me?—I can't tell you, I only came here three or four years ago.

16,575. Sir Henry Macandrew.—I may explain there were only four as a kind of separate township, and they applied to Mr Macintyre at the inspection. The farm was too small to be under a regular application, but they pointed it out themselves.

16,576. Mr Sutherland.—May I ask you Sir Henry, since you are so kind as to tell us that, how much land these 34 families have in their possession?—[Sir Henry Macandrew.—I think they stated it quite correctly as 16 acres arable land, and then the last 12 acres, this cow's grazing, was added to them.]

16,577. Are we going to have the honour of a statement from you?—[Sir Henry Macandrew.—I will give you all that, yes.]

17,578. Mr Gordon.—Is this land at Airdantoul that you are applying for or would you take it near you?—I am not applying for any land in particular, only the first that I would get.

16,579. That you are referring to?—Yes, near us.

16,580. Is it arable land or pasture land?—Both.

15,581. Is the arable land cultivated just now or old arable?—There is very little cultivated.

16,582. It is old arable land?—Yes, the low ground is all arable land, but the hill is for pasture.

16,583. Is there a resident tenant in Airdantoul?—Yes, Mr Duncan Macrae.

16,584. Do you know the rent he pays?—No.

15,585. Is it £100?—I have no idea.

16,586. Have you any idea of the extent of arable land to which you refer as being available?—No, I have no idea.

16,587. Would it be 20 or 30 acres?—Every man's?

16,588. No, but what you refer to as to be added to your township?—Oh, yes.

16,589. What proportion of the farm would that be, half or more?—Not the half of it I think.

16,590. It would still leave 20 or 30 acres of the farm?—Yes. He has in this parish about 60 acres I think, between 60 and 80, but there is a lot outside this parish.

16,591. Of old arable?—Yes.

16,592. And is it that you principally refer to?—No, I will take a share of Achintourd or any place.

16,593. Do you propose that the farm should be broken up?—Certainly.

16,594. Sir Henry Macandrew.—How long were you in New Zealand?—Twenty-nine years.

16,595. The Chairman.—And were you a shepherd all that time?—No.

16,596. What were you?—I was a digger and many things, but I was mostly shepherding.

16,597. Sir Henry Macandrew.—You have brought home a good bit of money?—Yes.

16,598. Would you take a small farm?—Yes, Sir Henry, I applied for it once or twice, but I did not get it.

16,599. Which one did you apply for?—I applied for Drudaig, and I applied for a share of Achnatourd, but I never heard that Keppoch was in the market.

16,600. Well, just come and see me.

16,601. The Chairman.—I was going to say this may result in business. [Witness.—All right, that will do me.]

SIR HENRY MACANDREW, Solicitor, Inverness, Factor and Commissioner for Sir Kenneth Matheson of Lochalsh—examined.

observations just now to the Matheson estates in the parishes of Kintail and Glenshiel?—To the estates of Sir Kenneth Matheson in these two parishes,—the parish of Glenshiel and the parish of Kintail.

These estates were acquired by the late Sir Alexander Matheson, as follows, viz.,—(1) Ardintoul and Letterfearn in what is now the parish of Glenshiel from the late Mr Mackinnon of Corry in 1842 at the price of £17,000; (2) Inverinate from the late Mr Mackenzie of Applecross in 1844 at the price of £29,999; and (3) the estate of Ellandonan from the late Mr Lillingston or his representatives in 1851. This last estate was purchased along with the estate of Lochalsh at the price of £120,000 and its price cannot be given separately.

These estates at one time formed part of the extensive possessions of the family of Seaforth, and the first authentic information I possess regarding them has been obtained from the records of the Commissioners on forfeited estates in the Register House, Edinburgh. According to a rental made up for these Commissioners, in or about 1727, from the depositions of the tenants, it appears that the whole of the lands were then divided into 39 holdings occupied by 50 tenants paying rents amounting to £3415, 8s. Scots money, or £284, 12s. 4d. sterling, besides 23¼ muttons, 19⅓ stones of butter, and 36 stones of cheese which are not converted into money. The rents include what is called vicarage, which is presumed to be teind payable by the tenants. There are several cases in which there are possessions in the occupation of more than one tenant, but in none of these cases except that of Ruarach, which is described as divided into the 'meikle oxgate, middle oxgate and 'coulmiln,' are separate rents stated for each tenant, showing that the possessors were joint-tenants, and jointly and severally liable for the rents. In the case of Ruarach separate rents are stated for each of the seven tenants. I have obtained from the same records a copy of the depositions of the tenants taken by Sir Patrick Strahan of Glenkinchy, Surveyor-General for the Forfeited Estates, in presence of David Bethune of Coulnaskill, Sheriff-Substitute of the Shire of Ross at Ardhill, on 20th September 1718, but the rental if any was made up on these depositions does not appear now to exist. From these depositions, however, it appears that there were considerable changes of tenancy and of rental between the two periods.

The next information which I have as to these estates is from a rental of the Seaforth estates in 1756 in the possession of Sir Kenneth Matheson. The rents are given in sterling money and there are no payments in kind. From this document it appears that between 1727 and 1756 there had been considerable consolidation of holdings and changes in the tenants and state of possession, and that the rent was more than doubled. At the latter date there were 20 holdings and 32 tenants and the total rental at this time was £340, 10s. 8d. A tabulated statement of these two rentals is given in Appendix B. page 396.

The estate of Ellandonan was acquired by the late Sir Hugh Innes from the family of Seaforth partly in 1801 and partly in 1814. The first part acquired was Glen-Elchaig, that is, Killilan, and from a rental of Sir Hugh Innes's estates in 1822–3 I find that the whole of this portion was let as sheep farms in two possessions, as follows, viz., Easter and Wester Killilan to Roderick and John Maclennan at a rent of £340, with 'ten good four year old wedders, ten lambs, and 20 'fowls or hens,' and Fadoch and others to Farquhar, Finlay, and Duncan Macrae, at £140. At this time the fishing of the Elchaig was let to Farquhar Macrae, one of the tenants of Fadoch, Alexander Downie, the minister of Lochalsh, and Mr Coll Macdonell, the tenant of Achtertyre in Lochalsh.

About 1770 there was a considerable emigration from the West Highlands, and a number of substantial farmers emigrated from Kintail to Carolina. Some time after 1786 sheep-farming was introduced into the district. In the end of the last and the early part of the present century there was a great deal of public discussion about the best means of finding employment for the people of the Highlands who were then in a state of great poverty, and the formation of villages or settlements along the coast from which fishing could be prosecuted was much advocated. As is well known the British Fisheries Society was formed for the purpose of promoting the formation of such settlements and of otherwise encouraging fishing. Lord Seaforth adopted this policy, and about the beginning of the century commenced to form the village of Dornie and Bundalloch, and also to form rural settlements of the kind now called crofter townships; and the same policy was pursued by Sir Hugh Innes after he acquired the estates. This will be more fully shown when I come to deal with the parish of Lochalsh where the policy received its fullest development.

The earliest complete rental of the estate of Ellandonan which I have been able to find is that for 1817 when the rental and state of possessions were as follows:—

Possession.	Tenants.	Rent. £	s.	d.
Fadoch, . . .	T., D., A. and J. Macrae	640	0	0
Killilan, . . .	R. Maclennan and D. Macrae, . . .	450	0	0
Salmon Fishing,	H. Innes, M.P.; Dr Downie; Donald and Duncan Macrae, . .	8	0	0
Cambuslunie, .	12 tenants (11 Macraes and 1 Macmillan) in various proportions, .	200	0	0
Carr and Wester Keppoch, . .	10 tenants (7 Macraes and 3 Macdonalds) in various proportions, .	135	0	0
Easter Keppoch,	7 tenants (4 Macraes, 1 Murchison and 2 Maclennans) in various proportions, . . .	42	0	0
Leault, . . .	Duncan Macrae, . .	60	0	0
Village of Dornie,	Number of tenants not given	367	3	2½
		1902	3	2½

For the village of Dornie a separate rental was made up, but I cannot find it so I am unable to give the number of tenants. I believe the village of Dornie then included the present grazings both of Dornie and Bundalloch. Before 1823 a considerable change seems to have taken place, for in the rental of that year the state of possession is as follows, viz.:—

Possessions.	Tenants.	Rent. £	s.	d.
Fadoch, . . .	D., A. and J. Macrae, .	440	0	0
Salmon Fishing,	Robert Mackinnon, .	30	0	0
Cambuslunie, .	10 tenants (7 Macraes, 1 Macculloch, 1 Mackenzie and 1 Macdouald) 2 lots vacant valued at £36, 13s. 4d., . .	220	0	0
Carr and Wester Keppoch, . .	4 tenants (3 Macraes and 1 Macdonald) in equal shares, ...	120	0	0
Leault and Easter Keppoch, .	Duncan Macrae, . .	120	0	0
Dornie and Bundalloch, . . .	Number of tenants not given, ...	377	15	2½
		1637	15	2½

The first detailed rental of Dornie and Bundalloch which I have been able to find is that of 1825, when the village was occupied by 111 tenants all of whom had sites of houses with small gardens held under long leases, most of which are dated in 1812. The duration is ninety-nine years. 65 of these tenants had allotments of arable land as follows:—

Glenshiel.

Sir Henry Macandrew.

1 acre and under,	47
1 acre and not exceeding 2,	11
2 „ „ 3,	4
4½ „	1
In all	65

61 of these had besides grazing for one or more cows and three had cows grazing but no land. The remaining 43 had only the sites of their houses held under the leases already mentioned. The rents which amounted to £351, 7s. 8d. exclusive of £30 paid by one of the tenants for Glass Island in Lochalsh, was made up as follows, viz. :—

Ground rents,	£33, 9s. 0d.
Rent of arable land,	106, 13s. 1d.
Rent of cow's grazing,	188, 0s. 0d.
Payment for right to make kelp	22, 8s. 5d.
Dues the nature of which not mentioned,	17s. 2d.
	£351, 7s. 8d.

The extent of land was 79 acres 1 rood, and the number of cows grazed was 94, from which it will be seen that the rent charged for arable land was 26s. 10¾d. per acre, and for the grazing of a cow £2. From these particulars it will be seen that the village was formed on the model of those of the British Fisheries Society, and that it was intended the people should earn their living by fishing and other industries, having in the village merely homes with potato plots and grazing for a cow for the comfort of the families. Very few of the residents now live by fishing.

I regret that I have not been able to find rentals of the other portions of the estates in Kintail and Glenshiel earlier than the purchase of the estate by Sir Alexander Matheson. The rent ledgers now in the office commence with the rents payable at Martinmas 1852 and with a clear sheet. At the time of Sir Alexander's entry to the estate a valuation and readjustment of the holdings took place and there were considerable changes. In some cases tenants were removed from some of the holdings and settled elsewhere, but I believe none were removed from the estate. At this time a number of the Dornie and Bundalloch tenants who were very largely in arrear were deprived of the land and grazing which they held, and the land was relet as follows, viz. :—

Lonellan to F. Macdonald at	30	0	0
Bundalloch Farm to D. and J. Macmillan at	60	0	0
Dornie to 23 tenants forming what is now the township of Dornie at	82	3	3
	172	3	3

There remained in Dornie and Bundalloch at this time 59 householders who had no land or grazing.

I give in an appendix a tabulated statement [see App. A, page 395] of the rentals of these estates for the years 1852–3, 1862–3, 1872–3, 1882–3 and 1892, excluding ground rents and feu-duties, and from this it appears that the number of holdings and tenants exclusive of shootings and sporting tenants has been as follows:—

Year.	Holdings.	No. of Tenants.	Rents.
1852–3	21	81	£3048 18 3
1862–3	17	75	3276 4 0
1872–3	19	88	3517 18 4
1882–3	21	87	2699 19 6
1892	18	93	1789 12 6

Glenshi

Sir Her Macand

During this period the sporting rents have been as follows:—

1852–3	530.
1862–3	505.
1872–3	440.
1882–3	2370.
1892	2422.

The grazing rent of the portion of the farms of Killilan and Lienassie converted into forest as aftermentioned was £467, the remainder of the decrease on agricultural and grazing rents between 1873 and 1892 arose mainly from voluntary reductions on the part of the proprietor.

In 1878 the tenant of Killilan gave up the higher or wedder ground of his farm, and as it could not be let separately for grazing it was formed into a deer forest and let to Lord Lovat at a rent of £860. In 1881 Mr Maclennan, the tenant of Lienassie, gave up the wedder ground of his farm and it was formed into the forest of Glomach and let to Mr Winans at a rent of £550. Mr Winans also holds the Killilan forest as sub-tenant of Lord Lovat.

The late Sir Alexander Matheson was an advocate of club farms, that is farms with several tenants having common grazing and owning a sheep stock in common, and at his instigation the townships of Dornie and Cambuslunie were converted into such farms in or about 1860, and Inverinate in or about 1867. Previously the sheep on these farms had been owned in separate flocks by the different tenants. The tenants of Carr and Wester Keppoch appear to have had a common sheep stock before Sir Alexander acquired the estate.

In 1875 the tenant of Lonellan, who was then also tenant of Drudaig, was induced to give up the part of this farm above the high road and it was added to the grazing of the Dornie club farm at the same rent as Mr Macdonald was then paying. With three exceptions the Dornie tenants did not come under the Crofters Act, but last autumn Sir Kenneth had the holdings valued by Messrs Macrae & Adam who had acted as assessors to the Crofters Commission in the fixing of fair rents in the district, with the result that the rents have been reduced from £63, 5s. to £49, 6s. These reductions will be given effect to in the current year, and the arrears (which are not large, many of the tenants having never been in arrear) will be dealt with on the principle on which the Crofters Commission have dealt with arrears. The Commissioners will see that Dornie is a thriving village.

In 1885 the farm of Bundalloch, which was then held by Mr John Macrae at a rent of £100, fell out of lease, and as frequent requests had been made by the people of Bundalloch for land and grazing, Sir Alexander was induced to let this farm to 20 of them at a rent of £80 as a club farm. With three exceptions these people were not able to pay their shares of the price of the club stock, and for those who could not pay Sir Alexander guaranteed a credit at the Commercial Bank, Balmacara, to enable them to enter the farm. The result has been very far from satisfactory. I produce a statement [App. C, page 396] showing the sum advanced to each tenant and the balances which remain owing including interest to 31st October last at the rate of 5 per cent., from which it appears that the original advance was £233, 7s. 10d., and that the sum now owing is £227, 12s. 8d. The arrears of rent on this farm (Bundalloch) now amount to £180, 15s. The tenants of Bundalloch do not fall under the Crofters Act in respect they do not reside on their holdings and were under lease at the passing of the Act; but as in the case of Dornie, Sir Kenneth has had the lands valued by Messrs Macrae & Adam, with the result that the rents, including the rent of several crofts not included in the club, have been reduced from £92, 11s. 6d. to £65, 9s. This reduction will also be given effect to in the present year and the arrears will be dealt with as in the case of Dornie.

In 1890 the farm of Drudaig was out of lease and Sir Kenneth offered it to the crofters of Letterfearn whose holdings are on it. Only one of these would agree to take it. Four other men, relatives of some of the crofters, ultimately joined this man, and the farm has been let to the five as joint-tenants on lease at a rent of £40. These men paid for the sheep stock and have paid their rents punctually up to this date. Sir Kenneth expended £111, 3s. in building a house for a shepherd on this farm and providing the tenants with fencing materials.

With reference to Camuslunie which was spoken about I find that the sum actually expended on land improvements there up to the date of Lord Napier's Commission when a return was prepared and given in was £111, 13s. 4d. Since then there have been £214, 10s. expended principally in the materials for houses for three men, and another man is now being provided with materials to build or to rebuild his house. With regard to Letterfearn, when Sir Alexander got possession, there were fourteen small tenants holding little plots of land for which they paid £22, 15s. In 1862, one of these had disappeared, there were only thirteen paying £22, 10s., so that I assume his lot was added to the others. In 1872, the number had risen to twenty-two, and that arose in this way. There were some tenants in Wester Auchantourd who had no land, and a piece of land was taken from the farm of Leacachan and given to them in small crofts; and there was a number of those who had no land at all who got potato crofts for which they pay only a shilling or two. Four of these have this year got the grazing for a cow, the only four who had no cows' grazing in the parish, and the only change that has taken place with regard to them has been the creation of these new holdings for them, and the addition which was given at the time of the Commission to the Wester Achantourd people, four in number. They were too few to apply, and the rent was only £75, but when Mr Macintyre was there they expressed a desire to get a piece of the land, and we sent for the tenant and persuaded him to give it.

16,603. Making nothing of the objections which would have arisen under the Act?—No, Mr Macintyre and I talked the tenant over, and at last he agreed very willingly when the thing was explained to him that the piece of land should be taken off and the tenants said that was quite satisfactory to them and they got from the proprietor materials to fence this addition to their holdings. Of course, there are matters about the general management of the estate I would prefer to give after you have dealt with Lochalsh, because the estate has been managed throughout as one estate since 1852.

16,604. Does that complete your statement?—Yes.

16,605. In what year did you become factor and commissioner?—1891.

16,606. And since that time Sir Kenneth has made several additions to the land in the occupation of crofters here?—Not since that time; the only one is this one at Letterfearn since then, on these estates.

16,607. It is these estates I am dealing with. Have there been any other applications for land?—For extension of holdings?

16,608. For extension of holdings?—Well, there were none until the Crofters Commission came here, and none of the townships here have ever applied to me for extension of grazing. You will see from the map that they possess the greater part of the land along the sea coast.

16,609. Is it your opinion that any of the townships of which we have been hearing a good deal and are dealing with to-day are congested?—Of course, I believe the Bundalloch people have too little land for the purpose of making a living out of it, but that was not intended. They were placed there as fishermen and it was intended that they should make their living by that.

16,610. And do you think they can make their living by that just now?—I don't see why they should not be able to live by fishing as other people do.

16,611. But during the last few years has there been as much fishing as would enable them to live within reasonable distance of their holdings?—Well, fishermen have lived during all these years; of course, they don't prosecute fishing regularly as an industry, and that is a mistake; as you are no doubt aware that is what has happened with most of the villages that were created with that intention.

16,612. I think you said that the township of Bundalloch was included in Dornie at one time?—Yes.

16,613. Then had that land been previously grazing land in the occupation of the Dornie tenants?—Dornie and Bundalloch in 1817 were occupied in all these small lots that I gave, and the tenants had grazing for their cows on what is now the grazing of Bundalloch and Dornie.

16,614. The Dornie tenants had?—The whole of the tenants together were treated as one.

16,615. Wasn't Dornie a township there before Bundalloch?—No, the two places formed one township. In 1852, Dornie was formed into a separate township by the whole of the grazing that now belongs to Dornie with the exception of Loan being given to these 23 tenants. That was the first separation between Dornie and Bundalloch.

16,616. Which of these townships is the oldest?—They were one.

16,617. Is Dornie congested?—I don't think so; you will see it; the people there seem to be all very prosperous, they have built very good houses.

16,618. I have been on the place. Would you say that Carr is congested?—Certainly not, there are only three tenants, they have a very good farm which carries 500 ewes.

16,619. That is within the limits of the township?—Carr and Wester Keppoch.

16,620. What do you say as to Inverinate?—I think the club tenants there are very well off.

16,621. And what do you say as to Camuslunie?—They are the best men on the estate; they pay their rents better than any other township.

16,622. But do you say you don't think they are in need of additional land, suppose it could be got?—I don't think so.

16,623. You mentioned rises of rent, which began to be much larger at the time of afforestment?—There was a large additional rent procured for the forests, but I may say that so far as I have been able to ascertain there was no rise of rent on the small tenancies during the whole of Sir Alexander Matheson's time, except as interest on expenditure. Sir Alexander had the theory that if money was worth spending it was worth getting interest for. All the interest had disappeared from the rental before my time.

16,624. I should ask you this question, have you found, since you became factor and commissioner, Sir Kenneth Matheson willing to listen to complaints from the crofters with regard to their need of land?—Most willing.

16,625. Mr Forsyth.—You made reference in your general statement to the sheep tenants giving up wedder ground, I think notably in the wedder portion of Killilan?—Killilan and Lienassie, the two portions that were formed into forests, were the wedder grounds of these farms.

16,626. Was that during your period as commissioner?—No, a considerable time before.

16,627. Have you any information as to the reasons for giving up the wedder ground?—Mr Maclean, my predecessor, said to Lord Napier's Commission that they were voluntarily given up by the tenants. Mr Brown has informed me since that that perhaps was a little stronger than need have been said, but he said it quite coincided with the wish of his father and himself who were then joint-tenants that they should relinquish the wedder ground. They had found it unprofitable and were desirous to give it up.

16,628. I wish to ask you that in connection with some questions you put yourself this morning, I think to Mr Alexander Macrae, as to the death-rate on wedder ground and I thought that the actual state of the death-rate did not come out very accurately. I think you said there that 63 per cent. of the wedders which were sold at three years old survived from the period of their being put on the ground. Now at what age were they put on the ground?—As I understand, Mr Brown's statement to me was that from the time they were put on as wedder hoggs until they were three year old, only 63 per cent. were sold as mature wedders.

16,629. That was a period of two years, virtually and possibly part of the summer?—Yes, one year to three year olds.

16,630. But you have no evidence on your estates as to the death-rate from the wedder lamb to the three year old wedder?—No, that is the only information I have on the subject.

16,631. Can you give me a little information about the fishing in the neighbourhood. You say that the Bundalloch crofters depend on the fishing?—I said it was intended that they should.

16,632. Well, would that be the herring fishing or just the white fishing?—Mainly the herring fishing, but there is no reason why they should not fish for white fish. There are a few fishermen who do fish between this and Skye, where there is lots of fish to be caught.

16,633. And where is their market?—Strome.

16,634. How would they send the fish to Strome?—By the boats.

16,635. Is there a good service?—They could land at the Railway station with the boats.

16,636. With their own boats?—Yes.

16,637. Sail up the loch?—Yes, and the steamers call at Balmacara and Totaig here twice or three times a week, I am not quite sure which.

16,638. Is there any way of improving the facilities for getting the fish quickly to the markets in the south?—A railway station at Kyle in a few years.

16,639. You think that would improve the fishing?—Most certainly, it would be much more convenient for the fishermen along the coast than the present station.

16,640. Crofters living on the coast then would be able to prosecute the fishing to better advantage than they did in the past?—I think so. There is a project for a pier at Plochton, Mr Macrae is in charge of it. Sir Kenneth offered to subscribe one third of the expense necessary.

16,641. So there is a good prospect of the fishing industry developing?—I hope so.

16,642. Does your experience of club farms lead you to think that it is a good arrangement for crofters?—Well, my experience is leading me to doubt it. I was at one time of opinion that it was undoubtedly the best form, but it is a somewhat expensive one. It necessitates the employment of a shepherd by the crofters, an expense which would be avoided if each man had his own flock of sheep. On the other hand each man having his own flock of sheep leads to more quarrelling, and I understand that it is a general impression with people who are skilled in the matter that the club stocks are better, they produce better sheep. But it is a greater expense and I don't think the men themselves take so much interest in sheep farming as they would if each man had his own stock.

16,643. But is it not the case sometimes that one of the members of the club acts as shepherd?—Very rarely. So far as I have been able to ascertain, and I have inquired on the point, I think every club farm on Sir Kenneth's estate employs a shepherd. These five men at Drudaig employ a shepherd.

16,644. Mr Gordon.—I would like if Sir Henry would explain himself a little better because one of my reasons for wishing this information is that to my knowledge Sir Henry has lately constructed a club farm?—Where.

16,645. Part of the farm of Conchra?—Sir Kenneth has let a part to the Ardelve crofters.

16,646. On the condition that they work it as a club farm I understand?—Well, there is no special condition; it is known that they intend to do that, but there was no special condition.

16,647 How do you make it out that it is more expensive?—I say because they employ a shepherd.

16,648. But if they were not employing a shepherd they would have to work themselves?—Exactly.

16,649. But suppose they are fully employed otherwise?—Well, if they are fully employed otherwise, that objection would go.

16,650. And then the shepherd would do the work, suppose there were ten men about the club farm he would do the work of the ten?—But if the ten men had each their own stock there would be no shepherd required, that would save about £50.

16,651. But each of these ten men would, when they are so disposed, perambulate through the whole ground upon the plea of looking after the sheep and while they were looking after the sheep they would disturb the others?—I have heard of that objection, but I have in my eye a club farm that you know where the people have separate stocks and there is no objection of that kind.

16,652. Again, it is often argued with reference to assigning land to crofters that under a club-farm they would still remain, supposing you take part of a deer-forest, while there might be deer got, at all events they would get grouse; the game would not be disturbed in the case of a club farm so much as it would be in the case of grazing held by a number of individual crofters?—Well, the grouse shooting on the club farms on this estate is exceedingly poor.

16,653. I quite believe that, but assuming that to be the case?—And I should look on converting ground into club farms as nearly destroying the grouse shooting from my experience.

16,654. I don't quite follow you that it would be more expensive?—Of course, the same objection as to grouse shooting would apply to separate sheep stocks. [The Chairman.—With increased force?—Probably.]

16,655. Is it not the case that in a good many club farms there are one or two men of more capital who monopolise a great part of the profit of the whole subject?—That has happened, but that can easily be prevented by proper regulations.

16,656. Ah, it is difficult to regulate some folks?—Well, you know Gruinard.

16,657. I know something about that?—That was let under regulations about twelve years ago.

16,658. I know club farms in that part of the country which are subject to the failing that I have described?—In this instance which I am referring to where each man has a separate stock, there were quarrels on that head, but after the farm was let on lease with the strict regulation that each man was to keep only so much stock, it has worked admirably. On the adjoining land which is let as a proper club farm about the same size the people are not at all so prosperous. The grouse shooting where the tenants have separate stocks is let for £350 a year, and on the other for £70.

16,659. The Chairman.—Do you attribute that difference to the better management of the farm by the individual crofters than the central management of the club farm?—Not entirely, I think the £70 rent is a great deal too low.

16,660. Your argument scarcely holds then?—But I give it simply as showing that the individual holding does not deteriorate grouse shooting.

16,661. Mr Gordon.—You are recently converted to the individual holding?—Certainly, I at one time believed very strongly the other way, but I am coming round.

16,662. I am sorry to hear it. I am not prepared to follow you.

16,663. Mr Sutherland.—Continuing the subject of club farms, Sir Henry, as we are at it, have you read the statement regarding them that was submitted to the Napier Commission by a gentleman who had large experience of them?—Do you mean Mr Mackenzie?

16,664. Yes; was that your predecessor, may I ask?—Not immediate, but he was factor of these estates for a long time.

16,665. And he sent in a valuable statement?—Yes, I know it well.

16,666. And you don't agree with it, I take it?—I did agree with it, but my opinion is shaken.

16,667. He concludes his statement thus:—'There

'are many large sheep farms which would bring a 'higher rent in this way,' that is as club farms, 'than 'by occupation either in large holdings exclusively 'under sheep as is now too much the custom. The 'other mode would give a numerous class of industrious 'resident tenants themselves and their families doing 'all the work.' That is his general conclusion?—I think he would not say that if he had lived till to-day, however, I will say this, I know that the late Sir Alexander Matheson said that if anybody brought him five or six respectable men who could stock a sheep farm and would take it he would give it gladly, and I know that Sir Kenneth would do the same, I say that.

16,668. To put the matter generally, do you state that the club farm system that was inaugurated and carried out by Sir Alexander Matheson has proved a failure?—No, I am not prepared to say that.

16,669. Thank you. Now, you gave us an historical account of this estate and your authority quoted in every case was a rental, is that not so?—Yes.

16,670. So that was an historical view of the estate from the rent point of view; you don't claim?—I heard you put that question at Glen-Urquhart, but I don't quite understand it.

16,671. Do you mean to lead us to understand that the history of an estate or of the country consists of the rentals of the country?—By no manner of means; I gave the statement merely as showing that there had been no such things as crofter townships on these estates at the times these rentals were made up.

16,672. How do you prove that from the rental?—Because the rent of each holding is given as one sum irrespective of whether there are one or more tenants.

16,673. Do the rentals account for the total population?—I don't suppose it for a moment.

16,674. It applies only to the condition of the people who paid rent?—Rent direct to the proprietor. I take it that on all these farms, or many of them, there were sub-tenants as on all farms at that time.

16,675. So that for the condition of the people or the state in which they lived they are of no value whatever?—As to the condition of the sub-tenants, do you mean.

16,676. The people generally, or the history of the Highlands?—The mere statement that the farm of Lienassie usually had one tenant and that that tenant paid £200 of rent does not, of course, give any information as to the state of the people, I don't put it forward as doing that, but it gives some information as to the state of possession of the land.

16,677. So far as the tenants entered on the rental are concerned?—So far as the landlord was concerned, who was the proprietor.

16,678. That is the point I wanted to make clear. Now, why have we not got statistics from you as we had from some other estates regarding the occupation of the land at present among the various classes of tenants?—I will give you an exact statement of that when I come to deal with the whole estate.

16,679. I would at the present moment like it, because I thought we might have some remarks to make upon the deer forests which are a feature, I understand, of the estate in this part, but you heard the questions I myself addressed to some of the witnesses to-day as to the distribution of the people on the land?—Yes.

16,680. And was it substantially correct?—That they were distributed all round the sea coast.

16,681. And as to the number of families that were in the small circle down here?—I have no reason to doubt that Mr Macrae's statement was correct.

16,682. Is there any prospect so far as the estate management is concerned of the afforestment of land being stopped?—Well, Sir Kenneth got a very tempting offer from Mr Winans last year to afforest two other farms and he declined it.

16,683. Upon economic grounds?—Upon the ground that he did not think it a right thing to do.

16,684. On moral grounds?—I don't know whether to put it on moral or economical grounds, but he thought it was not a wise thing for him to do in the management of the estate, and not just to the tenants.

16,685. Just to the tenants, that is the moral point of view I take it?—You may take it that way.

16,686. Have you read the statement, the valuable statement I may say, made by the minister of this parish with regard to the deer forest?—You mean the Rev. Mr Morrison, minister of Kintail, no, I have not read that. I read his evidence the other day. I noticed that he was to send in a statement, but I did not read it. I had not time to read it. But I will read it before I come up again.

16,687. I would highly recommend it to you. He is a gentleman of authority I should say from his position, and from the knowledge he has got on the subject. Then we will have an opportunity of hearing something about the statistics?—Yes, I will give you the exact area occupied by small tenants, by sheep farms, and by forest.

16,688. Now, with regard to the fishing here, are those villages that were founded by the British Fisheries Society thriving all over the west of Scotland?—Not by fishing. Ullapool has ceased to be a fishing village. Tobermory has entirely ceased to be a fishing village. I don't know about any others.

16,689. Is Dornie one of them?—Dornie was a town long before.

16,690. You referred to some one in this neighbourhood; was there one here?—Dornie and Bundalloch.

16,691. The Chairman.—He mentioned Dornie I thought as a settlement like what had been done by the British Fisheries Society?—Yes, it was on the model of Mr Knox's recommendation to the British Fisheries Society.

16,692. Mr Sutherland.—Are the stations of the British Fisheries Society all decaying places at the present moment?—Tobermory is a thriving town.

16,693. Fishing town?—Not a fishing town.

16,694. I presume it is the steamer traffic that has helped Tobermory?—Yes, and the tourist traffic helps it immensely, and Oban was made by tourists.

16,695. Do you think then that the example of the British Fisheries Society is one to be followed with regard to the making of communities depending upon fishing alone?—I think the idea of having fisherman and crofter combined in one person has not succeeded. It would be better I think if the men took to one calling or the other.

16,696. Was not that the idea that the founders of the British Fisheries Society had?—Which.

16,697. The view you expressed now, and this attempt was made to separate the two occupations?—Well, in Mr Knox's address to the Society he says they should found villages to be occupied by fishermen with plots of an acre, and half an acre, and some larger ones, and with a number of plots for mechanics of a larger size.

16,698. And the society followed that advice?—They did.

16,699. And you are not prepared to say that the result has been satisfactory, judging from the state of the places here?—I think not, judging from what I see here now and have seen all my life.

16,700. How then do you think any fresh movement in that way would be successful?—I should prefer to see the men who live by fishing, living by fishing alone, just as the east coast fishermen do.

16,701. But isn't that practicallywhat was attempted by the British Fisheries Society?—It was.

16,702. And it has not succeeded?—That failed in some cases, because the herring left the lochs where the villages were founded, and so on, but it is remarkable that the men along the western shore don't take to fishing as a sole occupation as they do on the east coast.

16,703. The Chairman.—Would you add Pulteneytown to those towns you mentioned as a town founded by the British Fisheries Society?—I believe it was.

16,704. Now, you have, I have no doubt, read the Grazings Act?—Yes, I have.

16,705. Are you of opinion that the principle of that Act is sound?—Well, I really—I don't remember exactly what its provisions are, but my impression was that it was loose.

16,706. But would you be in favour of crofters where they are so minded appointing a committee of their number to manage the grazing?—That is essential.

16,707. Taking sole charge of it, and dividing the profits among ths crofters of the townships?—I think it is essential that they should appoint one or two to do the buying and selling.

16,708. You are in favour of the provisions of that Act which go in that direction?—I think all the townships here do that of their own accord.

16,709. But are you in favour of the Act?—Oh, yes, certainly, but I think it might be better done.

16,710. Do I understand that this is your view that the principle of a club farm is a sound principle if it is properly carried out?—Yes.

16,711. Mr Donald Macrae.—I should like to put a question or two, my lord. As I understand it Sir Henry made a statement that the laird did not raise the rents of any small tenants except as interest upon money expended. [The Chairman.—Sir Alexander did.]

16,712. Sir Alexander? Is Sir Henry aware that the rent of the crofter township of Inverinate was raised in the year 1867?—I am not, but I will tell you in a minute.

16,713. I may state that my information is that the rent of each crofter was raised £3, 10s. in 1867 without a penny being expended by the estate on improvements?—I will tell you from the rentals in a moment.

16,714. I understand, I want to make it as easy for Sir Henry as possible?—The rent of the Inverinate crofts in 1852 was £99. In 1862 it was £106; 1872, £117, 15s.; 1882, £104; 1892, £62, 7s.

16,715. Would Sir Henry tell me what it was in 1865?—(Refers to rent ledger.) Give me one instance.

16,716. Alexander Macrae?—At Whitsunday 1865 his rent was £10, the same rent in the previous year.

16,717. What would it be now in 1868?—It was £10 in 1868. In the following year it was £13, 10s.

16,718. That was in the year?—1869.

16,719. 1867 I said. I was wrong so far. There is an increase of rent of £3, 10s. on the year's rent?—Yes, clearly.

16,720. Can Sir Henry say whether that £3, 10s. represents interest on capital expended by the proprietor on improvements; my information is that no money was spent on improvements? [Mr Watson.—It does not, it is on a revaluation of the subject].—I adopt Mr Watson's statement that it does not. It was on a revaluation.

16,721. So that Sir Henry's evidence so far as that subject is concerned must be modified at least to that extent?—Clearly.

16,722. Now one question more Sir Henry. You would allow, of course, that a fair rent, a fair and equitable rent is one of the essential conditions of success in a club farm, in the management of a club farm?—Or in any farm.

16,723. Or in any farm for that matter. Now the Bundalloch club farm has not been an unqualified success as I understand it?—No.

16,724. Has it not been proved within the last two years that the tenants were rack-rented?—I don't think so; one tenant was paying regularly £100 for it, and was a successful man. The tenants got it for £80.

16,725. I am not asking what the other tenant—The previous tenant?

16,726. Exactly, who may have been foolish enough in his day to have paid £100 for it, what his opinion of the matter was; that is not what I am concerned about, but has an independent tribunal by the consent of the tenants and of the proprietor adjudicated on the question of rent and made a substantial reduction of the rent?—Yes, I said so.

16,727. Exactly so. Does that not imply a rack-rent before then?—It depends entirely on the judgement of the two men who had it. We know that Commissioners have been reducing all the rents. [The Chairman.—Not all].—Well, not all, nearly all.

16,728. Sir Henry would not charge the Commissioners nor the Assessors with having made too big a reduction of rent in any case?—I have no doubt the valuators of Bundalloch did in their judgement what was right, and Sir Kenneth's instructions to them were to fix a fair and reasonable rent that the people could pay.

Glenshiel. — Sir Henry Macandrew.

16,729. Now, with regard to the club farm of Inverinate which has been managed as a club farm since 1867, is it not a fact that they were very severely rack-rented until the Crofters Commission reduced their rents two years ago?—I don't think so.

16,730. What was the rent of the township from 1869 down to 1880?—Well, as I say, the rent in 1882 was £104, 5s., in 1892 it was £62, 7s., but in the interval there was a very large reduction by Sir Alexander or Sir Kenneth I am not quite sure which.

16,731. They are paying £104, 5s.?—Yes.

16,732. For a period of years?—Yes.

16,733. And that rent has been reduced to £64 by the Commission?—£62, 7s.

16,734. Will Sir Henry not admit that £104 was a rack-rent?—Certainly not. Not at the time. There was a very great fall of rents all over the country between these two times. What would have been a rack-rent now would not have been a rack-rent then.

16,735. Was there agricultural and pastoral prosperity during the whole of the time that the rent was above £64. Was there not a depression?—The depression began in 1878.

16,736. Was the rent not considerably above £64 after 1878?—Well, I will give you, if you like, the years when the reduction was made, but it will take a little trouble.

15,737. Oh, well, I am not particular. Now I should ask one question?—It was immediately after 1882 that Sir Alexander made the reduction, I believe.

16,738. I should like to ask a question or two with regard to the fishing villages?—One moment. Will you allow me to say this.

16,739. Certainly.—That there has been £826, spent on the township of Inverinate since Sir Alexander Matheson became proprietor of the estate.

16,740. But Sir Henry has already admitted that the rent was raised £3, 10s. on each holding before any money was spent?—Not before any money was spent. Certainly not. The amount I have mentioned was spent in various sums during the whole period of Sir Alexander's possession.

16,741. When was the first of that money spent?—Oh, I cannot tell you, but this £697, 8s. 9d. was the sum at the date of Lord Napier's Commission.

16,742. Would Sir Henry believe the tenants themselves, Sir Henry says that he doesn't know when this improvement began to be effected, when this money began to be expended; would he take the word of the tenants themselves for it?—Certainly.

16,743. Well, I have it from one of the tenants that there was not a single penny expended by the estate on improvements at the time the rent was raised £3, 10s. on each tenant?—Oh, I can't take that because the estate accounts show that the money was expended. I take this at once that there was no large expenditure immediately before that.

16,744. Was there any expenditure at all before that?—Yes.

16,745. How much, and when?—I say up to Lord Napier's Commission it amounted to £697, 8s. 9d. Since then to £129.

16,746. But the rent was raised in 1869?—Yes.

16,747. Was there any money expended by the proprietor on improvements before that date?—Yes.

16,748. The Chairman.—I think what Mr Macrae means is this. Had the raising of the rent in 1869 anything to do with the expenditure which had been previously made?—No, I tried to explain,—Mr Watson tells me it had not, and I accept his statement.

16,749. Mr Donald Macrae.—Now, with regard to the crofting village, does Sir Henry know Bundalloch well?—Well, I have only been factor for two years, and I can't say that I have any special knowledge—I have visited them, I have conferred with them.

Glenshiel. — Sir Henry Macandrew.

16,750. Has he made a study of the fishing industry?—I don't put myself forward as an authority on that subject.

16,751. Could he imagine a more unsuitable place for the site of a fishing village than Bundalloch?—Certainly, very much more unsuitable.

16,752. On the sea coast of Scotland?—Yes.

16,753. Does Sir Henry consider Bundalloch a suitable site for a fishing village?—I don't see why not, but, of course, I am not defending the policy of Lord Seaforth, when he chose it I have no doubt he believed it was and I don't see why the people should not fish.

16,754. Can Sir Henry say from his knowledge that a barrel of herring has been exported from Loch Long, on which this village is, within the last ten years?—I don't suppose the men are going to fish on Loch Long or make their living there, but they are no distance—a few hundred yards—from Lochalsh, and the whole Atlantic is near them.

16,755. Could Sir Henry say as a matter of his own knowledge that a barrel of herring went into Loch Long?—I have seen people fishing for herring there, but I don't believe Loch Long is a herring fishing loch.

16,756. Is it in any way suitable for a herring fishing village?—Not if you look to Loch Long alone, certainly not, but they are not nearly so far from their fishing ground as the people in Ardersier.

16,757. Is Sir Henry aware that the currents in Loch Long make it in the highest degree unsuitable for a fishing village?—No, the currents run twice each way in twenty-four hours.

16,758. Is it possible for a sailing boat with any amount of wind however far to go into that loch against the tide or to come out against the tide?—I have seen the ferry boat do it. Glenshiel.

16,759. Will Sir Henry say that he ever saw the ferry boat come in from end to end of the loch, or didn't the ferry boat go across it describing the circumference the arc of a circle?—Well, I have seen them crossing, but I will undertake to row a boat against the tide if you will take the other oar. Sir Henry Macandrew.

16,760. Is it not a fact that at the time these fishing villages were selected, the sites I mean, is it not the fact that at the time Loch Duich was a good fishing loch, but that since then it has been a complete failure as a fishing loch?—I have heard great stories in my youth when I used to live hereabout of the number of herrings that used to be here at one time. The same has happened to Loch Carron and Loch Broom.

16,761 It is entirely played out as a herring fishing loch for the last twenty years?—I believe so. They very seldom come indeed.

16,762. So that it is high time that parties ceased to make reflections upon the people because they are not good fisherman?—I am making no reflections whatever on the people, I am saying that they don't devote themselves to fishing as a regular profession as the fishermen on the east coast do.

16,763. They are not on the ground in fact?—I say they are quite as near the fishing ground as many of the villages on the east coast that I am well acquainted with.

16,764. But they are farmers as well?—No, these fishermen are not.

16,765. The Bundalloch fishermen? Well, they became farmers.

16,766. Is it not high time that they became farmers and nothing more?—Or fishermen and nothing more.

SEVENTEENTH SITTING.

GLENSHIEL, July 12, 1893.

Present :—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
Michael Hugh Shaw Stewart, Esq., M.P.
Angus Sutherland, Esq., M.P.
James Noel Muller Forsyth, Esq.
George Gordon, Esq.
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

Donald Macrae, Morvich, Kintail (68.)
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Donald Macrae.

16,767. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Not a crofter, but I have a small lot and the grazing of a cow.

16,768. Do you pay any rent?—No. It is at Whitsunday last I got the land.

16,769. Who is your landlord?—Sir Allan Mackenzie. [Mr William Mackay.—Sir James Mackenzie's trustees are the proprietors.]

16,770. You got land at Whitsunday. How much land did you get?—An acre and a half of arable land.

16,771. Without rent?—We will have to pay rent at the end of the year.

16,772. What have you to pay?—When we were first promised the land we were told the rent would be £2, but there was nothing said about the amount of rent when we got the land.

16,773. And the grazing of one cow?—Yes, the grazing of the cow is included in the rent stated along with the arable land.

16,774. Do you wish to make a statement to us about more land?—Yes.

16,775. Tell us what you desire to say?—If I got five or six acres of arable land and the grazing of 100 sheep.

16,776. If you got that, what then?—I would take that in partnership along with others. I mean a club stock, that each share would have five or six acres and 100 sheep.

16,777. Can you show us such land as you are thinking about?—Yes.

16,778. Where is it?—Out Glenlic to the march with Strathglass.

16,779. Is it occupied as farm just now?—No, it is not a farm, it is a deer forest.

16,780. What is the name of the forest?—The deer forest of Kintail.

16,781. Is there old arable at this place you are mentioning?—Yes.

16,782. A considerable tract?—There is arable land till you reach the top of the glen and the glen is four miles in length.

16,783. Is there old arable up the whole of the four miles here and there?—Yes, throughout the whole four miles.

16,784. The land could accommodate a great many more besides yourself?—Yes.

16,785. And is there a desire among your neighbours for such holdings as you indicate?—Yes.

16,786. Has that land always been forest in your recollection, or was it something else in your time?—It was not a deer forest; I myself saw six sheep farmers in it.

16,787. How long ago is that?—About seventy-three years ago there were sixteen tenants there; after that one Alexander Macrae came in and got the whole place for himself; he got this from the Seaforths who were then proprietors of the place.

Glenshiel.

Donald Macrae.

16,788. What was the next change in the tenancy after the time of Alexander Macrae?—A son of Alexander Macrae then got the place for five years. That was Duncan Macrae.

16,789. And after his time what became of the tenancy?—After that one Peter Macrae, a grandson of Alexander Macrae, got it.

16,790. And after him?—Macrae, whatever happened, did not run out the lease; the lease was terminated in some way. Then there was the banker in Balmacara, one Annat, and Mr Maclennan, Lienassie, were both trustees of this Macrae, and they had the place for one year as trustees.

16,791. And at the end of that year what happened?—Then the late Mr Brown, Killilan, took the place. The six tenants I spoke of were six tenants in succession.

16,792. Did Mr Brown's occupation cease about 1878?—Mr Brown was there for nine years; he gave it up fifteen years ago.

16,793. Do you know why Mr Brown gave it up?—Mr Brown and the proprietor did not agree.

16,794. Was it afforested after that?—Sir Allan Mackenzie had it for three years after Mr Brown.

16,795. As a sheep farm?—As a sheep farm.

16,796. And then it became forest?—After that it was made a forest.

16,797. But according to your opinion that strip of ground in Glenlic and running up to Strathglass is arable land suitable for the settlement of crofters?—Yes.

16,798. And would it grow all the usual crops that crofters rear, corn and barley, turnips and potatoes?—Crofters don't speak about oats. What they want is hay and their cattle and sheep. They want to have cattle and sheep and what is necessary to winter them. They don't speak of raising oats.

16,799. Mr Gordon.—Do you remember seeing this arable land under crop?—Yes, I remember oats, barley and hay there. I also saw potatoes in it.

16,800. How many crofters would the glen take?—There were sixteen at one time there.

16,801. Would you find sixteen men willing to go there now?—That is a question which I cannot answer.

16,802. Would you be able yourself to occupy one-sixteenth of it?—Yes.

16,803. Mr Sutherland.—Where were you yourself before you came to Morvich or have you been here always?—I was always in Morvich.

16,804. Were you always a cottar?—No, I was a shepherd to those six tenants that I mentioned in Glenlic.

16,805. Then, with regard to the land which you dyou got at Whitsunday, the one-and-a-half acres, tell us shortly the circumstances that led up to your getting that land?—We were writing for it; applying for it.

16,806. And was Whitsunday last the first time you wrote about it?—I was a shepherd and I did not know what they were doing till lately, but my neighbours tell me that there are twenty-two years since they began to apply for land.

16,807. And they did not get it till Whitsunday last?—No.

16,808. And all they got was an acre and a half?—Yes.

16,809. Could you tell us upon what conditions they got them. How were you not certain about the rent?—We did not get the letter of agreement or the lease for it yet.

16,810. And how do you explain that you took land without knowing the conditions on which you got it?—The document was read to us, but of the fifteen men who got land not one of them understood five words that were in the letter. It was in English.

16,811. And what is the nature of the document?—I cannot say.

16,812. Was it a lease?—I understand that the document explained the conditions on which we were getting the land.

16,813. Could you hand in a copy of the document?—[Mr William Mackay.—I will hand in the principal.] I have not a copy.

16,814. Have any of them got copies, or a copy of the document?—Well, if they got it none of them admitted to me that he had received it.

16,815. And did you get one yourself?—No.

16,816. I would like to ask you with regard to the sixteen tenants who were in Glenlic before it became one farm, do you know what was the extent of the land they held?—I cannot state the extent of the arable land each held, but I know that they held ground in common.

16,817. Do you know if they crossed the watershed into the Glen-Affaric side for grazings?—No, they went to the watershed. The Strathglass water flowed east and the Kintail water flowed west: they went to the watershed.

16,818. Do you know how they managed their grazings; did they manage them in common?—It was cattle and a few sheep they had on the hill at that time.

16,819. How did they manage them?—The cattle were left outside all winter: they went up to the top of the glen in the winter time and fed them.

16,820. Then when they sent their cattle out in summer to the grazing had they one man to manage the whole of them?—Everyone went with his own cattle to the shieling in the summer.

16,821. And when did they bring home the cattle?—When the snow would drive them home.

16,822. Did they winter all their stock without sending them out of the country at all?—Oh, yes.

16,823. They always wintered their stock?—Yes. There was no word about the low country then, among the people of this place.

16,824. How far, can you tell us, does the forest to which you refer to come down; how low does it come?—It comes down to our houses.

16,825. It comes down to your houses?—Yes.

16,826. Was any land that was before in cultivation put out of cultivation when the forest was made?—Yes.

16,827. Where is that land?—The land about Morvich, the low-lying lands of Morvich.

16,828. Are they parks, enclosures?—Yes, parks.

16,829. And these parks were cultivated up to the time the land was made into a deer forest, were they?—Yes, every kind of crop.

16,830. Is there much extent of that land?—About 40 acres of land about Morvich.

16,831. And has any crop at all been grown on that since?—Nothing until we planted a few potatoes now.

16,832. Is it out of that land that you are to get your acre-and-a-half?—Yes, it is out of these 40 acres we have got our lots.

16,833. How many people have entered into this arrangement by which they are to get one-and-a-half acres?—16.

16,834. Could you give us the names?—Yes.

16,835. If you please?—Alexander Maclennan, Morvich; Donald Macrae, Morvich; John Cameron, widow Flora Macrae, Alexander Macrae, Murdo Macrae, Farquhar Maclennan, Katherine Maclennan, Duncan Macrae, Donald Macrae, widow Katherine Paterson, Roderick Macleod, widow Christina Fraser, Farquhar Macrae, Donald Macrae (the third), Alexander Maclennan.

16,836. Would you kindly state again how long you have been shepherd upon this ground?—Forty years.

16,837. And you will then know the land more intimately than perhaps any person?—I am as well acquainted with it as any one can be.

16,838. And are you of opinion that it is suitable land for the purpose which we have in view?—I think it is.

16,839. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Are we to understand that you would propose to occupy the whole forest of Invershiel with new tenants?—Oh, I don't think that at all, I am only referring to the land where I have been myself.

16,840. Both sides of Glenlic?—Both sides of Glenlic are very suitable for tenants.

Glenshiel.

Donald Macrae.

16,841. Would you propose that farm only up to the watershed on both sides?—If we got as much as we wanted we had no notion to go beyond the watershed.

16,842. And the new tenants should live in the glen, Glenlic?—Yes, it would be quite convenient for them to live in the glen.

16,843. You know the glen well, is it subject to floods?—Floods come out there at times undoubtedly.

16,844. Could you winter all your sheep there?—Yes, and our sheep were always wintered there.

16,845. Does sheep farming pay as well as it used to do?—No.

16,846. And you don't expect that the new tenants will be as successful sheep farmers as former tenants there?—No, they would not succeed as well as the old tenants.

16,847. The Chairman.—When that land was under sheep were the hoggs wintered there?—Yes, and I was herding them there myself. The best of the highest part of the hill ground of Morvich is there; I was wintering my hoggs on the highest ground on the Morvich lands there.

16,848. You remember the forest before that land was made part of it?—There was no forest there.

16,849. I thought there had been an old forest?—No.

16,850. Mr Forsyth.—You said that you wintered the hoggs in Morvich on the highest ground there. Was not that rather in the beginning of winter and that afterwards they were taken down?—No, we didn't take them down until they were brought down to Morvich at the clipping time.

16,851. You kept them on the higher ground all the winter?—Yes, the wedder hoggs.

16,852. Is it the whole available land at present of Inchcro and Morvich that you wish to use as a club farm and holding?—We did not want except what we thought we would require; what we consider is necessary for us.

16,853. I ask that because if it only goes to the watershed on the north side it appears there would be a good deal of land now in that forest left unused?—There are a great many people in the country and they would take that land.

16,854. Could they take the ground northwards over to Glen-Choinneachain and Loch-a'-Bheallaich on the north?—Is it Glen-Cannich?

16,855. No, not Glen-Cannich but the glen to the north of the River Cro, Glen-Choinneachain?—There is no such glen there.

16,856. What is at present the north march of the forest?—Glen-Choinneachain, we call that the Beallach.

16,857. Is it down to there that you propose to occupy?—No, we did not propose to go over there; what we wanted is the south side of Glenlic.

16,858. The south side up to the watershed?—Yes.

16,859. With the river Cro as the northern march?—We don't want any land to the north of the river Cro; we take the river Cro as the northern boundary.

16,860. Mr William Mackay (representing the Trustees of Sir J. T. Mackenzie)—Do you remember in July 1892 that the cottars of Morvich met me at Morvich?—Yes.

16,861. The first time that I came to Kintail after I was appointed factor?—Yes.

16,862. Were you among them?—Yes.

16,863. Did they then apply for this big park of Morvich?—Yes.

16,864. Well, do you remember my having another meeting with them in January last?—Yes.

16,865. Were you present then?—Yes.

16,866. And I told you then that your application was granted?—Yes.

16,867. Did you then get all you had applied for?—It was the park we applied for that was given to us then.

16,868. And the grazing?—Yes.

16,869. And the carse ground?—Yes.

16,870. Do you know the extent of the big park?—I saw the park measured on two occasions and the measurement was 18 acres.

16,871. Do you know Mr Joass, the surveyor, whom I brought up to measure it?—Yes.

Glenshiel.

Donald Macrae.

16,872. If he says that the large arable park of Morvich is 20½ acres, do you believe him?—Yes, to be sure. If the man knows his business we should agree with his measurement.

16,873. You have got the carse lands; do you know that they extend to 40 acres according to his measurement; would you believe it is 40?—Is it down to the sea?

16,874. Yes?—I can hardly believe there are 40 acres there.

16,875. Then the hill grazing, you have got that between Morvich and the forest, haven't you?—Yes.

16,876. And it extends, do you know, to about 275 acres?—I don't know the extent.

16,877. You were present at this meeting on the 20th July last. Do you remember that I then read a statement to the crofters and explained it in Gaelic?—There was not one word of Gaelic in the statement from the first one that went in to the last that came out.

16,878. I am not referring to the meeting at Morvich House; that was a later one. Do you remember me having this meeting in January on the high road at Morvich, that very stormy day?—Yes.

16,879. Did I not speak in Gaelic that day?—Yes.

16,880. And explained what I intended doing?—Yes.

16,881. Now did I then mention—this is the statement that I had then and that I read—did I then mention—and did you understand—that you were to have the grazing of a cow and follower?—Yes.

16,882. You also understood that you were to have an acre and a half in the big park?—Yes.

16,883. And you understood that you were to have the carse for cutting hay or pasturing your cattle as you thought proper?—We might graze our cattle there, but we could not cut hay on it.

16,884. But you understood you were to have the carse?—Yes.

16,885. Now, did I mention that you were to pay £2 a year for all that?—The second time you were there we understood the rent was to be £2.

16,886. I will put in this statement, my lord. Then the third time that I came—did I mention the second time by the way that I would write leases?—You told us that the last occasion.

16,887. You can write your name?—Yes.

16,888. Is that it? (Showing missive of lease).—I think it is.

16,889. Now, did I read that document to you before you signed it?—You read it in English.

16,890. Did I not explain it in Gaelic?—Not one word.

16,891. Did you tell me you did not understand it?—I was two or three from the last of those who signed it, and as the others did not put the question I did not.

16,892. Well, do you know the lease contains exactly the terms of this statement which I read to you in January and explained?—I could not say that, as the lease was not read to me in Gaelic.

16,893. The Chairman.—Exactly, I don't see how, if he did not understand the lease read in English, he could tell whether it agreed with the terms of the other document?

16,894. Mr William Mackay.—Not if he did not understand it. You had no land before I gave it to you in January last?—No.

16,895. Well, you said that there was suitable land in Glenlic all the way up to the bounds of Strathglass, for crofters?—Yes.

16,896. Do you know whether the whole of Glenlic was ever occupied as arable land?—At the uppermost dell or bend of the river at the height of the glen there are signs of cultivation.

16,897. That is, there are low meadow grounds near the river?—There is low lying ground all over the banks of the river there. [The Chairman.—Are these signs of cultivation visible still?—Yes.]

16,898. Are these lands subject to floods?—I will say that they are more liable to floods now than they were in the time I refer to.

16,899. Do you know that, starting from Glenlic, from the keeper's house at the very top of the glen and coming down for about a mile, the whole of that country is often entirely under water, the low lands of it?—The river will be very high indeed when it will be like that.

16,900. You have seen that, haven't you?—Yes, I have seen it.

16,901. Now, do you know that Glenlic is subject to large land slips?—That will not make any great harm.

16,902. You know the names of the places in Glenlic?—Yes, every foot.

16,903. Will you tell us where the people lived in the olden times?—Yes.

16,904. Where tenants lived, I mean?—Yes; Achayark, Stoireag, Carnahahan, Carnabhaile-gheamhraidh. That is all on the Morvich side, but I haven't mentioned those on the north or Inchcro side.

16,905. Well, just proceed?—Beginning at Inchcro it is Achayark again (there is an Achayark on each side of the river), Glascharn, Eilean-Fhearchair, that is all that were on the Inchcro side.

16,906. Now, do you remember people living at all those places except Inchcro?—No, they were cleared out of those places about six years before I was born.

16,907. Were the tenants that you mentioned upon the south side of Glenlic some of the sixteen who had the farm of Morvich?—Yes.

16,908. They were part of the sixteen?—Yes.

16,909. Now can you say that they were really tenants or sub-tenants, that they had the land at all?—They were paying rent; they had Morvich.

16,910. When was it that they last had Morvich?—They lost Morvich when the sixteen lost it.

16,911. But when?—Seventy-three years ago.

16,912. How long had they the farm before they were turned out?—I cannot tell the year exactly.

16,913. Do you know any people who would join you in taking the south side of Glenlic?—Yes.

16,914. Who are they?—Some of those who are in company with me at present.

16,915. That is some of those who have the Morvich Park?—Yes.

16,916. How many acres would you require?—If we got about five acres arable and hill pasture.

16,917. How many tenants would join you in this club farm or whatever you want?—I am sure I would get ten or twelve at any rate.

16,918. And are they all able to stock their shares?—Yes.

16,919. Would you be able to get on the south side of Glenlic, five acres arable land for each man?—Yes.

16,920. And they would be able to build houses for themselves?—If they got land on the south side of Glenlic they could occupy their present houses.

16,921. You mentioned that there were 40 acres arable land at Morvich put out of cultivation when the forest was made?—The park that we got ourselves was included in this 40 acres.

16,922. Then there is also included in those 40 acres the park on the other side of the high road?—We included the two parks.

16,923. And that is under cultivation now?—Munro the keeper there cuts hay for his cows in one of those parks and plants potatoes for himself.

16,924. And corn?—He sowed a bit of oats this season.

16,925. Then do you know that the other arable land (what you call arable land, what I call meadow land), is cut off from the forest by a high deer fence at Morvich?—Yes, there is a deer fence going down Morvich.

16,926. The Chairman.—When was it erected?—Last winter.

16,927. Mr Sutherland.—I notice that you make a distinction between arable land and cultivated land at the present moment? [Mr William Mackay.—No, between arable land and meadow land.]

16,928. Do I understand that it is land that was under cultivation at one time that you call meadow land? [Mr Mackay.—Not the whole of it.]

16,929. What do you mean by arable land when you use the term? [Mr Mackay.—I mean land suitable for cultivation. It may be old arable that has not been under cultivation for many years.]

16,930. I understood the witness to have said that this land in his memory was under cultivation for many years, and you now call that meadow land? [Mr Wm. Mackay.—Part of the land is meadow.]

16,931. What I want to know is what you call arable land because you made a distinction that made me believe that you applied it to land that was cultivated within the memory of the witness? [Mr Wm. Mackay.—I don't quite follow.]

16,932. It is not quite germane to the point now, but I wish for my own information to know what you mean definitely by arable land? [Mr Wm. Mackay.—What I mean is either land now under cultivation or old arable land that might be cultivated.]

16,933. But don't you see that you applied the term meadow land to the land which the witness saw himself under cultivation? [Mr Wm. Mackay.—I am not aware that I did.]

16,934. It may be my mistake, but I wanted to be clear on the point.

16,935. Mr William Mackay.—You have seen the whole of the low lands of Morvich under water?—Yes, one time, the big flood.

16,936. You know that a great deal of gravel was thrown upon it last year?—Yes.

16,937. And that the dykes were carried away and the fences? He is answering me in English, my lord. Here is the man who did not understand the lease.

16,938. Mr Sutherland.—The lease is written in very technical language.

16,939. Mr William Mackay.—Not this one I think. You will be delighted with the simplicity of its terms. (To witness). You saw the whole of the low lands at Morvich under water last year; I want to know whether the dykes were carried away and the fences?—Yes.

16,940. And do you know that the dyke of the big park has been repaired by the proprietors since the cottars got it?—Yes.

16,941. Did you hear me asking the cottars whether they would not help me in repairing it?—I heard some talk of it.

16,942. That I suggested that when they had nothing else to do they might do a little themselves?—You were speaking about that undoubtedly.

16,943. Do you know that you all declined to give any assistance?—Yes, we refused. We would do it for payment such as was given to people from other places.

16,944. Do you know that I offered you £20 if you would repair this dyke yourselves?—There may have been some others in the company who heard it, but I did not hear it.

16,945. Would you be surprised to know that the repairing of that dyke round the field that you got cost £59, 6s. 11d. to the proprietor?—I did not hear it till now.

16,946. You know it cost money, of course?—Yes.

16,947. Well, are you dissatisfied with the lease as I explained it to you? You pay £2 and you know what rights you have?—I am not sure until I hear it in Gaelic.

16,948. Perhaps, my lord, I had better read it to him, because I was not aware until this morning that there was any dissatisfaction, quite the contrary. (To witness). Well, you get the right of grazing of one cow on the arable land; do you understand that?—Yes, I understand that.

16,949. Then, in the second place you get the right in common with the other cottars of cutting hay from the big park, you get an acre for that; you understand that?—Yes, I understand that.

16,950. Mr Sutherland.—Excuse me one moment. The right in common with the other names we have got?—There are 17 altogether.

16,951. Mr Wm. Mackay.—I may explain here that they cast lots for separate hay lots after the leases were signed. (To witness). Then you got also the carse ground among you; did you understand that?—Yes.

Glenshiel. — Donald Macrae.

16,952. Your cattle are on it now, I saw them on. Then you have got the piece of land at Allt-a'-chruinn and pertinents connected therewith in which your dwelling house is erected. You have got a house and little garden there, haven't you. Have you got a garden?

16,952*a*. 'I am Donald Macrae, Seana-Ghoirtean.' That is your writing?—Yes.

16,953. The Chairman.—But you got him to say a minute ago that another signature was his?

16,954. Mr William Mackay.—I did not, my lord; I asked him the question. It was another Donald Macrae's lease I showed him first, it appears.

16,955. The Chairman.—You put it in the affirmative form.

16,956. Mr Sutherland.—Is this a different sheet of paper. [Mr William Mackay.—This is a different sheet of paper.]

16,957. The Chairman.—Well, but it is a pity to ask a man such a question. It is an awkward question. [Mr William Mackay.—There are so many Donald Macraes.]

16,958. The Chairman.—Is that your signature?—(In English) Oh, yes.

16,959. Mr William Mackay.—You have got a garden have you at Seana-Ghoirtean?—Yes.

16,960. And you have got the potato ground in the big park?—Yes.

16,961. Well, for all that the lease says that you are to pay a yearly rent of £2, payable at Whitsunday in each year; do you understand that?—Oh, yes.

16,962. Well, that is really all that is in the lease.

16,963. Mr Sutherland.—Why should not the tenants have got the leases? [Mr Wm. Mackay.—I may mention that the delay is possibly mine.]

16,964. But that ought to be done privately, surely?—Privately?

16,965. Yes?—Well, I sent a copy to one of the tenants. The leases were signed not very long ago, and we are copying them in the office; that is the fact of the matter. In connection with the Whitsunday term we are exceedingly busy, and in connection with these matters we have to take our own time.

16,966. The Chairman.—I don't think we need take up more time.

16,967. Mr William Mackay.—Are you dissatisfied with that lease as you understand it now?—If my rent is £2 I will have to expend other £2 in hay for the wintering of my cow.

16,968. Then, do I understand you to say that for this right of grazing a cow and a follower and for your potato ground and hay ground and the carse ground and your garden, you think £2 a year too much?—One cannot say that it is dear altogether.

16,969. The Chairman.—I must interpose the remark that this is not a tribunal for fixing fair rents, Mr Mackay. We are not here dealing with rents at all.

16,970. Mr Wm. Mackay.—I think this examination may do good. I never heard of a complaint at all. (To witness). Do you remember that the cottars of Morvich were in the habit of getting a bit of potato ground and cow's grass from the tenant of Morvich, from Patrick Macrae?—Some of them were.

16,971. Do you know what they paid him?—Some of them were paying nothing.

16,972. And did some pay?—Yes.

16,973. What did they pay?—I can't tell.

16,974. Do you know it was £5 a year?—No, none of them ever paid £5 to my knowledge. The one who paid the highest price for a cow there paid £4.

16,975. That is for the cow alone?—A cow and a stirk.

16,976. Do you know Murdo Macrae, cottar, Morvich, owner of 'the pet lamb?'—Yes.

16,977. If he told Lord Napier's Commission that they paid £5 a year for that right, would you believe him?—Yes.

16,978. The Chairman.—I want to ask you this. Your acquaintance with the glen extends over the last forty or fifty years?—Yes, I knew it all my time.

Glenshiel. — Donald Macrae.

16,979. And you were a shepherd for forty years?—I was a shepherd since I was able to do shepherding.

16,980. Now during all your time as shepherd would you, speaking from that experience, say there is any danger in settling crofters in that glen from the frequency of floods?—I can say there is no danger.

16,981. Then if you were offered a settlement there, you would not be afraid of taking it from the risk of flooding?—No, no.

16,982. There was a great flood about two years ago?—Yes, that was the biggest flood we ever saw in this country.

16,983. I was just going to ask that. Did you ever in your experience see any flood so large?—No, not a flood that came within ten feet of it.

16,984. Now speaking of your experience of previous floods, what is the average extent to which a flood goes when the lands are flooded, over the low ground? [Mr William Mackay.—Perhaps your lordship might preface that by asking the breadth of the low land from the river.]

16,985. Yes, I will do so. What is the breadth of the land from the river?—Some of these dells are but narrow; others are pretty broad.

16,986. What is the average breadth, would you say?—There are two or three parts up from Morvich; it is at the broadest part about 300 yards I would say.

16,987. In your experience have winters sometimes passed without any flooding worth speaking of?—Yes, we used to cut meadow hay on the river banks and we would have to watch for fear of the river sweeping it away.

16,988. That was hay gathered in at the margin of the river?—Yes, and oats in the park we have referred to in the neighbourhood of Morvich.

16,989. When floods do occur, what time of the year are they most likely to happen?—We are more liable to floods in winter, but one might come in autumn.

16,990. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—I understood the witness to have said that since Morvich was made into a deer forest, this park that was got this year was never cultivated, nor any portion of the arable land of these parks until this year. Would your lordship ask him if that is strictly accurate, or did he not within the last ten or twelve years see this park cultivated on one occasion at least?

16,991. The Chairman.—Have you seen this park at Morvich cultivated during the last ten or twelve years at least on one occasion?—I did not see it cultivated since Mr Winans got it as a forest. [Mr William Mackay.—That was in 1882.]

16,992. Eleven years ago?—Eleven years past.

16,993. Mr Donald Macrae.—Might I ask him this? Did the cottars turn out between this and a dozen years ago, and cultivate this park in a body, in one day?—Some of them turned out, I was not there.

16,994. Did you see them do it?—No, I was not there.

16,995. Did you see the crop there?—Yes.

16,996. Was it a good crop?—Yes, very good. [Mr William Mackay.—That is the field they have now?]—Yes. [Mr William Mackay.—That is the best land on the west coast of Scotland.]

16,997. Exactly so. In what condition were the cottars of Morvich then? [The Chairman.—He says they had no land.]

16,998. Was an arrangement made after that whereby you got potato ground and a cow's grazing each? [The Chairman.—Do you refer to the lease, Mr Macrae?]

16,999. No. Did the cottars get land on Invershiel farm here?—Yes, they got land on Invershiel here.

17,000. What more did they get besides arable land there?—They also got Achghiurain up Glenshiel here for the cutting of hay.

17,001. And have the cottars been in the occupation of that arable land on the Invershiel farm and in the enjoyment of this cow's grazing for the last ten years till now?—Yes.

17,002. What rent were they charged?—Very little. One year they got it for a penny.

17,003. Well, next year, and so on?—For years they were returning the money to themselves in order to fence their lands with it. [The Interpreter.—The receiver of the rent handed it back to the payer.]

17,004. And when the fencing was done, were you asked to pay it to the parish minister for the relief of the poor of the parish?—Yes.

17,005. The Chairman.—And did you pay it?—I was not in that club myself, but I know how the thing was done.

17,006. Mr Donald Macrae.—You were a shepherd, were you?—Yes.

17,007. You were not in the reverence of half-an-acre. [The Chairman.—No, no, I don't want an answer to that question.]

17,008. Did the landlord ask a penny of that money?—I believe he did not.

17,009. Now with regard to this new arrangement, this lease, is it a fact that you were in the possession of a house and stance and garden, and between half an acre and an acre of arable land and a cow's grazing rent free until you got this land under lease this year?

17,010. The Chairman.—I will put that question. Before you got the lease had the other cottars each the site of a house and a garden and a cow's grazing and potato ground?—Yes.

17,011. Mr Donald Macrae.—Had they it rent free?—From the proprietor?

17,012. Was it rent free or was there a rent for it?—Yes, to the landlord, and he gave it to them one year for a penny.

17,013. Now let me ask you this with regard to this. [The Chairman.—You are speaking of the time of the lease?]

17,014. I am coming now to the lease. Were these men deprived of what they had under that arrangement when they got this park and the carse and the cow's grazing?—Yes, they gave it up. [Mr William Mackay.—They give it up themselves.]

17,015. The Chairman.—Did they give it up willingly?—I hadn't it, and I don't know whether they gave it up willingly or unwillingly.

17,016. Mr Donald Macrae.—Was it Mr Mackenzie who is now procurator-fiscal for Ross-shire that tried to negotiate this arrangement first?—Yes.

17,017. Did you hear it said among these cottars that Mr Mackenzie said that unless they would give up the old rights and take this park they would not get an inch of land on the estate?

17,018. The Chairman.—I can hardly allow that question, Mr Macrae. Observe how remote it is. 'Did you hear it said that Mr Mackenzie said.' [Mr Donald Macrae.—It is only two years ago.]

17,019. It is not the time at all. It is the remoteness of the knowledge.

17,020. Mr Donald Macrae.—Might I put it in this form? Did you hear Mr Mackenzie negotiating with the cottars?—Yes, I was present.

17,021. The Chairman.—Did you attend to what was passing?—Yes.

17,022. Mr Donald Macrae.—What did he say?

17,023. The Chairman.—Did you hear what he said?—I have a cow's grazing from the landlord rent free.

17,024. Did you hear anything Mackenzie said?—I heard him say that we would get a part of the park.

17,025. Mr Donald Macrae.—Exactly so. Who was to get the rest of it?—The rest of it was to be paddocks for the forest folks.

17,026. Did Mr Mackenzie say anything about the old rights they had; the arable land and the cow's grazing they had on Invershiel farm?

17,027. The Chairman.—Did you hear Mr Mackenzie say anything about your right to arable and cow's grazing on Invershiel farm, and if so, what?—He may have said something to the other tenants, but I had not any on Invershiel.

17,028. Did you hear it?—I did not hear it.

17,029. Mr Donald Macrae.—Do you remember Mr Winans being at law with Sir James Mackenzie, about the cottars of Invershiel, of Morvich? Glenshiel.

17,030. The Chairman.—I beg your pardon, Mr Macrae, but what is the object of this? Donald Macrae.

17,031. Mr Donald Macrae.—My object is this, my lord, that, as I understand it, Mr Winans tried in terms of a lease between himself and Sir James Mackenzie, to enforce the lease by getting Sir James to clear out and to evict all the cottars on the farm of Morvich; that this civil action was raised in the Court of Session; that Sir James succeeded in resisting the action on the plea that it was as easy legally for the cottars to evict Sir James as it was for Sir James to evict the cottars; that they had a tenure of a most peculiar character, similar to the tenure of the native Indians in Hindostan, immemorial rights that it was impossible for a Highland landlord to deprive them of even in the Court of Session. On that plea it was shown that these men had the right to a house stance and garden and to a cow's grazing. The point was raised with reference to four particular cottars and the plea succeeded, and Mr Winans failed in getting the cottars evicted, and my object in raising that point and in entering into it is to show that Highland rights, immemorial rights, traditional rights that came down from generation to generation were frittered from the people, were impetrated, if I may use the term, unless it is too strong, were taken from the people by a lease this year. So that it is not a case of getting land; it is a case of depriving them of lands to which they had an inherent right in lieu of lands that they get under lease, and of which they may be deprived next year, notwithstanding the lease. And we have here, my lord, every facility for giving your Royal Commission the benefit of this. We have Mr William Mackay as representing the estate; we have Mr Burns as representing Mr Winans; and we have these cottars.

17,032. The Chairman.—And is that to help us in the present inquiry, do you think?

17,033. Mr Donald Macrae.—I think so.

17,034. The Chairman.—In what way?

17,035. Mr Donald Macrae.—Well, in this respect at any rate. I think at least as much as other points that have been raised, at least for instance the point that there were no small tenants in a certain glen at any time.

17,036. The Chairman.—That is a very important question and that question has been pretty fully gone into.

17,037. Mr Donald Macrae.—The lands may be suitable or available, whether tenants were there or not; holding direct from the landlord or holding at all.

17,038. The Chairman.—I quite agree with you.

17,039. Mr Donald Macrae.—And a great deal of time has been spent in discussing that question.

17,040. The Chairman.—I don't wish to enter into a controversy with you.

17,041. Mr Donald Macrae.—I should be very sorry to enter into controversy unless it was to be of use.

17,042. The Chairman.—Let me hear your question to this witness. I doubt to begin with whether he knows very much about it, but you can judge of that better than I can perhaps.

17,043. Mr Donald Macrae.—Do you remember Mr Winans endeavouring by an action in the Court of Session to force the landlord to evict the tenants in Morvich?

17,044. The Chairman.—Were you a party to an action in the Court of Session?—No.

17,045. Mr Donald Macrae.—Does he know the parties whom Mr Winans tried to force the landlord to evict?—(Witness). Was it those that had the cattle you refer to? He was wanting to clear the place altogether, to clear out every one.

17,046. Are you aware from what you could gather about that action at that time that Mr Winans failed, through the plea of the landlord that these tenants had rights from time immemorial?

17,047. The Chairman.—You wish to prove from this witness the result of the action, to prove whether he is aware of the result of the action? [Mr William

Glenshiel. Donald Macrae.

Mackay.—I may explain, my lord, that the action is recorded in the Court of Session books.]

17,048. The result of the action, you know, we can get from the proceedings in the Court of Session, and that is the proper evidence of it.

17,049. Mr Donald Macrae.—I shall go now to this lease. Did Mr Mackay himself ask at first that the gamekeeper should have a share with you of this park and of this grazing?—I did not hear that.

17,050. Did Mr Mackay send a letter to your township, or did he say to the cottars that you would have this grazing and this park entirely to yourselves, and that the gamekeeper would have no right at all to the park or to the grazing? [Mr William Mackay.—I should like to see the letter; I think it is only fair to myself that the letter should be produced.]

17,051. The Chairman.—Have you got the letter?

17,052. Mr Donald Macrae.—I have not got the letter, but I was told by the cottars that the letter was in the township.

17,053. The Chairman.—But this witness is not one of the cottars?

17,054. Mr Donald Macrae.—He is one of the cottars now.

17,055. The Chairman.—But not before. Did you see any letter from Mr Mackay?—What was the letter about?

17,056. Mr Donald Macrae.—The question was put. Did you see the letter. He wants an explanation of the letter?—I did not see a letter.

17,057. Did you cottars object to the gamekeeper having anything to do with the lands that you had to get from the proprietor?

17,058. The Chairman.—I must put this question. Was any proposal made by Mr Mackay or anyone else with regard to the occupancy by the keeper of any part of your lands?—Mr Mackay never mentioned it to us.

17,059. Mr Donald Macrae.—Did you cottars object to the gamekeeper having anything to do with these lands? The gamekeeper is in along with you?

17,060. The Chairman.—It is not a matter of objecting; he says he never heard any proposition about the gamekeeper being there.

17,061. Mr Donald Macrae.—My lord, Mr William Mackay has here made a definite statement. I have his letter here.

17,062. Mr William Mackay.—Will your lordship take down Mr William Mackay's statement and his letter produced. I gave these cottars the big park of Morvich last January. There is not a gamekeeper on the estate who has got an inch of that park; it is entirely divided among the cottars, but there is one gamekeeper who has got a cow's grazing along with the cottars' grazing, and that was explained to them and that is in their lease; he has two cows perhaps.

17,063. The Chairman.—Was it explained to you by Mr Mackay that a gamekeeper was to share the grazing but not the park with the cottars?—No.

17,064. Mr Donald Macrae.—May I read now Mr William Mackay's letter? [The Chairman.—Yes.]

'Queensgate Chambers, Inverness, 9th June 1893.—
'To Mr Donald Macrae, "Dearg," Morvich, Kintail,
'Stromeferry. Dear Sir. Your letter of 1st inst.
'arrived during my absence from home and was 'acknowledged in my absence. I herewith send you
'copy of the lease entered into between the trustees
'and yourself. The leases with the other cottars of
'Morvich are in the same terms and you will observe
'that the right of grazing which you and the others
'have is a right to graze one cow each on the part of
'the lands of Morvich therein specified; said right
'being let to you in common with the other cottars or 'other person to whom a right of grazing has been or 'shall hereafter be granted by the trustees. When
'Alexander Grant, the gamekeeper at Morvich, was 'engaged he got the right to graze two cows' (not one, as Mr Mackay says,—Mr William Mackay.—I corrected myself). Yes, we will have further corrections no doubt before we are done, 'ngaged he got
'the right to graze two cows on the lands in question' and not on the carse and pasture as Mr Mackay said a moment ago, 'on the lands in question, and that 'right he still possesses. My information is that the 'grazing is much more than sufficient for you all.
'Yours faithfully. William Mackay.'

Glenshiel. Donald Macrae.

17,065. The Chairman.—Did you ever see that letter?—I never heard of the letter till now.

17,066. The provision is (1) the right of grazing one cow in that part of the lands of Morvich between the Obbephuil Bridge and Aultachruinn Burn lying to the south or southwest of the public road leading from Morvich to Shiel, and between said road and a line drawn parallel thereto . . . said right being let to the said second party in common with the other cottars or other persons to whom the right of grazing has been or shall hereafter be granted by the said first parties; (2) the right in common with the other cottars or others . . . . . of cutting, manufacturing into hay, and carrying away grass from the 'Big Park' at Morvich . . . . . in such quantities as the said first parties may determine . . . . . ; (3) the piece of ground at Seanaghortan and pertinents connected therewith on which said second party's dwelling-house is erected; and (4) a piece of potato ground extending to 2 roods or thereby, situated in said 'big park' which piece of potato ground shall be fixed and set apart by the said William Mackay.

17,067. Mr Mackay.—My lord, I may explain that Grant, the keeper, had the grazing of his cows upon that ground before the cottars got it, and they were quite aware of that; his cows were there every day. There is as much grazing now as will keep three times their stock, I believe. The Commissioners will see it for themselves.

17,068. Mr Donald Macrae.—I have some question to ask Mr Mackay bye-and-bye; for instance, how 20 acres divided by 17 comes to $1\frac{1}{2}$ acre.

17,069. The Chairman.—That may come afterwards, but have you anything more to ask this witness?

17,070. Mr Macrae.—Oh, yes, my lord, I come now to the question of the high ground. [To Witness]. Do you know what portion of land Strathglass way attached to Morvich in the olden times?—Fionna-ghleann and Caimban.

17,071. You spoke about sixteen tenants being in Morvich. Had they the grazing of Fionna-ghleann and Caimban as well as Glenlic?—The sixteen who were there latterly did not go beyond the march of Morvich itself. [Mr Gordon.—That is the watershed, is it?—Yes.]

17,072. How long is it since Fionna-ghleann and Caimban were cut away? [The Chairman.—He says the sixteen tenants did not go beyond Morvich proper; your question assumes that they had at one time done so]. But before that, the witness said in the most distinct manner that Fionna-ghleann and Caimban did at one time attach to Morvich. [The Interpreter.—The sixteen to whom he referred did not possess it, but before their time it was so held]. My question is how long is it since Fionna-ghleann and Caimban were taken from Morvich?—Long since then.

17,073. How long?—Seventy or eighty years since.

17,074. Did those down at Morvich work this farm by having tenants there or by having hired servants, shepherds?—They worked it themselves.

17,075. Did they keep a stock of sheep there?—Yes, cattle and sheep and goats.

17,076. Did they at one time winter all their sheep in those glens? [The Chairman.—In what glens?]—In Fionna-ghleann and Caimban. [Mr Mackay. These are on the estates of The Chisholm, my lord]. [Witness]. Ever since the sheep stock was brought up there they wintered them and summered them.

17,077. Did the sheep stock winter well there? Did they turn out first class sheep?—Yes, they wintered hoggs in the highest part of it at Caimban; and a man was here yesterday who used to winter there

17,078. Give his name?—James Boa.

17,079. Have you wintered hoggs from Morvich on Fionna-ghleann or Caimban?—No, but I was wintering them on Fraoch-choire and up from the keeper's house.

17,080. Did your flocks winter well at Fraoch-choire?—Yes, unless in an exceptional year with very heavy snow.

17,081. Did they turn out first class sheep?—Yes, they were better than those they winter to-day in the low country.

17,082. Did you hear what Alexander Macrae, the first delegate of the day, said with regard to other parts of the glen?—Yes.

17,083. Do you agree with him in what he said?—Yes.

17,084. What high grazings attached to Dornie? [The Chairman.—The first question is, did any high grazings attach to Dornie?]—I am not so well acquainted at Glen-Carnoch and over there as in this quarter.

17,085. Do you know Keir?—Yes.

17,086. Do you know Allt-beath?—Yes

17,087. Do you know Ath-nam-Muileach?—Yes.

17,088. The Chairman.—Do you mean Allt-beath in Glen-Affaric?

17,089. Mr Macrae.—Yes. (To Witness). Were sheep wintered there in your day?—Yes, they were always wintering sheep there until Mr Winans took it as a deer forest.

17,090. The Chairman.—Were you ever there wintering sheep?—No, I was not off the Kintail estate.

17,091. Have you known of sheep being wintered there in your time?—Yes.

17,092. Where were these sheep from?—They belonged to Mr Williamson who was the sheep farmer at Knochfin in Strathglass.

17,093. Any other farmer?—Dr Fraser was tenant of the other side of Glen-Affaric,—Dr Fraser, Kerrow.

17,094. And did he winter sheep there?—Yes.

17,095. Any one else?—No, the glen was tenanted by the two of them, Mr Williamson and Dr Fraser.

17,096. Mr Macrae.—Do you know the farm of Longart that Mr Robertson of Comar had?—I only saw Longart once.

17,097. Did you know of any shepherds in Longart?—Yes.

17,098. Did these shepherds winter their sheep in Longart?—Yes.

17,099. And did these sheep turn out first class?—Yes, very good.

17,100. Now, I should like to ask you this, In your opinion and from your knowledge as a shepherd, do you believe or do you not believe that it would be a wise thing to go back upon these old customs and to have a portion of these high glens attached as a grazing to croft townships on the west coast, as was done in the days of old? [The Chairman.—You mean as hill grazing?]—As hill grazing. If I may be allowed to make the remark just now, my lord, to assist matters,—the word summer sheiling has been used as a c ch-word here. [The Chairman.—I hope not by me]. Not by you, my lord; by no means. But as I understand it, your Royal Commission is very anxious to ascertain all the facts of the case, and it is quite possible that by the misuse of a catchword the Commission may be misled. Now what I want your Royal Commission to follow out,—what I should like, at any rate, in the most respectful manner to suggest is that your Royal Commission should follow out that these were not properly summer sheilings; the people wintered their flocks there.

17,101. The Chairman.—Would you deem it wise for crofters on this side to have grazings in such a place as Allt-beath, for any use to which these grazings may be put,—summer use or any use?—I would consider it very suitable.

17,102. And could the grazings be worked easily?—Yes.

17,103. Mr Macrae.—Might I now, my lord, put this question? Supposing in the future a township was created in Glenlic on the club system, would it be wise that the township should have say one or two of those glens and could they work it profitably by a hired servant, a shepherd? [The Chairman.—Now, which glens do you mean?]—Say Fionna-ghleann and Caimban.

17,104. The Chairman.—Suppose a township to be in Glenlic. Could they profitably graze sheep by a sheep manager or a shepherd in Fionna-ghleann or Caimban?—Yes.

17,105. Would you desire to enter into such an arrangement yourself, and take part in it?—Yes.

17,106. Mr Macrae.—I do not think it necessary to follow the subject any farther, as my purpose is served.

17,107. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You told us first that in taking up the grazings of Glenlic the tenants would live in the glen, but afterwards we understood you to say that they would work the grazings from their present houses?—Yes, I say that.

17,108. But which do you mean would be the most advantageous way of working the grazing; new houses to be put up in the glen, or working from the old houses?—It would be fully as suitable for them to remain where they are.

17,109. So that it comes to this, that you would be satisfied if you got additional grazing on the south side of Glenlic, those who live in the houses at the mouth of the glen?—Yes.

17,110. The Chairman.—When you were a shepherd in Glenlic, how many hirsels were in the glen?—Three; the whole stock was three hirsels, between Morvich and Glenlic.

17,111. Had you one hirsel?—Yes.

17,112. And was there a shepherd for each of the other two hirsels?—Yes.

17,113. How many sheep were in your hirsel as a rule?—At the time of the clearing when Mr Winans got the land my hirsel consisted of about 400.

17,114. Was that about the average size of the hirsel?—I believe that in the time of Peter Macrae the hirsel consisted of 700.

17,115. What was the largest hirsel in your time?—That was the largest number, 700, and these were ewes.

17,116. I was just going to ask what kind of sheep you had, blackfaced or cheviots?—Cheviots.

17,117. What was the size of the other two hirsels?—They were bigger than my hirsel, but they were not so good.

17,118. You had the best hirsel?—The best in the winter time, because it was in the low lying lands,—lower than the others.

17,119. Your hirsel was the lowest?—Yes.

17,120. How many sheep you suppose the glen would keep now?—Is it the whole glen?

17,121. Both sides.—I explained that Morvich does not cross the river.

17,122. I will put it in this way, could you work three hirsels in the glen now, suppose you had it?—Oh, yes.

17,123. And would you expect the glen from what you know of it to have the same carry as it had in the time when you were shepherd?—No.

17,124. What carry would you expect now?—Very little, because the place has gone wild on account of the long time it has been lying waste.

17,125. It has become to a certain extent unsuitable for sheep from its long disuse or change of use?—Yes, until it is burnt.

17,126. Could you say from your own knowledge the number of sheep that the glen would now winter?—By the use of the word glen you include Inchcro?

17,127. Well, how many would the south side winter?—600 or 700.

17,128. The whole of the south side?—Yes.

17,129. And the north side?—The north side, Inchcro side, would winter 800 or 900.

17,130. Mr Gordon.—That would be 1500 on the two?—Yes.

17,131. But the wintering of these sheep would mean that there were no crofters in the glen?

17,132. Suppose you wintered 600 or 700 on the south side and 800 or 900 on the north side, would that imply that there were to be no crofters settled there, and that the land was to be devoted solely to grazing?—There would be no tenants' houses in the glen if they were to be wintered.

17,133. Now suppose you had sixteen crofters there, with two cows each and two followers—that is sixty-four cattle, and sixteen horses—how many sheep would you suppose it would carry?—It would not be so many with that.

Glenshiel. Donald Macrae.

17,134. How many would you take off for that?—I will take 200.

17,135. Would 200 sheep be equal to sixty-four cattle and sixteen horses? How many sheep do you allow for each cow?—Ten.

17,136. Well, that is 600 sheep that would come off; and how many for each horse?—Twenty.

17,137. Then for every crofter settled there you would take off sixty sheep in respect of two cows and followers, and a horse?

17,138. I think it is too high; but if we take half the number?—It would take off the one half of the total number that I mentioned.

17,139. The Chairman.—Now, I want to go back to this lease for a moment, which I think you say is signed by yourself; it bears to be signed on each page 'Donald 'Macrae.' The second clause of the lease is this:—'On 'the other hand the second party (that is yourself) 'hereby binds and obliges himself to flit and remove 'himself from the potato ground presently possessed by 'him at the first day of April 1893, and from the other 'subjects presently occupied by him at said term of 'Whitsunday 1893, and to pay to the said first parties' '(that is to say, to Sir James Mackenzie's Trustees) 'for the whole subjects hereby let a yearly rent of two 'pounds, and that at the term of Whitsunday 1894, for 'the occupancy of the said potato ground from the 'first day of April 1893, to the first day of April '1894.' Did you flit and remove from the potato ground which you occupied when the lease was entered into?—I did not have potato land; I had potato land from the sheep farmer so long as I was shepherd to him.

17,140. Did you flit and remove from any subjects occupied by you?—No.

17,141. Mr Mackay.—That is a general lease; some of them did remove, and they got new lands instead.

17,142. The Chairman.—The lease provides in plain English that he is to flit and remove,—it may or it may not be intended, but he is to flit and remove from the potato ground presently occupied by him, and to flit and remove from the other subjects presently occupied by him. I wish to know if he flitted and removed from any subjects occupied by him in terms of this lease?—Is it land?

17,143. Potato ground and other subjects?—I did not remove the breadth of the paper. I had not it to leave.

17,144. Mr Mackay.—Do you know that the cottars were under lease before I gave those leases at Whitsunday last?—I don't know as to that; I was not one of them.

17,145. Do you know that they were?—They were under lease for the bits of ground they had over here.

17,146. The Invershiel cottars?—Yes, and some of the Morvich ones.

17,147. You do not know that all the cottars who have got leases now, at least those of them who had land were under lease from 1887? [The Chairman.—He does not know.]

17,148. Well, you mentioned that you gave cottars' rents to the parish minister, and that he divided them among the poor?—That is what I was hearing; I did not pay him myself.

17,149. Well you are quite correct. You know that that was in Sir James Mackenzie's time?—Yes.

17,150. You know that he is now dead and that the estate is in the hands of Trustees?—Yes.

17,151. You were present at my first meeting with the cottars in July of last year? [The Chairman. He admitted that already, quite distinctly.]

17,152. Do you remember that you explained to me that Mr William Mackenzie only wanted to give you half the field?—We were speaking about that.

17,153. Do you remember that I at once said I thought you ought to have the whole, and that I would recommend the Trustees to give you the whole?—You said you would do what you could for us.

17,154. And do you remember that you cheered me, and that one old woman cried out 'God bless him'?—Yes, I heard that. Glenshiel. Donald Macrae.

17,155. Then about the tenant of Fionna-ghleann and Caimban, when did they give up these lands, did you say?—It was long before my time.

17,156. And it was long before the sixteen tenants gave up Morvich?—I was some time,—not a very long time.

17,157. And I think you said that the Morvich tenants gave up seventy-three years ago?—Yes.

17,158. So you don't know really about Caimban and Fionna-ghleann of your own knowledge?—There were no tenants there in my time, although I know the place.

17,159. You mentioned that John Boa who was here yesterday wintered sheep at Caimban and Fionna-ghleann?—James Boa.

17,160. Was he at the time shepherd for Mr Williamson, the tenant of the farm?—Mr Williamson.

17,161. Mr Sutherland.—You stated that the old farm Morvich and Glenlic could not carry as many sheep now as it did before. I wish to ascertain whether the calculation you gave afterwards was based upon its carrying power in your time or what it is now?—It would not be suitable to put many sheep on the place at all now, but cattle; the place has gone wild.

17,162. And do you think that small tenants, such as you have indicated, would be in a better position to put cattle on it than a large farmer?—I think small tenants would keep the marches better and would herd the cattle up the glen better.

17,163. And are you of opinion that the pasture would get better or get worse under cattle?—The pasture would get better; the cause of the pasture going back is the scarcity of cattle.

17,164. So that you think the pasture would improve in the future if such an arrangement were carried out?—Yes, I think so.

17,165. Then in regard to the number of sheep's grazing allowed for a horse and a cow, was it the custom of the large farmers when they allowed a horse and a cow to these shepherds to take off a number of stock equal to what they denoted?—The shepherds did not have these in my time, it was a sheep allowance they had, and a money payment.

17,166. Did you yourself see in your experience any sheep taken off a farm because of a cow or a horse given to a shepherd?—No, but I always heard that it was ten sheep that were set for grazing as against a cow.

17,167. But never in your experience did you see the sheep taken off in order to make room for a cow or a horse?—No.

17,168. Mr Gordon.—You stated that the number of sheep would be reduced to 750, that would be barely fifty sheep to each of the sixteen tenants. Now what rent would you consider each of the tenants should pay for the fifty sheep, two cows, two stirks, and a horse?—For the rent that I would state I would not get the place, and, therefore, I will not mention it.

17,169. The Chairman.—Would you tell it in confidence to me?—I cannot tell.

DUNCAN MACRAE, Allt-a'-chruinn, Morvich, Kintail (43). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.) Duncan Macrae.

17,170. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I am a cottar.

17,171. Do you pay a rent?—I was paying no rent till now, but rent has been put on me this year.

17,172. Are you under lease?—I signed a lease.

17,173. You heard the evidence, I think, of Donald Macrae the last witness?—I did.

17,174. And do you agree with his evidence as to Glenlic?—Yes.

17,175. Do you wish to make any addition to that evidence?—I think not, I am quite satisfied with it.

17,176. And you concur in the evidence?—Yes.

17,177. Mr Sutherland.—Where is Allt-a'-chruinn?

lenshiel. —It is in the march of the forest about 1½ miles from here, on the march between Morvich and Invershiel.

17,178. Are you practically included in the cottars we have already heard about? [Mr Mackay.—Yes, Allt-a'-chruinn is included in the Morvich cottars.]

17,179. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—There are two or three points that the last witness did not mention in regard to Morvich and Glenlic, some places he did not mention. Do you know the Morvich side of Glenlic well?—I know it middling well.

17,180. Do you know Lonamon?—I am not good at remembering specific names.

17,181. Do you mean that you do not remember the name?—I have heard the name.

17,182. Do you know the place?—I saw the place.

17,183. Is there old arable land there?—There is arable land there.

17,184. Is there old arable land there?—There is.

17,185. With the remains of cultivation?—Yes, I would know that it had been cultivated.

17,186–8. How many acres of old arable would you say there are there?—I cannot specify the number. There is also another place there where there is a lot of arable land.

17,189. How many acres would you say?—I cannot specify the acres.

17,190. Is there old arable at Lubnatalloch?—There is.

17,191. Is there old arable at Dalnastrone?—There is.

17,192. Is there old arable at Gorstan Vargortan?—There is.

17,193. Do you know the Inchcroe side?—Yes.

17,194. Do you know Lubnapair?—Yes.

17,195. Is there old arable land there?—There is.

17,196. Is all this old arable land in Glenlic low-lying and subject to flooding, or are there some portions that are considerably above the level of the low-lying land?—Some of it is so high that the flood never comes on it and never did.

17,197. The Chairman.—And the rest of it?—The river comes over its banks in some places.

17,198. In other words, some of the old arable is subject to flood, and some of it is above flood?—Just so.

17,199. Mr Macrae.—Did Mr Mackay tell the people at that time that it was arranged about this park that the gamekeeper was to have a double portion of it?

17,200. The Chairman.—I must put this question myself. Did Mr Mackay say anything about the gamekeeper?—I did not hear him.

17,201. Mr Mackay.—Will your lordship ask him if he is a mason.

17,202. The Chairman.—Are you a mason to trade?—Yes, generally.

17,203. Were you bred a mason?—I did not learn it as a trade.

17,204. Do you know it as a trade?—I do.

17,205. And you take mason work whenever you can get it, I suppose, at a reasonable wage?—I do.

17,206. Mr Sutherland.—Would you build a house if you got a place to build it in Glenlic? [Mr Mackay.—He has got a very nice house where he is.]—I could.

17,207. The Chairman.—Would you be willing to leave your present house and build a new house in Glenlic if you got land there?—If it came before me I would leave my present house and build a new house in Glenlic if I got land there.

17,208. Are you anxious to leave your present house, or upon the whole would you prefer to remain where you are?—Considering the trouble, I would prefer to live where I am if I got the land and be permitted to live where I am.

17,209. What did your present house cost you?—I built it myself and did the carpenter work, and spent about £20 in timber for it.

17,210. And it is a new house, I suppose?—Yes, it is not quite finished yet. [Mr Mackay.—Covered with felt.]

17,211. Mr Sutherland.—How many apartments are in the house?—I have two rooms and a closet downstairs, and two attics above. Glenshiel. Duncan Macrae.

William Mackay, Solicitor, Inverness, Agent for Sir James T. Mackenzie's Trustees—examined.

17,212. The Chairman.—You wish to submit a statement, I understand?—Yes, in regard to the Kintail estate. It is as follows:—

This estate forms a small portion of what was originally the estate of Kintail, belonging to the Earls of Seaforth. Originally Kintail embraced not only the whole of the present parish of Kintail, but also the present parish of Invershiel, which was disjoined from the parish of Kintail in 1726. The estate was purchased by the late Sir James Thompson Mackenzie from Seaforth's Trustees in 1869, the price paid by him being £70,000.

The present estate consists of (1st) the farms of Invershiel, Achnagart, Strathanloan, and Cluanie, all let as one holding to Messrs Alexander Maclennan and Duncan Macrae, as a sheep farm, at a rent of £625; (2nd) the deer forest of Morvich and Inchcroe; right of fishing on the river Croe, and the shooting over the said sheep farm all let to Mr E. S. Bowlby, at a rent of £1000, but which after deduction of Keeper's wages and rates payable by the proprietors may be put down at £880; (3rd) Cluanie Inn let to Roderick Morrison at a rent of £8; (4th) potato ground, and hay ground, and cow's grazing let in allotments to twenty-five cottars paying from £1, 15s. to £2, 2s. each; and (5th) potato plots let to two cottars paying 3s. 9d. and 1s. 6d. respectively.

The whole rental of the estate amounts to £1563, 16s. 9d. The estate extends to 25,881 acres, which, approximately is now divided as follows, viz.:—the deer forest 11,000 acres; the sheep farm 14,521 acres; cottars' allotments and land over which they have a right of grazing 360 acres, in addition to the right of the Invershiel cottars to graze their cattle on the farm of Invershiel.

The estate consists of the valley of Glenlic, and the half of the valley of Glenshiel, with very high mountains, several of which are about 3000 feet in height, and one of which, Scour Fhuaran, reaches a height of 3505 feet. The valleys are low, deep, and narrow, and the mountains rise very sharply and are, as a rule, exceedingly steep. The low lands are greatly subject to floods, and are often destroyed by landslips, and gravel and stones washed from the mountain sides. The rental of 1727, to which I am about to refer, shows that the two tenants who then occupied Morvich retained a considerable portion of the rents 'for damage by waters.' Since I became factor in June 1892, I have expended about £600 in repairing and renewing the embankments which protect Morvich and Inchcroe from the rivers Croe and Conaig. The arable land at Morvich and at Invershiel is divided among the cottars, except a field at Morvich in the occupancy of the proprietors, and on which they grow potatoes, corn, and hay. The cultivable land at Achnagart is cultivated by the shepherd and gamekeeper there. There is no other land worth cultivating on the estate, except some plots connected with Cluanie Inn.

Kintail has always been a grazing estate, and very little corn has ever been grown upon it. That little has for many years been virtually discontinued.

From a rental prepared by the Forfeited Estate's Commissioners in 1727, it appears that the land now forming the estate then consisted of nine holdings which were in the occupancy of the following tenants, viz.:—

1. Achnagart, John Macrae.
2. Easter Achghiuran, Morris Macrae.
3. Wester Achghiuran, John Macrae.
4. Wester Achghiuran, Evan Maclennan.
5. Little Achyark, Malcolm Macrae and Murdo Macrae, joint-tenants.

Glenshiel. William Mackay.

6. Meikle Achyark, Ann Macrae, Duncan Macrae, and John Macrae, Junior, joint-tenants.
7. Inchcroe, Duncan Macrae.
8. Morvich, Farquhar Macrae and Alexander Macrae, joint-tenants.
9. Invershiel, Colin Murchison.

A Kintail Rental, dated 1756, shows that in that year what is now the estate of Kintail was divided into eight holdings, as follows, viz.:—

1. Achnagart occupied by Donald Macrae and Christopher Macrae.
2. Easter Achghiuran occupied by Duncan Macrae and Alexander Roy Macrae.
3. Wester Achghiuran occupied by Donald Macrae and Farquhar Macrae.
4. Invershiel occupied by John Macrae and Alexander Macrae.
5. Morvich occupied by Donald Dearg Maclennan and John and Donald Maclennan.
6. Little Achyark occupied by Alexander Maclennan, Donald Maclennan, and Donald Macleod.
7. Meikle Achyark occupied by Duncan Maclennan, Farquhar Maclennan, and Donald Macrae.
8. Inchcroe occupied by Christopher Macrae, Alexander Maclennan, Donald Bain Macrae, and John Du Macrae.

I have not been able to find any rental of the estate between 1756 and 1856, when the estate first appears in the Valuation Roll. In 1856 the holdings were:—

1. Invershiel, including Cluanie, let to Farquhar Macrae.
2. Morvich let to the heirs of Alexander Macrae.
3. Achnagart let to Donald Macrae.
4. Grazings of Inchcroe let to Messrs Hunter and Williamson; and
5. Cluanie Inn let to Donald Munro.

These holdings practically continued until 1874, when Achnagart was added to Invershiel and Cluanie. In 1882 the lands of Morvich and Inchcroe, which had for several years been occupied by Mr Allan R. Mackenzie (now Sir Allan Mackenzie), were let to Mr W. L. Winans, by whom they were converted into a deer forest. Mr Winans occupied them until 1892.

It does not appear from the rentals that there ever were any crofters or sub-tenants, properly speaking, on the estate. The tenants of Morvich, however, sometimes gave potato ground and grazing for one cow to certain cottars for which each paid £5 a year. When the Crofters Act passed in 1886, the cottars had no ground or grazing whatever. In 1887 Sir James Mackenzie gave them lots of land for potato ground at Invershiel, and hay land at Inchcroe and Achghiuran. Last year the cottars applied for increased holdings, and the following lands were divided among them, viz.:—

1. The big park of Morvich extending to 20½ acres.
2. Carse ground at Morvich extending to 40 acres.
3. Arable land at Invershiel extending to 8 acres, and
4. Hay parks at Achghiuran extending to 17½ acres.

In addition to these lands the cottars have a right of cows' grazing on the lands of Morvich and Invershiel.

In addition to the tenants of Invershiel and Cluanie Inn, and the twenty-seven cottars who have holdings, there are now on the estate six gamekeepers and eight shepherds. All the keepers except one have houses of their own, and four of the shepherds are in the same position.

(Signed)

William Mackay.

That is my written statement, but I should like to add just one word with reference to these leases of which a previous witness spoke, if your lordship will allow me.

17,213. Certainly?—It was only in June of last year that I was appointed factor on this estate.

17,214. Who was the previous factor?—Mr William Mackenzie, solicitor, Dingwall, now procurator-fiscal of Ross-shire; and on the occasion of my first visit to the estate in July a deputation of the cottars met me, and informed me that they had applied, in Mr Mackenzie's time, for the big park at Morvich.

17,215. You knew nothing of that before?—No, I knew nothing of that. They told me that Mr Mackenzie expressed his willingness to give 12 acres of the park, but that he wished to retain the remainder as an enclosure for the forest ponies. I then carefully went over the field, and I took a statement from the cottars, counted them, and made a calculation from which I was perfectly satisfied that they would require the whole park and also the carse, which is very good grazing ground extending to about 40 acres, and the cows' grazing; and I informed them that in my opinion they ought to have the whole park, and that I thought we could arrange to make another enclosure for the ponies in the forest. On my return to Inverness I wrote to the trustees expressing my opinion, and they at once authorised me to give the park to the cottars, and, in fact, to carry out my own scheme. I returned to Kintail on the 20th of January, and I again had a meeting with the cottars; and after meeting them I got back to the hotel and wrote this statement which I hold in my hand, giving the subjects exactly as contained in the leases, and the tenants and their rents; and I met them again on the high road at Morvich, read this statement to them, and, if I remember well, explained it in Gaelic. In any case, I satisfied myself that they perfectly understood what rights and subjects they were to have, and what rent they were to pay. As I have already indicated in a question which I put, they cheered me, and I heard one old lady shout out 'God bless him.' I thought that they were perfectly satisfied, and until to-day I never heard that they were discontented in any way whatever. As they approved of this statement, I returned to Inverness and prepared new leases almost entirely upon the lines of the old leases which they had since 1887, the only exception being that I increased their holdings, and to some extent increased their rents, the rent that I put upon the arable land which they got, the cow and follower's grazing, and the hay ground, being only £2. So far as I saw, they were delighted with the reasonableness, as they thought it, of that rent; and that is how the matter now stands. Glenshiel. William Mackay.

17,216. Have you any objection to advise your clients, the trustees, to have these cottars now placed under the Crofters Act, notwithstanding these leases?—I don't think the trustees can do it; I don't think they can do anything at all as trustees in that way. Were it not that they are trustees, the cottars' rent would now probably be paid to the poor, as Sir James Mackenzie did. We cannot do it, and we are hampered considerably, I may mention, in the management of the estate by the fact that it is administered by trustees.

17,217. Are you of opinion that it would be advisable, if it could be fairly done, to let these cottars have more land still?—I don't think there is any arable land that they could possibly get with any advantage to them; and, so far as the grazing is concerned, I think they have really quite sufficient.

17,218. How do they live? They don't subsist by their holdings, I suppose?—Oh, no, these are simply their homes.

17,219. How do they live?—Some of them are tradesmen, some are shepherds, they informed me that they were engaged on sheep farms here and there, and I understand that some of them are fishermen.

17,220. Is their livelihood precarious?—My understanding is that they are pretty well off. You have heard that they were able to stock ground.

17,221. Are they not rather in the position of small tenants, crushed into very narrow areas, and surrounded by large tracts of ground in the occupation of other people?—Well, there is no doubt but the area occupied by them is very small compared with the whole estate. But I don't think they are in poor circumstances; I understand they are pretty comfortable.

17,222. Don't you think a man with a rent of £2 would be much the better of getting some more land, and a higher rent, of course, if the land could be legitimately got for him?—Yes, if they became farmers entirely, but, as they are, I think they have as much land as is good for them. In fact, one of them told myself, after the division of the Big Park, that I had given too much for some of them.

17,223. Do you think that, speaking of them generally, they are satisfied with their present position since the enlargement was granted?—I know that, when I visited this place in January, after I read this statement to them, they were delighted. I also know that when I came back again, I think in June,—May or June, I forget which,—when they signed the leases, that they were delighted, every one of them.

17,224. Have any of them expressed dissatisfaction with the state of matters they are now in?—Not one. The only thing approaching a complaint that I have ever heard of was a letter which I received in Inverness, from one "Donald Dearg" I think, requesting me to mention whether Grant, the keeper at Allt-a'-chruinn, at Morvich rather, had a right of grazing over the place, and I replied that he had, and that he had the grazings before the cottars got it, and I sent him a copy of his lease. The leases are all in the same terms.

17,225. How was the £2 rent fixed?—I fixed it myself, and I may mention that, in fixing it, I thought that I was—

17,226. Erring on the safe side?—Erring on the favourable side to them. I can honestly say that I desired to see them as comfortable as possible.

17,227. Still, I suppose you concede that their holdings are narrow, and their position is risky?—I do not think there is any risk about their position.

17,228. I mean their livelihood,—more so than you would like to see it if their position could be improved?—So far as livelihood is concerned, I should like to see the most of them engaged in fishing.

17,229. Do any of them engage in fishing?—Some of them do.

17,230. Have they boats?—Yes.

17,231. Is that fishing round the doors, or do they go abroad?—I really do not know whether any of them go away. Loch Duich used to be a very good fishing loch, but I am sorry to say it has not been so of late years.

17,232. Do you know if any of them make anything by the disposal of fish?—I know one does.

17,233. Of course they catch fish here and there for their own use, but beyond that do they make anything of fishing?—I know there is one man, I don't remember his name now, but he fishes and sells.

17,234. What—herring or white fish?—I think principally white fish.

17,235. Where does he sell them?—Principally to people in the district, Miss Mackintosh of the hotel, and others.

17,236. Neighbours?—Neighbours and the hotel.

17,237. I suppose you concede that they have no proper facilities for the transit of fish, looking to the perishable nature of the article?—Not for large quantities. Salmon, for instance, is sent on by the mail gig and in carts to Strome-Ferry.

17,238. But I think you would agree they have no proper facilities?—No, I must confess that they have not proper facilities; it is a long way round by boat to Strome-Ferry.

17,239. And a troublesome water to navigate?—And part of it a troublesome water to navigate.

17,240. Then the fishing is not a reliable source of livelihood?—I don't know that it is for all.

17,241. Leaving the fishing aside for the moment, is their source of livelihood occasional labour?—I think they could almost always get labour.

17,242. Where?—If they would only go away, like other people.

17,243. I do not mean going away, but round about?—Well, occasionally round about.

17,244. Do you know any one of their number who may be said to have constant employment within five or ten miles of his holding?—Well, I don't know the people very well yet; I have only been five or six times here since my appointment as agent.

17,245. You had no knowledge of the estate, and no connection with the estate, prior to your appointment?—None whatever. I had driven through it once or twice, but that was all.

17,246. Do any of them get employment in connection with the deer forest?—I think there are two of them who are employed as gillies, if I remember well.

17,247. Do they make anything by the sale of what they are able to sell—I mean produce of any kind—to the tenant of the forest, when there was a tenant?—I should think not, except eggs.

17,248. That is a trifle if it did exist?—That is a trifle. But I may mention, with reference to the labour, that when letting the contract of one of the river embankments on my very first visit in July last year, to Mr Murchison, Dingwall, I made it a condition with him that he should employ local men, and he agreed; and I stated this to the cottars in Mr Murchison's presence, so that there would be no mistake about it. The next time I came I was very much surprised to find that they were not employed, and, upon my making inquiry, I was informed, and it was admitted, that, at the very first pay, they were not satisfied with the wages that he offered them, and they threw up the work.

17,249. What were the wages?—I think it was 3s. a day, but I am not certain. But it was the same wages that he was giving his other labourers.

17,250. Are you of opinion that, at a rent of £2 a year, they are able to take that rent out of their holdings without extraneous labour?—Well, if they did nothing else I don't suppose they could live upon the holdings, but these are more their homes, and I may mention that they have got beautiful cattle; your lordship will find as good cattle among the crofters here as you will find anywhere.

17,251. But you think you could not depend on getting the rent except with the aid of money made outside the home?—Oh, I don't think so; I don't expect that they should, without labouring elsewhere, be able even to live upon the holdings; but, as I have already explained, it is really a home for them.

17,252. You did not fix these holdings as fishers' holdings solely?—Well, I had more the fisher in my eye than anything else. I hoped the herring would go back to Loch Duich, as it had left. We know the habits of the herring, that it goes and it comes.

17,253. It generally goes?—It sometimes goes, but it also returns occasionally.

17,253*a*. Mr Shaw Stewart.—There was a point that arose a little earlier in the day, not with regard to your statement, but about a dyke which you were examining a witness about. You asked about a dyke which you offered them £20 to help to repair, and you afterwards said it cost £59. Are we to understand that you offered the £20 wages as an equivalent for the £59 worth of work?—What I thought was this. The dyke had been destroyed by the flood, and I said to these people,—'Now, of course, you will have to enclose 'this for yourselves,' and they said,—'Oh, we cannot 'do that.' 'Well,' I said, 'surely among seventeen of 'you you can do that.' Oh, they could not do it. After a little talk I said,—'Well, I don't know what it will cost 'you, I will give you,'—I think it was £20, but I should not like to be very definite,—at any rate I named a sum,—and no, they would not do it. The only man who really expressed his willingness to help was the last witness here, the mason, and I was very pleased with him; he was the only one who offered to come forward. Well, at last I said we would do it ourselves, and I ordered the thing to be done, and I have got the account,—£59 odds.

17,254. The Chairman.—Was it not rather too much to ask or expect them to do for £20 what has cost you £59?—I did not know what it would cost, and they could do the work themselves.

17,255. You offered it as a round sum if they would do it?—Quite so. I did not want to have more contracts, and I wanted them to do the work with their own hands.

17,256. You think now, from the cost to which it has put the estate, they were wise to refuse?—Well, I thought they might do something for getting the land.

Glenshiel. William Mackay.

17,257. Mr Shaw Stewart.—The repairs would ultimately benefit themselves?—Solely benefit themselves; they were entirely for their own benefit.

17,257*a*. Mr Sutherland.—I understand you have not been long responsible for the management of this estate?—No, only a year last month.

17,258. So that practically you cannot give us very much information about it?—No, I do not know very much about the past history of the estate.

17,259. You gave us the distribution of the land on the Kintail estate,—11,000 acres in deer forest, and 14,521 in sheep farms, and 360 acres otherwise disposed of. That land, the 360 acres, is principally in the occupation of small holders?—Yes.

17,260. How many, do you know?—There are seventeen at Morvich, and ten at Invershiel; only I have to explain that, of the seventeen, there are two without cattle.

17,261. And you stated that 275 of these 360 acres were disposed of by the arrangement recently made?—Oh, more than that; there are 275 acres over which they have a right of grazing, and they have also got the big field at Morvich,—20½ acres, that they never had; they have got the carse,—40 acres; and they have got additional land at Ach-a'-ghiurain.

17,262. But all these are included in the 360 acres?—Yes.

17,263. And how many families do you say have got the 360 acres?—Well, there are twenty-seven holders. Some of them, I think, are bachelors, and some of them old maids.

17,264. That, of course, may be a result more than a cause?—No doubt.

17,265. That is a distribution of the land which I think you would not be inclined to justify yourself, and which I don't call upon you to justify, seeing you had not the disposal of it; but do you think it is a reasonable distribution of the land?—Yes, I do not think the estate could be put to better purpose.

17,266. From what point of view; from the landlord's point of view?—From all points.

17,267. Do you refer to those twenty-seven families on the 360 acres?—Well, I have already stated that, in my opinion, they are just as well off, if not better, than they would be if they had larger holdings.

17,268. Would that doctrine not apply to the lessee of the deer forest and the sheep farmers?—No.

17,269. Plenty land is good for them, but not for the families of the small tenants?—It may be good for suitable people, you know, suitable tenants.

17,270. What determines the suitability?—Various things.

17,271. Such as—?—Knowledge of sheep farming, knowledge of farming generally, capital.

17,272. Do you think the witness who gave his evidence about sheep farming to-day had not the necessary knowledge of sheep farming?—My opinion of them is that they have not.

17,273. They could not?—I don't think that they would succeed as sheep farmers.

17,274. Then may I ask who occupies the 11,000 acres that is deer forest?—Mr Bowlby.

17,275. Has he got sufficient knowledge to qualify him for such a large share of the estate?—He is a capital shot; he is a good sportsman.

17,276. That is the qualification?—That is the qualification.

17,277. Do you say there are no good shots in Kintail?—Too many, I am sorry to say.

17,278. But if it is a qualification, you cannot have too many of them?—That is not the only qualification.

17,279. Then you said you would prefer to see the people fishermen?—I should like to see them fishermen.

17,280. Why, may I ask?—Because the sea is very near, and it used to be a splendid loch this.

17,281. And then they would not ask the land?—No, I don't object to their asking the land.

17,282. What you object to is their getting it?—I have gone as far as I could; I have given them more than ever they had.

17,283. But you are quite prepared to justify the present distribution of land upon this estate of Kintail?—Oh, yes. Glenshiel. William Mackay.

17,284. And is it better than it was when you became factor for the estate?—I think so. I think perhaps the holdings were a little too small, and some had nothing at all.

17,285. But you think the limit has now been reached?—I think so. I recommended what I thought proper, and my recommendation was given effect to.

17,286. So you think the distribution of the land in the estate of Kintail is the best that could be devised?—I think so, upon the whole.

17,287. Then I don't know that you were speaking from experience with regard to the principal productions of the estate, they seem to be floods and landslips?—They are the most striking productions.

17,288. Have you ever seen a flood or a landslip?—I have seen the upper part of Glenlic almost one lake in October last year.

17,289. Have you ever seen the fen country of England?—Yes, and I have seen it flooded, but there is very little arable land there.

17,290. Have you seen the valley of the Shannon in Ireland?—No, I have not.

17,291. Would you be surprised to learn that it is sometimes a lake from end to end, and yet contains some of the best wheat growing land in Ireland?—And I suppose the valley of the Nile too.

17,292. So I suppose the flooding is not continuous?—Well, in Kintail, you do not know when the flood is to come; and not only that, but when I was dividing lands at Achaghiurain, I did not know of these floods, and I divided what I thought the best land among the cottars, the low, rich looking land, and they came to me afterwards and said,—'We cannot take that 'land, because it will be flooded in autumn, before we 'can get our hay off.'

17,293. And then are the floods worse in this valley you refer to than anywhere here about?—Yes, I don't know that you would get two glens so liable to floods on the west coast, for this reason:—The rainfall is very high, and the mountains are very steep; and the rain comes down on the mountains and flows very rapidly down to the rivers, so that the spates come suddenly, and then the channels are choked. You will find, if you take notice to-morrow, there are certain portions of the river Croe where the rocks come in and form what you might call a narrow neck, and the stream is obstructed and thrown back, and floods the land.

17,294. You are aware, I have no doubt, that we have heard this same objection in almost every place we have gone to from people holding your views?—You did not hear it regarding Glen-Urquhart, where I gave evidence.

17,295. Well, but we heard it in regard to Glen-Moriston?—The heights of Glen-Moriston are very much the same as this, but the glen is much wider.

17,296. You saw the people settled at Glen-Moriston, cultivating land along the banks of the river?—Oh, yes.

17,297. We hear it with regard to one valley, and we see the result there?—Well, but if they wish to see the result it would be worth the Commissioners' while to come here in September or October or January and see for themselves. I don't ask them to take my word for it at all; I saw it once, and it was quite sufficient.

17,298. In other words, you have stormy weather here in winter, and good weather in summer?—Yes, only the summer is exceedingly short, and they don't cut the grass till August, and don't get it off the ground till September or October, and if they are not very lively it is taken off in a different manner.

17,299. But you have heard the statement that a witness only saw one flood?—I did, I think his memory must have been at fault.

17,300. You who have no connection with this place, say that you know better than the man who is a native?—I have examined witnesses, and they themselves objected to taking certain lands because of the floods.

17,301. Were they in Glenlic?—No, in Glenshiel.

17,302. Now, with regard to the conditions of the lease entered into with Mr Winans; the essential point was, if I am right, the deprivation of this right that the people had of being on the land there. Have you any objection to show us the lease entered into on the part of the estate and Mr Winans, respectively?—Not the slightest, but I do not quite understand the preliminary part of your question.

17,303. I will put another question. You remember the part which the chairman read out of that lease?—Of Mr Winan's lease?

17,304. Of the lease entered into between you and he cottars of Morvich?—Oh, yes.

17,305. The connection between the two I want to establish is this. Do you admit the construction of that case put before us by Mr Macrae?—No, if you look at the lease you will see that all the leases, which I will put in if you like, are on the same footing. That clause as to giving up their previous lands was framed by myself.

17,306. For what purpose, may I ask?—For this purpose.—Some of the cottars held lands before Whitsunday last other than the lands they now have. There was a general redistribution and division of the land, and that clause was put in with the purpose of making it perfectly clear that they were to give up the old lands and take their share by lot of the whole. The whole thing was put into one pot. That was the object.

17,307. Could you not have superimposed the new right upon the old one?—No, for this reason, that I wanted that each cottar should have the whole of his arable land in one place, not a spot here and a spot in another place.

17,308. Is it the fact that it was upon these rights they had before that the case was determined, as stated by Mr Macrae?—Oh, no. When the case was determined they had no rights whatever, so far as I can see. And in 1887 the lands were let to them on lease, which is very much the same as the present lease. The lease that your lordship has now read took away from them the arable lands which they had from 1887, and gave them new arable lands, possibly the same, if the lot fell accordingly; but in any case, the whole lands available were disposed of by lot among them all.

17,309. But could you give us the terms of the decision of the Court of Session?—I have never read the case, but it is open to all of you in the Session Cases.

17,310. The statement is, as you understand, that the decision of the Court of Session rested upon certain rights that the people had, and that those rights were taken away by this lease?—Well, I don't believe that that is the case at all. I do not see, as a lawyer, how the decision could possibly rest upon the plea put forth. But the process in the case can be seen, and the decision can be seen.

17,311. What I want explained is the object of that second part of the lease?—The object, I have explained, is simply to take from them the lands they had up to Whitsunday 1893. The case which Mr Macrae referred to was decided about ten years ago, long before I had anything to do with the estate.

17,312. And was it not founded upon immemorial possession of certain subjects?—No, I do not think so; because, according to the law of Scotland, immemorial possession without a written title is nothing.

17,313. I beg to differ?—I am talking from the legal point of view; you are talking from a theorist point of view.

17,314. I am talking from the constitutional point of view?—You will find that his lordship will agree with me on that point.

17,315. That is possible; all lawyers may agree. But you deny that the object of this agreement was to take away such right as the people possessed?—Most emphatically; and I add this, that I never heard of this action at the time except, of course, seeing the newspapers. I had not that action, or the alleged old rights of the people, in view at all.

17,316. But have you got the documents of this case?—No, I have never read them, and have never seen them.

17,317. But you will have in your possession a copy of the lease by which certain things were granted to Mr Winans?—I think I can give you the lease in favour of Mr Winans. I am certain I can.

17,318. Then I take it that generally you are not in a position to give us assistance in finding out land suitable under the question referred to us?—No, I am not.

17,319. Mr Maccallum.—Do you say that you are satisfied that the present distribution of the land among the people is the best possible?—I think so, under the circumstances.

17,320. And there are 11,000 acres of it under deer?—Yes.

17,321. That is Inchcro and Morvich?—Yes, with the mountain lands, you know.

17,322. Have you in view now that that land is withdrawn altogether from productive uses, all these 11,000 acres? They produce really nothing?—Oh, well, it is production in a sense.

17,323. What does it produce?—It produces rent.

17,324. That is for the proprietor?—Yes; and whatever goes to the proprietor is spent upon the estate, the bulk of it. Last year almost the whole rent was spent on the estate.

17,325. But the land itself though is laid waste; is not that so?—No.

17,326. Well, what does it produce?—It produces deer, and deer produce rent.

17,327. Well, is there any comparison now between the value of the deer that it produces and the value of the old products?—Do you mean the sheep stock?

17,328. Yes. Are the deer as valuable?—Well, the fact that 11,000 acres of almost the highest and most rugged land in Scotland is withdrawn from sheep farming does not affect the market, not to the extent of a penny. We have got far too many sheep in the United Kingdom at present.

17,329. I don't ask just now how far it affects the price of mutton, but you say it is the best possible use to make it a deer forest, and I bring under your view that there is very little produced now by these 11,000 acres, whereas formerly the land produced food supply.—It produced a little, and the last tenant of it, except the proprietor, became bankrupt. For the benefit of the people all round he made himself bankrupt. Sheep farming does not pay. I beg your pardon, it was not the last tenant, it was Mr Macrae.

17,330. Is it always the case that when the farmer fails that the land must be poor?—Not always.

17,331. Actually they fail although they may have very good land?—Oh, quite.

17,332. So that the lands of Morvich and Inchcro may be very good for all that for farming?—So far as the illustration goes.

17,333. So far as the fact of the failure goes, it does not show anything with regard to these lands?—It shows that that farm did not pay.

17,334. It did not pay him, but it does not show that the pasture of these lands is not good?—Oh, no; of course, the pasture can be seen.

17,335. Then you say it is high and rugged ground. Does it not come down to very near the sea-level?—Yes, but the great bulk of it, the most of the land at the sea-level consists of these two fields to which I have already referred.

17,336. We have heard about it from other witnesses, but there is a good deal of land beside the river Cro.—Yes, that is quite true, but it is meadow land, and very narrow; it is a narrow glen.

17,337. Then a witness before us to-day said that the land has deteriorated very much?—I believe so.

17,338. Since it was put under deer?—Under sheep.

17,339. Under deer, he stated; that having been laid waste under deer, it would not now winter so many sheep.—Well, I understood him to say under sheep; if he said under deer I do not agree with him, because grazing rather improves under cattle and deer, but not under sheep. [Mr. Gordon.—I think his meaning was want of burning.—Possibly parts of it required burning.]

17,340. But, having been laid waste and the stock withdrawn, that the land is not now so suitable for

Glenshiel.

William Mackay.

sheep farming, he said?—Well, the longer a farm has a rest from sheep the better it becomes. Sheep don't improve land.

17,341. Yes, but we have this opinion of the practical farmer, you differ from him?—If he referred to deer I differ from him.

17,342. Yes, he said that now, having been laid waste, and the stock withdrawn, that it would not winter?—Except this, that it is possible that the heather has not been sufficiently burned; there may be something in that.

17,343. But in any case, under this management, which you say is the best possible, this witness says that the land has very much deteriorated, and will not now carry the stock it used to carry when it was managed in a different way?—Well, then, I differ from him entirely.

17,344. But he knows the ground?—And so do I, a good part of it.

17,345. What experience have you had of it; you have not had such a long experience as he had?—Well, no, I am not such an old man, but I have gone over the ground.

17,346. You cannot talk of the old stock it carried?—No, especially about Kintail.

17,347. Then you say that the people have benefited by the rents paid to the landlord. Now, what benefit have these cottars in Morvich got from these rents?—Well, there is money spent in the district.

17,348. Did they get that work that you proposed to give to them?—No, they would not take it.

17,349. They would not take at £20 what cost you £60?—I did not mean that; I thought you meant the other work on the river embankment. I do not know whether some of them worked at the dykes or not. A contractor took it from me; I do not know whether they did the work or not.

17,350. But in any case it cost thrice what you offered them. Then this forest was rented I think for some years by Mr Winans?—Yes.

17,351. Did he by his occupancy benefit the people; did he buy any of their produce?—I do not know that he did; he had a number of keepers and watchers who lived in the place, and, I believe, lived right royally.

17,352. The keepers?—So I am told.

17,353. How do you mean?—They lived very well, very comfortably, buying produce.

17,354. From these cottars?—I do not know; there is not much produce that these cottars can sell.

17,355. Well, it does not matter how right royally they may have lived, if they did not buy from the cottars?—They must have bought from the district.

17,356. Are you sure they bought from the district?—They must have bought something from the district.

17,357. Has Mr Winans been here ever himself?—My information is that he was never in Kintail; I don't know whether that is correct.

17,358. And bought none of the produce of the estate?—No, he did not reside on the estate; there is no lodge.

17,359. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Mr Mackay mentioned that the last tenant of Morvich left bankrupt?—I corrected myself, the one before the last.

17,360. Would Mr Mackay give the name?—Yes, Patrick Macrae.

17,361. How many years is it since he left?—He left at Whitsunday 1871, so far as I can make out from the Valuation Roll.

17,362. Was it Mr Annat, Banker, Balmacara, who managed for the trustees?—Well, I heard that to-day, and Mr Maclennan, I think.

17,363. And Mr Maclennan, Lienassie?—Yes.

17,364. Was Mr Macrae's estate realised immediately after he left?—I do not know anything about the realization.

17,365. Would you be surprised if you were told that Mr Macrae's estate was realised, that the farm was found in thoroughly good going order, fully stocked; and that, after all the expenses of sequestration were gone through, every creditor got twenty shillings in the pound; and when Mr Macrae, the tenant, who left the country for other than financial reasons, came back, the surplus from the stock of Morvich enabled him to start as a big farmer in the county of Argyll?—I did not know that, but if that was the case I do not see what his object was in becoming bankrupt.

Glenshiel.

William Mackay.

17,366. In the event of that being a fact, would you consider it fair to say that the man left because he was bankrupt?—He left because he was bankrupt; his estates were sequestrated.

17,367. Was it because he was bankrupt; assuming that what I have said is true, would you consider it fair to say that he left because of financial difficulties?—Well, he must have been a madman if he went through the Bankruptcy Court without being insolvent.

17,368. I am not asking you what he would have been; would it be fair to say that he left because he was bankrupt, assuming that that was his financial position when he left, after paying twenty shillings in the pound?

17,369. The Chairman.—Mr Mackay is entitled to rely upon the public fact that the man was sequestrated. According to the law of Scotland, a man who is sequestrated may fairly be described as bankrupt?—That is what I had in view; he was sequestrated and there were trustees on his estate.

17,370. Mr Sutherland.—The inference plainly was to show that it was because sheep farming did not pay?—Certainly, and that is why I mentioned the fact.

17,371. Mr Macrae.—If Mr Maclennan, Lienassie, who is present, would support me in what I say,—that the estate paid twenty shillings in the pound, and left a balance sufficient to enable Mr Patrick Macrae, Morvich, to start as a big sheep farmer in Argyll,—would Mr Mackay withdraw the remark?—I did not expressly say that he left because the farm did not pay; my statement was that the last tenant, but one, became bankrupt, and that is a public fact.

17,372. But Mr Mackay tried to infer, or tried to make the Royal Commission believe, that this man left because of financial difficulties, and because the farm did not pay?—I stated that the man became bankrupt; it is for the Royal Commission to draw their own conclusion from the facts.

17,373. Did Mr Mackay wish the Royal Commission to understand that this man left, that he got into financial difficulties, and that he got into these difficulties because the farm did not pay?—My lord, I do not think I am called upon to state my wishes; I am called upon to give evidence, and I have done so.

17,374. The Chairman.—What he is asking you to do is to say whether you desire us to understand that that is the case?—I have already said, my lord, that I stated the fact of this man's bankruptcy to show that, so far as he was concerned, the farm did not pay; he did not succeed; that was my object.

17,375. Well, do you adhere to that?—As I have already said, the man must have been either mad or insolvent; I do not know that the statements made by Mr Macrae are facts.

17,376. Have you any knowledge on the point?—Nothing whatever, except the public fact that he was sequestrated.

17,377. Mr Maccallum.—Do you know whether he really lost money by farming?—I do not know anything at all about his affairs; nothing except that he became bankrupt.

17,378. Mr Macrae.—Does Mr Mackay know that there was a woman in it?—Well, there is a woman at the root of many an evil, Mr Macrae. I did not know of it. [The Chairman.—Did you ever know of that?—No, my lord.]

17,379. Mr Maclennan, Lienassie, will be able to support me. Who succeeded as tenant of the farm of Morvich after the estate was realised and a settlement of twenty shillings in the pound made to all creditors?—You are assuming the settlement, you know; Adam Brown succeeded Mr Macrae.

17,380. Did he give up the farm because of financial difficulties?—I don't know, I cannot tell you.

17,381. Would Mr Mackay be surprised to know that Mr Brown is a gentleman who has succeeded enormously well as a farmer in this part of the country?—I know that he has got several farms, and that he is supposed to be a very wealthy man.

17,382. Who succeeded Mr Brown as tenant of the farm?—Mr Allan Mackenzie.

17,383. What rent was the farm let at?—The farm was let at £800; it is another question what did he pay.

17,384. No, no, I am in possession of facts.—You don't want information, except, of course, what suits your purpose.

17,385. I want to put a question to Mr Mackay. May I ask how many years had Mr Allan Mackenzie this farm?—I am taking my information entirely from the valuation roll; I have no personal knowledge of this matter. Three years.

17,386. Might I ask Mr Mackay if Mr Allan Mackenzie paid any rent to the landlord during these three years?—No, and I believe he lost money upon the farm.

17,387. He did not pay a single penny of rent?—I do not know that he did, but I cannot say definitely.

17,388. But he did not pay it?—No; but I do not know definitely. I know the farm did not pay under his management.

17,389. Did he manage the farm?—I think so. He had a manager under him, but he took a great interest in the farm.

17,390. Did he live here at all?—He came occasionally.

17,391. Did he live here at all?—I don't think he lived permanently here.

17,392. Did he live for a week at a time here?—I cannot tell you; I think he must have.

17,393. You know nothing about it?—I know nothing about it, except that he did not succeed; I know that.

17,394. So that he did not pay a penny in the pound to the proprietor?—I did not say that.

17,395. He paid no rent?—I did not say that.

17,396. Did the landlord lose a penny by Mr Patrick Macrae?—I cannot tell you.

17,397. And yet you called him a bankrupt?—I don't want to offend the man, if he is alive, or say anything against him; I am only repeating a public fact, that his estates were sequestrated.

17,398. Are you aware that Sir James Mackenzie justified the conversion of this farm and Inchcro into a deer forest in a controversy in the 'People's Journal,' a newspaper controversy with Mr Bruce, father of the rector of the Inverness Royal Academy,—is Mr Mackay aware that Sir James Mackenzie gave, as an excuse for making the farm a deer forest, that the last tenant, his own son (although he did not mention he was his own son) held the farm for three years and was so poor that he could not pay a single penny of rent during these three years?—I am not aware, but if Sir James Mackenzie said so I quite believe it.

17,399. Now, with regard to this lease, how much arable land has Mr Mackay given in that lease to each of the cottars?—To the Morvich cottars?

17,400. To the Morvich cottars of this park?—Will I go through the whole list, my lord, I have them all in this book.

17,401. Mr Gordon.—Excuse me just putting one question in regard to this area. Do any of these cottars still hold the land that they held formerly?—I do not know whether it has happened that they got the same land back again, because they got their present holdings by lot.

17,402. Who has land that they formerly held?—It is divided among the cottars themselves.

17,403. As part of the land they now have?—Yes; their holdings were increased.

17,404. Let us understand this. Do the people now hold more than this park?—Certainly. The park is an addition to what they had before. They had the lands before at Allt-a'-chruinn and at Invershiel and at Achaghiurain.

17,405. Now, could you give us the extent they hold of Achaghiurain, the land there and the park, and the number of cottars, and we will see exactly what they have? Can you give us the extent of the land they formerly held as potato land here, the additional land you gave them at Achaghiurain?—I don't know that I can give the former lands. The big park, which is an addition, extends to 20½ acres.

17,406. But what is it in addition to?—It is in addition to Invershiel.

17,407. What is that?—I think 8¾.

17,408. Mr Watson, Surveyor.—I think if you would allow me I could explain it. Previous to 1887 the cottars all along the loch here had practically no land at all except what they got from the farmers to plant potatoes and other things. In 1887 they got these parks round here, and the right of grazing on this piece of Invershiel, and the last holding they got is this big park; but their old pieces, that they had from the farmers, of course, they are deprived of.

17,409. Mr Gordon.—What will make it clearer to my mind is the extent that they formerly held, to which the big park was an addition.

17,410. Mr Watson.—Except the parks there will not be more than seven acres.

17,411. Mr Gordon.—That is 27 among seventeen people, or rather more than 1½ acre. [Witness]. And some of the seventeen people have got but little land. There are two of them who only got a rood each, and there is another who got only 1½ rood; they did not want more.]

17,412. Mr Macrae.—Might I ask Mr Mackay, with regard to these sixteen cottars at Morvich?—Seventeen.

17,413. Seventeen cottars,—that is the sixteen and the gamekeeper?—No, I think there are seventeen altogether. I daresay one of the Morvich people has got his potato land up here at Invershiel. Yes, I think he has.

17,414. Mr Gordon.—That is sixteen at Morvich?—Yes, only there is another who has got the grazing and hay ground there.

17,415. Mr Macrae.—How much arable land had those who renounced the lands they formerly had, and who got this park in lieu and who are under lease with regard to the park,—how much arable land have they each?—Well, I should require to go over the whole.

17,416. The Chairman.—Is it about 1½ acre?—It is over 1½ acre; it is about 1½ acre of arable land; then they have got the carse, which is 40 acres.

17,417. I understood you to say they had about 1½ acre and the carse each?—Yes, except one or two.

17,418. Yes, but I am stating it roughly?—Yes, I brought up a surveyor from Dingwall here, and he divided it into 1½ acre lots. The fact is that he divided the whole arable land among the lot of them.

17,419. Mr Macrae.—Reading as I do a copy of the missive of lease between the trustees of the late Sir James Mackenzie of Kintail, &c., Bart., and Donald Macrae, Dearg, 1893, endorsed Innes & Mackay, solicitors, Inverness, and dated this June or July, I find:—'4. A piece of ground, a piece of potato ground, 'extending to two roods or thereby.'—Yes.

17,420. 'Situated in said big park.'—Yes. What is the name of the man?

17,421. Donald Macrae, Dearg, 'a piece of potato 'ground extending to two roods or thereby, situated in 'said big park, which piece of potato ground shall be 'fixed and set apart by the said William Mackay, or 'by said factor or agent for the time being of the said 'first parties; it being declared and agreed to that the 'decision of the said William Mackay, or of said factor 'or agent for the time being, shall be final.'—Yes. I may mention that, instead of my deciding that, I allowed themselves to casts lots.

17,422. Two roods, as I understand it, means half an acre. [The Chairman.—Well, what is the question?] My question is, the amount in that clause fourth allotted to each of the seventeen in the big park half an acre?—For potato ground, but in addition to that they have an acre of arable land for their hay. My original intention was that it should be for hay; but they asked permission to plant potatoes in it if they thought proper, and I gave it to them.

17,423. I should like Mr Mackay to read the clause in the missive of lease, in which he provides another acre for them.

17,424. The Chairman.—It seems to stand thus:—First, they get the right of grazing a cow; second, they get the right, in common with cottars or others, of cutting, manufacturing into hay, and carrying away grass from the big park, and so on. [Witness.—It is there the acre comes in.]

17,425. Mr Macrae.—But that does not correspond with the missive of lease.

17,426. The Chairman.—But what they get under this lease is the right of grazing, and also the right in common with the cottars and others of cutting, manufacturing into hay, and carrying away grass from the 'big park' at Morvich, lying between the public road and the sea, and also from the carse land between the big park and the sea, and that in such quantities as the said first parties may determine, and from such part or parts of said big park and carse land or either of them as may be fixed and set apart by William Mackay, solicitor, Inverness, and so on, it being declared and agreed to that the decision of said William Mackay shall be final; third, the piece of land at Seana-ghortan and pertinents connected therewith on which the said second party's dwelling house is erected; and fourth, a piece of potato ground extending to two roods, situated in said 'big park,' and then the second general clause of the lease provides for removal from the potato ground possessed by him, and from the other subjects presently occupied by him. That is the whole?—That is the whole. Will your lordship allow me to explain, while I am at this. After the leases were written out and signed, the tenants expressed their wish that instead of cutting hay here and there and everywhere in the park, each man's share of the park should be set apart for himself, and we found on measuring that there was exactly an acre for each man, in addition to the half acre for potato ground, and he has got that acre.

17,427. But doubtless you concede that the only land given or assigned under the lease is a piece of potato ground?—But as a matter of fact each has got the hay ground, an acre, and the tenants are in possession.

17,428. I am just now keeping within the four corners of the lease; according to the lease they only get a piece of ground extending to two roods, and a right of grazing a cow, and a right common to others of cutting hay?—That is so.

17,429. Mr Macrae.—I should like to ask Mr Mackay now, what does he mean by limiting them as to the quantity of hay they were to cut in the park? The limit is here in two respects:—first,—that they shall cut in such quantities,—there is no reference at all to an acre each. [The Chairman.—In such quantities as the said first parties may determine]. That is, that Mr William Mackay reserves the right to determine how much grass they shall remove. Will he explain how he can reconcile that with his other statement that they have an acre each?—As a matter of fact——

17,430. As a matter of lease?—Never mind the lease. As a matter of fact, as I have already explained, after that lease was signed they expressed their wish to have each man his hay ground for himself, and I granted the request.

17,431. The Chairman.—Are we to read the lease now, in the light of your explanation, as giving each lessee the right to an acre and a half of ground?—Certainly; to every man who has got the right to cut hay.

17,432. But is it a right to cut hay?—It is a right now to do whatever they like with the land. Some, as a matter of fact, have potatoes on it.

17,433. Then you said that the right they have under the second section of the lease coincides with the right to the potato ground under the fourth section of the lease?—Exactly; they are exactly on the same footing.

17,434. Mr Macrae.—That is to say, as I understand it?—They quite understand it themselves.

17,435. The Chairman.—You put the lease before us yourself, you know.—Yes.

17,436. Mr Shaw Stewart.—There is no limit to the quantity?

17,437. The Chairman.—Oh, yes, there is this limit,—that they are to cut hay in such quantities as Mr Mackay may determine.

17,438. Mr Shaw Stewart.—That has been superceded.

17,439. The Chairman.—By a verbal arrangement. [Witness.—Yes, and they actually cast lots for the acre lots.]

17,440. You controlled the lease by a subsequent arrangement?—Yes.

17,441. Mr Gordon.—Have you any objection to put a codicil on it?—Not the slightest; I have got it all down in this book already, how much each man has.

17,442. Mr Macrae.—Your lordship, I hope, sympathises with me. I am here in the interests of the cottars, and I am very glad we are coming to an amicable arrangement; very pleased indeed. [Witness. Will you allow me to say that this is not a new thing. In this book is a record of the lands taken on the 15th of April last, when the lots were cast. I see, first, ballot for drawing lots for potato ground; second, ballot for order of drawing for hay ground. And I have got them all numbered, and I may explain more; some of the acres, my lord, contain really more than an acre; lots 7, 8 and 9 of the lots have additions to them. Lots 14 and 15 not so good as the others, and they are wider; they are larger.]

17,443. Then am I to assume that Mr Mackay agrees to cancel that portion of the lease to this extent that each of the cottars is to have 1½ acre?—They have got it.

17,444. Am I to assume that each of these is to have 1½, and that—[The Chairman.—You are to assume that the right to the hay ground coincides with the right to the potato ground.]

17,445. But I follow it a little further, that each of them is to have this acre along with the half acre for potato ground, and that each of them is to be allowed to grow what crop he pleases on that acre also?—Oh, certainly. As a matter of fact, they are growing potatoes on their hay ground.

17,446. Mr Shaw Stewart.—And that is not an arrangement from to-day?—Oh, dear, no; it is from the 15th of April last.

17,447. The Chairman.—It is a pity you did not add a sentence to the lease?—Really it did not occur to me; we got on very amicably; we never had a question as to the arrangement. The original intention as to hay is expressed in the lease, but after the lease was signed that intention was departed from at the cottars' request.

17,448. Mr Macrae.—Are there not other parks in Morvich adjoining this park that could very easily, if the proprietor would so arrange, be given to these cottars as an addition, in order that they may have three acres each of arable land?—There is another park, an arable field, on the opposite side of the road from the big park. That is required for the purposes of the proprietor himself.

17,449. Has that park been out of cultivation for the last eleven years?—No, you will find that the greater part of it is under cultivation now. It was ploughed two or three years ago, and a hay crop put down; part is under corn, and part under potatoes.

17,450. Is there not another part that was not cultivated?—There is a waste part that I do not know was ever in cultivation. There is a lot of low meadow ground there.

17,451. A park?—Not a park; there are only the two enclosed parks.

17,452. Are there not three enclosed parks at Morvich, two besides this one?—I do not think there are. They are now enclosed together; the deer are shut out; I erected a deer fence last winter.

17,453. Are you aware that each of these cottars has only now, even with this arrangement, 13 acres each? [The Chairman.—It stands on the figures, you do need to calculate it; it gives something like 13 acres each].—Does Mr Mackay consider 11½ or 13 acres of pasture land there sufficient for the grazing of a cow?—And they have got the 40 acres of carse.

17,454. That is added. Yes, my lord, I think that that is more than enough; there is splendid grass in that place just now.

17,455. The Chairman.—Gentlemen, we can see this land ourselves, it is just at the door; I think it is unnecessary to take more evidence on this point.

17,456. Mr Macrae.—Mr Mackay heard one of the witnesses say that in his verbal arrangement with them he never mentioned that this gamekeeper was to be in company with them for his land and cows' grazing; whereas now, under this lease, the gamekeeper is put in along with the other cottars?—The gamekeeper was in possession before the cottars, and it was perfectly understood that he was to be continued; there is no other ground for him; he has only got two cows.

17,457. Has not the proprietor as much facility for giving other lands on this farm to his own gamekeeper as he had for this arrangment?—That is the proprietor's business.

17,458. The Chairman.—I cannot enter into that; the arrangement was made, and it was made at a time when the crofters were quite entitled to make whatever arrangements they chose.

17,459. Mr Macrae.—Might I ask why, at a time when he brought them under a stamped written lease, he made the tenants yearly tenants, that could be removed at the end of the year?—I just continued their old leases, my lord; they were tenants from year to year.

17,460. The Chairman.—You were entitled under point of law to do it?—Yes, but I simply continued the old arrangement, but giving them more land.

17,461. Mr Macrae.—Might I ask Mr Mackay whether he would consider it desirable to approach the proprietor with the view to conceding them the benefits of the Crofters Act, seeing the only barrier to their application for the Crofters Act was that they were not tenants at the passing of the Act?

17,462. The Chairman.—I asked that question before.—I don't think your lordship did.

16,463. The Chairman.—The question was whether you would be willing to advise the trustees to place them under the Crofters Act, and you said you thought the trustees had no power?—Quite so, I was just going to make the same answer now.

16,464. Mr Sutherland.—I wish to ask one question. Could you give us information regarding the tenure of this land; how does the land of the Kintail estate stand at the present time?—Do you mean the cottars?

17,465. No; the larger divisions in the deer forest and the sheep farm.—All year to year.

DONALD GRANT, Grantown, Factor for Glenelg—examined.

17,466. The Chairman.—Do you wish to make any statement?—Simply to state the extent of property that my constituent, Mr Baillie of Dochfour, holds here, and how it is applied. It is called the estate of Glenshiel, and the total acreage is 24,365, of which 12,315 is under sheep, and 12,050 under deer, cleared a number of years ago. The lowest part of the deer forest is about 600 feet above sea-level, and the altitude varies from 600 to 2000 odd feet. Included in that extent there are 103 acres arable divided between Mr Mitchell the tenant of the sheep farm, and Miss Mackintosh, the landlady of the hotel. These are the figures, and I shall be very pleased to answer any questions that may be put.

17,467. Mr Sutherland.—Have you a plan of the estate?—I have.

17,468. What is the name of the deer forest?—Cluanie.

17,469. The Chairman.—I do not propose to ask you any questions now, as I understand we shall have an opportunity of examining you at Glenelg?—Yes, I shall give evidence then.

[ADJOURNED.]

EIGHTEENTH SITTING.

GLENELG, INVERNESS-SHIRE, July 14, 1893.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
MICHAEL HUGH SHAW STEWART, Esq., M.P.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
REV. MALCOLM MACCALLUM.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

DUNCAN MACCRIMMON, Crofter, Kirkton, Glenelg (66.) (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

17,470. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

17,471. Has your rent been dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—The proprietor put it right.

17,472. What was your rent before the proprietor adjusted it?—We were paying 30s. an acre for land, and £3 for cow's grass.

17,473. Do you remember your total rent?—£7 then.

17,474. And what is it now?—I have not the same land now that I had then, but I pay £5, 6s. now.

17,475. When was that settlement made?—Six years ago when Mr Baillie of Dochfour got possession of the estate. [Mr D. Grant, factor for Glenelg.—Nine years ago.]

17,476. You mean the present Mr Baillie?—Yes.

17,477. Was there a meeting here on the 10th of this month?—We had a meeting, but I am not sure which day of the month it was.

17,478. Was it a few days ago?—Yes.

17,479. Were you appointed as a delegate to give evidence before this Commission?—Yes.

17,480. How long have you been settled here as a crofter?—Since I was on my own hook, thirty-two years.

17,481. Are you under a lease at present?—No, and I never was.

17,482. Do you desire to leave your holding if another and better holding can be got, or do you wish to remain where you are?—I would leave very gladly to-morrow.

17,483. Is there land in this quarter suitable for holdings?—Plenty.

17,484. Where is it?—Up the glen where I was born.

17,485. You mean up the glen behind here?—Yes, up the Big Glen.

17,486. How far up does this land of which you are speaking go?—Between three and four miles.

17,487. Is there old arable land there?—Yes, plenty.

17,488. Is there much of that land under rotation of crop at present?—Very little; it is under sheep.

17,489. Now, when you say there is good land up that valley, is it on a farm?—Yes.

17,490. Whose farm?—Mr Mitchell, Ratagan's farm; it is his from within three miles of Cluanie down to the manse of Glenelg.

17,491. Is all the land to which you refer situated upon that farm?—Yes.

17,492. The whole of it?—Every clod of it.

17,493. Then there is no other farm in this quarter to which you ask our attention?—Yes.

17,494. Where is it?—Up the little glen.

17,495. What is the name of it?—The Little Glen (Gleanna-Beag.)

17,496. Whose farm is that?—The Master of Blantyre's.

17,497. Is there any tract there suitable for the settlement of crofters?—There were four tenants there before and there are none now.

17,498. Are the remains of their houses still there?—Some of the houses are there, and the remains of other houses.

17,499. Are there many remains of old cultivation upon Ratagan Farm?—Yes.

17,500. Have there been removals from that farm in past years?—No; it is in the time of Macleod that the first person was put out of the glen.

17,501. How far back is that?—I am not very sure.

17,502. Was Macleod in this quarter during the present century?—About the beginning of the century.

17,503. How many crofters are in the glen at present?—None.

17,504. Well, but I mean how many neighbours have you that are crofters?—There are about 40, but they have not all land.

17,505. How many have land?—16 or thereabout.

17,506. And how many cottars are there, or persons without land?—Very few.

17,507. Is there any general desire among the crofters or cottars to remove from their holdings, or is it confined to a few?—Many of them desire to shift to other land.

17,508. Are you able to say that they all desire?—They maintain now that they are desirous of going.

17,509. The whole of them?—Yes, the whole of them.

17,510. Have these cottars you mention land or are they without land?—Doubtlessly they are without land.

17,511. Have they land at all?—Some of them have, and some have not.

17,512. Mr Grant.—Will you allow me to explain, my lord. They are not, strictly speaking, crofters.

17,513. The Chairman.—But I am speaking of cottars.

17,514. Mr Grant.—But the class he represents; he is not himself a crofter; he lives in the village and has a cow's grass.

17,515. The Chairman.—Is he not under the Act of Parliament?

17,516. Mr Grant.—No, we allowed him to appeal to the Commission if he wished to; he is not under the Act.

17,517. Mr Sutherland.—That refers to your interpretation of the Act?

17,518. Mr Grant.—Yes.

17,519. Mr Sutherland.—But it has not been authoritatively interpreted?

15,520. Mr Grant.—In his case the Commission refused to fix the rent.

17,521. The Chairman.—Is there a decision in the case? (To Witness).—You never applied to the Commission, did you?

17,522. Witness.—Never.

17,523. The Chairman.—It seems to stand in this way, Mr Grant, that this man made no application to the Commission, and you or the estate were willing to allow the Commission to value it, but the Commission said they could not?

17,524. Mr Grant.—He had the land before, but I wished him to be put under the Act.

17,525. The Chairman.—But he is not a crofter under the Act.

17,526. Mr Grant.—He is not a crofter, he does not live on a croft.

17,527. The Chairman.—The only way in which it can be decided that a man is under the Act is, if the estate makes, or if the man makes, an application; it may be determined whether he is a crofter or not.

17,528. Mr Grant.—We did not proceed, as he did not want it.

17,529. The Chairman.—Your proposal, Mr Grant, was simply that the Commission should value the land to be assigned?

17,530. Mr Grant.—Quite so; that the rents should be judicial rents instead of rents fixed by us.

17,531. The Chairman.—That would not have made them crofters. But whether this man is a crofter, be it understood, we have nothing to say; he may be a crofter or he may not; this Commission has no jurisdiction to settle that. However, I am taking him as a crofter just now; he belongs to the crofter class. I suppose we may agree as to that.

17,532. Mr Sutherland.—Are you able to tell us exactly how many families are in Kirkton of Glenelg?—I cannot; if I was a while studying I could do it.

17,533. Could you tell us if there are 30 families?—There are not 30 families.

17,534. Are there 20?—There are just about 20.

17,535. Are you able to tell us where these 20 families came from when they settled there?—No.

17,536. Do you know if any of them came from the glen? [The Interpreter.—He said just now that some of them came from Skye.]

17,537. Was that when this land was in the possession of Macleod of Macleod?—I think Mr Grant had the land then. [The Interpreter.—He means Lord Glenelg, I suppose.]

17,538. Do you know where the people who were in the glen went to when they were put out of the glen?—When Macleod evicted them they went to America, because they could not live in this district; they could not live on one acre, which was all the land allowed.

17,539. Mr Donald Macrae.—He said something that was not interpreted?—Nobody in the country had two acres at that time, they had only one acre each.

17,540. Mr Sutherland.—Where did they live when they had only one acre?—They were living in their own houses, but going about throughout the world earning wages.

17,541. Was that in the glen?—The houses were down here when Mr Bruce sent them down.

17,542. And was it after that they emigrated to America?—Yes, Mr Baillie of Bristol sent them to America at his own expense, as they could not live in the place.

17,543. But that was after they were put out of the glen?—Yes.

17,544. Did you ever hear that the people petitioned that they should be sent away?—Oh, yes, I did hear that.

17,545. But they did not petition to be sent from the glen?—They never did; they would be very sorry.

17,546. So that the petition was sent in after they were cleared out of the glen and sent down to the houses here?—The petition was sent after they had left the glen, to Mr Baillie of Bristol, that he would pay their passage to America. They could not live in this part of the country in any other way on one acre.

17,547. But that had nothing whatever to do with the way in which they lived in the glen?—Nothing. There was nothing wrong with them in the glen.

17,548. You spoke about land in Glenbeg. But besides Glenbeg and Glenmore, do you know of any other land suitable for settlement in this neighbourhood?—I believe there are patches, but I am not sure.

17,549. Are you acquainted about Sandaig?—Yes.

17,550. Is there any land fit for cultivation there, in your opinion?—Yes, there is land that could be cultivated.

17,551. And would you be willing to show that land to us?—Yes.

17,552. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You spoke of some houses in Glenbeg which four tenants formerly occupied. Are any of the houses put to any use now, or are they all in ruins?—There is nothing there but the ruins of the original houses, but other two houses have been built for the Master of Blantyre's use.

17,553. And are now occupied?—The Master of Blantyre has a man there now.

17,554. Only one man in the two houses?—There is a shepherd in one house, and another man lives in the other through the kindness of the Master of Blantyre.

17,555. Supposing the crofters were able to acquire lands in the glen, would they be able to live entirely on their crofts?—It would depend upon the number that would be sent there.

17,556. What sized holding do you think would enable a man to live entirely on his croft?—He would require 10 acres of arable land, 120 sheep, 4 cows, and a horse.

17,557. Do you mean that he would have his sheep in common with others?—If it was given to two or three each would have his own sheep without troubling anybody else.

17,558. Now, supposing there were two or three tenants with holdings such as you describe in Glenmore, would there be room for anybody else to live on their holdings?—Yes, although there would be a dozen of them.

17,559. There would be room for equal sized crofts with those you speak of?—Yes and more.

17,560. Then you think they would do very well?—I am sure they would if they got a reasonable rent.

17,561. Would you mind telling me what you think a reasonable rent would be?—There is no price for sheep or cattle at present; I think that with present prices, though a man had 100 sheep, he would be dear enough at £8 of rent.

17,562. Would they be able to build their houses themselves?—I don't know; they say that if they got the land they would put everything on it; they want nothing but the land.

17,563. That is, they would build the houses and stock the land themselves without help?—They tell me that it is the land they want now, and that they would do their own will then with it.

17,564. Yes, but I suppose they would have considered whether they were able to stock the land and build the houses themselves without help and have enough over to pay rent and maintain themselves?—We know that the whole of them could not do that.

17,565. Have you any idea where they would expect the help to come from?—I never asked them; I had no business with that.

17,566. Then you don't think they would be able to occupy this land to advantage without help from somewhere?—No, some of them could not.

17,567. The Chairman.—Suppose you had a croft 10 acres arable and grazing for 120 sheep and 4 cows and a horse, could you stock that land and put up the necessary buildings at your own cost?—I will do that.

17,568. Do you carry on any business in the village?—I was a mason.

17,569. How long is it since you gave up carrying on the trade of a mason?—I did nothing at it for two years.

17,570. But you were successful in your trade and made a little money?—Sometimes I did and sometimes I did not.

17,571. But upon the whole it was a success?—Without doubt I was making a little.

17,572. Now you said in answer to one question that there was room for a dozen crofters with such holdings as you described in Glenmore. How many altogether do you think the glen would accommodate with holdings such as that?—I could not tell that, but when the Commission goes through it they would form an estimate.

17,573. Mr Donald Macrae.—Would your lordship ask him if they applied through him to Mr Baillie recently for an extension of grazing.

17,574. The Chairman.—Was there an application made from this district for an extension of grazing recently?—I have been asking for it for the last six years and did not get it; for a portion of the land that I was born on. We paid over £4000 for it ourselves and other three tenants there.

17,575. Mr Donald Macrae.—And is the land quite near you?—It is just beyond the manse here.

17,576. How far is it from your house?—A mile and a quarter.

17,577. For what purpose did you want it?—Why, but to live on it.

17,578. What answer did you get?—I got no reply except that there would be a chance that I would get it; but the chances are passing and it did not come yet. That is the clean truth.

17,579. Did you write to Mr Grant himself, the factor, about it?—Yes, I did, and to Mr Baillie, and besides that I spoke to him.

17,580. Was a petition sent, signed by the whole of the people of the district?—No.

17,581. Have you seen that letter? (Shown letter, 11th March 1892, from Mr Grant to Mr Duncan Maccrimmon, Kirkton, Glenelg.)

17,582. The Chairman.—'Mr Baillie has received 'petition from you and others regarding the grazing of 'Cul-an-Duin. The matter will be considered when we 'go to collect rents bye-and-bye.'

17,583. Mr Grant.—That is not the grazing that he has been speaking of at all.

17,584. The Chairman.—Is this the grazing you have been speaking of, or another grazing?—No.

17,585. Mr D. Macrae.—Did you apply for this land at Cul-an-Duin by petition?

17,586. The Chairman.—But you don't need to ask that; we see that here.

17,587. Mr D. Macrae.—I wanted to refresh his memory. Is Cul-an-Duin lands close to you?—Near at the back of my house; it would not keep many people altogether; small enough for four.

17,588. Did you want that land for grazing?—For both.

17,589. Is that land of Cul-an-Duin very convenient for you?—Yes.

17,590. Who occupies that land to-day?—The proprietor.

17,591. The Chairman.—The land beyond the manse, is that on the farm of Ratagan?—It was taken from us when our rent was paid.

17,592. Is it on the farm of Ratagan?—It is now.

17,593. What is it you wanted to say about it?—It was taken from us when our rent was paid, and given to our neighbour, the parish minister, Rev. John Macrae.

17,594. When did that occur?—Forty years ago.

17,595. Was that in Mr Mollison's time?—No.

17,596. Before him?—It was a Mr Stavert that was factor.

17,597. You said that you and some others had it. Who had it along with you?—Roderick Macleod, Donald Macrae and John Macrae.

17,598. And you yourself?—The four of us.

17,599. Did you have it on lease?—Yes, we had a lease till a year before we lost it.*

17,600. And then it was given to the minister, Mr Macrae?—Yes.

17,601. Was that just an ordinary case of transferring a piece of grazing land from one lessee to another?—No, the minister got the entire land then, and when the minister gave it up Mr Mitchell, Ratagan, got it.

17,602. You simply lost land that you had held under lease, I suppose, as any other farmer may do?—Yes, we lost it on the expiry of the lease, but it was left one year longer with us.

17,603. What was the duration of the lease?—Nineteen years.

17,604. And what was your rent for this land?—£120.

17,605. And what rent did the minister give?—I never found out.

17,606. Did you hear that it was more?—I believe that he gave a little more; they were telling me so.

17,607. Now, I want to ask you about this land of Cul-an-Duin; on what land is this grazing of Cul-an-Duin?—The Master of Blantyre has the arable land, but the proprietor has the hill ground.

17,608. Is the land you petitioned for in the hands of the proprietor?—Yes.

17,609. Well, the letter here says 'the matter will be 'considered when we go to collect rents bye-and-bye.' When is the rent collection here, the autumn or winter collection?—About Martinmas and at Whitsunday.

17,610. Was there anything said by Mr Grant or by the estate management as to this grazing of Cul-an-Duin when the rent collection took place towards the end of 1892?—No.

17,611. Have you ever heard any more about it?—I heard others speaking of writing for it, but I took no more to do with it.

17,612. Did you hear any more about it from Mr Grant?—No.

17,613. Mr D. Macrae.—This is another document

* On 17th July the delegate wrote explaining that this statement was made in error. There was no lease. Angus Macleod, the next delegate signed the letter correcting the error.

Glenelg.

bearing upon the same subject. (Producing another letter.)

Duncan Maccrimmon.

17,614. The Chairman.—This is prior.

17,615. Mr D. Macrae.—Yes, I know, but the witness said they were asking for these lands back and fore for six years.

17,616. Mr Grant.—That is the lands above the manse.

17,617. The Chairman.—You can put that in if you like, Mr Macrae. It is a copy of a letter from Mr Grant to Mr A. C. Baillie, dated 11th April 1888.

17,618. Mr Macrae.—I underlined there an expression that Mr Baillie was very anxious to meet the wishes of the crofters.*

17,619. The Chairman.—Yes, but I am dealing at present with the end of 1892. (To Witness). Since the end of 1892 have you renewed the application for the grazing of Cul-an-Duin?—I did not ask it. It is a year since I asked it.

17,620. I forgot to ask you this about the land beyond the manse. You said that you and others gave £4000 for it. What do you mean by £4000?—We paid £4000 in rent for it during the time we occupied it.

17,621. Altogether?—Altogether, the four of us.

17,622. What was the rent of it?—£120. [Mr Grant.—He refers to his ancestors, not himself.]

17,623. You mean your predecessors and yourself gave £4000?—It cost the four tenants that while they were there.

16,624. There may be two leases.

17,625. Mr Grant.—Is there any stock upon Cul-an-Duin except the proprietor's now? Are you aware that there are ten cows grazed in consequence of this application?—The cows are there, doubtless.

17,626. The Chairman.—But are they crofters' or cottars' cows?—Yes, they are crofters' cows.

17,627. And do they graze in common along with the proprietor's stock?—They are among his stock, wandering as they like.

ANGUS MACLEOD, Cattle and Sheep Dealer, Glen-Bernera, Glenelg (39.)
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Angus Macleod.

17,628. The Chairman.—What is your age?—So far as I know I am between thirty-nine and forty years.

17,629. Are you a crofter or have you a lot?—I have nothing but what I take out of the surface of the earth with my two hands.

17,630. Where is your house?—I am living with a brother of mine.

17,631. What is the name of the brother?—Donald Macleod.

17,632. What rent does he pay?—So far as I know it is £13.

17,633. And he has some land, I suppose?—Yes. [Mr D. Macrae.—I think the Crofters Commission fixed their rents.]

17,634. Did the Crofters Commission fix your brother's rent?—No, they were round the land; they examined the land, they did not alter the rent, but they gave them additional land to make matters easier for them.

17,635. Mr Grant.—We made a mutual application.

17,636. The Chairman.—And they got some additional land?

17,637. Mr Grant.—No, we gave them land before the Commission came.

16,638. The Chairman.—But the land upon which the Crofters Commission would have had to adjudicate if they had done so would have been the land minus the addition?

17,639. Mr Grant.—No, no. We gave them the addition before the Commission came and fixed the rent at £13. The Commission came and left the rent at £13.

17,640. The Chairman.—You have no land of your own?—No, not a clod.

17,641. How do you earn your livelihood?—I will be at everything as best I can; I will be shepherding and at daily labour and everything. Glenelg. Angus Macleod.

17,642. Are you anxious to obtain a holding for yourself?—I am very anxious to get possession of rights that my father left in the glen beyond the glebe.

17,643. The area where you live is 6 acres 3 roods 34 poles arable, no outrun, 865 acres of pasture, common to four; the present rents of the township of Bernera are exclusive of the additional hill pasture extending to 285 acres or thereby, the fair rents include the annual value of said additional pasture. Where is this land to which you have been referring?—Iomaire-a'-ghradain, Duncan Maccrimmon who spoke already was speaking about it. My father was there with his father.

17,644. Do you mean the land beyond the manse?—Yes.

17,645. Do you wish to obtain a holding at that place, or is it grazing land you desire?—I want grazing and arable land.

17,646. And a holding?—A home; yes, doubtless.

17,647. Can you put up the buildings on such a holding and stock the land?—If I get the land I will try.

17,648. But suppose you had to begin to-morrow, would you need assistance?—It would depend upon the time I was to get for buying stock and everything at once and putting up houses; if I got the assistance of timber, &c. from the proprietor.

17,649. May I take your answer then as meaning that you could not have your holding in order in a year without assistance?—I would like to know how much land; what would be the size of the holding before I would give a sketch of that.

17,650. Ten acres arable, 120 sheep, four cows and a horse. Do you think you could start a holding of that sort and complete it in a year without assistance?—Yes. I think that such a holding as that would be too small; it would not be worth anybody's while putting up houses for that out of his own pocket.

17,651. What holding have you in view then?—I would like 200 sheep, 15 acres of arable land, four cows, and a horse.

17,652. You are not a married man?—Not yet.

17,653. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do you think that a crofter on a smaller holding than you have just mentioned would not be able to live successfully?—That would depend upon the years that he would fall in with, and how he would be situated as to rent.

17,654. Well, but we have had bad seasons and good seasons in the past, and I suppose we must expect the same for the future, must we not?—Doubtless.

17,655. Looking at the average, taking bad seasons and good together, do I understand that you think any holding smaller than the one you have mentioned would not succeed?—Oh, no, I don't think so.

17,656. But I understood you to say, a little time ago, that you thought such a holding would be too small; I mean a holding of the size mentioned by Mr Maccrimmon?—It would be too small in connection with the expense that the man would have in putting up houses, but if he got such a holding, with houses on it, he might do with it and perhaps even a smaller one.

17,657. Who is the tenant of the lands that you would like now?—It is on the farm of Beolairidh, and Mr Mitchell, Ratagan, occupies it as a tenant.

17,658. You spoke of your father's rights there; do you mean that Mr Mitchell has no right to occupy this land that he pays rent for?—Oh, yes, I think he has rights as long as he pays rent for it.

17,659. And you think also the proprietor has the right to lease the lands to Mr Mitchell?—Oh, it is very likely he has.

17,660. But if the proprietor has the right to lease the lands and the tenant has the right to take them, I don't understand why you think your father's rights still hold good?—I think that when a thing is taken from people by injustice and bad law the rights are stronger in that way.

17,661. You have not explained to us how they were taken away exactly, but I won't go into that. Supposing the lands in these glens were divided into these

* The sentence under-lined is as follows:—'Dochfour has repeatedly explained that he would willingly give land to the Crofters if it were at his disposal.'

sized crofts that you would like to see, who do you think ought to occupy them; how would the proprietor find tenants, would he put the lands up into open market?—I think it would be very honourable for him to give the first offer of them to the men of his country, of the district.

17,662. But who should he begin with; should he begin with you?—I would be very glad.

17,663. But perhaps others might not look on it in the same light. I want to know what scheme you have in your head for apportioning these lands if they were divided?—Divide the townships as they were originally, and put in as many people as they would be able to maintain.

17,664. Who can tell us exactly how the townships were originally?—There are men in the district who are older than I, and I believe it would be quite easy for them to answer these questions.

17,665. How far back in history ought we to look to arrive at the proper division of a township?—Some of them not very long, others very long; but there are men who know a lot about that yet.

17,666. Do you mean that within the last hundred years the land was divided into crofts of 15 acres of arable land, 200 sheep, 4 cows, and a horse each?—Oh, no, I am not saying that at all.

17,667. But that is the division that you want the lands put to?—When new things come, people would be making new plans.

17,668. Then you don't want us to go back to the old times and divide the land in the same way?—Yes, and I carry the country along with me.

17,669. But you tell us one moment that the land is to be divided into good sized crofts, and then you tell us they must be divided as they used to be, and you have also told us that they were not divided into big crofts, and I want to know which you want, the big crofts or the old way?—Both plans are somewhat similar, but I still say that if the townships are set apart and you don't put in them more people than they support they would maintain such a stock as I have indicated, every one of them, but not to put any more people than could afford that.

17,670. Would there be a great demand for such lands?—The desire is very great at any rate.

17,671. Then would not the proprietor find great difficulty in choosing the tenants to occupy these lands?—I don't think it would be so difficult as people maintain.

17,672. Mr Sutherland.—How many people are in Glen Bernera?—Four tenants.

17,673. How many families?—There are six houses that have smoke.

17,674. How much land have they got, do you think; can you give us any idea of the area of land these six families hold?—Two of them have not a clod at all.

17,675. And the other four?—6¾ acres or thereabouts.

17,676. Of arable?—Of arable; that is what they put under crop, but there is a little more for pasture.

17,677. What place did you say your forefathers had rights in?—My ancestors or my forefathers had rights in the heights of the Big Glen, and then they were sent to Iomaire-a'-ghradain, where my father was.

17,678. And how long were your forefathers there, can you tell us?—Hundreds of years.

17,679. And did they give the value to the land that it had when they left?—I don't understand.

17,680. Did your forefathers improve that land when they were there?—Yes, they put it in order altogether, from man to man, until the land was under crop up to half the hills.

17,681. And were they compensated when they were put out of that?—They were sent to the shore.

17,682. And who got the value that your forefathers left on the land?—The cheviot sheep got it, when township was put to township and given to a big tenant.

17,683. With regard to the question of the Highland township, are you aware that Lord Napier's Commission recommended the founding of townships throughout the Highlands?—I was hearing that they did.

17,684. Can you show us any land in this neighbourhood that is used as a deer forest or a sheep farm that in your opinion could be occupied to profit or advantageously by smaller tenants?—Is it over and above the land we are speaking of.

17,685. No, any land?—There are several good pieces in Scallasaig. There are several on Eilanreoch in the little glen, and at Sandaig, and in fact all over the district, when the land would be restored to its original use.

17,686. You know the lands of your own personal knowledge?—I am well acquainted with perambulating the ground.

17,687. And have you had experience in cultivating the land?—I have been trying it.

17,688. You are of opinion, are you, that the land that you refer to could be used in the way which has been indicated?—I am sure of it; when it was useful for that formerly, why would it not be so still.

17,689. And you are also of opinion that the people of this neighbourhood would be very willing to occupy land that way?—That is their own voice, at any rate.

17,690. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Your lordship might ask whether, while there are a number of people very poor, is it the fact that throughout the country, here and elsewhere, there are a large number of people, to his own knowledge, who have the necessary capital if the land was opened up?

17,691. The Chairman.—I will restrict the question to this district. Does it consist with your knowledge that there are a large number of people of the crofter class in this district who would be able to take holdings of the size that has been mentioned, and to put up the buildings and stock them themselves?—I am of opinion that there are some.

17,692. And is there a desire among these people in this district to obtain such holdings?—Yes, but I could not tell what size of holdings each individual would like.

17,693. Are the holdings that these people have in view holdings by which they can live without any assistance, or do they mean holdings which would require outside labour to help them to get on?—I don't understand the question.

17,694. I mean self-sustaining; when you speak of these holdings and the people that want them, do you mean self-sustaining holdings or holdings where they would require to go abroad and make wages?—I mean the self-sustaining holdings where they could raise their families and not have to go from home.

17,695. Come to your own case; the holding that you have in view, is it a holding by which you would subsist or would it merely be a home, you to get wages elsewhere?—I am of opinion that it should keep me always without going abroad.

DONALD MACLEOD, Retired Shepherd, Kirkton (58).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

17,696. The Chairman.—You live in the village of Kirkton, I suppose?—Yes.

17,697. What rent do you pay?—No rent at all.

17,698. Is the house your own?—I am living in it; the proprietor gave me the house.

17,699. Have you some land? [Mr Macrae.—He was a tenant at one time. Mr Grant.—He never was a tenant].—I have about an acre of land.

17,700. Is this house, and the acre for which you pay no rent, an indulgence from the landlord for long services, or how does it happen that you pay no rent?—My brother and I were in Balvraid where our ancestors were, and that township was reduced to four.

17,701. Mr Grant.—I can simplify the examination. His brother was tenant of Balvraid when Mr Baillie succeeded to his property; he lived with his brother, who became bankrupt, and the trustee gave up the place. Mr Baillie gave the brother a free house and a cow's grass and I think an acre of land. The brother died a few years ago and we have never disturbed the witness.

17,702. The Chairman.—You are described as being a retired shepherd. How long is it since you ceased being a shepherd?—I was only six years as a shepherd; it is about twenty years since I gave up.

17,703. Where did you act as shepherd; was it on the lands hereabout?—Yes.

17,704. How many hirsels had you?—I was in two hirsels.

17,705. Were these in Glenmore?—One of them was there.

17,706. And where was the other one?—In the Little Glen, on Ellanreoch farm.

17,707. You know the lands of Glenmore and the Little Glen very well, I daresay?—Very well.

17,708. Are there tracts of ground in Glenmore of the kind called old arable?—A great deal; there are large tracts.

17,709. In your judgment, for you have had large experience of this place, are these lands suitable for settlement of crofters now?—As suitable as I know in the Highlands.

17,710. Then do you say that these lands in average years could be cultivated to a profit?—Yes, I say they could, but they must get government money before they could bring the land into the condition in which the crofters left it.

17,711. In your opinion the land has gone back?—The land has gone back, and it has run out wild.

17,712. You say you would require government money; you mean with the view to settling in the new holding?—We would require that.

17,713. Would you require money for building?—I believe some of us would.

17,714. Would you?—Yes, I would.

17,715. Would you require money for restoring the land as you have been speaking of to the condition of tillable land?—Some would require it and some would not.

17,716. Would you require it?—I believe I would need it.

17,717. And would you require money for stocking it?—I would.

17,718. What size of holding do you have in view?—Is it for a family or for one man?

17,719. For one man who, like you, may possibly get married?—I confess that; the man who would have that in view would require such a holding as the man before me indicated.

17,720. What extent of government assistance would you require for a holding of that size, viz., 15 acres arable, a carry of 200 sheep, 4 cows, and a horse?—£120 I would try it with.

17,721. Now you mentioned Glenbeg; are you well acquainted with Glenbeg?—Yes, I know it well; I was born there and my father and grandfather.

17,722. Is there old arable land there?—There is a little.

17,723. How many crofters do you think could be accommodated there?—Is it one township or the old townships?

17,724. I am not speaking of the old townships. I have not sufficient knowledge of these. Without referring to a township at all, how many individual holdings do you think could be accommodated in the little glen of 5 acres or 10 acres or 15 acres arable?—Is it from top to bottom of the glen?

17,725. No, all the available old arable?—I think eight would be enough.

17,726. How many were there when there used to be crofters?—I don't know how many there were originally, but in my time there were four in the township where I was born.

17,727. What is the name of that township?—Balvraid.

17,728. Was that the only township there in your recollection?—Yes, in my time.

17,729. Your father had a croft there?—He had a fourth share of the township.

17,730. You lived in a cluster, did you?—Yes.

17,731. What rent did your father pay?—He was paying at first only £20 for his share, or £21, or thereabouts.

17,732. And was that a fourth share?—A fourth share.

17,733. Do you remember of that rent being altered?—It rose to £26 latterly.

17,734. As a fourth share?—Yes, and my brother was paying £26 for it latterly.

17,735. What stock did your father have for which he paid a rent of £26?—It is cattle they had at first.

17,736. Well, what cattle had he?—Each had 8 cows and a stirk or two.

17,737. Any horses?—A horse.

17,738. Anything more?—And about 50 sheep each.

17,739. Had the township a souming?—Yes, that was the souming, the stock was altered afterwards.

17,740. What alteration was made on the stock?—When the rent was raised to £26, it was hard on them to pay it, and the rent was continually rising. Some tenants wanted the place for themselves and to have the other three turned off.

17,741. Which of you wanted that?—One of the four.

17,742. Which of the four?—Duncan Macclure was the name of the man who was asking it.

17,743. Did he succeed in that object?—He got at first the half.

17,744. And did he put out one man?—The possessor died and he got his share.

17,745. Then did he afterwards get the other two?—He was asking them, but he did not get them.

17,746. Did he get them ultimately?—He did not. It transpired, latterly, that the factor and proprietor indicated to them that one of them must take the place.

17,747. Did one ultimately take the place?—Yes, but I must tell you that. When this was indicated, my brother and I, whose family had been there for at least two generations, thought it hard that the sole possession should be given to one who had only been a limited time there, and we endeavoured to get it ourselves.

17,748. And did you get it?—We got it.

17,749. How many years is it since you lost it?—Nine years last Whitsunday.

17,750. Now I would like to know how was that rent of £20 apportioned among the stock; what was the rent for a cow?—I did not find out the rent of an individual cow separately.

17,751. Was there a rent on the sheep, so many shillings the sheep?—That was not indicated either. The souming was made and the rent was put against it.

17,752. Do you know any other lands suitable for settlement besides those you have mentioned. Do you know Scallasaig?—Yes.

17,753. Is there land there?—Plenty.

17,754. How much?—Plenty; enough of land.

17,755. Do you mean by that that there is more land than the people could occupy?—I could not exactly say that, but there is enough that would do for all who want it here now.

17,756. And you would be willing to see a few strangers, I suppose, if they could be accommodated?—Any man.

17,757. Now, besides Scallasaig, is there any other place?—Sandaig.

17,758. Is there some land there?—Yes.

17,759. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Were you a shepherd to your brother?—The place would not pay otherwise; we were paying £132 for it, and it would not pay us to have a hired shepherd.

17,760. I am afraid your experience of sheep farming is that it was not very profitable to you and your brother?—We were keeping the stock in good order, but the rent was made so high that it was going beyond us. My brother and I paid over £1300 in nine years for it; rather more than that.

17,761. What was the extent of the grazing?—I never got it measured.

17,762. How many sheep had your brother when you had the whole ground?—At tupping time we had 458 ewes, besides hoggs. Glenelg.

17,763. So that the rent you speak of was not confined to the 50 sheep you told us of at first. Has the hill grazing about here deteriorated.—No. Donald Macleod.

17,764. Then what land was it you referred to that had gone back?—It is the old arable land that has deteriorated.

17,765. When you speak of government money, do you mean that government should give the money as a gift or to be paid back on interest, merely lending the money?—I am not wanting it as a gift.

17,766. That means, then, that you think the crofters should pay yearly interest on money advanced?—They would require to do that.

17,767. Do you think that crofters could pay yearly interest on the government loan, work the farm, maintain themselves and their families, and have any money over to pay rent for the land?—That would depend upon the rent that would be put upon it.

17,768. But do you think they would be able to pay any rent at all?—I think they would.

17,769. You are not sure that they could do it?—I am sure they could pay rent, for if they could not pay rent they would not want the land.

17,770. The Chairman.—You mean you would not take a holding of the kind you have been describing unless you could pay the fair rent, also pay interest on the government loan and maintain yourself besides?—I am thinking that the land should be put in order so that it would be suitable for that.

17,771. But suppose the land suitable; suppose skilled men were of opinion that the land was suitable with a reasonable amount of effort on your part; would you refuse to take such a holding unless you saw your way to paying a fair rent, paying interest on the loan and maintaining yourself fairly besides?—I would not refuse to take it even then.

17,772. Even although you could not?—I would then be indigent altogether; I would not know what to live upon.

17,773. Suppose you got a government loan, would you look forward to being able to repay the principal after a lapse of time?—As much as I could.

17,774. Till you paid the whole?—I would think that honest. Neither I nor anybody belonging to me ever got anything before that we did not pay for, and no proprietor has a farthing against us.

17,775. You wanted to make an explanation about your house?—Yes, about how we came into the house at Kirkton.

17,776. Well, just give the explanation you wish.—We were out of the land at Balvraid, we had no house where we could go; when we were going out my brother asked the factor where we were to go, as we had no place to go to. 'You look to that,' he said.

17,777. Was that Mr Mollison, or who was the factor?—Mr Grant. We built a house ourselves in the glen that cost us £60. We thought it hard that we should be on the roadside after having built a house that cost us £60 in the glen. When the factor said to my brother that he must look to that, I said the bayonet must go to my breast before I would go out of the house till I would got another one. Within a week word came that we would get a house in Kirkton.

17,778. And you have been living there ever since?—Yes.

17,779. How long have you been living there rent free?—Nine years.

17,780. Do you wish to say any more?—No.

17,781. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Didn't you say that you never took anything from anyone that you didn't pay for?—I said that we never had any land but what we paid for, and that no proprietor or factor had any money against us, and I still say so.

17,782. But you are living in a house now at the proprietor's expense?—Yes.

17,783. Mr Donald Grant, factor.—Did you hear me say to your brother that it was your look out if you would get a house.—Certainly, I was present and heard it said.

17,784. The Chairman.—Where was it said?—On the road in the Little Glen.

William Maccrimmon.

WILLIAM MACCRIMMON, Glen-Bernera, Glenelg (50.) (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

17,785. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

17,786. In Bernera?—Yes.

17,787. Was your rent fixed by the Crofters Commission or arranged by the landlord?—It was the landlord who did it.

17,788. When was that?—Since I went to the township, it is the proprietor who did it.

17,789. When did you go to the township?—About forty years ago.

17,790. Did the landlord within the last ten or fifteen years make a new settlement with you?—Yes.

17,791. What was the old rent and what is the new?—First we paid £16 and it is £13 now.

17,792. What stock have you got?—60 sheep, 7 cows (4 cows and followers), and a horse.

17,793. Anything else?—Nothing else.

17,794. Is that your souming?—Yes.

17,795. Do you wish to leave your holding?—Yes.

17,796. Why?—It is too small.

17,797. What acres arable have you; have you sufficient arable acreage to winter your stock?—No.

17,798. How do you winter them?—Buying hay and provender for them.

17,799. Have you to do that every year?—Yes.

17,800. Do you wish such a holding as would enable you to winter your stock without purchasing hay and provender?—Yes.

17,801. What size of holding would you desire, with the view of wintering your stock at home without purchasing?—200 sheep.

17,802. But what size of arable?—Is it the stock I have now?

17,803. Yes, the stock you have now?—As much more; about 12 acres, I have about 6 and I would like 12.

17,804. If you had 12 acres arable, would you expect to be able to winter your stock without purchase?—Yes, I could winter them, but although I could winter them I would be badly off myself.

17,805. How?—A man with so small land as that would not have enough to keep him.

17,806. Don't you think it would be safer for you to carry on with the stock you have got and an arable area sufficient for you to winter them rather than venture into a new holding?—No.

17,807. Then what is it you desire?—I want to get back to Suardalan, a place up the glen.

17,808. Is that an old township?—Yes, it is. [Mr Grant.—He is a brother of the former witness Maccrimmon.]

17,809. What size of holding do you desire to obtain at Suardalan?—What my grandfathers had.

17,810. What stock?—It would keep about 700 sheep.

17,811. You mean the whole place or your own croft?—I am not wanting the whole, but I would like 200 sheep.

17,812. And how many cows?—Six.

17,813. And a horse?—Two horses.

17,814. What extent of arable have you in view for that croft?—About 40 acres.

17,815. And would you be prepared to venture upon such a holding without assistance?—Yes, but I won't take the stock that is on it.

17,816. Do you think that it would be safe for you to do that, in view of the present price of sheep?—I am sure it would be safe.

17,817. Just explain why you think it would be safer for you to take a holding of 40 acres arable, and a carry of 200 sheep, 6 cows and 2 horses;

Glenelg.

William Maccrimmon.

than your present holding with double the arable?—Where there is a sufficiency of land, a man can have something off it besides a small patch where a man can have nothing off it.

17,818. In other words, you think that with a stock such as you indicate you would be more likely to cultivate to a profit and maintain yourself fairly than in your present holding, with double the arable?—Yes, I would be better off although I had my present ground for nothing.

17,819. Is this not the case, that in times when prices are low, a man with a small holding, if it is not too small, is rather in a safer position than a man in a large holding?—It would be a small holding, 200 sheep.

17,820. But is a man not safer with that than with a large holding when prices are low?—Yes, if one had such a farm as Mr Mitchell's. [Mr Sutherland.—The whole of his difficulty is the difference in the quality of the ground between the two.]

17,821. Suppose the arable of the two holdings to be much of the same quality; my question is, and answer it just as you feel the truth directs you, whether you think it would not be safer to go on with your present holding and double the arable, taking it of good quality, than having a large holding such as you have been describing, when prices are low?—I would take my chance of the other way.

17,822. But speaking as a practical man, and knowing the difficulties of the position when prices are low, would you be prepared to venture upon that new holding rather than continue on your present holding with double the arable?—Yes, and I will pay a year's rent in advance before I go in.

17,823. And you are prepared to put up the buildings and stock the land?—Yes, if I don't get any help for building a house from the factor; in any case I don't care much.

17,824. Now, besides that land you have mentioned, is there any other land you would like to invite our attention to?—I will take Iomaire-a'-ghradain if I get it, the north side of it.

17,825. Did you give this evidence before Lord Napier's Commission in 1883? You were examined by Lord Napier himself, apparently, volume 3, page 2065, question 32,453. 'Do you want more land?—Yes, we 'want more land; and now that the proprietor has plenty 'of land in his own hands, and is wishing to let it, we 'do not see very well why he should not give it out to 'those of us who could afford to take it, when we would 'be willing to pay at the same rate of rent as the large 'farms.' Then the question was asked 'What land 'has the proprietor in his own hands?—Eilanreoch.' Is that one of the places you have mentioned?—Yes.

17,826. Next, Professor Mackinnon asks 'What 'amount of land would you yourself be able or willing 'to take?—I would take about 300 or 400 acres.

'What would be about the rent of the place you 'would wish to take?—Between £30 and £40.

'That would be about the size of the place your 'father had long ago?—Yes.

'And you think the place for which he paid £16 'would now-a-days be worth £30 or £40?—Thereabout.

'The Chairman.—You would require to leave your 'present place if you got such a place as that?—I would 'be quite willing to do that. Three were ejected from 'this place in order to make room for us when we went 'there, and some would be only too glad to get back even 'at the present day.

'Can you say how those in your father's position 'were able to stand the shock of the potato famine?—'He never got any assistance at that time, although no 'doubt it gave them a heavy blow. Still they had suffi-'cient means to be able to do without assistance, and if 'they had been left in the land they would have been 'able to hold it. They were not a penny in arrears.'

17,827. Then Professor Mackinnon asks 'And did 'he always consider it a loss to have had to leave that 'place and go where he went to?—Yes.

'He would have preferred to remain where he was?'—Yes.

'Do you remember what amount of stock he would 'have when he left it?—About 12 milk cows and 100 'sheep and horses.'

Glenelg.

William Maccrim

17,828–30. Do you still adhere to that evidence?—Yes, I still adhere to it and I understand it.

17,831. I have no doubt you do; and you adhere to it?—Yes.

17,832. And now that you are asked ten years afterwards, you are still desirous of obtaining a croft or holding of the size you described and with the carry of stock you have mentioned?—Yes.

17,833. And if you got such a holding you would pay a year's rent in advance?—Yes.

17,834. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Did you hear what the other witnesses said about a government loan?—I am not wanting a government loan.

17,835. Do you think it would be a mistake for men to undertake farming with the debt of a government loan about their necks? I will put it this way; do you think that it would be better that such holdings as we have been speaking about should be occupied only by tenants who have got enough capital to stock themselves, or whether they would equally succeed if they had a government loan advanced to them?—It would be far better to give it to the man who could stock it for himself.

17,836. Do you think the effect of having to pay yearly interest back on the government loan would be a severe drawback to a man?—I have no doubt whatever of that. Besides the interest, he would probably have to pay the loan itself eventually.

17,837. Can you give me any idea of what you would consider a fair rent for the 40 acres arable, 6 cows, 200 sheep, and 2 horses up at Suardalan?—About £25.

17,838. I notice that you wish your holding to be of a considerable extent; do you think that it would be good for the other crofters in the glen if they obtained fresh holdings that they also should be of the same size?—No, I don't think they should have the same size.

17,839. Could you give me a reason?—A good deal of it depends upon how people were brought up from their youth.

17,840. Do you think that to occupy a holding such as you mention they should have considerable knowledge of farming?—It would be necessary.

17,841. Would it not be necessary also to have a knowledge of farming if they occupied smaller holdings?—They would do with less knowledge in a smaller holding.

17,842. Would the land be so well cultivated?—No.

17,843. Then to put the land to its best use, whether in small or large holdings, the occupiers in your opinion ought to have a good knowledge of farming?—Yes, they would require a knowledge of farming or they would not be able to work the land properly.

17,844. And they should have enough capital to stock it themselves?—Yes, I am of that opinion also.

17,845. Mr Maccallum.—As you know Glenmore well, could you give the names of the old townships in Glenmore?—I could not very well, but I would give them to-morrow. I have them in a book at home.

17,846. The Chairman.—Is your home far from here?—No.

17,847. As soon as your examination is over you could go and get your book and tell us the names?—Yes, I could do that.

17,848. Mr Maccallum.—And you could also give perhaps the number of tenants in each township?—I could not tell that. Mr Mitchell said Glenmore would maintain sixteen families.

17,849. And on the other side of Glenmore, Scallasaig, how many families do you think could be accommodated?—About eight to make them equal to the sixteen on the other side.

17,850–1. Do you anticipate that there would be any loss to the proprietor if these lands were made available for such holdings as you speak of?—I think the proprietor would lose nothing if it was made in large shares like that with four tenants to each hirsel; they would have money to put stock on it.

17,852. You think they would be able to pay as high a rent as the large farmer for the whole?—Yes, I think they could.

17,853. And do you think there would be a keen competition by the people of the district for such holdings?—No, I don't think so. They are not in the district that would take it.

17,854. But those who are in the district are very anxious for such holdings?—No, not to get that much land.

17,855. Then you would recommend holdings of a size too large for the ability of the people in the district?—It is for myself I wanted the size I indicated, not for them.

17,856. Then can you not speak for others at all as to their willingness to take land?—I am not against their getting it at all, but I know they are not wanting that much land; very few of them or none at all.

17,857. Then the others would need to be helped, you think, before they could take such holdings?—Some of them, at any rate, would require to be.

17,858. Supposing that these lands were made available in such holdings as you were saying, would there be competitors from other districts for them?—Yes, if they would get it.

17,859. And would there be a better competition for them than for the large holdings?—I think there would be.

17,860. How is Scallasaig held at present?—It is in the hands of the proprietor.

17,861. How long has it been in his hands?—I think about six years.

17,862. And when the last tenant left was it advertised to let?—I don't remember.

17,863. Do you know whether it was advertised to be let in medium-sized holdings?—No.

17,864. And was there any application for it, do you know, by the crofters, for parts of it say?—I don't think they asked for any of it.

17,865. Did you yourself indicate that you were willing to take a medium-sized holding?—Yes, of the size I indicated now.

17,866. You made application to the proprietor through the factor, did you?—I was speaking to them about it.

17,867. The holding that you have at present you consider too small for you?—Yes, without doubt.

17,868. You got an addition made to it recently, did you not?—Yes.

17,869. And is it possible to add arable land to it; is there arable land in the neighbourhood of your present holding?—No.

17,870. When you got the additional pasture your rent was reduced, is that so?—No; we got the additional pasture without increasing the rents.

17,871. Did you not say that your rent was originally £16?—Yes.

17,872. And then it was reduced to £13?—Yes.

17,873. When did you get the addition?—When the Commission was here about two years ago.

17,874. Do you think that the crofters pay as high a rent for the lands they occupy as the large farmers?—More, higher.

17,875. They are more profitable to the proprietors than the large?—Yes, if they would get the money.

17,876. But the rent which they pay, is it not as good a rent for the land they hold as what the large farmer pays?—The small ones pay more per acre if they all did pay it, but the big farmers are more profitable as they pay their rent all at once.

17,877. Is it, then, within your knowledge that the crofters are deeply in arrear?—I think they are.

17,878. Have they been paying the fair rent fixed by the Commission?—Some of them, I think.

17,879. But you cannot speak positively?—No.

17,880. Can you speak of the Bernera crofters for instance, are they deeply in arrear?—I think they are.

17,881. But taking that into consideration that some of them have not been able to pay, still as a whole do you think that the crofters are just as profitable to the proprietor as the large farmer?—I do not think they are.

17,882. And the reason is that they are in arrear, is that the only reason?—That is why I think so; because they are in arrears.

17,883. And has the proprietor any great outlay on account of the crofters?—Since the young proprietor came he has put out a good deal of money on improving crofters' holdings.

17,884. Has he built new houses?—Yes, he has.

17,885. Has he built new houses for the Bernera crofters?—He did for one of them.

17,885*a*. And where are the other houses that have been built for crofters?—He built one down here for a crofter.

17,886. What is the name of the place?—Under the Bernera rock.

17,887. Is he a cofter?—Yes, Archie Chisholm.

17,888. What kind of croft has he got?—He has about four acres; he got a share of Galltar.

17,889. Can you tell us of any other houses built by the proprietor for crofters?—He built some in Kirkton.

17,890. How many?—Three or four of them, I think.

17,891. Were these built without any assistance from the crofter?—Yes, they were built without any assistance from the crofter.

17,892. Are there crofters that pay no rent here?—I think there are.

17,893. And you say that it is for crofters who pay no rent that these houses were built?—Yes.

17,894. And are these workers on the estate?—Yes.

17,895. These houses have been built then for workmen rather than for people of the crofting class?—It is crofters that went into them.

17,896. People who had land elsewhere, is it?—They have land still.

17,897. And pay no rent?—I think some of them don't pay rent for the house.

17,898. Could you give us the names of those who pay no rent and for whom houses were built? [Mr Donald Macrae.—Might I mention this point at this stage?—The Chairman.—No, no, I can't at present interrupt the examination of the witness.]—Donald Macleod, on the street of Kirkton. I heard that he was paying no rent for the house.

17,899. Any other?—I think there is Angus Macleod, he had a croft and I think he has got the house along with the croft, but I am not very sure.

17,900. What is his place?—In the street of Kirkton.

17,901. Any other?—I don't know; there are women there, I think, who have houses.

17,902. What does Donald Macleod do?—He had cow's grass; he is a mason.

17,903. What size of croft has he got?—An acre and grazing for two cows.

17,904. And Angus Macleod, what has he?—About the same.

17,905. And what does he do for a living?—He is a shepherd with the proprietor.

17,906. Then it is a shepherd's house that has been built in that case, is it?—No, it is not a shepherd's house.

17,907. Isn't he a shepherd with the proprietor, and that is his house?—He is stopping in the house, but there is no man stopping in the house as well as him.

17,908. But that is the house he has as shepherd, isn't it?—No, it is not a shepherd's house, because if another shepherd would come he would not get that house.

17,909. Mr Sutherland.—Were you appointed a delegate at a meeting at Bernera?—No.

17,910. So you are speaking your own opinion merely?—Yes.

17,911. And no person is bound by the opinion you express in your township?—I don't care whether they are or not.

17,912. So you came here to-day merely to advocate for yourself the possession of these lands in Suardalan?—What I came here to-day to ask for is any place in the district where I could get it.

17,913. For yourself?—For myself, and if you think I am not right I will show you a chair that was in Suardalan in the time of Prince Charlie.

Glenelg.

William Maccrimmon.

17,914. Now I gather that your opinion amounted to this, with regard to the holdings, that some people would be able to take larger holdings than other people through having more capital; is that so?—No, that is not my opinion.

17,915. Would you advocate the holdings that are to be made to be of the same size?—No.

17,916. Where were you born, do you say?—In Iomaire-a'-Ghradain.

17,917. How did you come to be in Bernera?—We were evicted from Iomaire-a'-Ghradain.

17,918. What was your father's name?—Archibald Maccrimmon.

17,919. Do you know why they were put from Iomaire-a'-Ghradain?—Yes, I know why.

17,920. Would you please tell why?—Because Mr John Macrae was for nine years asking the place, and Mr Horne gave it to him.

17,921. What had Mr Horne to do with it?—He was regulating the estate, and I believe he tried to take the estate from themselves, and no wonder he put us out of the township.

17,922. Do you mean from the proprietor?—From the proprietor.

17,923. Was that Mr Donald Horne, W.S., Edinburgh?—Yes.

17,924. Did you hear the evidence given by another witness before you with regard to the people coming here from Skye?—I don't think I was in at the time.

17,925. Did you ever hear that people did come here from Skye when Macleod of Macleod had the lands?—I don't think any came except for service, such as shepherds brought by big farmers who had farms here.

17,926. Do you think any persons came here from the island of Skye as the result of clearing the land there?—I did not hear.

17,927. Well, coming back to Bernera where you now are, what extent of grazing have you got? What are your boundaries?—Ardintoul was on the north side, and crofters are on this side.

17,928. Which crofters?—The crofters of Galltar. The innkeeper at Kyle Rhea is on the west side.

17,929. They don't go to the sea then?—Yes.

17,930. Behind the hotelkeeper?—Yes.

17,931. They hold their grazing in common in the township of Bernera, do they?—They don't hold it in common, each man has his own stock.

17,932. But they hold their grazing in common?—Yes.

17,933. And have they all an equal share of the stock?—Yes.

17,934. Is the proportion fixed by any estate regulation, or do you agree among yourselves about it?—The people themselves.

17,935. And do they all hold the same amount of stock on the common grazing?—Yes, one may have a few more or less.

17,936. And is it according to the rent he pays that he has stock?—They pay an equal rent.

17,937. And have equal stock?—They should have equal stock.

17,938. But have they?—One year a man may have more sheep and another year he may have fewer.

17,939. But they are all entitled to have the same number?—Yes.

17,940. But there are variations?—They can't keep to the same number.

17,941. Are you of opinion that their ground is overstocked?—No, I am not.

17,942. Could you give us, without any trouble, the amount of stock that is on the 856 acres I think it is?—60 each and not even that.

17,943. Is it 60 for each of the four?—Yes.

17,944. That is 240 for 856 acres, is that right?—I don't know; that is the stock, but I don't know how many acres there are.

17,945. Have they cows on it besides?—Yes, they have cows on it besides.

17,946. How many cows?—Seven each.

17,947. Twenty-eight cows?—Twenty-eight cattle-beasts.

17,948. And have they horses?—One each.

Glenelg.

William Maccrimm

17,949. And you don't think the ground is overstocked?—No.

17,950. It carries that stock easily?—Yes

17,951. And is the stock good?—Yes.

17,952. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Perhaps your lordship might ask him; it appears that he applied in the year 1883 before the Lord Napier Commission, he spoke about suitable lands in the hands of the proprietor on the farm of Eilanreach, and he refers to Sandaig; he might perhaps be asked what portion of Eilanreach he referred to when he spoke before Lord Napier's own Commission.

17,953. The Chairman.—You were asked by Lord Napier about Eilanreach. Is that a farm or a part of a farm?—It is a farm.

17,954. Who is the farmer, or is it in the hands of the proprietor?—The Master of Blantyre is the farmer.

17,955. Is there land there available?—There are bits of land.

17,956. Do you mean small patches or considerable tracts?—There are good large bits between the little glen and Sandaig.

17,957. Suitable for settlement of crofters?—Yes.

17,958. Are you employed on the estate?—No. Yes, I will be working for the estate and getting paid for it.

17,959. Why did you first say no and then say yes?—I meant that I am not working for the estate unless I take a contract.

17,960. Do you take contracts for work on the estate?—Yes.

17,961. What sort of contracts?—Rushes and ferns.

17,962. Do you mean cutting them?—Cutting them down.

17,963. Clearing the land of rushes and ferns?—Just clearing the land of them.

17,964. How many years have you been getting contracts of that sort?—I don't know, I don't remember.

17,965. A good many years?—Not many.

17,966. How many?—It will be six or seven years.

17,967. And how much do you make each year on the average from these contracts; of course, they vary no doubt?—From £9 to £12.

17,968. Are you in arrear yourself?—No, I don't think I am.

17,969. But I would like to know a little more distinctly, yes or no?—No, when the factor and I adjust matters.

17,970. Are you able to say, from your own knowledge, whether the crofters in this district are considerably in arrear?—I am not going to take any business about them.

17,971. But you have been telling us a great deal about that, especially in your answers to Mr Maccallum. Does it consist with your knowledge and belief that the crofters are considerably in arrear or does it not?—I know that some of them are in arrears, pretty heavily too.

17,972. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Are any other crofters employed on the estate from time to time besides yourself?—Yes.

17,973. And they find it some help to them, I suppose?—Oh, yes, they are getting help, but I was doing better before I was getting any work at all.

17,974. Mr Sutherland.—You stated that the crofters were in arrears and that the large farmers were not in arrears; could you tell us how you know that the large farmers are not in arrear?—Some of themselves, and the factor said so to me.

17,975. And is your knowledge regarding the arrears of the crofters also derived from the factors?—I take no concern with such a thing at all.

17,976. You merely stated it to us?—I said nothing of the kind.

17,977. Do you mean to say that you did not state here that the crofters were in arrears?—I did say that; no mistake about that.

17,978. The Chairman.—From what source do you derive your knowledge in stating that some of the crofters are considerably in arrear?—By the Commission when it was here last.

17,979. Any other source?—No.

17,980. Can you give us the paper you promised? (Hands in document.)

17,981. The townships that you give in Glenmore and Glenbeg are 'Iomaire-a'-Ghradain, Lowel, Orcharnarchan, Achchurn, Edinvaich, Knockfinn, Pittalmitt, Mylemore, Upper Myle, Leunakhan.' Is this your writing?—No.

17,982. 'Suardalan, Scallasaig, Beolairidh and Milltown.' Are these the whole?—Yes.

17,983. Where did you get this information?—I know the place since my birth, and I got somebody to write it for me.

17,984. Can you show us the localities of all these places?—Yes, I can show every one of them.

AUGUSTUS BAILLIE, Dochfour (31), assisted by DONALD GRANT, Grantown, Factor for Glenelg—examined.

17,985. The Chairman.—You are brother of the proprietor?—Yes. And you have been acting for some time in the management of this part of the estate?—No, not this part of the estate, I have just come here to represent him, that is all. Mr Donald Grant manages this part of the estate.

17,986. You have been assisting your brother in the management of the estates, but not this part?—That is so.

17,987. You represented your brother, I think, before the Crofters Commission?—Yes, but that part of the estate I did manage.

17,988. That is towards Inverness?—Yes, towards Inverness.

17,989. You have a written statement?—Yes, acreage and so on and definition of the property.

17,990. Kindly read it.—James E. B. Baillie, Esq. of Dochfour, the present proprietor of Glenelg, succeeded to the property in 1883. The extent was then about 43,000 acres. The extent has since been reduced by the sale of Arnisdale, the part of the property along the head of Loch Hourn, to about 28,000 acres. A large area is sterile and rocky. The estate consists chiefly of three grazing farms, viz., Beolary extending to about 6500 acres; Eilanreoch including Balvraid extending to about 12,300 acres; and Scallisaig extending to about 6000 acres. The first two mentioned farms are let to tenants; Scallisaig is in the proprietor's hands. The proprietor holds also a part of the grazing of Culindoun. The whole arable land now in cultivation or cultivated during the last thirty or forty years is about 355 acres. Of that extent about 200 acres are held by the larger tenants, including 50 acres in the proprietor's hands. The total tenancies are 69, and of that number 39 hold lots of 2 acres arable and under, exclusive of grazing, and 18 lots not exceeding 12 acres arable exclusive of grazing. In addition to this, 10 tenants hold 320 acres pasture in common; 23 tenants 130 acres; 4 tenants 865 acres; and 10 tenants have grazing for cows with the proprietor's stock at Culindown, at a rent of 10s. for each cow and follower. The grazing of Galder, extending to 340 acres, was recently let to tenants in that locality at the rent of £15. The proprietor made a considerable reduction on the rents of the small tenants shortly after he took possession of the property. The tenants were encouraged, irrespective of leases, to call in the Crofters Commission in order to have the rents judicially fixed. Nineteen applications were made, several of which were joint-applications by the proprietor and tenant, with the result that the rents were fixed at the valuation of the proprietor's factor, with very trifling variations.

17,991. How many cases were there of persons holding under lease placed by consent of the proprietor under the Commission?—[Mr Grant.—Will you allow me to adopt the statement and answer the questions as I know the details?]

17,992. Very well. How many holdings under lease were placed under the Commission by the consent of the estate?—None.

17,993. I beg your pardon, 'the tenants were 'encouraged, irrespective of leases, to call in the 'Crofters Commission in order to have the rents 'judically fixed.' What I want to know is how many of them came in under the Act?—Those that had leases didn't appeal to the Commission at all, they were encouraged to do it, but they didn't do it.

17,994. But, of course, the effect of their coming before the Commission you know, with the consent of the estate, would have been to put an end to the leases and place them under the Act?—We offered to let them be under the Act, we treated them as under the Act.

17,995. Are they under the Act?—Yes.

17,996. Those who have leases?—Yes, we regard them as being under the Act, but they never came before the Commission. The Commission went to Arnisdale.

17,997. I think that should be put right. You would be entitled at present to apply the section of the Act excluding leaseholders. The tenant holds nothing in writing to enable him to maintain that he is under the Act?—The leases have expired now.

17,998. But that does not matter; they were under lease, I suppose, at the passing of the Act. I think, if I might offer a suggestion, I would have that placed on a more definite basis?—We are willing to do anything that is reasonable.

17,999. They do not wish their rents dealt with, I suppose?—No.

18,000. Had they made applications?—No, but their neighbours made applications and we fixed the rents at the same sum.

18,001. It is a matter for the crofters and their advisers and not one that is before this Commission.—The majority of them have been transferred to another landlord since.

18,002. Of course, in that case you have no control over them. Is there any part of the Dochfour estate under forest?—Not of the Glenelg estate.

18,003. Well, I suppose we are dealing with the Glenelg estate at present. What was the date of the sale of the Arnisdale part of the property?—I think we gave possession two years last Whitsunday.

18,004. Is the remaining area of the Dochfour estate only 15,000 acres?—28,000 acres in Glenelg, that is exclusive of Glenshiel, which adjoins it.

18,005. How much in Glenshiel? Perhaps you gave us that at Glenshiel?—Yes, I did; it is 24,300 acres.

18,006. Now what proportion of the 28,000 acres is under sheep?—24,800 acres in the three farms specially mentioned.

18,007. That is on the Glenelg portion of the estate?—Yes.

18,008. Are these all the farms?—There are smaller grazings, the grazings held in common by the crofters.

18,009. But sheep farmers?—No, that is the only three.

18,010. What is the extent of land held by crofters under grazing?—2380 acres.

18,011. In the hands of crofters as hill grazing?—That includes patches of arable land.

18,012. The arable is but a small portion of it. In what year did you become factor, Mr Grant?—In 1884.

18,013. The previous factor had been Mr Mollison?—Yes.

18,014. And he had been factor for many years?—I understand he was.

18,015. You had no connection with the estate prior to 1884?—No, I knew nothing about it. I came in the latter part of 1883 to look at it, and fix the crofters' rents, but I did nothing till 1884.

18,016. Do you know whether there is a desire for land among the crofters here?—Yes, I believe there is.

18,017. Are you of opinion,—I am not speaking, of course, of the question of material damage or the like,—

Glenelg. Donald Grant.

but are you of opinion apart from that, that there is land which would be suitable for the settlement of crofters?—Very few, there is not room for many holdings on Glenelg, I mean, of course, that would be likely to pay.

18,018. Is there room for some?—There is.

18,019. I understand there is a willingness on the part of the estate to meet the reasonable claims and demands of crofters?—There is; Mr Baillie has always been very willing.

18,020. You wrote a letter, I see. Mr Macrae, as representing the crofters, has handed me what bears to be a copy of a letter, dated 11th February 1888, Royal Bank Buildings, Grantown, in which you say 'Glenelg. 'Dear Mr Baillie, I have your note of 9th inst. with 'petition. Dochfour has repeatedly explained that he 'would willingly give land to the crofters if it were at 'his disposal.' Does that expression represent now the mind of the estate upon the matter?—It does, but they have got a good deal since then.

18,021. Kindly let us know, for our information, what they have got since then?—They have got about 1200 acres.

18,022. Of grazing?—Of grazing.

18,023. Which crofters got the benefit of that?—There are four crofters on Bernera, there are ten at Galder and ten who have certain rights of grazing at Cul-an duin.

18,024. That is rights of grazing over the landlord's farm?—Over the land in his own possession.

18,025. Speaking roughly, as to these 1200 acres, what additional carry of cattle or sheep stock will it afford to crofters?—Well, I should think it would afford and they have added to their cattle some 40 cows.

18,026. Since they got the land?—Yes, since I came here, and I should think there is an addition to their sheep stock of 400.

18,027. I take these as approximate figures of course; 40 cows and 400 sheep among how many crofters?—The number of tenancies are given in that statement of Mr Baillie's.

18,028. 'The total tenancies are 69, and of that 'number 39 hold lots of 2 acres arable and under, 'exclusive of grazing, and 18 lots not exceeding 12 acres 'arable exclusive of grazing. In addition to this, 10 'tenants hold 320 acres pasture in common; 23 tenants '130 acres; 4 tenants 865 acres; and 10 tenants have 'grazing for cows with the proprietor's stock at Culin-'doun at a rent of 10s. for each cow and follower.' Adding that up gives the correct figure, I suppose?—Yes.

18,029. Is it your opinion, reverting to your nine years' experience as factor for this property, that there is need of more land on the part of the crofters?—Well, it is a very difficult question; so long as a crofter—

18,030. Look at it for a moment from the crofters' point of view, and then answer?—Oh, the crofters have no doubt themselves, in their own minds, that they would be much benefited by land.

18,031. And I daresay you share that opinion?—No, I do not.

18,032. Why?—I would be inclined to give them what they want, to see what they would do with it; but I have had some experience of crofters elsewhere, and I find that if a crofter has more land, if he has land that interferes with his wage-earning time, it does not pay; unless he has as much land as will occupy his whole time. I think the crofts that they would lay out for themselves would not be large enough, and I am doubtful whether they could provide capital for their crofts. Then from the estate point of view there is an objection to planting crofts upon some of the places mentioned by the witnesses. I have no doubt the land is very suitable and would make very good crofts, but you would cut up a farm of 6000 acres and deprive the tenant of that farm of the wintering.

18,033. Could there not be experimental settlements made with crofters, and leave sufficient wintering to the farmer?—There is not arable land enough, as you will see when you see the ground. The extent of grazing land is much in excess of anything arable that would keep the sheep in winter, and the result is that all the large farmers send their young stock to winter in the east, in Aberdeenshire and elsewhere.

Glenelg. Donald Grant.

18,034. Is that so here?—All the large farmers send their young stock away.

18,035. To winter in other counties?—In other counties. We do it ourselves, and my experience is that if we did not we would lose more than the wintering in mortality.

18,036. To what extent is wintering carried on here; is it carried on to any extent?—We keep the ewes in this country.

18,037. But not the hoggs?—Not the hoggs.

18,038. Of course, the crofters winter their stock as best they can?—They do, and I have no doubt the mortality is very heavy in consequence.

18,039. Leaving out of view for a moment the question of availability of the land, are you, from your experience, in favour of a croft carried on by the wage-earning crofter or of a croft (I am speaking of this locality) which would be large enough in fair years to enable him to live by his holding?—I am in favour of a croft that would be large enough to support a family.

18,040. A man and wife and say four or five children?—Yes, the family going out as they are able to do work.

18,041. You are of opinion that such a croft with fair average chances is quite a possible thing?—Yes, quite.

18,042. In this district?—Yes.

18,043. And that there are men who might be trusted to make the experiment?—I would not say that; I would not say that they have the experience.

18,044. They cannot have the experience, you know; that is impossible. But they have as much knowledge towards that end as you could expect from the crofter?—As much as I could expect from people that had not had the opportunity.

18,045. All the crofters here at present, I suppose, are wage-earning crofters, they don't depend upon their holdings?—Well, the four at Bernera, one of whom your lordship examined, Maccrimmon, don't do much work other than attend to their crofts.

18,046. The crofters of Bernera?—The crofters of Bernera.

18,047. These are rather larger crofts?—They have more grazing, they have an average of about 7 acres of arable land, but they have a good deal of grazing, and I don't think they do much besides.

18,048. And they depend upon their stock for their maintenance?—They do, and I have no doubt that, like other crofters or parties holding land to the same extent, that they are losing money, losing capital within the last two or three years.

18,049. In times like this, when prices are low, who suffers most,—the man with a small holding upon which he can live in a fair year or the man with a larger holding?—The man with the smaller holding if it occupies all his time.

18,050. Suffers?—Suffers more than the man with the large holding, as it occupies more of his time in proportion to the return from it.

18,051. You would rather, therefore, in such a case, speaking of yourself, have a larger holding than a smaller?—I would not approve of any croft,—beyond an allotment which would be a very profitable thing for a workman, because he could labour it after working hours—of less than 20 acres arable and a corresponding pasture.

18,052. That is to say, such an extent of pasture that would carry a stock that 20 acres arable land could winter?—Yes, except the young stock.

18,053. The rent is always a delicate subject, what rent would you put upon that?—Well, in fixing the rents here I was very much guided by the circumstances of the people that I had on the crofts.

18,054. Not entirely upon the value of the land?—No. But the rents here are all fixed at lower rates than any other place that I have fixed rents.

18,055. Indeed?—Yes.

18,056. The lowest rents you have fixed?—Yes, they are as low as any rents I have fixed. I don't know that they are cheaper after all, because the weather is against them here, so much wet.

18,057. Is this a wet place?—It is; on the average I believe they will not have more than three quarters of grain to the acre, whereas down in other parts of Inverness-shire they will have four or four and a half.

18,058. You mean corn?—Yes, and the labour is more expensive here than where they will have the four or four and a half quarters.

18,059. You have no fishing villages here?—No, except Kirkton; they do a little fishing at Kirkton.

18,060. That is to say for their own use?—Chiefly.

18,061. But no one here lives by the fishing industry?—I don't think it.

18,062. They live by their holdings and by earning wages?—Yes.

18,063. Do the crofters here get much work from the estate?—Well, we try and avoid taking in a stranger to do any work we have to do. They are very good tradesmen on the estate, Maccrimmon here and one or two masons and joiners do our work.

18,064. And you employ them as much as you can?—Not only employ them, but we sometimes do work, from the estate point of view, that really—

18,065. You make work?—Yes, make work.

18,066. Now you have mentioned a farm Beolary 6500 acres, and Eilanreoch, 12,300 including Balvraid, and Scallasaig is 6000 acres?—Yes.

18,067. That is a total area of 24,800 acres, a very considerable extent of territory?—Scallasaig is in our own hands, where there are about 50 acres arable. I have been over the whole place, and I am not aware that there is any old arable land there.

18,068. You mean land under cultivation?—Yes, land that ever was in cultivation.

18,069. But I always distinguish sharply between arable land in cultivation and what is called old arable?—Oh, we have not 50 acres in cultivation.

18,070. How many have you in cultivation?—About 35.

18,071. How many have you in cultivation in Eilanreoch?—Eilanreoch is let to a tenant; the arable land there will be about 70 to 80 acres.

18,072. In cultivation?—Or grass.

18,073. But I mean under rotation?—Oh, I don't know that; my extents are taken from the estate plans, and the present tenant may have changed the mode of working it.

18,074. He could not go against his lease?—We are not particular about conditions.

18,075. Are you able to say, then, how many acres of land under cultivation are on the farm of Eilanreoch?—I should think about 50 or 60.

18,076. And at Beolary?—Only the shepherds' crofts and grass for the sheep; probably about 20 or 30. These are mere estimates.

18,077. I am not taking them as accurate figures, I see your difficulty in stating them, but leaving all that land out of view, would not it be possible,—nay, would not it be quite practicable for skilled men, to take land from these farms, one or more of them, and settle crofters there without material damage to the letting value of the remainder of the farm?—No, I don't think so.

18,078. Well, I will put the question in this way. Would it not be possible to do so in such a way as still to leave a large farm which might be worked to profit?—No, I don't think any tenant could be got for Beolary if you take 80 acres of the low land that is arable now or could be cultivated from it.

18,079. I don't speak of land under cultivation. I speak of old arable, or land which, whether old arable or not, a skilled man would think of putting the plough into?—I don't think a tenant would take the farm at almost any rent. I may mention, with reference to the arable land of Beolary that some of the witnesses spoke about, I think it very likely that about the beginning of the century,—there was a great extent of arable low ground which you will see as you examine the ground, but the bed of the river has apparently risen some four or five feet, and it is now quite wet, growing very little but rushes and strong grass, and the first thing to do, if it was to be brought under cultivation, would be to lower the bed of the river, which would be attended with an expense that nothing would pay.

18,080. You are aware, of course, that there is a prevailing desire,—I don't confine the question to this district,—but there is a prevailing desire among those who belong to the crofter class to get new holdings and to get additions to their present holdings?—Yes.

18,081. And you say that is a natural desire?—It is.

18,082. And a desire which those in authority might fairly consider the best means of acceding to?—Yes.

18,083. In a legitimate way, I mean?—Yes.

18,084. Well, then, how would you do it?—You would require to get a considerable tract of arable land, either to purchase or to lease and let out as crofts, and I don't think you could expect crofters to take 20 acres of arable land and build houses upon it without assistance.

18,085. Might not some of the crofters here be trusted to venture upon considerable holdings without assistance?—If they could afford to build houses upon a croft of that size and stock them, they would be able to take a much larger holding with the houses on it.

18,086. You mean a farm?—A farm; and that would pay them better than a croft.

18,087. A £60 to £80 farm?—Yes, the same money would do it.

18,088. What is the rent of Beolary?—£420, I think it is.

18,089. And the rent of Eilanreoch?—£610 including Balvraid.

18,090. And the rent of Scallasaig?—It is entered in the valuation roll at £400.

18,091. Of course it is in the proprietor's own hands?—In the proprietor's own hands.

18,092. That is a total of £1430 from farm rents. Would it not be worth while for the proprietor—I am not suggesting that he should do it at present—to turn one of these farms, as they are of considerable extent, into crofters' settlements?—Scallasaig is not capable of being so turned; the extent of the arable land is so small compared with the pasture land.

18,093. Then what do you say to the other two?—That would be my objection to the other two, that if you take three or four crofts off Beolary you destroy the whole.

18,094. But my question is, would it not be worth while for the proprietor to consider as to turning the whole farm into settlements of an adequate size, having regard to the persons, the district, the climate and the quality of the soil?—He has been considering it; the difficulty just now is that they will not let at all.

18,095. Of course I know this is a bad time and prices are very low, but has he been considering that closely?—He has been considering the question of extending the area of the land under crofters.

18,096. I am putting the thing theoretically; it is quite a matter for himself and you?—Yes.

18,097. In what direction has he been considering the question of extending that area?—We have Cul-an-Duin in our own possession, and in reference to that letter I may mention that ten parties have got permission to graze cows on it. We have not given permission to the particular person who applied for it, because he had more cows than the others already; but we are willing to give permission to them if we find out that they have capital to stock it.

18,098. That is to say, you are willing to continue that policy as you find that it can be done fairly to yourselves and to them?—Yes, and we are willing to reduce the value of them if they are able to stock.

18,099. There was a great deal said by one witness about arrears. Are any considerable number of the crofters here in such a degree of arrears as would warrant you in complaining?—Well, they are in such a degree of arrears,—and I don't blame them, because times have been very bad,—but they are in such degree of arrears that in the case of the larger crofters I daresay we will have to wipe off some of them. The arrears have increased since the judicial rents were fixed.

18,100. Increased since the judicial rents were fixed?—Increased since the judicial rents were fixed.

18,101. Is that exceptional or is it general?—It is pretty general.

18,102. You put that down to the bad times?—Bad times entirely.

18,103. It is not due to any improper spirit?—Not at all; they are a most industrious class of crofters.

18,104. Mr Shaw Stewart.—There is a great deal of land in this property under sheep, and the proprietor has a large farm under sheep. I should like to know something about the capabilities of this part of the country for wintering sheep. Can you winter hoggs here?—Well, we have not been trying it for some time.

18,105. Why?—Because the mortality is so heavy. I found that we could not stand any rent at all if we wintered the hoggs here.

18,106. And you send them away to Aberdeenshire?—To Aberdeenshire and Easter Ross and the Black Isle and other places.

18,107. Then do you think the mortality would be very great if they tried to winter hoggs in this part?—It would; that is my impression. It is very great now even as we do it; the mortality in the Scallasaig stock of hoggs from the time that they are lambed until they came home from the wintering varies from three to five per score, and the mortality of the stock after that is at the rate of six per cent. That is to say, if we put in 700 odd hoggs a year old, we are only able to turn out 400 cast ewes,—a drop of 300 in about four years.

18,108. Then crofters taking up new grazings would have to consider not only the expense of stocking their land, but also the loss they would have to meet owing to the exceptional mortality from the disadvantage of wintering here?—They would, and I think that is one of the things that are not taken sufficiently into account. I have no doubt that in the case of the Galder crofters who have sheep stocks and who are wintering them at home, that is one of the sources of their heavy loss, the mortality. I know they devote their whole time to their crofts, and they are very industrious crofters. If the price of wool and stock were very high that would make them pay.

18,109. The Chairman.—You do not attribute the mortality to careless management?—No, I do not.

18,110. Mr Sutherland.—You say this property is divided into two parts, one in Glenshiel and the other in Glenelg, did I get the figures right?—I spoke of the Glenshiel one the other day. Mr Baillie did not refer to it just now.

18,111. The statement of Mr Baillie is now that the extent of the Glenelg property is 28,000 acres, and he gave the distribution of that land to be 24,800 acres in large farms, which leaves a balance of 4000 acres roundly speaking?—Yes, 3425.

18,112. Well, then, the distribution of that land is that two men and the proprietor himself have got the 24,800 acres, and all the remainder of the population have got the 4000 acres?—That is so.

18,113. Now could you give us any idea of what the population is that is in occupation of the 4000 acres, how many families for instance?—I have given you the number of tenancies, 63.

18,114. Is that the whole?—Yes, 63.

18,115. That is to say, then, that in the possession of the three families there are 24,800 acres, and in possession of the 63 or 67 there are 4000 acres?—That is so, but that may not include the whole of the population, because there are some who have got no land.

18,116. But broadly speaking is that a distribution of the land that you would be inclined to justify?—I was not at the distribution of it.

18,117. But you are maintaining and justifying the present distribution of it so far as I understand?—I am justifying the present management of the estate; but as to the time the distribution was made, I am not prepared to speak.

Glenelg. Donald Grant.

18,118. But that is included in the management, isn't it?—It is.

18,119. And looking at it broadly—I don't wish you to answer the question if you commit yourself in any way, but do you think it is unreasonable that there should be some dissatisfaction from that distribution?—Perfectly reasonable from the crofters' point of view.

18,120. And from the public point of view generally?—The public don't know much about it.

18,121. But they have to do with it a very great deal. Then you said, I think, that since 1884, 24 crofters have got 1200 acres?—About that, I am speaking roughly.

18,122. And you also said, I think, that on account of that extension they have added 40 cows and 400 sheep to their stock?—Well, I don't know what they have added. I am speaking of what it is capable of carrying.

18,123. But I thought you gave us what they had actually added to their stock?—What they ought to have added, but there is an overstocking, I have no doubt about that.

18,124. Now how many sheep are allowed commonly for the grazing of a cow; what is supposed to be the equation?—From 7 to 10 I should think.

18,125. I think 10 is the common rule that we have got here. In laying down sheep for the 40 cows that gives us how many sheep?—400 sheep.

18,126. And that added to the other stock they had would give how many, 640 sheep altogether?—Yes, but a good deal of the land let for cows' grazing is not adapted for sheep grazing.

18,127. But for the present purpose that does not matter much. That gives a stock of 800 sheep. For 1200 acres is that about the allowance of sheep in this country?—That depends entirely upon circumstances.

18,128. It is a very great deal less than one acre?—Yes.

18,129. And is that the rule?—I don't know the rule, because you can't get two localities the same.

18,130. Are not you overestimating the amount of stock or benefit they would get from getting 1200 acres?—No, I don't think so.

18,131. Then you maintain that a sheep can be maintained for the whole year, a stock sheep, upon less than an acre of land?—There is a sheep to one and a half acres, but it depends entirely upon the land.

18,132. But is the land that has been given to them of a nature that one and a half acres would maintain a sheep throughout the year?—I think so; a great deal of it is. I think they have more than that.

18,133. So it is about an acre to a sheep, and is that the rule for those large grazing farms you have spoken to?—No, I don't know there is any fixed rule.

18,134. Have you any idea how many sheep they have got an acre?—A sheep to two acres or one and a half acres.

18,135. So the farm of Eilanreoch, for instance, would have 24,000 or 28,000 sheep, is that so?—No.

18,136. Is not the acreage of Eilanreoch 24,000 acres?—No, Scallasaig.

18,137. It is my mistake 12,000 sheep, and as a matter of fact has it got 12,000 of a sheep stock?—I think there is a stock of about 5000 on Eilanreoch, between 4000 and 5000, and there must be, I should think, nearly a couple of thousand acres of Eilanreoch that would not summer a dozen sheep, the top of Ben Scriol.

18,138. Is that a greater or a less proportion of poor land than the crofters have got in poor land?—They have nothing like that at all.

18,139. Nothing as bad as Ben Scriol?—Not the least like that; the highest of the crofters' land is not more than 200 feet above the level of the sea.

18,140. But height does not always determine the character of the land?—It does in this case.

18,141. That is two acres in Eilanreoch and one and a half for the crofters per sheep?—Yes.

18,142. I did not gather the grounds of your saying that the people were under the Crofters Commission, that they were crofters?—We wished to put them all under the Crofters Commission, we had no objections to those who had leases applying to the Crofters Commission to have their rents fixed.

18,143. And the fact that they are not under the Crofters Commission is due to themselves?—Due to themselves.

18,144. Then you fixed the rent, and you stated that with regard to these rents they were sustained by the Commission?—Practically, yes.

18,145. But if they were not before the Commission how were they sustained by the Commission?—Several of them were guided by the case of others,—e.g., some ten crofters with the same extent of land applied to the Commission.

18,146. What did the Commission sustain?—The old rents, with the exception of 1s. in some cases and 2s. in others.

18,147. In other words, they did not decrease the rent that was payable before, is that it?—The difference in the 19 cases that the Commission decided was for the benefit of the estate—the old rents amounted to £66 and the new rents £67, 15s.

18,148. So that was an increase?—An increase of 15s. on one witness, William Maccrimmon.

18,149. May I ask when this £66 rental was fixed by the estate management?—£66 was fixed by me in 1884.

18,150. And the cases went before the Commission in?—In 1891.

18,151. And were there no extensions of holdings involved in this?—The extension of holdings took place between the two times, the extension at Camusban in 1884 and up here was arranged before the Commission came.

18,152. And are the extensions included in the £66?—The extension of Camusban was.

18,153. And the conditions were perfectly equal that were before you and before the Commission?—Perfectly equal.

18,154. And it was sustained?—It was sustained. I may mention that the reduction made in 1884 was 50 per cent.; I reduced the rents 50 per cent.

18,155. So that you anticipated in that respect the work of the Commission?—It was long before there was any talk of the Commission.

18,156. It was subsequent to Lord Napier's Commission though, was it not?—Yes, it was subsequent to the Commission but before the Crofters Act passed.

18,157. Then, talking about the increase of arrears since the fixing of the judicial rents, I don't think you lay great stress upon that, that it is anything very abnormal, do you?—Well, taking the times into account, I do not, because I find it is the same elsewhere.

18,158. May I ask you this one question just upon that point; do the arrears amount to a year's rental?—Of the crofters' rent?

18,159. Yes.—Yes, they do.

18,160. One year's rental of the area you have in your mind?—Yes.

18,161. Have you got a particular area of this estate in your mind?—All occupied by crofters.

18,162. Then you say the glen we saw to-day here is unfit for cultivation?—A great deal of it.

18,163. But do you think a proportion of it is capable of cultivation that would enable tenants to utilise the remaining pasture to advantage?—Not the whole of it.

18,164. So you think the proportion of grazing and arable land is not distributed in the quantities that would be suitable?—Not suitable for the purpose, but, as I said before, I think there was a great deal of arable land there eighty years ago that could not now be brought into cultivation without deepening the river.

18,165. And how was it under cultivation before; has the river bed risen?—I am satisfied it has.

18,166. How has that happened?—Well, I was not present when it rose.

18,167. But how, you will have a reason?—The small gravel would be carried down by the successive floods.

18,168. Wouldn't it be carried to the sea?—No.

18,169. Are not the same agencies at work that were at work eighty years ago?—I have no doubt.

18,170. And how do they work differently now?—I don't know, except it be an accumulation through time; there may have been landslips in one year that would fill up the bed of a river for several miles that may not happen another year; there may have been a sandbank, or many things.

18,171. There may be many things?—I have no doubt.

18,172. But do you mean to assert for a fact that the level of the river bed has changed over eighty years?—My impression, and I think it would be your impression when you see it, is that the bed of the river has considerably changed.

18,173. Higher now than it was?—Yes, that is quite a common thing in rivers; any person who knows anything about streams knows that this is quite common.

18,174. I know something about streams and I never knew that. Is that the only condition that is changed?—I don't know any. I am attributing the wetness of the ground now to that change.

18,175. But have we not seen land in cultivation on that glen, on the river level?—I don't know.

18,176. Quite close to the bank?—If it was quite close to the river, the river would have overflowed. You will find a deep drain on the one side necessary to carry away the water.

18,177. But surely, passing up the road close to it, any person can see it for himself?—No, I don't think he can from the road.

18,178. Is that the only condition that has changed that would render it unfit for cultivation?—I am not sure that that is the only cause of it.

18,179. What other change has occurred?—I am not aware of any.

18,180. Granting even that, have you not seen rivers embanked?—I have.

18,181. You have seen the river Spey, I have no doubt?—Yes.

18,182. Isn't it a fact that along the course of the Spey there are embankments made?—Yes.

18,183. And do they afford practical security or protection?—They do.

18,184. Could that not be done in this case?—In the case of the embankments on the Spey they protect an area of land that it pays to protect; the narrow strip along the Elg river or whatever it is called is not extensive enough to warrant the outlay.

18,185. Then is it solicitude for the welfare of the people who would be settled there that makes you urge that objection?—I am not called upon, I think, to answer that question.

18,186. Well then, supposing the people themselves were willing to undertake all these risks, would it not be an element in determining that they should be allowed?—Yes, if they quite understand what they are.

18,187. Then, if the land were taken up, would not the relative proportion of arable to cultivated land that exists in the large farms exist in the small ones?—I am not sure I follow your question.

18,188. There is a certain amount of arable or low-lying land which enables the present large holders to utilise the pasture to advantage?—Yes.

18,189. Would that proportion not be maintained in any redistribution or any subdivision of it?—It would be very difficult to do, because it is not so much the summering of the sheep as the cutting of the grass on these patches. They keep the sheep off it in summer, they hay the grass and they have the grass for the sheep in winter; that is what we do on Scallasaig.

18,190. But my point is this, that there would be the same proportion still that there exists now between arable and grazing land upon these farms?—Yes, if you divide it, if you divide the pasture land in proportion to the way you divide the arable land, it could not be otherwise.

18,191. So that the conditions as to the total area would not be affected by any redistribution of the land?—No, but you have to take into account that these crofters settled upon 20 or 30 acres could not afford to have all their land in grass as the large tenant has. They would have part in corn and part in turnips to feed their cattle, and they would only have one fourth of it in grass.

18,192. In other words, you would hope and expect that these small tenants would have corn and grass to feed cow stock?—That is what I understand is crofting cultivation.

18,193. Is it the fact that large tenants have not got these?—They have not.

18,194. They don't raise them?—No, they don't, I don't think they raise any turnips or potatoes except for their own use.

18,195. Because they have not got cattle?—They have not got the kind of cattle, the crofter would have milk cows.

18,196. But do you think it would be a good thing if there were more cattle raised upon this land?—Possibly it might; the land would be perfectly useless now if they didn't graze a certain number of cattle in the winter. Mr Mitchell, I should think, will have 100 head of cattle on Beolary summering, and we have 40 on Scallasaig.

18,197. Is that a recent thing, the rearing of cattle upon these sheep farms?—No, it is not.

18,198. How long has it been in practice here?—In this country it has been since I came, and I have always done it here in the proprietor's own farms.

18,199. Is that because the grazing is superior?—It is because the grazing would get too strong if the cattle did not keep it down. It is not that any profit would arise from the cattle; it is a necessity to improve the quality of the grazing.

18,200. Then you believe, and I think rightly believe, that the quality of the grazing deteriorates by having sheep, and sheep only?—Yes, where the land is very wet like Scallasaig and Beolary.

18,201. And is it your opinion that it still more deteriorates when deer only are upon the land?—After deer have been on the land it may be unfit for sheep for a year or two until the rushes are cut or until the rough grass is eaten by cattle.

18,202. But the natural tendency for land not in the occupation of cattle is to get rough and wild?—It depends on the quality of the soil, and whether the soil is wet or damp; but my impression is that sheep grazing is deteriorating very much in the Highlands.

18,203. Then, with regard to these cattle, may I ask if you house them at night?—We do not.

18,204. They are outdoors always?—Outside always.

18,205. And do you suffer no mortality among them on that account?—We do not, we take away the young cattle.

18,206. And do you keep them there all winter?—We keep the milk cows there all winter.

18,207. Without putting them in houses?—Yes.

18,208. And they live throughout it all?—They live through it all. We hay part of the grass, and we give them access to the stack, in the spring, along with a little artificial feeding.

18,209. But as a matter of fact have they not a milk value apart from the value of the grazing?—They have.

18,210. The trouble is greater with regard to sheep, I suppose?—Yes.

18,211. But it is not so great as if you had kept them for dairy purposes?—Nothing like it. We never come near them on the hillside, and they are nearly as wild as deer sometimes.

18,212. But does that not suggest to your mind that if the land were kept for rearing cattle it would be better for the ground itself and would give a better return?—I don't know for the better return. We leave the cows and the calves together till the end of September, and the value of the calf then, after getting milk from its mother, is from £3 to £3, 10s. That is all we have for grazing the cow all the year round and for the keep of the calf for some months.

18,213. But you have the maintenance of the pasture in good order, have you not?—Yes, that is what I say; the profit we directly derive from the cattle is a mere nothing.

Glenelg. Donald Grant.

18,214. Have you heard of the rent of grazings going down, I mean sheep farms, because the pasture had deteriorated?—Yes.

18,215. And do you know it is a fact?—I believe it is a fact that the grazing over all the Highlands has deteriorated very much.

18,216. And the power of the land to maintain stock has decreased very much?—It has.

18,217. And is it your own opinion that if they kept cattle among these sheep it would maintain it?—No, it would not.

18,218. Why?—Because I think it has arisen from the ground being overstocked, and that overstocking began when the price of wool was very high and it has never been much reduced. My theory is that you cannot take so much mutton and so much wool every year off land if you do not put so much back upon it, without deteriorating the capabilities of the soil.

18,219. But would not the cattle put back the very elements required on the land where the sheep would not?—You could not keep the cattle on the high land where the sheep are.

18,220. But you are wintering your cattle here?—We do on the low ground where the grass is.

18,221. Isn't it by grass becoming wild that the pastures deteriorate in the other places you have mentioned?—No.

18,222. On what account is it?—By the sheep eating it, and nothing going back upon the soil.

18,223. Is that not the same conditions as would apply to your ground here?—It would, to the high ground.

18,224. But you said the pasture was kept in good order by your having cattle?—Yes, the pasture the cattle was on, but that is a small part of it.

18,225. But the cattle go pretty high in summer?—You would see them coming along the road about 300 or 400 yards up.

18,226. They are nearly as high as we had to go to-day, but they go higher in summer than in winter?—Oh, yes, they wander about a good deal.

18,227. I wish to ask you one question with regard to the rent paying capabilities of different classes of occupiers. What is your own opinion regarding that; do you think or do you know that there is any great difference between the rent paid per acre by the small occupier and the large occupier?—I think the rent paid by the large occupier, where the holding is very large, must be less per acre, because he has a greater proportion of pasture and rough soil which is comparatively useless.

18,228. 'Must be,' but you surely know something of your own long experience?—On the average that is precisely the difference. I think the rent per acre of the large grazier is less than the rent of the crofter, but as I said there may be a large grazing like Eilanreoch with 2000 acres included that are perfectly worthless.

18,229. Are you talking just now of this estate or of the state of the Highlands generally?—The state of the Highlands generally. I would never give a crofter such lands as these; it is only when you have a very large extent that you must include such waste land. If, for instance, you are letting 2000 acres for sheep grazing, you must have a lot of land that is perfectly useless. If you give him 200 acres you are supposed to give him land every acre of which is good.

18,230. I quite follow that with regard to the theory, but is it not your opinion with regard to the practice that the crofters all over the Highlands have invariably the worst land?—No, that is not my experience; I am speaking from experience of the east coast lands where the crofts produce good crops.

18,231. But is it not the fact that it is because their lands are good that they have been cleared off them?

18,232. The Chairman.—They are not under the Act?—No, they never applied.

18,233. In what county are they situated?—Partly in Inverness and partly in Morayshire.

18,234. Mr Sutherland.—But I was referring to the motive for clearing the people off the land first when the sheep farms were made. Is it not generally the case all over the Highlands that the people were cleared off the land because it was good land and they were put on to worse land?—I am not prepared to answer that.

18,235. But has it not been publicly given by those who did it as the reason?—I am not aware.

18,236. So you maintain that the crofters have better land than the large sheep farms?—No, I do not; I maintain that the average croft land is better; that is to say, that the sheep farmer pays less per acre, taking the whole area, than the crofter does, and I account for this by saying that the land let to the crofter is, taking it altogether, better than the average large farmer's land.

18,237. Then what it amounts to is this, that the crofter has better land than the large farmer?—No, I don't say that as to arable land, but I say the whole of the grazing that a crofter gets is of some use, while a great deal of the grazing that the big farmer gets is poor although it is included within a ring fence.

18,238. But there must be a general character that the land has on one hand and on the other?—Yes.

18,239. And how do they compare?—I gave you an instance of it here, where we have a number of crofters. I am not aware that any crofter has grazing 400 feet above the sea. The large farm let to the Master of Blantyre has, I should think, 1000 acres at the height of 3000 feet above the sea.

18,240. And how many thousand acres has he in the bottoms of glens?—Not very many.

18,241. Are there no glens at all upon his farm?—There is one, and the grazing is very good, at least the lower part of it.

18,242. The grazing is exceedingly good and could be made arable. Do you know that the crofters have as good as that anywhere?—I don't admit that there is much of the Master of Blantyre's grazing that could be made arable.

18,243. I am only taking that because it is the one you chose?—Well, I say very little of it could be made arable; I don't think the witnesses to-day maintained that.

18,244. But take some of the others up here?—Well, that is a matter where there is a difference of opinion.

18,245. Then what sort of land have they got in some of the townships down about here, Galder for instance, is the land there good?—No, it is not.

18,246. Would you compare it with any of those large farms you have referred to?—There is very little bad land on it, it is nearly all green.

18,247. And how much do they pay per acre, do you know, in that township?—They have 300 odd acres and they pay £15. Part of it is down near the sea.

18,248. 1s. an acre; have you any idea what Eilanreoch pays per acre?—A rent of £600, and his acreage is 12,000.

18,249. That is just the same amount?—But then his arable land is included in that.

18,250. And is theirs not?—No, there is no arable land in Galder.

18,251. No arable land at all?—No.

18,252. The Master of Blantyre has got arable land and these have not?—Except that he has a couple of thousand acres that are practically worthless.

18,253. But he has arable land and they have none at all?—They have arable land elsewhere, but not at Galder.

18,254. How much have they got in the other place, does it make the conditions equal?—I think so, and they certainly never complained to me, I allowed themselves to fix rent.

18,255. Then I take it that your general opinion is that you cannot do anything to help us in the work that has been delegated to us to do, to point out such land as we are looking for?—Well, I would explain my opinions to you about land in this district. I only give my own opinion; others may differ from me.

18,256. But your opinion is that there is no land in this estate of the character that has been remitted to us to find?—There may be up the glen, but nothing to the extent that is supposed. I think you will see that when you go up. Glenelg.

18,257. Mr Maccallum.—You fully admit that the grazing in the big glen is excellent?—It is. Donald Grant.

18,258. And also, I suppose, you admit that it was once held in townships?—As to that I don't know.

18,259. You heard what was said about Iomaire-a'-ghradain?—Yes.

18,260. And Suardalan?—Yes.

18,261. And that they were put out of them without having been in arrears?—I know nothing about that; the men said so to-day, but they were talking of their ancestors, not from their own knowledge.

18,262. Yes, but you don't doubt in the least that there were townships there?—I see the marks of houses there, but I have not seen the remains of any houses that would warrant any tenant in claiming compensation for them.

18,263. It has not been so recent, I suppose, that they could claim any compensation. You don't suppose that they lost these holdings because of having been in arrears or having failed?—I have no reason to think so.

18,264. And you find that witnesses, for instance from Bernera, think Suardalan up in the glen far better than Bernera?—Yes.

18,265. Do you agree with that opinion?—I don't know.

18,266. But you have been talking about the glen and giving us a description of it?—We were talking of the big glen; Suardalan is away far up from it.

18,267. But it opens into the same glen, doesn't it?—I was never at Suardalan; I have been through the big glen but never at Suardalan.

18,268. Which farm is Suardalan on?—On Scallasaig.

18,269. But you were telling us of the available land in Scallasaig, and you say you never were at Suardalan?—We were talking of the big glen; you began to ask me questions about the big glen.

18,270. Yes, but in reference to the questions that were asked you already; you were asked as to the available land in Scallasaig, and you tell me now that Suardalan is in Scallasaig and that you were never at Suardalan?—I was never up the high glen at Suardalan, but I have seen it from other parts.

18,271. So you can't tell us particularly about it?—Well, I have seen it from a distance, and I think when you go there you would not recommend the cultivation of 10 acres of it.

18,272. How can you tell that when you have not been there?—I am only preparing you for it.

18,273. How can you prepare me when you were not there?—That is a very good reason for my not answering.

18,274. But you say you were preparing me?—Just ask me the question.

18,275. Was that what you said in answer to my question?—I say when you go there you will find that there are hardly 10 acres fit to be cultivated. You need not take my opinion of it now, but go and see it.

18,276. But I am only pointing out this, that you don't know from personal examination of the land?—I don't know from personal examination of the land.

18,277. Then the arable ground, you say, is principally on the banks of the river in the big glen?—In the big glen.

18,278. But is there not a good deal on the hillsides that might be cultivated?—Yes, I think it is quite possible there might be some.

18,279. The soil is deep and the grass upon it just now is very good?—Yes.

18,280. And there is no reason why that land should not be made arable, is there?—No, except that I think it would not pay.

18,281. But you find steeper land elsewhere cultivated, don't you?—Yes, but I don't know steeper land elsewhere that it would pay to bring into cultivation at the present time.

18,282. And the grazing is so good in this glen, I suppose that an acre of it will support a sheep?—Well, I don't know that, I have just told you or ought to have told you that it is very rough grass.

Glenelg. Donald Grant.

18,283. You are anxious, I think you indicate, to form farms of a medium size that would be self sustaining if properly worked?—Not the least anxious; I said they might be made.

18,284. Perhaps I am putting it too strong, but you think that such holdings as these at any rate would be profitable both to the landlord and to the tenant?—More profitable to the tenant than a smaller holding.

18,285. And it would be more likely to pay rent to the proprietor?—That is just a question.

18,286. It would be more able, you think, to pay rent?—Well, the more comfortable a tenant is the more likely the landlord is to have his rent.

18,287. But you have not taken any steps to form such holdings as these, I suppose?—Not here.

18,288. And there was a holding in Balvraid that has been consolidated with Eilanreoch, I think, since you came?—There has.

18,289. Now did you try to let that as a separate holding?—I did, and I did let it.

18,290. And for how long was it?—The tenant took it upon a lease, and he was only three years in it when he found the mortality so heavy that he had to give it up. I accepted his renunciation and was obliged to let it along with Eilanreoch.

18,291. You did not try to let it after that?—No.

18,292. And you did not try to make it into smaller holdings at all, as it was occupied before? We were told that this Balvraid was once divided into four parts?—Yes.

18,293. You did not try how that would suit?—I did not, because I was satisfied that if it did not pay a practical man who took it as one holding it would not suit in four holdings. It is pretty high.

18,294. Then you say one of the chief difficulties which the large farmers have is the wintering of the hoggs, but don't you think that the land would winter better if more of the land was cultivated? If Scallasaig, for instance, were cultivated, and Beolary, would they not winter the hoggs better than when left wild?—Probably, but I am not aware that 20 acres of Scallasaig could be cultivated.

18,295. At any rate I think you admit that?—I admit that land in cultivation will keep more sheep than wild land.

18,296. And you don't see any reason why some of the hill slopes might not be cultivated?—The only reason is that it would not pay.

18,297. But if they were cultivated they would winter the hoggs better?—Probably.

18,298. And the river side might be drained and also cultivated, might it not?—I doubt very much if the ground could be drained in the big glen until you lower the bed of the river.

18,299. You think that is the practical difficulty?—I think the bed of the river in many places is as high as the average of the land.

18,300. But formerly you say it was cultivated?—Apparently.

18,301. And may it not be the reason why the Bernera people are able to winter their sheep that they cultivate their land?—No, I don't think it. I think they are committing a great mistake in attempting to winter their sheep at home.

18,302. But would they be able to winter their hoggs at all if they did not cultivate?—I don't know that they would. Bernera is very low, nearly at the level of the sea.

18,303. Is not the big glen very low also?—Part of it.

18,304. Is not the whole hollow of the big glen low?—Yes, but that is too rough for wintering.

18,305. But has not the roughness of it arisen from want of cultivation?—Probably.

18,306. So that, if tenants were settled upon these lands and cultivated them, they might be able to winter their hoggs after all?—Quite possible, but I don't think it would pay them. Quite apart from the quality of the grazing, I don't think the climate would admit of its paying them.

18,307. Then as to the reductions that have been granted on the large farms, would you kindly give the highest rent for these three farms since you became factor; Beolary for instance, what was the highest rent paid for it?—There would be a reduction over them all of probably 40 per cent.

18,308. Can you give me them separately?—I don't know that I can; I can give you the present rents, but not the former rents.

18,309. You cannot supply me with the former rents?—No.

18,310. The Chairman.—Is your main objection to the settlement of crofters in these lands we have been speaking about, the injury that would accrue to the larger farms?—That is one, and the other is that I doubt very much if crofts would pay. I think the crofters here overestimate the value of sheep as a stock.

18,311. Well, but we have been having some bad years, and last year was a very bad year?—I have been giving the average of mortality known to myself, which is very heavy even although we winter them elsewhere.

18,312. Don't you think that in average times, and apart from the question of material damage to the farm from which the land is taken, the experiment might be made of settling crofters on these lands very hopefully?—Yes, it might.

18,313. I want to call your attention to the terms of the order, I think perhaps there has been some mistake accidentally made about the Bernera crofters. The order made by Mr Macintyre was this:—'The Commissioner having heard parties and considered the minute for the applicant and the minute for the tenants of Galder, Glenelg, whereby there is referred to the Commission the fixing of the line of march between the lands occupied and possessed by the crofters of Bernera and the lands occupied and possessed by the said tenants of Galder; finds and declares that the line of march between the respective lands of these persons is as marked A, B, C, D, and coloured black on the plan or tracing produced finds and declares that the area added to the lands possessed by the crofters of Bernera in respect of this line of march extends to 285 acres or thereby, and not 385 acres or thereby as stated in the foresaid Minute; ordains parties respectively to adhere to their own side of the said line of march' (page 166 of the Report for 1890–91). Now I ask your attention to our note on page 114 of the same Report speaking of the Bernera crofters, whose area of common pasture is given as 865 acres. The note says:—'The present rents of the township of Bernera' that is the old rents, 'are exclusive of the additional hill pasture extending 'to 285 acres or thereby.' Then we say—'The fair 'rents include the annual value of said additional 'pasture?'—Yes, I gave them the additional pasture before the rents were fixed at all, at their former rents.

18,314. I don't know that that is what you said before?—Yes, it was. The first note you read is explained by this plan. I was for giving them more pasture, and the Galder crofters objected. I made the Galder grazing out of the land coloured yellow, and the Galder people objecting, we referred the matter to Mr Macintyre, who drew this line.

18,315. This took 100 acres off the Bernera people and gave it to the Galder people.

18,316. And your rent was fixed on the footing?—That they were to get that pasture without any additional rent and the additional bit that they did get.

18,317. And the fair rents include the value of the addition?—Include the value, and they were in possession of it at the time Mr Macintyre was here.

18,318. Mr Sutherland.—But did they pay any rents before that for it?—No.

18,319. Then the new arrangement made by the Crofters Commission was influenced by this addition of pasture?—No, the Crofters Commission were called in to adjust the march; that was the object of it. Mr Macintyre was informed that we did not want extra rent for it, and I understood that he went to the march and took off the 100 acres; the Galder crofters claimed the whole of that hill, and I objected to that because they were really crofters who attended to their crops and really did little else, whereas the Galder crofters did something else, and he then—

18,320. The Chairman.—But the rent fixed by Mr Macintyre includes the value of the additional pasture? —Yes, and the rent fixed by me included the value of the additional pasture.

18,321. That is not what is said. Observe the note, Mr Grant. Perhaps we are at cross purposes. 'The present rents of the township of Bernera' that is your rents 'are exclusive of the additional hill pasture?'— That is not so.

18,322. You say this note is wrong?—The note is wrong. The rent of £13 included the additional pasture. I made no change in the rent and they were possessed of that when Mr Macintyre came.

18,323. The present rent of Archibald Maccrimmon, say, is £13, the fair rent is £13, 15s. Well, on the face of it that looks like a raising of the rent?—Yes.

18,324. But the note explains it by saying that the present rent is exclusive of the 285 acres, and the fair rent is inclusive of the 285 acres?—The other rent included more than the 285 acres.

18,325. Then this is wrong?—That is wrong. I was not with them.

18,326. Of course, the interlocutor simply fixes the line of march 'Declares that the line of march between 'the respective lands of these persons is as marked A, B, 'C, D, and coloured black on the plan or tracing pro- 'duced; finds and declares that the area added to 'the lands possessed by the crofters of Bernera in 'respect of this line of march extends to 285 acres or 'thereby, and not 385 acres or thereby as stated in the 'foresaid Minute; ordains parties respectively to adhere 'to their own side of the said line of march; and finds 'and declares that the said additional lands herein dealt 'with form parts of the holdings of the said crofters of 'Bernera, under and in terms of the Act.'

18,327. So that what we make here rightly or wrongly is that your rent was a rent exclusive of that land, our rent is a fair rent inclusive of that land?— The rent was £13, and when I gave them the additional land, before the Commission came, I told them there was to be no additional rent. I told Mr Macintyre in presence of the crofters here (I did not go with him to the hill) that we did not want any additional rent.

18,328. How long had they been having that additional pasture from you at a rent of £13?—That season.

18,329. Then the rent you exacted for that season, when they had the additional pasture, was the same rent as the estate had exacted before, when they had not that pasture?—The same rent.

18,330. Mr Donald Macrae.—Might I ask Mr Grant how many acres were added to Bernera. I think he said 285? [The Chairman.—285 is the correct figure.]

18,331. Then to Galder?—It is all new, they had none of it before.

18,332. How much did the estate add within recent years to the grazings of Galder?—The whole of it.

18,333. The extent of it, how many acres?—285 and 340.

18,334. 285 acres was added to Bernera, was it 385 that was added to both?—285 to Bernera and 335 to Galder. There is 340, but there is a small croft kept out of it.

18,335. Might I ask the name of any other township that got an extension of grazings within recent years? —All the Kirkton people.

18,336. How many acres did the Kirkton people get?—I was estimating it. They know it themselves. I think they graze some 16 cows on it.

18,337. Have they it within boundaries or have they the right of grazing along with the proprietor's stock? —It is exclusive grazing; it is just a club, they pay so much per cow.

18,338. How many acres might I ask would that be? —I really don't know the extent.

18,339. Would it be 200?—No, I don't think it is so much, but it is splendid grazing.

18,340. Will there be 100?—No, not 100.

18,341. Will we put it down at 80?—I should think it would be about that.

18,342. Might I ask whether any other extension of grazing has been given?—I am estimating part of Culandoun.

18,343. How many acres?—I can't say; I am estimating by the number of cattle. It is a joint grazing with ten cows and their followers.

18,344. Have the tenants who have got that grazing the exclusive right?—No, they have not. There is a great extent in Cul-an-duin, 600 or 700 acres.

18,345. They have no extension of grazing that they can call their own absolutely?—Well, they have that.

18,346. How many acres?—I should think the whole will be 600 or 800 acres. [The Chairman.—They have not that under the Act?—No.]

18,347. Have they that exclusively for themselves? —No.

18,348. How much of it have they for their exclusive use?—None but the arable land adjoining.

18,349. Is that all the extension of grazing within recent years?—There is all, the crofts are getting, I should think, about 300 acres.

18,350. That makes 1000 acres?—I was only giving it as a rough estimate. I could give the exact acreage.

18,351. And you think that 200 acres more have been given otherwise?—Well, I may have forgotten 200 or 300 acres at Camusban village.

18,352. When did the Camusban tenants get that? —In 1884.

18,353. How much land had they before that each? —An acre each arable land.

18,354. Had they any grazing?—No grazing.

18,355. Had they any cows?—No.

18,356. How many families were there?—I think there were 23 families when I went to fix rents.

18,357. Without a single cow?—Not a single cow.

18,358. For how many years was that so?—I don't know.

18,359. Had the Dochfour estate 23 tenants there before without a single cow?—I don't know anything about how it stood before I went there, but I found they had no cows, and I found means of getting pasture.

18,360. Did these Camusban tenants make strong representations to the estate for some grazing?—They did.

18,361. Before they got grazing?—I am not aware. I went there in 1884 and gave them this grazing.

18,362. Did they make strong representations for an extension of their arable holding before the Arnisdale portion of the property was sold?—Not until negotiations were going on for the sale of it. We could not, because it was let to a tenant, Mr Milligan; all the arable land except what they occupied on Arnisdale was let.

18,363. Did Mr Birkbeck express a very strong desire as to the arable land, that he should be allowed to buy the property without buying the arable land; that you should have the tenants and that he should have the arable land they were applying for?—Mr Birkbeck offered for the whole of the arable land, the whole property, but excluding the crofts and the crofters houses at Camusban, and that offer was unconditionally accepted.

18,364. So that you have these people now?—And Mr Birkbeck has the land.

ARCHIBALD FRASER, Camusban, Loch Hourn (51). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

18,365. The Chairman.—You are a Camusban crofter?—Yes.

18,366. What rent do you pay?—£1.

18,367. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

18,368. What was your rent before the Commission dealt with it?—£2 for an acre.

Glenelg. Archibald Fraser.

18,369. You got additional grazing?—Shortly before the Commission came we got some.

18,370. How much?—I can't tell.

18,371. What stock have you been able to keep since you got the grazing?—15 to 16 cows, but it is barely sufficient for half the number.

18,372. But was that stated as the souming of the ground when you got it?—Some of them had it first, and it is latterly that the others got it. [Mr Macrae.—Their land was so small that they had no stock at all.]

18,373. Had you no stock at all?—No.

18,374. Do you graze your stock at present upon Mr Birkbeck's ground or upon Mr Baillie's ground?—Mr Baillie's ground.

18,375. Do you wish additional ground?—We are needing it very much.

18,376. Can you point us to ground that would be suitable?—There is in the glen recently acquired by Mr Birkbeck on the one hand, and on the other hand on Mr Baillie's ground at Sandaig.

18,377. You want both?—There are so many in the township that one of the parts would not be sufficient.

18,378. Is it additional grazing that you want?—Both arable and grazing.

18,379. Is Camusban a fishing village?—Yes.

18,380. All the crofters there go to the herring fishing?—Every one of them.

18,381. It is situated on Loch Hourn?—Yes.

18,382. Which is a good herring loch?—As good as there is anywhere about.

18,383. Is there any desire on the part of the crofters of Camusban to leave the place and get holdings elsewhere, or do they desire an extension of arable and grazing with their present holdings?—Those who could not remain would be willing to remove; trampled upon the top of each other as they are.

18,384. It is a congested township?—Very much so.

18,385. What is the population of the township altogether?—More than 100 persons.

18,386. And how many fires?—26.

18,387. I suppose you take your rents out of the sea and not out of the land?—Certainly.

18,388. What is the average stock kept by each crofter of Camusban?—The most of them have a cow each, but some have none at all.

18,389. Have they any sheep?—They have a few sheep; they got a park and a bit of hill grazing from Mr Birkbeck which is a great help to them.

18,390. You have no horses?—No.

18,391. Is this arable ground that you would like to get near you?—Yes, plenty.

18,392. Marching with the township?—Yes.

18,393. Who occupies that at present?—Mr Macmorran.

18,394. Is he a farmer?—Yes.

18,395. What is the name of his farm?—Arnisdale farm.

18,396. Is there any other farm marching with the township or does Arnisdale march with the whole of it?—Mr Birkbeck's forest is on the east of them.

18,397. What is the name of that forest?—The Arnisdale forest.

18,398. Mr Macrae.—I might explain that the land he refers to is on Mr Birkbeck's property to the east, and then the farm of Eilanreoch bounds with him on this side. They are on Mr Baillie's property and the lands he speaks of are on Mr Birkbeck's.

18,399. The Chairman.—Your crofts are on Mr Baillie's property, but the land you are referring to is on Mr Birkbeck's property on one side and on Eilanreoch on the other?—Yes.

18,400. Mr Shaw Stewart.—How many of the population of Camusban are fishermen?—Every able-bodied man.

18,401. And has the fishing been pretty prosperous?—Not much for a few years back.

18,402. Mr Sutherland.—Is the fishing very precarious?—It is precarious.

18,403. And if you got a holding that would sustain yourself and your family would you leave the fishing altogether and take it?—That is what took me here to-day for myself and the township I came here.

Glenelg. Archibald Fraser.

18,404. Were you appointed at a meeting of the people of Arnisdale to come here?—Yes, and I was very unwilling to undertake the duty.

18,405. You are speaking their opinions as well as your own?—Every one like myself.

18,406. Mr Donald Macrae.—Your lordship might ask him if he knows Sandaig.

18,407. The Chairman.—Do you know Sandaig?—Very well.

18,408. Mr Macrae.—According to your opinion, how many acres of old arable land are in Sandaig?—There are over 100 acres.

18,409. Have you any idea of the number of tenants who were there at one time?—I cannot answer that question.

18,410. Did you hear in what circumstances they were?—I never heard anybody that was there complain.

18,411. Did you see some of the tenants who were there?—I don't remember any of them.

18,412. Mr Donald Grant.—I want, my lord, to put a question to him to correct a mistake he made. He says he paid £2 an acre, when did he pay that?—Before Mr Grant became factor for Glenelg.

18,413. How far is Sandaig from Camusban?—Six miles.

Donald Campbell.

DONALD CAMPBELL, Crofter, Camusban, Loch Hourn (29).

(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

18,414. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I am a crofter.

18,415. Do you pay a rent of £1?—15s.

18,416. What was it before?—My uncle had it and it was 15s. to him ever since he got it.

18,417. What rent did your uncle pay?—In his later years he was paying 15s., but before that he was paying £1.

18,418. You heard the evidence given by Mr Fraser?—Yes.

18,419. And do you concur in it?—Yes.

18,420. Are you much in need of additional land?—Yes, in real earnest.

18,421. I believe that. Have you only one cow?—I have no cow at all.

18,422. Have you any stock?—None on Mr Baillie's land.

18,423. But anywhere?—I have seven sheep on Mr Birkbeck's ground.

18,424. That was ground that Mr Birkbeck assigned to the Camusban crofters some time ago?—Yes.

18,425. Are you fenced in from the forest?—Yes.

18,426. Would you desire merely to get additional arable and grazing, or would you like to leave your holding and get a new settlement?—I will do either if I be made better off by leaving.

18,427. Would you be willing to give up the sea if you had a crofter's holding?—I would.

18,428. Have the Camusban crofters, since you remember, felt the want of land?—Yes.

18,429. Are you a married man?—No.

18,430. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do you fish regularly?—No.

18,431. How have you made your living?—When there is no fishing in Loch Hourn I will be working away elsewhere in other places.

18,432. Do you go far from home for work?—Sometimes I go far from home and sometimes I don't.

18,433. Do you get work near home?—I sometimes get employment on Lord Burton's land in Glen Quoich.

18,434. And when you go far from home where do you go for work?—I was once or twice down near Inverness.

18,435. And have you got capital enough to help you with a new holding if you got it?—No.

18,436. Mr Donald Macrae.—Might I ask you if when Mr Birkbeck was tenant of Arnisdale, and as soon as they came to understand that he was to buy the estate, did the tenants of Camusban approach Mr Birkbeck and give him notice that in the event of his buying the estate they would expect that they would get the farm of Arnisdale adjoining their holdings?—Yes.

18,437. And did you go in a deputation and did you also write to that effect?—We did both.

18,438. And as soon as you heard that Mr Birkbeck bought the property, did you, the whole of you, put in an offer for the farm?—We did.

18,439. Did you make the offer for the whole of the land of the estate or for the home farm?—We made the offer for the land that has been given to Mr Macmorran, the farmer who is there now.

18,440. What rent did you offer for it?—£45.

18,441. Did you expect from what passed between you and Mr Birkbeck before then that you would be likely to get the land?—We did expect.

18,442. The Chairman.—I must interpose this question. What did Mr Birkbeck say that led you to this expectation? [Mr Macrae.—I have that in letters here, Mr Birkbeck's own letters].—Mr Birkbeck told us that if he got the estate he would make our condition more comfortable than it was before.

18,443. Mr Macrae.—And in point of fact you got word that that land was let to another?—Yes.

18,444. That land now lies between you and the deer forest?—Yes.

18,445. So that under the Crofters Act they are excluded from applying for that.

18,446. The Chairman.—When was it let?—Over two years ago.

18,447. They are not excluded; that lease does not exclude them.

18,448. Mr Macrae.—It is below the £100 rent. [To witness.] What rent does the proprietor get from Mr Macmorran?—I don't know.

18,449. Mr Birkbeck.—May I ask the witness one question as to that?

18,450. The Chairman.—Certainly.

18,451. Mr Birkbeck.—[To witness]. Is it of your own knowledge that I was offered £45 a year for the land?—Yes, it is.

18,452. In writing or by word of mouth?—The offer was written, but I am not certain whether to Mr Birkbeck or to Mr Malcolm.

18,453. Was the offer which you believe was made to me for the land at £45 for, as you now state, Mr Macmorran's farm or to include the land which they now hold?—It was for Mr Macmorran's ground they offered as we had the prospect of getting the other ground at any rate.

18,454. Mr Macrae.—Might I put in these documents? This is the petition I think.

18,455. The Chairman.—But it is not signed?

18,456. Mr Macrae.—That is simply the copy. John Macgillivray, secretary of the local Land League, was the correspondent. That is the copy he kept of the petition, and these are the replies.

18,457. The Chairman.—We will take these documents.

18,458. Mr Macrae.—And put in as evidence along with the statement of the people. Here is another document on the same subject.

18,459. The Chairman.—Mr Birkbeck's letters are of 21st March 1890 and 12th Feb. 1891. The first letter is as follows:—

20 Berkeley Square, London,
21st March 1890.

Mr John Macgillivray,

Sir,—I have received the petition from the crofters of Camusbane and Corran forwarded through you.

Should I purchase the Arnisdale farm, the subject of the petition would have my most serious consideration, as were the crofters my tenants, I should desire to make their position more comfortable than at present. But, as far as I can see, it is not probable that I shall purchase the farm. I shall be glad if you will communicate this letter to those who have signed the paper.—I remain, yours &c., Robt. Birkbeck.

The next letter is in the following terms:—

20 Berkeley Square,
12th February 1891.

Mr John Macgillivray,

I have addressed the enclosed letter to yourself, Mr John Maclean and Mr Archibald Macgillivray as being the members of the deputation from Camusbane who came to see me last July.—I shall hope shortly to be in a position to carry out my intentions,—Yours faithfully,
Robt. Birkbeck.

The letter enclosed was as follows:—

20 Berkeley Square, London,
12th February 1891.

To
Mr John Macgillivray,
Mr John Maclean, and Mr Archibald Macgillivray.

Before leaving Loch Hourn last autumn I informed Mr John Macgillivray that I was exerting all the influence I possessed with Mr Baillie to induce him to provide his tenants at Camusbane with a further extension of land.

I regret to say that all my endeavours on their behalf have proved fruitless, although I went so far as to break off the purchase negotiations in the hope of inducing Mr Baillie to comply with my request.

Finding Mr Baillie resolved not to grant them any land belonging to the Arnisdale farm, I have now included in my purchase the piece of ground which I had been desiring Mr Baillie to retain for his Camusbane tenants; and I propose, on obtaining legal possession, to convey the same—namely, the field nearest to Camusbane, and the portion of the hill above the field, to trustees for the benefit of Mr Baillie's existing tenants at Camusbane, the latter paying the trustees only a low rent, which rent the trustees will, after providing for public burdens, &c., apply to the upkeeping of the Free Church at Arnisdale.

The Master of Blantyre and the Rev. D. Maclennan, the Free Church Minister at Glenelg, have kindly consented to act as trustees to the Deed of Trust, which, of course, will contain all necessary conditions.

I hope thus to confer a two-fold benefit on Camusbane—1st, by enlarging the present insufficient holdings, and 2nd, by assisting towards the maintenance of the church, to the building of which I had much pleasure in subscribing. Robt. Birkbeck.

Then, on 20th April 1891, the crofters forwarded Mr Birkbeck a communication, of which the following is a copy:—

Camusbane, Arnisdale,
Glenelg, Inverness-shire.,
20th April 1891.

Robert Birkbeck, Esq.,
20 Berkeley Square, London.

Sir,—We, the undersigned, beg very respectfully to remind you that in September 1890 we had the pleasure of waiting upon you at Arnisdale, when our position as crofters and cottars was very clearly made known to you.

We then begged very earnestly of you, should you purchase the Arnisdale farm, to give us the first chance of the arable land and hill pasture extending from Millburn to Ault Hoo.

Glenelg.

Donald Campbell.

Now, as we are given to understand that the arable land together with the hill pasture above, extending from the burn at Arnisdale school to Ault Hoo is to be let at a yearly rent, we beg respectfully to tender you the following offer for the arable land and hill pasture above mentioned.

We hereby offer you a yearly rent of £45, same to be paid regularly, for the arable land and hill pasture above, extending from the burn at Arnisdale school to Ault Hoo; and earnestly hope our offer may be accepted, which would be the means of raising us from our present distressed position to a better and more comfortable position.

The reply received from the factor, Mr Malcolm, was as follows:—

Estates Office,
Invergarry, N.B.,
30th April 1891.

Mr John Macgillivray,
Camusbane, Arnisdale.

Dear Sir,—Mr Birkbeck has sent me your letter to him of 20th instant, and relative offer; and I have received your letters to myself of 24th instant and relative offer.

With regard to your offer of 20th instant I have to inform you that the land therein referred to has already been let to Mr Macmorran.

I will have to write you later regarding your communications of 24th instant. If the fence goes on, and you are able to show that there are among your offerers practical fencers capable of doing the work properly, I am sure Mr Birkbeck will be very willing to afford you every chance of securing the job.—I am, Dear Sir, yours truly, George Malcolm.

Robert Birkbeck.

Robert Birkbeck, 20 Berkeley Square, London (57) —examined.

18,460. The Chairman.—Do you wish to read a statement?—I should like to read a short statement, but before I do so I would like to refer to this offer that was made of £45 for the land. I am very sorry I have not got that offer with me, I did not know it would be referred to. I have it at home; my memory fails me as to whether it was £45, but the offer, to the best of my belief, was certainly to include not only Macmorran's farm, but also the land belonging to me on Camusban to which they have made reference. I can send you down the offer, which will speak for itself.*

18,461. If you please.

18,462. Mr Sutherland.—Is that the land that you subsequently gave them?—My belief is that the offer, be it £45 or less, was made to me for Macmorran's farm and for the land which is now held by the Camusban crofters. I am afraid this statement is rather crude; I thought I should not be called upon till Tuesday, and I have had little time to prepare it. The extent of Loch Hourn Head and Arnisdale is about 15,000 acres, of which 13,800 or thereabouts are forest. The remaining 1200 acres consist of a small farm, land allotted to the Corran crofters, and about 260 acres conveyed to the Free Church for occupation by Mr Baillie's crofters at Camusban. These figures are as near as I can tell from the six-inch ordnance map. I bought the place in the autumn of 1890 from Mr Baillie of Dochfour, having rented the shooting, which only consisted of a few stags, for seventeen years previously. The whole was then a sheep farm held by Mr Milligan, who was not disposed to renew his lease shortly expiring. Mr Baillie sold me the place clear of sheep. Since I acquired it I have expended in improvements over £6000, and these improvements are still going on. At Corran there are 16 crofters. When I obtained possession Corran was two rows of hovels and cow-byres mixed up together, with the manure and ash-heaps piled up at the doors, the refuse of the upper row of houses and cow-byres draining through the lower row, the upper row standing on a higher elevation a few yards above the lower row. I have never seen even in the outer Hebrides or Ireland so insanitary a place. The sea at high spring tides often flooded the lower row, hardly a house was watertight, the roofs and walls being equally rotten and in damp weather the floors were literally mud. The whole village has now been rebuilt, the lower row being completely done away with, new slated houses built a short distance away, and the best houses of the upper row rebuilt with slated roofs. Each house has now a garden attached, enclosed with wooden railings. All the cow-byres are demolished and the surplus stones used for a sea wall. A row of 16 cow-byres was built draining into a burn, so that the drainage could not possibly come near the dwellings. Each house has a neat shed for peats, nets, &c., so that the houses may be kept tidy instead of the nets hanging up in the living rooms. The improvements at Corran cost between £1300 and £1400, and a stipulation was made with the contractor that he should employ Corran labour for all unskilled work. The Corran people were very badly off for land, and three of them had none at all. I have given them all the land capable of tillage on their side of the river, including the best field in Arnisdale, and have added a considerable piece to their hill pasture and about 12 acres of meadow land to their home grazing, enclosing all with wire fence. At the time the former proprietor gave them the old grazing, an abatement of £25 per annum was made on the sheep farmers' rent in respect of the grazing then given to Corran. The rents have at the same time been reduced, with the exception of two or three who formerly paid nothing. Some previously paid £3, 5s.; now they vary from £1 to £2, the total for the 16 being £21, 2s. 6d. or an average of £1, 6s. 4½d. During the negotiations for the purchase a deputation of Mr Baillie's Camusban crofters, who had heard of the probability of my buying, came to ask me to give them some land. Although Camusban does not belong to me, being beyond my march, knowing how badly off for land they were, I have conveyed to two trustees of the Free Church 7 acres of very good arable land and 250 acres of excellent hill pasture, on trust, to be let at a low rent to Mr Baillie's Camusban crofters, the rent to be applied by the trustees to the support of the Free Church at Camusban, which congregation is entirely composed of the inhabitants of Camusban and Corran. I may perhaps mention that the land so conveyed was valued at £25 per annum. At Kyles More, 4 miles farther up the loch, there are three cottages to which is attached all the land there capable of cultivation. I have one farm tenant at Arnisdale, Mr Macmorran, who has been mentioned, paying a rent of £51 per annum. I think it would be acknowledged that this is a size and class of farm which it is very desirable to encourage, as a step above the crofters' holding. The arable land is all at Arnisdale. With the exception of the garden and hay round my house at Loch Hourn Head—about 6 acres—there is absolutely no land on the property capable of being cultivated. In the forest there are, I think, only two small patches not exceeding half an acre each, which have ever been under cultivation. Although the forest runs down to the sea the whole length, the ground is very steep and rocky, rising all along within half a mile of the sea to 2000 to 2300 feet, and the highest peaks to 3000 and 3400 feet. Besides the improvements already mentioned, I have employed a good deal of labour in the formation of paths, fences, &c., and I am continuing to do so, and I think that nearly all the money I have expended in various ways has been paid to local or county tradesmen and workers. I have only to add that I do not think there is room on the place for more crofters. I do not know where they could be put or how they could live. I reside at Loch Hourn Head for six months in the year, and know what the climate is. The rainfall averages over 100 inches per annum. Last September 19 inches fell, and I have several times known even this exceeded. I have seen the hay out and rotting in October and November. I think I may fairly claim that at all events as far as the Corran crofters are concerned, their position has been greatly benefitted by the change from a sheep farm to the deer forest, and if the commissioners will look over the forest I think they will be convinced that no more advantageous use could be made of the land. (Signed) Robert Birkbeck.

Loch Hourn Head, 14th July 1893.

18,463. The Chairman.—Are you of opinion that the Camusban and Corran crofters, even with the addition you have made, are in need of more land if it can be legitimately obtained?—I would ask you to separate Camusban from Corran.

18,464. Well, take Camusban.—It is not on my property, and I am not prepared to answer any questions about that. It is not on my property.

18,465. No, but you know about it?—I live within ten miles of it.

18,466. And you know it, you have passed it very often?—I have passed it very often.

18,467. And are you not willing to say whether, in your judgment, it would be a good thing to extend their holdings, arable and grazing, if it could be legitimately done?—Certainly, if it could be legitimately done.

18,468. What do you say with regard to the Corran crofters: do you think they would be the better of additional land?—No, I think not. I think I have given them all I can, all there is on their side of the river; there is no more to give them, and I think they have as much as they can manage.

18,469. How then do they live? Is it mainly by fishing?—By fishing and by their crofts, the small amount they have.

18,470. And is it your opinion that they have as much land already as, having regard to their main industry, they can properly work?—Yes, I do, certainly I do. At the same time I am bound to say if I had more land there I would give it to them.

18,471. If you had more land you would give it to them?—If I had more available land.

18,472. Because you think they need it?—No, I don't think they do, but I think they would like it. I would do anything I could in reason for them.

18,473. What is the character of the land in the forest nearest to either of these townships?—It is very steep and rocky.

18,474. The whole of it?—The whole of it. As I have said in my paper, I don't think there are two acres there that you could dig up. Taking the whole extent of the forest, I don't think I could find two acres in patches of a rood here and a rood there that could be dug up.

18,475. Mr Sutherland.—What are the boundaries of the forest, Mr Birkbeck, I don't follow them there?—Perhaps I had better come and show you them on the plan.

18,476. I think you could describe them. Does it extend westward to the sea?—Southward to the sea.

18,477. And how far westward?—To above Corran. (Points out boundaries on plan.)

18,478. Then you gave us particulars of the rebuilding of these cottages. May I ask upon what conditions they were built; did those who have got these cottages now subscribe any part of them?—Not a sou.

18,479. You defrayed the cost?—Every sixpence.

18,480. Paid for the labour?—Every sixpence.

18,481. And the expense of building?—With one exception. They had no place to keep their nets or peats; I thought they ought to have some sheds for nets and peats. Those who were able and willing to put the stones together, built the walls of it. I asked them to do it, and they did it gladly. I found the roofing which has now been put on. The houses and the cow-byres they laboured for, but they did it for daily pay, the contractor paid them. I had a contract with an Inverness builder to build these cottages, and made a stipulation with him that he should employ Corran labour, because I wanted to benefit them as far as in me lay.

18,482. But the skilled labour was paid for?—All the labour, skilled and unskilled, was paid for by the contractor. At least I hope so, as I have paid him.

18,483. How many of these cottages and cow-byres have been erected?—There are sixteen of them altogether.

18,484. Sixteen cottages or sixteen cottages and byres?—Sixteen cottages and sixteen cow-byres.

18,485. And you think that the sanitary conditions of the place are very much improved owing to the building of these houses, do you?—I don't know whether I will have the pleasure of showing you the place yourself. That is a photograph of not the worst of them, showing what they were like formerly.

18,486. And have you a photograph of the new ones?—No, I have not.

18,487. And these were the houses that you found them in when you purchased that property?—Yes.

18,488. Have you any idea of the length of time in which they lived in these houses?—No, I know nothing about it.

18,489. Nor about the conditions upon which they lived in it?—I know nothing whatever about it.

18,490. Are you aware whether they paid rent for living in these houses before?—I am aware that a certain number of them had not paid rent for several years prior to the Crofters Commission, simply by the courtesy of Mr Grant.

18,491. But are you aware that others did pay rent?—I cannot tell you that.

18,492. And how do you know about those who did not pay the rent?—Because Mr Grant at the time of the Crofters Commission, kindly sent me some statistics about them.

18,493. And didn't he give in the statistics the names and numbers of those who had paid rent?—No, I didn't ask him for them.

18,494. And are you aware how these old houses had been built? Have they been built in the way you have done now, or were they built by the people themselves?—I can tell you nothing about that.

18,495. You live there yourself, I think you said, for six months of the year?—Yes.

18,496. And, therefore, know something about the climatic conditions; what months, may I ask, are those during which you generally live there?—I come about the 1st of May and I stay till November, till the weather is too desperate.

18,497. Is it so bad as to drive you away?—To drive my wife away.

18,498. Is it, then, the state of the climate that compels your family to leave there, or other engagements?—The climate solely. I ought to say the sun sets when I leave in November before one o'clock afternoon, at Loch Hourn Head.

18,499. Is it the latitude that determines that?—No, the mountains.

18,500. So closed in?—So closed in.

18,501. But you have never lived the winter through there, have you?—I have been there in the winter.

18,502. What sort of weather did you find there in the winter, may I ask?—Very terrible. Sometimes deep snow, sometimes the loch frozen over pretty far down, and sometimes very wet.

18,503. Did the weather differ very essentially from the weather you encountered in coming here in other parts of the country?—In the winter?

18,504. Yes.—Yes, I should say it certainly differed from England.

18,505. I thought you were comparing it with England. But in going to Loch Hourn Head from England, you pass through other parts of Scotland?—Oh, I know Scotland better than England.

18,506. And do you think the weather is very much worse here in winter than in other parts of Scotland?—Most decidedly. The amount of wet that falls in the winter is four times what it is on the east coast.

18,507. And does it interfere, then, in your opinion with the operations of agriculture and farming?—Not in the winter.

18,508. The autumn is the worst season, is it?—The autumn is certainly the worst, the wettest.

18,509. Do you say you have seen hay rotting in

Glenelg.

Robert Birkbeck.

the month of September?—In October and November, the beginning of November.

18,510. May I ask what year you saw that in?—I cannot charge my memory with that.

18,511. Was it last year, may I ask?—Certainly not.

18,512. The year before that?—I think it was.

18,513. Did you see it on more than one occasion?—Oh, yes, several times, I have seen it in October and I have once seen it in November.

18,514. You would not go so far as to say that that is the rule?—The hay is very late indeed in this country.

18,515. But they make hay, don't they?—They do, and you see it now under very exceptional circumstances. I have been thirty-three years more or less on the west coast here, and I have never seen the like.

18,516. But have not the people got to live through the climate, such as it is?—I suppose they have.

18,517. And if they were changed to better circumstances, such as you have done, would they not be better?—Most certainly; I always say if you wish to benefit crofters, send them down in God's name to the Lowlands, where they have a chance.

18,518. But even in the Highlands they have been evicted by the action of such a man as you?—No, I have not moved one of them.

18,519. But if they say they would be better if they had more land, even of the character of the land they have got, don't you think something should be done to meet that demand?—Do you mean speaking generally?

18,520. Yes?—Certainly, I think so. My sympathies are very strong indeed for the crofters.

18,521. And, speaking generally again, is it your opinion, from the knowledge you have got of the Highlands of Scotland, that the people could be transferred to better land than they now hold and where they could get more of it?—Certainly, in the Lowlands I have seen beautiful land.

18,522. Yes, but I am talking of the Highlands?—No, I know none.

18,523. There is no spare land for them in the Highlands at all?—I don't say that.

18,524. But I was asking you regarding the Highlands of Scotland. Don't you think that within the area of the Highlands alone, some land could be got by which they could better their condition?—Certainly not, as regards migrating, but giving them more land if possible near them.

18,525. Near where they are now?—Near where they now are.

18,526. Then you imply by that that there is at present plenty in the best possible situation?—No, I don't say so.

18,527. May I ask why you object to migrating them?—Because I believe a man cannot go and build his house and drain his land and provide everything in a new place.

18,528. Are you aware, and I suppose you have no reason to doubt, for you would not be personally aware of it, that they were shifted from one place to another frequently before, and no houses whatever built for them?—Certainly, I know that; at the beginning of the century.

18,529. Then do you think that with recent facilities, I mean the improvements that have taken place in the condition of the people themselves, they would be in a better position now to make new homes if they were migrated than they were at that time?—I doubt it very much. One hundred years ago people lived in very different circumstances from what they do now. I believe they had little more than their oatmeal; now I think they have very much more than that.

18,530. Therefore should it not be easier for them to start new homes?—No, I think more difficult. I think human nature requires more every year you go on.

18,531. They have more necessities?—I think so, I know I have.

18,532. No doubt, and the conditions in every class of society have been very much changed since that time?—Very much.

Glenelg.

Robert Birkbeck.

18,533. And you think then that the necessity was created by the fact that they were able to supply it?—Which necessity?

18,534. The greater necessities you have now. I think you said that the greater necessities they have now would be an obstacle that they had not to encounter before?—Yes.

18,535. What creates the greater necessity now?—The greater facilities for bringing the food, I won't call it luxuries, but bringing extras down.

18,536. That is exactly what I was saying. Don't you think, then, that with these improved conditions they would be better able to make new homes than they were in the beginning of the century?—No, I doubt it.

18,537. Mr Maccallum.—Is the land that you have now practically the old farm of Arnisdale?—It was the old farm of Arnisdale that I bought.

18,538. As occupied by Mr Milligan?—Yes.

18,539. And you afforested 13,000 acres of it?—I have. No, I ought not to say I have. I bought it as a forest; it was cleared before I got possession of it. It was cleared in October and I entered in the subsequent spring.

18,540. It was cleared in view of your purchase?—Certainly.

18,541. Do you know the old rent that was paid for the farm by Milligan?—Yes.

18,542. Would you kindly state it?—Yes, I can tell you. He paid £825 a year. Certain abatements were made to him amounting to £200 a year for the last four years under his lease, I believe; I am speaking from hearsay evidence.

18,543. And what is the forest returned at in the valuation roll?—When he left he said it was certainly not worth £400 a year.

18,544. That was on account of the changed conditions, the lower prices, I suppose?—I presume so.

18,545. And there was no idea that he lost by the farm?—He told me he did.

18,546. In the later years though, I suppose?—I have no doubt it was in the later years.

18,547. You have no reason to suppose that it was not profitable at one time as a sheep farm?—I have no doubt; he is one of the most successful sheep farmers in the country.

18,548. And you have now a small farm called Arnisdale?—Yes.

18,549. Comprising, I suppose, the arable part of the old farm?—Part of the arable portion, most of it.

18,550. Now would it not be quite possible to use this land that is now a forest, to use it as a club farm in connection with the arable land? Supposing there were tenants settled there as a club farm getting all the arable land, could they not use the land or part of the land that is now afforested for pasture?—I think that anyone holding the arable land could employ the amount of hill land that is attached to it, but I very much doubt the profitable employment of more hill land than that. There are 700 acres, I think, now of hill land attached to the farm that Macmorran holds, and about 230 to the Corran crofters.

18,551. But still, with practically the same amount of arable land, the whole of it was managed formerly?—Certainly, by sending thousands of sheep down the low country. The sheep died there by the hundreds in the winter.

18,552. Do you know that of your own knowledge?—Yes, by seeing the carcasses.

18,553. And you have seen them in great numbers lying on the hill side?—In great numbers in the spring.

18,554. And do you think that the death-rate, or have you any reason to suppose that the death-rate on that land was worse than the death-rate on other farms in Glenelg?—In Glenelg; I cannot tell you. Mr Milligan always told me that the death-rate was excessive.

18,555. But you cannot say that the death-rate there was above the average of lands around?—I know nothing of what the average death-rate is on other farms.

18,556. And so you could not give any figures as to deaths with regard to Arnisdale?—Certainly not.

18,557. But, speaking in a general way, you think a great number died?—The death-rate, Mr Milligan always informed me, was excessive, and I have seen a great many die there.

18,558. Now, when the farm was used for sheep production, don't you think it was more profitable for the country as a whole than having it as a deer forest?—Certainly not.

18,559. Then is the produce of the forest now as valuable as the produce of the sheep farm?—Certainly.

18,560. The deer that is raised there are as valuable for a food supply as the sheep stock?—For a food supply? You never mentioned that.

18,561. I mention that now. Are the deer as valuable for a food supply as the sheep that were reared on these hills?—Certainly not.

18,562. No comparison at all between the two?—No, certainly not.

18,563. What else does it produce now?—Nothing.

18,564. Then, with regard to the rent of this low farm, you say that Mr Macmorran pays £51 a year, is that correct?—Certainly.

18,565. And is there a house?—Yes.

18,566. What would be a fair interest on the money expended upon building that house?—I can't tell you what it would cost to build a house. I spent something in restoring, in improving it.

18,567. Do you think it would cost £1000?—Oh no, a couple of hundred or £150.

18,568. With all the buildings that are upon it?—No, he has very large farm premises which were attached to the old farm of Arnisdale and quite unsuitable to his present place and partly unused.

18,569. I am asking what the whole of the buildings would have cost?—I can tell you what I insure them for, I think I insure them for £700, the farm square and his house.

18,570. And he has all that in his possession for £51?—Yes.

18,571. So that when you count the interest on the buildings you have little or nothing for the rent?—The buildings cost me nothing, they came with the land.

18,572. But when you count what was spent upon the houses, I don't mean by you, but what was spent on them, there is very little return for the rent. If you take into account the expenditure on buildings in Mr Macmorran's possession there is very little for the land?—I take it there would be about £30 a year, but I think it is an unfair inference, because the buildings were not built for that farm; they were built for a farm of 15,000 acres.

18,573. But I am just talking of these buildings as they are. Do you think that these buildings were put up for £1000, all the buildings?—Yes, I should think for considerably less; labour was much cheaper when they were put up. I very much doubt that square and his cottage having cost—if I might appeal to Mr Grant he is a much better judge and knows them too—I should have thought £400 probably, when they were put up, was the outside cost of them.

18,574. Of all the buildings?—I should think so. I take it that square must have been put up fifty years ago, but I am speaking quite at random.

18,575. That would leave about £20 for the land after deducting interest?—No, you don't take interest at 5 per cent.

18,576. How much would you count?—3 per cent., and I wish to goodness we got it.

18,577. But interest on that?—Interest on buildings spent on the farm.

18,578. What would any person building a house consider a fair interest for his money?—For a farmhouse?

18,579. Yes.—I should say 3 per cent. was all you would look to.

18,580. Well, that leaves about £30 for the land. Then the Corran crofters said they offered you for the land £45?—No, I did not say so. It was stated by one of the witnesses that £45 had been offered by the Camusban crofters.

18,581. But you think it was less than that, do you? —I have not looked at it for three years, but I was under the impression it was less than that, but I will send you the paper to speak for itself. I think I have it still. I am sure I have it.

18,582. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You don't usually separate the value of a farmhouse and of the land for which it is built?—I should not think of doing it.

18,583. You take the farmhouse and the land together, don't you?—Certainly.

18,584. I think you said that the conversion of the sheep farm into a deer forest was an advantage to the neighbourhood?—I think so.

18,585. To the crofters living near?—I think so.

18,586. Would you give me one or two reasons why you think so?—One reason is that many of them have told me so.

18,587. In what way do they benefit?—They have got more land than they ever had before. No sheep farmer will give up the low land, his best land, to the crofters, and I think their circumstances are very much better for the new houses.

18,588. Do they get work on the hill as gillies?—No, none of them.* I should be only too glad to give them the work, but they are not inclined to work away from home. I sent down a fortnight ago to Cambusban and Corran and offered 24s. a week to any man who would go up and work on the hill—I am bound to say they have to live in a tent, it is a rough place to live in—but I could not get one.

18,589. The Chairman.—And had he to find himself?—Oh yes. They club together.

18,590. And do you put up the tent?—Yes, the tent was put up. I think I must explain a little. The march fence was being put up by Mr Baillie and myself at joint expense under contract, the contract is now finished and there is a small part that was not included in the contract and that part is being fenced in with a Galloway dyke and a fence on the top and we get the benefit of their old encampment.

18,591. Mr Sutherland.—You were the sporting tenant of the land when it was a grazing farm?—I am sorry to say I was.

18,592. Now, what was the sporting rental of it at that time?—It was 360 odd pounds. I paid £400 and the landlord paid the taxes.

18,593. That would be more than £400 then?—I beg your pardon, if the landlord gets £400, and has to pay the taxes, it is considerably reduced.

18,594. Yes, but so far as you were concerned it was £400 to the tenant?—I considered I paid £360 of rent and £40 of rates.

18,595. That is £400 practically?—£400 was the total.

18,596. You said that the grazing rent was £825, I think?—Originally; it was £600 at last.

18,597. Did you hold it as a sporting tenant at any time when it was £825 for the grazing?—Yes.

18,598. Then the total rent would be £1300 gross rent?—The gross rent would be £1200. I make £800 and £400, £1200.

18,599. It was over £800?—It was over £800 and £360.

18,600. That is £1265?—It is £1185.

18,601. £1200 or thereabouts?—Yes.

18,602. And what is the value of it at present?—I am afraid not much.

18,603. Is it less than that?—I am afraid very much less.

18,604. So that it is actually of less value now than it was before?—I am afraid so. I am afraid Scotch property has gone down very much during the last few years.

18,605. Mr Maccallum.—But could you not give the figure it is returned at in the valuation roll?—Yes, certainly. I gave it you as near as I could but I have got the valuation roll here. Deer forest £600, house £40, that is my residence, Macmorran's rent £51, crofter's rent £21, total £712. As you are taking down that £600 may I say a word about it?

18,606. Surely?—I complained bitterly about the rating of £600 as too high. I never expected to kill more than 25 stags. They are taken at £20 a stag. I think every assessor in Scotland now takes them at £20 a stag, that is £500.

18,607. Then you consider that a fair rent for the deer forest would be £500?—No, not a fair rent, a fair value now. Every landlord looks to get what he can, and you must not ask me to put a low rent on.

18,608. But the value of it, fairly estimated you say, is £500?—You must not ask me to be buyer and seller. When I had to argue this out before the assessor I made it as low as I could, and I made it £500, and I think I should not be asked any further about that.

[On 3rd August, Mr Birkbeck contributed the following supplementary statement:—

I desire to correct one of my answers at Glenelg on 14th July—viz., that none of the Corran crofters were in my employment as gillies or otherwise.

My keeper at Arnisdale is a Corran man, and held a croft there; I provided him with land on the farm and added his former holding to the Corran crofts. A son of one of the Corran crofters is employed for some months to bring the letters, as the post only comes as far as Corran. The two gillies, who are in my permanent employment all the year round, belong to Caolas More on the estate. I may add that I provided for all the permanent employees of the sheep farm of Arnisdale when it was afforested; the manager, Macmorran, now holds a small farm from me, one of the shepherds I gave a croft to, and the others are provided with all the year round employment; there was only one shepherd who did not remain, and he was helped and has found employment elsewhere.

One of the Camusban witnesses gave evidence of an offer in 1891 of £45 per annum by the Camusban crofters for the land now rented as a farm by Mr Macmorran. Being at the time unable to recal the precise facts, I promised the Chairman that I would refer to my papers and send the Commission a statement on the subject. I find the offer by the Camusban crofters was dated 20th April 1891, and that Mr Malcolm, my factor, replied by letter dated 30th April, saying that the land referred to had been already let on lease to Mr Macmorran. I find the date of the agreement with Mr Macmorran was 1st April 1891.

I wish also to give some further explanations respecting my purchase of the land adjoining Camusban.

From the report in the "Scotsman" of the examination at Glenelg on the 14th July, I fear I misheard Mr Macrae's question to Mr Grant, which is thus reported in the "Scotsman:"—"Did Mr Birkbeck express a 'very strong desire that he should be allowed to buy 'the property, that you should have the tenants and 'he should have the arable land they were applying 'for?" A. "Mr Birkbeck offered for the whole, but 'excluding the crofts and the crofters' houses at 'Camusban, and that offer was unconditionally 'accepted." Mr Grant was perfectly correct in his answer, but as I understood the question, Mr Macrae asked—"Did Mr Birkbeck express a strong desire to 'exclude from the purchase the land which the Camus-'ban crofters were applying for?" This was precisely the case, and had I understood the question as reported, I should have cleared the matter up at the time. The facts were as follows:—My final offer for the estate was dated 15th July 1890; before it was accepted on July 25th I intimated, through Mr Augustus Baillie, that I had learned that the Camusban crofters claimed a portion of the land adjoining the crofts, that I therefore desired to exclude that portion from the purchaser and that the value could be settled by arbitration. The Camusban crofters considered that more land had been promised to them by Mr Baillie's late factor at the time of Lord Napier's Commission, as soon as the sheep farmers' lease should have expired; I was not aware of this at the time that I made my offer to buy the land in question from Mr Baillie, but after learning it, and before my offer was accepted, I had an interview with Mr Augustus Baillie, when I entirely understood that my proposal to exclude this land, in order that Mr Baillie might give it to his Camusban crofters, was accepted and agreed to. I should certainly at once have withdrawn my offer had I not understood this. On 12th August my offer was accepted, I refused to complete the purchase unless the land in question was excluded from the purchase, and not until the following January, after an action had brought against me to enforce the purchase, was I most reluctantly compelled to give in. Feeling, however, that the Camusban crofters were in great need of further land, I presented the land in question to the Free Church for their benefit, as mentioned in my statement read at Glenelg. NINETEENTH SITTING.

BALMACARA, LOCHALSH, July 24, 1893.

Balmacara

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
MICHAEL HUGH SHAW STEWART, Esq., M.P.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
HENRY MUNRO, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

KENNETH MATHESON, Glaick, Balmacara (56)—examined.

Kenneth Matheson

18,609. The Chairman.—You have a croft at Glaick near Balmacara?—Yes, Glaick, Balmacara.

18,610. And you are a steamboat ferryman?—Yes, but I have not a croft. We are only paying for the grazing of a cow. There are four of us in that same place.

18,611. What rent do you pay?—We pay £1.

18,612. Have you some land?—No, we have not; we have nothing to feed the cow at all during the winter.

18,613. But you have summer grazing?—Yes, summer grazings.

18,614. You and other three are in the same position?—Yes.

18,615. Have you a garden?—Well, I have a garden, but I am paying for that garden separately, I have a lease of it.

18,616. What do you pay for the garden?—5s. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—He has a feu of the house and garden.]

18,617. Do you pay separately for the grazing of the cow?—Yes.

18,618. What do you pay for the grazing of the cow?—A pound note.

18,619. In addition to the rent of the house?—Yes.

18,620. What extent of land have you for grazing?—The extent of land for pasture is big enough, I can say that; but after all it is nothing, because it is nearly altogether stones and ferns, and does not turn out anything at all for the benefit of the cattle. [Mr Watson.—They have about 15 to 20 acres between them of wooded pasture.]

18,621. Is it wooded?—Yes.

18,622. Is it behind the ferry?—Just above the houses at the ferry.

18,623. What is it you wish to say to us?—I would wish if we could possibly get one park, to enable us to plant potatoes and to feed the cow in the winter.

18,624. You want potato ground and additional grazing?—Just so.

18,625. In saying so do you express both your own view and the view of the three others in the same position?—I think there are some of them here who can speak for themselves.

18,626. But you don't wish to leave your holding?—No.

18,627. How much do you make out of your ferry? Oh, indeed, it is very little for all that I can do, unless I was turning myself to other things.

18,628. But you have a regular allowance as ferryman, I suppose?—Yes.

18,629. And you turn your time to account otherwise?—Yes.

18,630. Can you give us any idea of the extent of land you wish to get for potatoes?—Yes, about two acres each; that is as much as we would wish to have.

18,631. Of arable?—Yes.

18,632. And the extent of additional grazing?—Well, if we had that altogether we would put up with it; between the grazing and the potato ground.

18,633. If you had two acres additional arable and the grazing you possess already, you would be satisfied?—Oh yes.

18,634. Well, can you point us to land that would be got that could be made arable?—Well, it is the nearest park to our own place, and I can say it is not the best park at all.

18,635. What farm is it on?—It is on the farm of Mr Methuen.

18,636. That is on Balmacara farm?—Yes.

18,637. And it is close to your house?—Well, it is the closest one to our place.

18,638. There are four of you altogether?—Four.

18,639. What are their names?—One of them is Donald Matheson, and Hector Mackenzie, and Samuel Macrae, and myself.

18,640. What feu-duty do you pay?—I quite forget, indeed, just now. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—10s.]

18,641. A rent of £1, a feu of 10s., and £1 for the grazing?—Yes.

18,642. Your annual payment will be?—I pay taxes along with that too.

18,643. Of course, what do your taxes come to, some shillings I suppose? [Another delegate.—They are very high in this parish, 4s. 6d. I think last year; 2s. 3d. on proprietors and 2s. 3d. on tenants.]

18,644. Is it about 4s. 6d. a year altogether?—I pay upwards of 17s. or 17s. 6d. for taxes and dues.

18,645. In one form or another?—Yes. [Mr Watson.—He pays £1 for his cow's grass and 10s. feu-duty, so that £1, 10s. is all his rent, not £2, 10s.]

18,646. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Have you come only to speak for the land in your neighbourhood, or have you any evidence to give of land in the Lochalsh parish?—No, I don't think I have any evidence to give of that kind.

18,647. Mr Sutherland.—Is there a farm of Kyle near you?—It is five miles from us.

18,648. Mr Gordon.—Where is this land that you mentioned?—It is hardly a quarter of a mile below the bank.

18,649. What is the name of the field?—I never heard any particular name to it except that we always call it in Gaelic Mairi Bheag's Park, that is Little Mary's Park, above the road.

18,650. Is it under cultivation at present, or what?—Yes, it is.

18,651. It is worked as part of Mr Methuen's farm, part of the cultivated land?—Yes.

18,652. What crop is in it?—Corn.

18,653. Sir Henry Macandrew.—I think he is mistaken as to who occupies the land. Mr Finlayson's land runs between you and Mr Methuen's?—Yes. This is the nearest part to Mr Finlayson's, that is the nearest land to me, Mr Finlayson has the nearest one to that.

18,654. The nearest park of Mr Methuen's, not the nearest cultivated land?—Yes, the nearest cultivated land. Balmacara. — Kenneth Matheson.

18,655. Mr Gordon.—And you would have to go through Mr Finlayson's land?—No, there is a public road.

18,656. The Chairman.—Is there anything more you would like to say to us. As I understand, your case is this, that you feel much the want of a patch of arable land, and if you and your three neighbours could get two acres or about that extent you would be content with your holding?—Yes.

18,657. And does that, do you think, express the view of the other three who are along with you?—Yes.

18,658. You don't represent them, but you believe that is their views also?—Oh, that was their view.

18,659. Had you a talk about it among each other?—Yes, we had.

DONALD MATHESON, Glaick, Balmacara (55)—examined. Donald Matheson.

18,660. The Chairman.—You are a labourer at Glaick?—Yes.

18,661. Your house is close to Matheson's, I suppose?—Yes.

18,662. And do you pay a feu-duty of 10s.?—No.

18,663. You pay no house rent?—No.

18,664. And do you pay £1 for a cow?—Yes.

18,665. You heard Matheson's evidence, I suppose?—Yes.

18,666. And does it represent your views?—Yes.

18,667. You would like about two acres arable?—If you please.

18,668. But you would be satisfied if you had that?—Yes.

18,669. Have you one cow?—Yes.

18,670. Mr Sutherland.—Did you ever think of applying to the Crofters Commission?—No.

18,671. Did you apply to the estate officials for any land?—Yes. [Mr Watson.—He applied for these cow's grazings and they got them.]

18,672. The Chairman.—When did you apply for the cow's grazings?—Long ago for cow's grazing, and last December for arable land.

18,673. You have had the grazing for ten years?—Yes, and for thirty years.

18,674. What did you apply for last year?—For arable land, to Sir Henry Macandrew.

18,675. You have only been paying rent for the cow for about ten years. I think before that you were paying it direct to Mrs Lillingstone?—Yes.

18,676. We quite understood your case?—Very good.

18,677. Mr Sutherland.—Do you know any land suitable for the purposes we have in view in this neighbourhood; land that is at present given over to grazing that could be advantageously cultivated by small occupiers; do you know any such land?—No. [Mr Sinclair.—His English is not so good as the other man's.] The land that the other man was wanting I would be satisfied with.

ALEXANDER MACRAE, Avernish, Lochalsh (51). Alexander Macrae.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

18,678. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

18,679. Are you a cottar?—Yes, at the present time, but I was a good while paying rent to the proprietor formerly.

18,680. And do you pay no rent now?—Nothing.

18,681. Have you any land?—None.

18,682. Are you desirous of obtaining land if it can be got?—Oh yes.

18,683. Can you point us to the land that you have in view?—There is plenty of land; I don't select any particular place, but if you want it I can mention it.

18,684. Yes, I would like you to mention it?—I belong to Kintail; perhaps it might make a difference?

18,685. No, no, if you can tell us about land in th

Balmacara. — Alexander Macrae.

neighbourhood of your present house?—Auchtertyre is the nearest place.

18,686. What kind of land it that, is it farm ground?—All sorts of land arable and sheep land in Auchtertyre.

18,687. That is the farm of Auchtertyre along the road?—Yes.

18,688. Now, is it arable you want or grazing, or both?—I would be thankful for a little of both kinds, arable and pasture.

18,689. You would have to pay a rent, of course?—Yes, I don't expect anything else.

18,690. What rent are you willing to pay?—I would pay £10 or £12 if I got its value.

18,691. I am assuming that. What size of holding would you have in view for a rent of £10 or £12 a year?—3 cows and 100 sheep, according to the sort of land it might be.

18,692. And an extent of arable corresponding, I suppose?—According to that.

18,693. To enable you to winter your stock?—Yes.

18,694. Would you pay £10 or £12 for that?—Yes, if the land would be good enough to be value for it.

18,695. And would you be able to pay that without assistance?—Yes.

18,696. May I ask you do you carry on a trade?—I have no great trade, the chief thing I do is dealing in herring, buying it and going selling it throughout the country, since I was compelled to give up my service. I was a shepherd.

18,697. How long have you been engaged in your present occupation, buying and selling herring?—Five years, since I came to Avernish.

18,698. Mr Sutherland.—How many families are in Avernish?—Fourteen families.

18,699. Could you give us any idea of the amount of land they have? [Sir Henry Macandrew.—I will give you that.]

18,700. Could you give me it now? [Sir Henry Macandrew.—Yes, 43 acres of arable and 295 acres of pasture.]

18,701. Now, as you are at it, Sir Henry, would you kindly give me the area of the farm of Auchtertyre? [Sir Henry Macandrew.—45 acres arable and 1448 acres pasture.]

18,702. How many families are residing on Auchtertrye farm?—There are seven, including a poor-house or boarding-house where there are a lot of paupers.

18,703. How many of these seven families have got land?—The farm of Auchtertyre, and Mr Sinclair has a small croft.

18,704. Have the people of Avernish any sheep?—No.

18,705. Is the township of Avernish adjoining Auchtertyre farm?—Yes.

18,706. Is there arable land, land that could be made arable, on the farm of Auchtertyre not at present under cultivation?—Oh yes, at Portmore.

18,707. Is there any waste land on Auchtertyre farm that shows signs of former cultivation?—Yes, plenty.

18,708. And that, in your opinion, would be suitable for cultivation now?—Oh yes.

18,709. You have stated that you were a shepherd?—Yes.

18,710. Where were you a shepherd?—At Kishorn.

18,711. Do you know the land in that neighbourhood well?—Very well; I was eight years there.

18,712. Do you think that, if there was an opportunity given for the people of Avernish who have got no land to settle in such a place as has been indicated, they would be willing to do so?—There is only one other man and myself who have no land, and the other man is a pauper.

18,713. Do you think that those who have too little land in Avernish might be willing to take more if they got it?—I can't say just now, but I heard them asking it when the last Commission was here.

18,714. Was that the Napier Commission or the Crofters Commission?—The Crofters Commission.

18,715. They asked for land from the Crofters Commission, is that what you say?—They were wanting it from the factor. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—They made no application to the Crofters Commission, they wanted grazing for a horse each; that is all they ever asked for.]

Balmacara. — Alexander Macrae.

18,716. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Could you stock the land yourself without help?—Oh yes.

18,717. And do you think the other crofters of Avernish could do the same?—I can't say anything regarding them, I have not been long there.

18,718. I understand you gave up shepherding on account of your health, not on account of difficulty of finding a shepherd's place?—Yes, I was not able to perform the work.

18,719. And if you were quite well again you would have no difficulty in finding a shepherd's place?—I will not be able any more to act as shepherd, and will never ask it. My body is strong enough but my feet have been giving me trouble.

18,720. Mr Gordon.—You say you would want 100 sheep and 3 cows and a horse, is that so?—Yes.

18,721. What would the value of these animals be?—I can't say, it would be according to the value of stock at the time.

18,722. Have you as much money as would purchase them in the meantime?—I believe I have, that is not very great to-day.

18,723. Could you build your houses besides that.—Yes, I would do so.

18,724. Is any one else from Avernish here to-day besides yourself?—Yes.

18,725. How many are here from Avernish?—Only one that I saw.

18,726. What is his name?—Ewen Matheson. And there are two others.

18,727. Are you speaking for yourself to-day, or on behalf of Avernish township?—For myself altogether.

18,728. Sir Henry Macandrew.—Where did you pay rent?—In Kintail.

18,729. In Inverinate?—Yes.

18,730. When did you leave it?—Thirteen years since I left it.

18,731. Are your mother and your sister in the croft yet?—My mother is dead, but my sister is in the croft. I remained till my mother died.

18,732. And then did you give up the croft to your sister?—Yes, because I could not keep it. I was paying over £9 for 3½ acres of land.

18,733. Had you any grazing?—Yes, pasture for 2 cows and 20 sheep.

17,734. How did you get to live at Avernish?—Because the crofters there gave me an empty house that was there, I could not get a place anywhere else.

18,735. Did you just take possession of the house without anybody's leave?—I got orders from the crofters.

FINLAY MACRAE, Duirinish, Lochalsh (60)—examined. Finlay Macrae.

18,736. The Chairman.—You are a crofter in Duirinish?—Yes.

18,737. What rent do you pay?—£6, 10s.

18,738. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

18,739. Did they make any change upon it?—I was paying £8 before that.

18,740. Your old rent was £8 and your fair rent is £6, 10s.?—Yes.

18,741. The extent of the holding is 6 acres 1 rood arable, and the hill common is 757 acres divided into ten shares, of which you have one. There is no outrun, the croft is returned as being all arable? [Sir Henry Macandrew.—That is a mistake; they have an outrun in Duirinish.]

18,742. Yes, there are 757 acres of hill grazing but no outrun? [Sir Henry Macandrew.—I beg your pardon.]

18,743. Do you wish to obtain additional land?—Yes, I have a statement here.

18,744. Was this written out by you or by your son?—Yes, by me and the other tenants that are in the place.

18,745. But who wrote this, was it your son?—My son wrote this to our dictation.

'The township of Duirinish is held as a club farm 'in ten shares, each paying a rent of £6, 10s. sterling, 'as fixed by Crofters Commission and having as hold-'ings 6 acres arable land and a tenth part of 750 acres 'hill pasture.

'Our particular grievance is that being obliged to keep 'horses and rear young cattle, we have not sufficient 'pasture for summer grazing, so that we have to send 'our young cattle at great risk and expense to the Isle 'of Skye and other places. Last year we approached 'Sir Henry Macandrew on this grievance, and he very 'kindly gave us permission to send our horses into an 'enclosed piece of pasture in connection with the farm 'of Achnadarrach, and immediately adjoining our hill 'pasture.

'The unanimous desire of the township is that, if the 'Royal Commission see it practicable to break up the 'farm of Achnadarrach, the said piece of pasture be 'extended to provide grazing for the young cattle also, 'and annexed to our township under a fair rent.'

18,746. Does that set forth your views?—Yes.

18,747. The farm of Achnadarrach marches, I suppose, with your holdings?—Yes.

18,748. Who is the farmer?—Is it in the hands of the landlord?—Yes.

18,749. And is it a grazing farm?—Some of it.

18,750. And some of it arable, I suppose?—Yes.

17,751. Is there a house and steading?—Yes.

18,752. What extent of additional grazing is your township desirous of getting from this farm?—I could not tell you.

18,753. What would the carry of it be?

18,754. What stock have you got at present?—About 100. I could not be sure. The township stock is 60 cattle.

18,755. You want additional grazing for 100 sheep?—For the small cattle that we keep.

18,756. Would you like to give your evidence in Gaelic?—Yes. Young cattle that we were in the habit of sending off to other places, distant places.

18,757. What carry are you desirous of getting?—Three young beasts each.

18,758. That would be 30 cattle?—Yes.

18,759. Thirty yearlings?—Yes.

18,760. That is all you want?—Yes, and for the horses.

18,761. Have you a horse each?—Yes.

18,762. You say a great risk and expense, what does it cost you at present to send animals to the Isle of Skye, horses and young cattle?—According to the place we send them to.

18,763. What did it cost you last year?—I paid for the three beasts last year and the horse £3, 10s.

18,764. For winter keep?—For summer keep.

18,765. Suppose you got that additional grazing, would the arable you have be sufficient?—Yes, we would endeavour to do with what we have of arable if we got the pasture.

18,766. And you would be quite willing and able, I daresay, to pay the additional rent which this land would require?—Yes.

18,767. Mr Sutherland.—You say that Duirinish pasture is managed as a club farm. How long has that been so?—It was much larger at first, but they were gradually reducing it, and twenty-nine years ago they took off and left what we have now with us.

18,768. How far did your grazing extend before it was curtailed?—We had the hill, part of the deer forest up at Patt.

18,769. The townships had summer grazings?—Yes.

18,770. When did they lose these pastures?—Long ago.

18,771. Could you tell us how they managed these pastures when they had them up in Patt and Monar?—Three townships had the moor between them. They used to send herds along with their cattle.

18,772. And was that used for summer grazing purposes?—Yes.

18,773. What has become of the land now?—It is under deer to-day.

18,774. And did they get any land anywhere else when that land was taken from them?—No.

18,775. When was the club farm management introduced?—Some time before Sir Alexander Matheson bought the estate.

18,776. Could you tell us how many years ago that was?—About forty years.

18,777. Do you say there was any extension of their grazing at the time?—Forty years.

18,778. Did they get any additional grazing at that time?—Nothing.

18,779. It was the old grazing put under the club management, was it?—Yes.

18,780. Are you of opinion that it is a better system of management than the one that previously existed?—I can't say, as ever since I remembered I have been on the same system.

18,781. Equal shares of the grazing?—Yes, they have it in common.

18,782. Is the stock held individually or in common?—Every one has his own sheep stock. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—They had a club sheep stock, but they gave it up some years ago.]

18,783. Then regarding the farm of Achnadarrach which adjoins yours, who occupies it at present?—The proprietor.

18,784. And does the proprietor work it with a manager there on the ground?—Yes.

18,785. So it is not occupied by a resident farmer?—No.

18,786. Does their grazing adjoin the Balmacara farm?—Yes, we adjoin it.

18,787. And is there land there that would suit your purpose also?—Yes, there is land that would benefit us if we got it.

18,788. Land suitable for occupation by small cultivators or other occupiers?—Yes.

18,789. Is their complaint that they have too little pasture in proportion to their arable?—Yes.

18,790. And that they are not in that way able to turn out their stock to the greatest advantage?—Quite so, that is the reason that we send our stock to the Isle of Skye.

18,791. They have got, I think, only 75 acres apiece in connection with 6 acres arable, is that so?—We don't know how much we have; they were taking it from us bit by bit. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—800 acres pasture.]

18,792. The official return says 757, and we have to take it. Do you consider 75 acres of pasture too small a proportion for 6 acres of arable? I am talking of what they have?—Yes, too little.

18,793. Can you show us the land that you refer to that would be suitable for enlarging their grazing?—We only asked what would be suitable to be attached to what we have.

18,794. Can you show to us the land you consider suitable?—Yes, if you go to see it.

18,795. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Are you speaking to-day as a delegate?—For the township.

18,796. About the grazing acreage, there are 757 acres in the roll and 600 acres in your statement; which is correct?—We allow that the official statement is correct we don't know exactly. We only make a random statement by guess.

18,797. So the statement should be amended in that particular?—Yes.

18,798. The Chairman.—I would advise you to withdraw this and stand upon your statement given now, because there are two or three mistakes in it; there is a mistake about the area and there is also a mistake about club farms, and it is not signed or dated. I think you should allow your case to stand upon what you now say. You want to break up the farm of Achnadarrach, is that not so?—We wrote to the proprietor himself a few years ago and never yet got a reply.

18,799. No, but I understand you could only obtain the land you want by breaking up the farm of Achnadarrach?—We would take the whole of Achnadarrach if we got it.

Balmacara. Finlay Macrae.

18,800. Can you give me the rent of Achnadarrach farm?—I don't know the rent or the value.

18,801. Do you think that the crofters who might occupy the farm, if it was broken up, could pay the same rent for it as if the farm were let to a single tenant?—Yes, and more.

18,802. And does the same relate to Balmacara. Do you suggest that crofters should take the whole of Balmacara farm?—I don't know as to that.

18,803. With regard to the stock that were grazed in the summer in Monar, do you remember that yourself?—Yes, and I used to go myself with them.

18,804. What did they do in winter with the stock that they grazed there in summer?—The low ground, the land we had ourselves, would support them in winter.

18,805. Is that the land you have now or had you more then?—Yes, but another township has been cut off since that time.

18,806. Therefore, if you had the same grazing in Monar now, you have not the land to winter the stock on at present?—I believe we have. We send cattle to Skye yearly for summer grazing.

18,807. Have you got land enough now among you to winter all the stock you used to graze in the summer at Monar?—Yes, of arable land.

18,808. How many cattle could you winter on the land you have now?—Four cows and two stirks we keep, and we have to send others to the Isle of Skye or any place we get.

18,809. You would have to send some away?—We have at present to send some away every year.

18,810. I want to find out this. You sent a certain number of cattle and sheep to Monar in the summer, and I want to know how much of that proportion you used to send, could you winter now on the low ground you have at present?—Three or four beasts additional to what we have.

18,811. You could winter them?—Yes.

18,812. I understand that on the land you have now you can only winter three or four more beasts each?—Yes.

18,813. When was the club system given up on the grazing you have?—Fourteen or fifteen years ago.

18,814. Why was it given up?—That the land would not support them.

18,815. Why did you give up the system of keeping the stock on the club system?—The land would not support them because tenants were at that time put all round us.

18,816. Mr Munro.—Supposing you got this additional land at Achnadarrach, have you counted up the cost of the additional money that you would require to stock it?—Yes, some of us would be able to do it.

18,817. How much would it be?—We did not sum up how much it would come to; we could not be sure of that till we knew the price of the stock we would have to put on.

18,818. Could you specify a probable sum?—It would not come to any big sum at all.

18,819. Could you stock the additional land without any outside assistance?—Yes.

18,820. Mr Gordon.—You are speaking for the whole township?—Yes.

18,821. You propose that the whole township should join together and take Achnadarrach?—Yes.

18,822. You say you are able to stock your share; are all the rest able to stock theirs?—Yes.

18,823. Is this the only arable land in the neighbourhood of the mansion house or is there any other arable land that the proprietor of Duncraig could get if you were to take this?—That is according to how far on towards the castle they might go. Achnadarrach did not go very near the castle at first and there was another place.

18,824. How many acres are there in the portion of the farm which you propose to take?—I could not tell you, but Mr Watson would know better than I know. [Mr Watson.—Perhaps about 35 or 40 acres, as far as I can guess it roughly, in the meantime of arable, that is if he limits himself to Achnadarrach proper which is below the road we drove.]

18,825. How many acres would that leave with the mansion house?—I could not tell you.

18,826. You would not propose to take all the arable land from the mansion house?—No.

18,827. What would become of the poor laird for milk. You say that you do now or did formerly put your cattle to Skye. Would you prefer if you got pasture at home to keep them near at home?—Yes.

18,828. And is there pasture upon the home farm of Achnadarrach in your neighbourhood?—Not much.

18,829. Is there not other pasture in your neighbourhood that could be made available?—No, but Balmacara.

18,830. There is in Balmacara. You stated that there was some arable land on Balmacara also. Where is it that you say could be cultivated?—The land that could be cultivated is farthest away from the township.

18,831. Is it part of the present arable farm of Balmacara?—If we got a piece grazing, the hill grazing, we would not require any.

18,832. Then if you got a part of the grazing you would be content?—Yes.

18,833. How many horses have you in the township?—Ten.

18,834. And you want grazing for ten horses and thirty stirks, is that it?—Yes.

18,835. Have you any idea in your own mind how many acres of additional pasture you would require for that?—We have a piece already that would help with that.

18,836. But how much additional ground would you require?—That would be according to the land we got.

18,837. But suppose it is the land nearest yourselves if you got any?—About 100 acres.

18,838. Now will you kindly tell us what kind of stock you herded yourself up in the forest of Patt. Was it young cattle or milk cows on the old sheiling system?—Young cattle.

18,839. What part of the forest of Patt was it. Could you show us the ground or describe it now?

18,840. Riochan first and then they took Patt from us and gave us Calavie.

18,841. But you prefer some additional pasture nearer home?—Yes.

18,842. The Chairman.—How many years is it since you sent animals to what is now Patt forest or Monar Forest?—About forty years.

18,843. How many families were in the habit of sending their animals there?—I was very young at the time, and could not say how many families were in the townships.

18,844. Can you tell me how many were in the townships?—There were twelve in our own township.

18,845. What was the name of that township?—Duirinish.

18,846. Did any other township send their stock to the forest?—Yes, Kirkton.

18,847. Any other place?—Craig and Achnadarrach.

18,848. Was there a township of Achnadarrach?—Yes.

18,849. How many families were in the township of Achnadarrach?—Two.

18,850. And did all these families send their stock in summer to this land that is now forest?—Yes.

18,851. How far had they to travel?—About 40 miles from here.

18,852. It cannot be 40 miles. How long did you take to go?—Two days.

18,853. How long did you stay there?—Half a year.

18,854. And did you build bothies there and live there?—Yes, the herd would live there.

18,855. Was there one herd for each township?—No.

18,856. How many herds had these families altogether?—I cannot tell, because my father had it before I was born.

18,857. Did you pay anything for that?—The same rent for that along with the holdings.

18,858. And was that a right which you exercised in virtue of the holdings that you had in Duirinish?—Yes, it followed as a right.

18,859. Did you carry on these sheilings any place you chose on this forest land?—I don't understand the question.

18,860. Have you distinct marches?—Yes.

18,861. Each township had its own marches?—These three townships that I mentioned were together and had the one.

18,862. Which three were these?—Duirinish, Kirkton, Craig, and Achnadarrach. These four had the same marches.

18,863. What other townships did you mention that went to that locality?—Achamore, Ardinarf and others.

18,864. Can you mention the names of any others?—No.

18,865. Were there deer upon that land at that time, do you know?—No deer.

18,866. All sheep ground?—Yes.

18,867. You don't wish, as I understand, to resume that system if you could get additional grazing added to your present holdings?—No, we would not want it if we got grazing near.

18,868. Sir Henry Macandrew.—When was the township of Duirinish formed?—Duirinish was a township before I was born and I don't know when it was formed.

18,869. Do you not know that it was at one time a farm let to one tenant?—Yes, when my father came to it first.

18,870. And was it formed into a township out of a single farm in your father's time?—Yes.

18,871. Have you any difficulty in getting summer grazing for your stock in Skye?—Yes, when places are taken up before we arrive we have to return and go from township to township, like ragmen going about here.

18,872. Did you ever in any year fail to get grazing in Skye?—Yes.

18,873. When?—Several times. Twelve years ago I sent my horse there, and I sent him to a place and then he left that place and wandered away and I had to pay £4 before I could get him home.

18,874. Where are the Duirinish horses grazing at present?—At Achnadarrach.

18,875. What are you paying for that?—I could not tell you.

18,876. What did you pay in Skye? If you tell me that I will know what to charge you. What did you pay in Skye?—Not the same in every place in Skye.

18,877. Mr Donald Macrae.—Do you deal in sheep or cattle or both on a considerable scale?—Yes.

18,878. Where do you buy?—Every place.

18,879. Have you for several years been buying the Applecross stock?—Yes.

18,880. And Shieldaig?—Yes.

18,881. And Torridon?—Yes.

18,882. You mentioned that a township was taken off Duirinish; what township?—Portaneorna.

18,883. In the olden times were Drumbuie and Erbusaig crofting townships included in Duirinish?—Yes.

18,884. When it was a farm?—When one tenant had it these were attached, but when my father came it was formed into a township, Drumbuie was cut off.

18,885. Am I right in assuming that when Duirinish had the summer grazings at Monar, that summer grazings belonged not only to Duirinish of the present day but to Duirinish and Drumbuie and Erbusaig?—Yes, these townships had it as well.

18,886. Now, is it a fact that every township in Lochalsh had its portion of these old grazings with the exception of Plockton?—I have no recollection with regard to other places, but as I used to go with our own cattle I knew about it.

18,887. Did you hear that the same applies to the other townships?—Yes.

18,888. You said that they had Riochan first and that it was taken from them. How many years is it since Riochan was taken from you?—I believe it is forty years.

18,889. How long is it then since Loch Calavie was taken from them?—I believe it is three years we got possession of Loch Calavie.

18,890. Do you know Ben Dronnaig?—Yes, we had not it. Auchtertyre had that place.

18,891. Were there tenants in Auchtertyre, small tenants?—No.

18,892. Now, are the grazings there better or worse than the grazings of Balmacara in your neighbourhood or of Achnadarrach in your neighbourhood?—At that time there was good pasture on it, but Achnadarrach has a stock on it to-day; it is not so good.

18,893. Which land is better for grazing purposes, Riochan and Ben Dronnaig and these places, or the hill grazings of Balmacara?—I can't tell.

18,894. Do you know the lands of Ben Dronnaig and these places personally?—Yes.

18,895. Could these places be worked to-day in connection with crofting townships in Lochalsh?—Why not?

18,896. Would it be possible to restore the old boundaries and if the old boundaries were restored, would it be possible for the crofting township of Duirinish to take its own and to put a club stock on, common to the whole township, and to keep a shepherd there?—I am of opinion it would.

18,897. Are you of opinion that such a system would work well?—I don't know as to that, but they are of opinion it would benefit them.

18,898. Do you know of any shepherds who lived there all the year round, from year to year?—Yes.

18,899. Do you know John Matheson who is farm servant at Rhudha Mor?—Yes, and I know another one in Auchmore.

18,900. What is his name?—Mackay.

18,901. Did they live as shepherds up there?—Yes.

18,902. Did they live there summer and winter?—They did not use to remain in winter.

18,903. Did John Matheson live there for several years at a place called Coire-each?—Yes.

18,904. Mr Sutherland.—May I ask if that was as shepherd for the people down here?

18,905. Mr Donald Macrae.—No, this is quite recently. Did you ever hear John Matheson speak of the quality of the ground there, and its capabilities as a pastoral country?—Yes.

18,906. Sir Henry Macandrew.—John Matheson is in the district and can speak himself.

18,907. Mr Donald Macrae.—I should be exceedingly glad if Sir Henry Macandrew would invite him to come before the Commission; he is servant on the local factor's farm of Rhudha Mor, and I did not ask him to come himself, but he has been telling me himself that there is not a place on the face of the earth he would rather go back to than Coire-each and take a hirsel.

18,908. Sir Henry Macandrew.—He is most welcome to come here and give evidence, and I would be delighted if the Commission would invite him to come.

18,909. Mr Donald Macrae.—Supposing it were as easy for Duirinish to get a considerable stretch of land for grazing purposes up there on Ben Dronnaig or to get the hundred acres of Balmacara farm that you spoke about, which would you prefer as a crofting township?—I don't know; although I would have my preference I don't know if that would suit the township.

18,910. As a member of the crofting township of Duirinish, which would you rather get, your share of the hundred acres of Balmacara grazings or get the restoration of the old boundaries up at Ben Dronnaig?—If we got what we wanted to take the horse and the young beasts off we were not wanting more.

18,911. Do you believe that Duncraig would have enough of arable land, even supposing they got the whole of Achnadarrach, as Achnadarrach stood when it was a township?—I am of opinion there is.

18,912. And is there another place near Achnadarrach called Achana-h-inich?—Yes.

18,913. Does it form a part of Achnadarrach to-day?—A portion of Achnadarrach was attached to it.

Balmacara. Finlay Macrae.

18,914. Does that place adjoin Duirinish?—It is marching with Achnadarrach.

18,915. Were there tenants there before?—Yes.

18,916. Mr Gordon.—You know Ben Dronnaig?—Yes.

18,917. Can sheep be wintered there?—Oh yes, I have seen sheep at the Dronnaig many times.

18,918. You could not winter the hoggs up there?—Yes.

18,919. On Ben Dronnaig?—Yes.

18,920. Now, you say you are a cattle dealer. Do you take grass through the country?—Yes.

18,921. Where?—At Braintra.

18,922. Do you ever take the cattle on to the townships' grazings?—Yes.

18,923. You do that occasionally?—Yes, sometimes.

18,924. Do you understand the question. Do you take the cattle occasionally that you purchase in the way of your business on to the township grazings?—No, but of Braintra and other places.

18,925. Mr Sutherland.—You stated in reply to a question by Sir Henry Macandrew that Duirinish township was formed out of a single farm. That, you stated I think, was in your father's time, was it?—Yes.

18,926. Why was it made into a township, do you know?—I have no knowledge.

18,927. Seeing it was one farm at one time some people must have come there?—Yes.

18,928. Where did they come from?—From different parts of Lochalsh, but I don't know.

18,929. What made them settle there, do you know?—I don't know.

18,930. You don't know anything about the formation of this township?—Nothing.

18,931. You also spoke of the blotting out of some other townships. Had the one thing anything to do with the other?—I did not mean that they were blotted out, but they were dissociated, cut off from Duirinish.

18,932. But you mentioned a township of Auchmore which is no longer a township?—Yes, there were tenants in at the time, but it is now a big farm.

18,933. Then I wish to ask you a question with regard to deer. You said that when this right of grazing attached to the townships in Lochalsh there were no deer in Monar?—No, unless deer would come from other places.

18,934. I want to know exactly what you mean by there being no deer there. Did you only mean that there was no deer forest there?—There was a forest in Strathglass.

18,935. There would be deer there at the time your cattle would be there?—I never saw any deer at that time.

18,936. But was the whole of the land up there occupied as sheiling, or some of it as a deer forest at that time?—None as a forest at that time.

18,937. Then where do you think the deer came from that are in it now?—They came up from Strathglass over the boundary.

18,938. But there were deer there as well as now?—Yes.

18,939. Then these old grazings of yours were known by a local name. You stated that they were called 'Monadh-Aillseach.' What is the meaning of that?—'Monadh' signifies a place for young cattle, hill ground.

18,940. And what does 'Aillseach' mean?—Belonging to Lochalsh,—Monadh-Aillseach, the hill country of Lochalsh.

18,941. And these grazings were known here by that name, and are they still known locally as Monadh-Aillseach?—Yes.

18,942. And they were called that from the fact that they were attached to the Lochalsh townships, isn't that so?—That is my opinion.

18,943. Sir Henry Macandrew.—Do you know that the deer were driven out of the forests up there two years successively lately, twice within the last two years?—I heard nothing of that.

18,944. The Chairman.—You did not do it yourself?—No. Balmacara.

18,945. Sir Henry Macandrew.—I mean by the weather, by the storm?—I know nothing as to what put them out, if they came out. Finlay Macrae.

18,946. The Chairman.—But did you know anything about it?—No.

18,947. Sir Henry Macandrew.—Did the Duirinish people for some years let the wintering of their pasture?—I could not tell you.

18,948. Oh, you can tell me that?—For two or three years they let it.

18,949. The Chairman.—I am going to read you a passage from the General View of Agriculture of the Counties of Ross and Cromarty, by Sir George Stewart Mackenzie, a work published in 1810. At pages 252 and 253, where he is dealing with Lochalsh, he says this—'To each farm is attached a hill grazing, in many 'cases at the distance of several miles, to which the 'young cattle are sent towards the end of spring or 'early in summer and remain till September or 'October, when they are forced by bad weather to 'leave it. The one-year-old cattle are suffered to remain 'on the low farm and generally feed separately on the 'higher and coarser parts of the pasture.' Does that passage correctly represent what your father and you when a boy used to do?—Yes.

18,950. It is quite correct, is it?—Yes.

JOHN MACLENNAN, Crofter, Duirinish, Lochalsh (36)—examined. John Maclennan

18,951. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter in Duirinish?—Yes.

18,952. What rent do you pay?—£6, 10s.

18,953. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

18,954. What is your old rent?—£8.

18,955. Your holding is 6 acres arable and 757 acres pasture, of which you have a tenth share. Tell us what stock you have?—I keep a horse and four cows and followers.

18,956. What followers have you just now?—Two heifers.

18,957. And have you sheep?—I have two or three sheep, but they are on different grazings, I suppose they are anywhere. They like to go throughout the hill anywhere.

18,958. You have only two or three?—That is all.

18,959. What is it you want to get in the shape of land?—Well, we wish in the first place to show you that we are in particular need of summer grazing for the horses, as we are obliged to have them to work the farm.

18,960. You cannot do without horses?—We cannot do without them.

18,961. And you have not enough of grazing for them?—Not enough of outside hill grazing to keep them in summer.

18,962. You wish to get, and are ready to pay a fair rent for, such additional grazing?—Yes.

18,963. Point us to the hill grazing that would meet your object?—We have possession already of a piece for the horses. It is enclosed. It was shown in the statement that you read. It is enclosed, and we find that if that would be extended to keep the other cattle that we are obliged to remove in summer and send to Skye and other places—if that piece that is enclosed already were extended.

18,964. So as to accommodate the stock you have to send to Skye?—Yes, we would be quite willing to pay a fair rent for that and it would meet our object.

18,965. And would that satisfy you?—That would quite satisfy the desire of the township.

18,966. You mean an additional grazing for the whole of the township?—Yes.

18,967. To be held in common?—Yes.

18,968. Can you indicate what additional extent of hill grazing would satisfy the wants of the township?—I should say, but it is only a rough guess, that there are between 40 and 50 acres in the piece that is enclosed already where the horses are and if other 50 were added to that,—but it is impossible to take it off Achnadarrach unless we got one of the parks which are old arable land.

18,969. You cannot take what you want from Achnadarrach without taking part of the arable?—Without getting part of the arable.

18,970. By arable you mean land under cultivation at present?—It is at present partly arable.

18,971. Under rotation?—Yes.

18,972. Well, suppose that that cannot be done, is there other grazing land reasonably near that would meet your view?—Yes, on the side of Balmacara.

18,973. On Balmacara farm?—It adjoins both Duirinish and Achnadarrach, in the march.

18,974. Is that land you are thinking of on Balmacara farm grazing land?—Yes, there are sheep on it just now.

18,975. It is not land under rotation?—No, no.

18,976. And has not been in your recollection?—No.

18,977. Always used as grazing?—As grazing for sheep.

18,978. Then could a sufficient extent of grazing be got on Balmacara farm without trenching on the arable land of Achnadarrach?—Certainly, any amount of hill grazing on Balmacara.

18,979. Would the taking of the land from Balmacara farm that you require leave a considerable grazing for the farm of Balmacara?—Yes, in my view.

18,980. In your view it would?—Yes.

18,981. In saying what you have told us, do you represent the views of the township as well as your own?—I believe I do, but they all agreed that if they got what they wanted off the farm of Achnadarrach it would be more suitable, because it is all enclosed and would not allow our cattle to stray away.

18,982. You would have Achnadarrach by preference?—Yes.

18,983. But, failing Achnadarrach, you would be glad to get the land from Balmacara?—Yes.

18,984. Is that the way of it?—That is the way of it.

18,985. Is there access to the land on Balmacara that you are thinking about?—Yes, there is no fence between us at all; it is just adjoining our land alongside the road as you come from Plockton to Balmacara.

18,986. You have no desire then, any of you, to leave your holdings if you got this additional grazing?—Not so far as I know.

18,987. You have no desire personally?—No.

18,988. Did you make any endeavours in the past to get additional land either by application to the Crofters Commission or by application to the estate?—We did not apply to the Crofters Commission for additional holdings, but we applied to Sir Henry and we stated this grievance to him last year, and it was him that gave us this piece of pasture for the horses and we beg to offer him thanks for the same, but we don't know whether we will have it any longer, we only got it for the present year.

18,989. You don't hold it under the Act of Parliament?—No.

18,990. Did he enclose it for you?—It was enclosed before.

18,991. Only you would have liked him, when he was doing so well, to have done a little better by giving you more?—Just so.

18,992. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to this park, it is on the farm of Achnadarrach, is it?—It is in connection with it. I believe it was formerly on Balmacara but it is now in connection with Achnadarrach.

18,993. And did you get this right of pasturing without any additional rent?—We don't know what we have to pay for the horses yet; we are to be charged, certainly, because we are charged everywhere with summer grazing, generally £1 and sometimes over that.

18,994. And do you accept a bargain on conditions like that?—Well, we just explained our case to Sir Henry and he told us that we would get it in Achnadarrach last year and we did not expect to be charged any more than anywhere else, but, of course, we don't know.

18,995. So it is a bargain of honour, is it?—Yes, so far.

18,996. But you complain that you have no security of tenure of the park?—No, we have no security.

18,997. Neither do you know what you are to be charged?—No.

18,998. How does the farm of Achnadarrach spare this park?—Well, it is enclosed all round, and it is a bit of hill pasture, and outside it is planted and then the rest of it has scarcely any hill pasture, it is all old arable.

18,999. And how many horses are pastured there in the park?—I believe there are eleven from Duirinish itself.

19,000. And what is the usual payment for the pasture of a horse in this country?—One pound note. We used to pay that.

19,001. How many acres are in the park?—I said already that I thought between 40 and 50 acres altogether, but I could not say definitely.

19,002. Do you pasture the horses all the year in the park?—No, they will be there for three summer months.

19,003. That is a fourth part of the year?—Yes.

19,004. And for that you pay £11?—Yes.

19,005. For a park of 40 acres?—We have not paid it yet.

19,006. But you expect that it will not be less than a pound?—We expect so.

19,007. Isn't it a pretty high rental?—Yes, and I believe the place is rather limited for the horses themselves. Unless Sir Henry will be kind enough to remove them to a better park for a time, I believe it is getting very bare by this time.

19,008. But with regard to the other alternative mode of enlarging your township, that is, Balmacara, it is not the best part of the Balmacara farm that you want?—No, but only the worst; well, it is not the worst either, there is another place adjoining Erbusaig which is even worse than the piece adjoining Achnadarrach. It is all black hill.

19,009. Is the general character of this peninsula here that the farther you go west the worse the land gets?—I believe it is.

19,010. And all the people are on the west end of the peninsula and the big farms on the east?—Yes, the big farms are on the best part of the estate as regards arable and pasture.

19,011. The part that you refer to on the farm of Balmacara is not such good land as in Achnadarrach?—No, and it is not so convenient either for our township.

19,012. This addition from Balmacara farm would give your holdings an inconvenient form, wouldn't it, it would make them longer?—It would make them longer certainly, but it would give them a larger extent of pasture.

19,013. But if you got the piece from Achnadarrach farm it would be more compact would it not?—Yes.

19,014. Now it is practically at the present time, isn't it, part of the policies of Duncraig House?—Yes, but they have sheep on it just now.

19,015. The grounds are very extensive, if you include the farm of Achnadarrach?—The arable is extensive, but there is no hill pasture in connection with Duncraig House, all the hill is planted.

19,016. Is there not more land attached to Duncraig House if you include the farm of Achnadarrach, than the whole of the land the Duirinish people have got?—I could not say really.

19,017. It looks so on the map?—It may be so.

19,018. But you state as your opinion, and you have the authority of the rest of the township for saying that you are very anxious to get your pasture enlarged in either of these ways?—So as to keep the horses and the cows that we are obliged to put off yearly.

19,019. And you are both able and willing to pay a rent for it?—Yes.

19,020. Mr Gordon.—Is there any pasture on the farm of Achnadarrach except this pasture which you have got?—Well, there is a small bit, but it is very small, lying to the north side.

Balmacara. John Maclennan.

19,021. In point of fact you have already got all the pasture you can get from the farm of Achnadarrach?—We have not got any from the farm of Achnadarrach.

19,022. There was pasture formerly attached to Achnadarrach?—Yes, from Balmacara, this place that I mentioned, where the horses are, it was taken from Balmacara and attached to Achnadarrach.

19,023. But there is no more pasture that you can get from Achnadarrach?—I don't believe there is, unless they give some of the parks already under sheep.

19,024. Is any of your township engaged in fishing at all?—Yes.

19,025. Do you engage in fishing?—I don't, but there are some in the township who do.

19,026. And Drumbuie, do they engage in fishing?—Yes.

19,027. The most of the townships are built round the seashore?—Yes.

19,028. And the shore generally is on the west part of the estates and not the east?—On the west and north and south.

19,029. Therefore they could not have been fishing villages up on the east part of the estate?—No.

19,030. That may be one reason why the fishing villages may be there.

19,031. Mr Sutherland.—How far is Duirinish from the sea?—About a quarter of a mile.

19,032. Mr Gordon.—If you got this part of Achnadarrach would that be suitable pasture for you?—I believe it would, if it was laid out for pasture.

19,033. You would be quite satisfied?—Quite satisfied.

19,034. And it would afford the necessary additional outrun both for your horses and young cattle?—Yes, if we got sufficient.

19,035. In other words sufficient pasture if it can be got?—Yes.

19,036. You would not have to send them either to the hills or to the Isle of Skye?—Just so.

19,037. The Chairman.—What does it cost you to send across cattle or horses to Skye for grazing?—We pay 6d. each beast across the ferry, and in the case of horses I believe it is 1s.

19,038. And the same coming back?—Well, threepence coming back.

19,039. And have you sometimes considerable difficulty in getting grazing in Skye?—Well, not I, I don't go often.

19,040. Do you know of your neighbours having difficulty?—We generally go as far as Duisdale, and that is a long way from Kyleakin. I believe it is about 20 miles or so.

19,041. Have your neighbours sometimes difficulty in getting grazing in Skye?—Well, we have to go asking till we get it.

19,042. Sir Henry Macandrew.—Are there any crofting townships in the east end of this parish?—Yes.

19,043. Sallachy?—Yes.

19,044. Altnasuth, Ardinarff, Ardelve, Avernish?—Yes.

19,045. You are not correct in saying all the townships were on the west end?—I meant my own district. I did not understand the question like that. I meant my own district between Plockton and Kyle. I think the bulk of the crofting population of Lochalsh is between Plockton and Kyle.

19,046. But are not the townships I have named all in the east end, and all very considerable townships?—Yes, they are.

19,047. The Chairman.—Do you carry on any trade apart from your holding?—No, but I work as a labourer when I can get it from the estate.

19,048. And do you sometimes get labour from the estate?—Yes, in the winter months I generally work for day's wages.

19,049. What are your wages generally?—From 15s. to 16s. a week.

19,050. You get work every winter I suppose, more or less?—Yes, more or less. Balmacara. John Maclennan.

JOHN MACRAE, Crofter, Duirinish (50). John Macrae.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

19,051. The Chairman.—You are a crofter at Duirinish?—Yes.

19,052. What rent do you pay at present?—£6, 10s.

19,053. What was your former rent?—£10 first, and then it was reduced to £8, and by the Crofters' Commission to £6, 10s.

19,054. Your holding is 6 acres arable and one-tenth of 757 hill pasture. You heard the evidence of Finlay Macrae, I suppose, and of John Maclennan?—Yes.

19,055. Does their evidence set forth your views?—Yes.

19,056. Is there anything you would like to add yourself?—I have nothing against what the rest said, or anything beyond what they stated.

19,057. I think we may take you as concurring.

DONALD CAMERON, Cottar, Duirinish (55). Donald Cameron.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

19,058. The Chairman.—You are a cottar; do you pay any rent?—Not a penny.

19,059. Have you any land?—No land.

19,060. Do you wish to get land?—Yes, either in Achnadarrach or in any other place that you might see proper to give me.

19,061. Do I understand that you would like a holding consisting of arable land and outrun, with the necessary buildings upon it?—Yes.

19,062. Would you be willing to pay a fair rent for all that?—Yes.

19,063. Could you do so?—Yes; if not, I would not ask for it.

19,064. How do you maintain yourself at present?—On day's wages.

19,065. And do you get pretty steady labour?—Sometimes, yes. I have now for half a year been working for Lord Middleton in Applecross.

19,066. Then this holding you would like to get, do you propose that it should be situated on Achnadarrach or Balmacara?—I would prefer Achnadarrach to be near the neighbours if you would see it proper to give it me. They were not bad to me, the township, and I would not like to be far from them.

19,067. Is your house situated on some other man's croft?—It is on the common land of the township.

19,068. And have you some stock on the common?—I have a cow.

19,069. Anything else?—No, unless a few bits of sheep here and there.

19,070. Are there any other cottars in Duirinish besides yourself?—Yes, there is another one here.

19,071. What is his name?—Duncan Matheson.

19,072. Are you stating Duncan Matheson's views as well as your own in this claim?—He is here and will speak for himself.

19,073. How long have you been living in this house at Duirinish?—Thirty-five years.

19,074. Where did you come from to Duirinish?—From the parish of Lochcarron.

19,075. Why did you leave Lochcarron?—Because I used to be at service in other places.

19,076. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do you think that cultivating a croft would be more profitable than getting weekly wages?—I am of opinion it would be better to have a croft than to be on day's labour; I am certain of it.

19,077. Do you mean you would like it better or that it would be more profitable?—I believe it would be better for me to have a bit than to be on day's pay.

19,078. Do you think you would have so much to live upon?—Yes, and more.

19,079. How do you think you would make the money out of the croft?—The croft would help and I would be working, as occasion offered, on day's labour.

19,080. You would still work, and cultivate the croft in your spare time?—Yes.

19,081. Mr Munro.—I suppose in your desire to have a croft, other considerations influence you besides those of mere money matters or profit?—I am of the opinion that a piece land would be better for me because I have a family.

19,082. I suppose you would consider yourself in a more independent position having a croft of your own than even earning daily wages?—Yes, I would not be in the reverence of anybody else.

19,083. Could you take and stock a croft?—Yes.

19,084. You could live upon it independently with the assistance of occasional wages earned for labour?—Yes, much better living than I have.

19,085. Are there many others in a similar position to yourself who desire to get crofts?—There is only one other like myself from the township that has come here, and I don't know in regard to the others. There is another one who was saying he would like it but he is from home.

19,086. Mr Sutherland.—Do the people of Duirinish ever ask you to pay any rent?—No, except for the cow.

19,087. But they allowed you to build your house, and to have your peats on the common without any demand to pay rent for them?—The house was built when I came to it.

19,088. But they allowed you to occupy it rent free?—They did not make any objection.

19,089. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I understood just now in answer to Mr Munro that you said you would be independent if you had a croft, but you told me that you would still have to work whether you had a croft or not. I want to know if you think you could live entirely by your croft without getting wages for work?—I am of opinion if I had a sufficiently large croft that it would keep me without recourse to other labour.

19,090. What would you call a sufficient croft?—About 6 acres arable and grazing for two cows. That would satisfy me.

19,091. Could you stock it yourself and pay rent for that?—Yes, I have it already.

19,092. And you think that would keep you and your family without getting work from outside?—Myself and family, of course, would work here and there in addition.

19,093. Do you want such a big one as that?—No, I don't want such a big one.

19,094. Then you still contemplate working for a weekly wage even if you had a croft?—Quite so.

19,095. So that so far as independence goes you would still be dependent on other people for labour?—Not to be in the reverence of others, not in the way of being free from labour, but that I would not be so much in the reverence of other people by having a croft for myself.

19,096. But you would still have to work?—Yes.

19,097. Mr Sutherland.—Have you got any idea whether it would be necessary for you to work outside if you had such a croft?—I have no experience, but I believe I would have to work here and there, and would be willing to do so although I had a croft.

19,098. But as a matter of fact, you have had no experience of working a croft of that size?—No, I never had a croft. My father and relatives had land, but I never myself had a croft.

19,099. Have you any security in your present home?—I don't know, but the township might evict me.

19,100. But if you had a croft such as you mentioned you contemplate that you would come under the Crofters Act and would have security in your home?—Yes.

19,101. And is it in that sense you mean independence?—Yes, that is the sense.

19,102. The Chairman.—What family have you?—Seven.

19,103. How many sons have you?—Four.

19,104. How old is the eldest?—Twenty-two years.

19,105. And the youngest?—Seven.

19,106. Are they all living with you?—No, they are here and there. Some are shepherding. Balmacara.

19,107. How many are at home?—Four. Donald Cameron.

19,108. How many of them go out to work?—Four of them are away at service.

19,109. How many of your sons go out to work?—Two.

19,110. And how many daughters are away from home?—Two daughters.

19,111. But they have no separate holdings of their own, your house is their home I suppose, when they are not away working?—Just at service.

19,112. Are you looking to get assistance from them in any holding that you might obtain?—I believe I would, and they are giving it to me at all events as it is.

DUNCAN GILLIES, Cottar, Conchra, Lochalsh (73)—examined. Duncan Gillies.

19,113. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

19,114. Are you a cottar?—Yes.

19,115. Do you pay any rent?—Well, I did not pay much rent yet. I only got a bit land last spring from the proprietor, from the rulers, Sir Henry.

19,116. How much land did you get last spring?—Half an acre. We have to pay for that.

19,117. Is there any rent fixed for it?—Yes.

19,118. What is the rent?—10s. I believe; that is what they said.

19,119. Do you wish to get more land?—Well, I wish to get as much as would keep a cow, that is all I want, although I would get it for nothing if it was possible to give me it near where I am stopping myself. I don't like to be removed out of my place; I am too old.

19,120. You don't wish to leave your holding?—No.

19,121. But you would like to get grazing for a cow?—Just that altogether, whatever.

19,122. You have no cow just now?—No, I have not one. I was twelve years keeping a cow on the place where I am, but there is eighteen years since I left it now.

19,123. How did you come to lose the cow that you had some years ago?—Well, the farmer asked too much, and I could not keep it.

19,124. You grazed upon Conchra farm?—Yes.

19,125. What did he ask for it?—£4. I could not get wintering for her.

19,126. And you had to give it up?—Yes, we had to give it up.

19,127. But you would be perfectly satisfied now if you had the grazing of a cow?—That is all I want if it be possible to give me it. We will not be long in this world now.

19,128. I hope you will be a good long time?—Oh no, sir, my time is wearing away.

19,129. I suppose there would be no difficulty; you are marching with Conchra farm, are you?—Oh yes.

19,130. You live on the farm?—Yes, I am living on the farm that I got that land from last spring.

19,131. Mr Sutherland.—What had you been doing before you came to Conchra farm?—Many a thing.

19,132. Have you been a labourer?—Yes, sometimes, working in everything that came in my way to keep me up.

19,133. And what place do you refer to that you had at one time?—Place?

19,134. Yes, you said that you were in some place before you came there, where you had a cow?—Yes, I was born in Kishorn, and I was brought up most of my day on the estate of Applecross. I was there for thirty years.

19,135. And you had to leave there?—Oh no, I don't like to leave it.

19,136. But Kishorn?—Oh yes, my father and all the family were brought up there, and my father took the farm at Applecross, removed from the place and went to Applecross.

19,137. And you came to Conchra?—Yes.

Balmacara.

Duncan Gillies

19,138. Had you no land at all before you got this half acre?—No.

19,139. What do you do with the half acre?—I only planted a few potatoes last spring on it.

19,140. And you have to pay 10s. a year for that, have you?—Ay, they are saying so; that is what I was told I would have to do.

19,141. And you are living on the farm of Conchra, are you?—Yes, I am just living at the roadside. Mr Watson there, knows where I am living.

19,142. Are there more people like you there?—No, not there.

19,143. Have you applied to the farmer, or to whoever the authority is, to give you more land than the half acre?—Oh, I must get more if I will get a cow.

19,144. Half an acre will not keep a cow?—Just to keep a cow.

19,145. How much more would you require?—Well, I am not well acquaint with that.

19,146. But don't you think yourself now, that they might give you the grazing of a cow for the 10s. as well as the half acre?—I don't think that; surely that is too cheap.

19,147. Do you know what the large farmers pay per acre for the land?—I don't know, I did not ask that.

19,148. Do you know that it is only a few pence?—Oh well, I daresay.

19,149. And don't you think you might get some land upon the same terms?—Oh, I don't think that.

19,150. You don't expect it?—No.

19,151. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I suppose when Mr Sutherland says a farmer pays a few pence per acre, he is not alluding to arable land?—That is the high land and the hill for cattle and sheep.

19,152. Mr Sutherland.—But it is a cow you wish?—Just a cow I wish to get.

Colin Mackenzie.

COLIN MACKENZIE, Cottar, Conchra, Lochalsh (60)—examined.

19,153. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Well, I am a kind of it; I got half an acre from Sir Henry.

19,154. You are a cottar?—Yes, but I was a farmer before.

19,155. Where?—At Ruarach, Kintail; my brother and myself were there.

19,156. What rent did you pay there?—About £160.

19,157. You and your brother paid a rent of £160 at Ruarach?—Yes.

19,158. When did you leave Ruarach?—About ten or twelve years ago.

19,159. What led you to leave Ruarach?—It was over-rented. It is just to-day about a third part of that. We lost our money there, and my brother died.

19,160. Were you under a lease for nineteen years?—Yes.

19,161. Your brother died, and you thought it over-rented, and you lost your money, and you came here; was that the way of it?—Yes, but I was born in Lochalsh myself, and my forefathers.

19,162. What is that place rented at now?—Well, I think it is about £60.

19,163. Mr Gordon.—It is more?—It is not much more.

19,164. The Chairman.—Under £100 at any rate?—Yes. [Sir Henry Macandrew.—£75.]

19,165. How much money did you lose in Ruarach? [Sir Henry Macandrew.—I might explain, my lord, he never was a tenant there].—It was better to us to throw a £1000 in Loch Duich the day we go there than to go.

19,166. Sir Henry says you were not a tenant; were you not a tenant there?—Well, I am not sure if my name was there, but I had the half share of it.

19,167. Whose name was in for it?—Well, I was thinking my own name was in it, but my brother was older than me, and he was going before me.

19,168. Then was your brother the tenant of it?—Yes, and me, I have the half share of it.

19,169. But your brother's name was the name in the books?—Well, they said that; I was thinking my own name was in it.

Balmacara.

Colin Mackenzie.

19,170. But you lived with your brother and helped him to pay the rent?—I was living there, and my brother was in Lochalsh keeping a shop, and we were paying the rent out of the shop, the place itself would not pay it at all.

19,171. Now you have got half an acre, and what is it you would like to get more?—Well, I can't pay, and if I would get a cow and about an acre that is near my house I would be glad of it.

19,172. An acre of arable?—Yes, it is just a place that would keep a small cow.

19,173. And a cow's grazing?—Yes.

19,174. That is all you desire is it?—Yes, but there are six or seven from Ardelve that got half an acre along with me there, and if you like better to give us the pasture out along with them I would be glad to join with them.

19,175. You mean to join with the people of Ardelve?—Yes, and there are other parks above the high road there.

19,176. On the farm of Conchra?—Yes.

19,177. But it is only one cow you are anxious about?—Yes, if you will give me that I will be glad of that.

19,178. I am not giving anything just now.—I am sorry I have not right English, but I can't help that.

19,179. Oh your English is very good?—There is plenty of arable land there above the road, about 200 acres above the road. There are old tracks there.

19,180. It would be very suitable?—Yes.

19,181. Mr Sutherland.—About the tenancy that you occupied before, have you any reason to suppose that you were a joint-tenant with your brother? Did you ever see any of the receipts for the rent paid?—Well, no, but when my brother married we not agreeing so well, and I went to Dingwall and got three papers there and every one of them cost a pound each.

19,182. And were you accepted by all these people as the tenant of the farm, but this is a point Sir Henry Macandrew could tell us; was he a joint-tenant? [Sir Henry Macandrew.—No, he never was.]

19,183. You kept the shop for your brother?—I had the half share of it.

19,184. That is the way your brother settled it between you, the profits of the shop and farm you settled between you, was that the way?—Yes.

19,185. Only you had losses more than profits?—Oh yes.

19,186. How many years were you there paying £160 of rent?—Eight or nine years.

19,187. And did you pay the full rent all that time?—The full rent, and my father and my mother were there, and I think it is about £6 that is on them of arrears since that time.

19,188. So you would pay £1280 in rent during that time?—Yes, during eight years.

19,189. And now you have half an acre of land?—Half an acre.

19,190. And what are you going to pay for it?—10s.

19,191. You say that you would like to join the Ardelve people?—If I would get the cow alone I would prefer it better as I am an old man.

19,192. And do you think the Ardelve tenants would have any objection to your joining them for common pasture?—No, they were speaking to me some of them about it, to take the pasture if they could get it above the road.

19,193. The Chairman.—What shop was it you mentioned that your brother had?—It was between myself and my brother.

19,194. Where was the shop?—Altnasuth.

19,195. And was it a grocery shop?—Yes, and clothing and everything.

19,196. A store?—Yes, and we made some money there.

19,197. It is still going on, is it, with somebody else?—Yes, my brother's widow is carrying it on.

19,198. But it was the shop that paid the rent when you were on the farm?—Yes.

Balmacara.

Margaret Macrae.

MARGARET MACRAE, Ardelve (74).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

19,199. The Chairman.—Where do you live?—On the shore of Ardelve.

19,200. Do you pay any rent?—No, but my father was paying rent.

19,201. And are you in the place your father occupied?—Yes, there were only other three in Ardelve when my father came to it, and the land is now occupied by another person.

19,202. Does anybody live with you?—A sister who has been bedridden for the last ten years.

19,203. What is it you wish to tell us regarding land?—I want a cow's grazing and a bit land to keep it in winter. I had some lately, but it was too far from me and I could not manage.

19,204. Have you given up that land?—Yes, I have a young beast that I expect to be a cow next year, and if I had not that, my nephew would give me what would buy one.

19,205. Where does your nephew live?—In Drumbuie.

19,206. Is all you wish to tell us that you would like a cow's grazing?—Yes, a cow's grazing and what would support her in winter and keep potatoes to her. If we got it out of our own land which is at the back of my house I would prefer it.

19,207. That is land that you formerly had in Ardelve?—Land that my father had at the back of my own house.

19,208. What is your nephew's name?—Farquhar Murchison, and another one George Murchison in Portineora.

19,209. And they help to support you?—Yes, the one that is unmarried.

19,210. What is his name?—The one called Farquhar. George has a very large family of his own.

19,211. That will do.—What I could manage myself, I don't want more. I appeared before Lord Napier when he was here and he said that when the land was divided I would get a share.

Donald Macrae.

DONALD MACRAE, Camuslongart, Lochalsh.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

19,212. The Chairman.—What is it you want?—I want a piece of Conchra.

19,213. Did you send in your name?—No.

19,214. What is your name?—Donald Macrae.

19,215. You pay no rent I suppose?—Yes.

19,216. What rent do you pay?—£2, 5s.

19,217. Are you a crofter?—Yes.

19,218. Was your croft dealt with by the Crofters Commission? [Sir Henry Macandrew.—They got an addition]. Did you get an addition?—We got a little bit, 9 acres 5 poles. We are 8 in the township, and that would support us.

19,219. What is it you want to tell us now?—Another piece which would be sufficient along with what we have to enable us to keep two cows each.

19,220. What is the name of your township?—Camuslongart.

19,221. You would be satisfied if you had grazing sufficient to enable you each to keep two cows?—Yes, and a little more arable land too.

19,222. How much more arable?—We would need two or three acres each additional.

19,223. Do you know where arable land could be got?—Quite easy, it is opposite us.

19,224. Is it on a farm?—Conchra.

19,225. Is it used at present as grazing, this land that you have in view?—Sometimes it will be cultivated and sometimes left under grass.

19,226. Is it under rotation of crops just now?—Some of it under crop and some under hay.

19,227. Do you know any other land besides that arable you are mentioning that would be suitable for the extension of your arable holding?—No, I don't know any other suitable land, unless the people were removed altogether out of the township; but if we get what we want we need not change. Balmacara.

19,228. You mean from the farm of Conchra?—Yes. Donald Macrae.

19,229. I think we understand your case.

Sir Henry Cockburn Macandrew.

SIR HENRY COCKBURN MACANDREW, Solicitor, Inverness, Commissioner for Sir Kenneth J. Matheson of Lochalsh—examined.

19,230. The Chairman.—I understand you are desirous of submitting a statement dealing with the Matheson estates in this district?—Yes, I have prepared a statement which I will read. It is as follows:—

With the exception of the minister's glebe and the land occupied by the Highland Railway, Sir Kenneth is proprietor of the whole parish of Lochalsh. The greater part of this parish was acquired by his father, the late Sir Alexander Matheson, from the representatives of the late Mr Lillingstone in 1851, along with the estate of Ellandonan in the parish of Kintail, for £120,000.

In 1861 Sir Alexander purchased Attadale, which is partly in the parish of Lochalsh, for £16,400; and in 1866 he purchased the estate of Edderacharron, in the parish of Lochcarron, for £25,412. In 1888 Sir Kenneth sold a portion of the Edderacharron estate to Lord Lovelace for £6000.

The earliest information I have as to the estate of Lochalsh is from the rental made up for the Commissioners on forfeited estates to which I alluded in my statement regarding Sir Kenneth's property in Kintail and Glenshiel. From this rental it appears that in 1827 the rent of the estate was £3583, 19s. 4d. Scots money or £298, 19s. 7d. sterling, with 34 wedders or muttons, 18 stones and 10 pounds of butter, and 36 stones of cheese. There were 33 separate holdings and 67 tenants. By 1756, consolidation of holdings and a rise of rent had taken place, for there were then only 17 holdings and 28 tenants, and the rent was £354, 6s. 2d. sterling. In the latter rental there is no mention of payments in kind. In 1798 the estate was offered for sale by the Seaforth family, and before 1801 it was purchased by the late Sir Hugh Innes. From a rental and particulars, prepared with a view to the sale, and dated in 1798, which has come into my hands, it appears that there were then 25 holdings and 115 tenants besides the tenant of the kelp shores, and that the rent, including £111, 12s. 8s. for the kelp shores, was £1299 1s. 2d. All the holdings were then let on lease, and the term of lease for the purely agricultural and pastoral subjects was nineteen years. In several of these leases there were breaks in favour of the proprietor. In these particulars Plock (now Plocktown) is described as occupied 'as a village and fast improving in its value and the 'number of its inhabitants and several good houses 'built and others now building.' By this time the policy of settling people in villages and in agricultural communities holding directly from the landlord had been adopted as exemplified in the case of Plocktown and of the following places, which appear in the rental of 1798 as township or joint tenancies, viz:—

Farm.	No. of Tenants.	Rent.

Balmacara. — Sir Henry Cockburn Macandrew.

All these holdings were let on lease for nineteen years, and from two of the leases which have come into my hands, it appears that the tenants, although having varying shares of the tenancy, were jointly liable for the rent. In 1821 the townships were as follows, viz. :—

Farm.	No. of Tenants.	Rents.

For Ardelve and Plocktown there were at this time separate rentals which have not come into my hands, but I see from an abstract that the rent of Plocktown was £161, 5s. 6d. and of Ardelve £136, 17s. 6d., but in neither case is the number of tenants given.

When Sir Alexander purchased the estates a re-valuation and a re-adjustment of holdings took place, and the rental for 1852–53 shows the township as follows, viz. :—

Farm.	No. of Tenants.	Rent.
		£	s.	d.
Upper Ardelve,	11	81	5	0
Lower Ardelve,	6	41	10	0
Cambuslongart,	9	29	11	0

Sallachy,	19	160	4	10
Plocktown tenants of land and grazings,	45	148	0	6
Total,	242	1211	16	4

It may be mentioned here that at the time of this re-adjustment one or two sheilings which still existed were taken from the farms to which they had previously been attached, and added to the sheep farms.

Except in four cases, one of them being the case of Inverinate referred to in my statement at Glenshiel, there have been no rises of rent in any crofter township, or single crofter tenancies, except in the form of interest on money spent on improvements since 1852. In the four cases mentioned, there were slight rises in 1879 on re-valuation and without immediate reference to expenditure, but in all these places there had been money expended before the rise of rent. Within a very few years the rents of the four places were reduced.

* Tenants all inhabitants of Plocktown.

Balmacara. — Sir Henry Cockburn Macandrew.

Kyle which in 1852-53 was let in two separate holdings to two tenants one of whom was the innkeeper and tenant of the ferry, has for a number of years been let in three holdings as follows :—(1) the inn and land and share of grazing attached to it ; (2) a pendicle called Plock of Kyle on which there is a good slated cottage, with 4½ acres of arable and a share, along with the tenant of the inn, of 95 acres of pasture land ; and (3) the remainder extending to 8 acres arable and 766 acres of pasture as a club farm to two tenants. One of these tenants died last year and his representatives have relinquished his share of the farm and this share is now in the proprietor's hands.

Ardelve when Sir Alexander purchased the estate, included what are now the townships of Upper Ardelve, Lower Ardelve, and Cambuslongart. There were on it 58 tenants, but with the exception of those represented by the present tenants and one or two others who were removed to other places these merely held plots of potato land and resided elsewhere. After his purchase Sir Alexander divided Ardelve into the three townships above mentioned and divided the arable land into lots as now held, with common pasture for cows attached to each lot. A sum of upwards of £500 was expended in reclaiming land principally I believe in Lower Ardelve. The tenants of Upper Ardelve and Alexander Macrae, merchant, Strome, who, although holding a lot in Lower Ardelve has a house and share of the common grazing in Upper Ardelve, applied to the Crofters Commissioners for a considerable portion of the farm of Conchra as an addition to their holding, but the application was refused on the ground that the granting of it would injure the letting value of the remainder of the farm. Subsequently, however, and in order to satisfy the tenants, Sir Kenneth offered to the two townships of Ardelve a portion of the farm extending to about 11 acres of arable and 644 of pasture. The Lower Ardelve tenants except Alexander Macrae declined to accept the offer and stated that all they wanted was additional grazing for their cows. Ultimately the offer was accepted by the upper Ardelve tenants and Alexander Macrae, but three of them have withdrawn on the ground that they were not able to pay their share of the stock, and the remaining four tenants of upper Ardelve and Alexander Macrae are now in possession of the land as a club sheep farm. They have taken over from Dr Duncan, the tenant of Conchra, a stock of over 400 sheep, for which they are to pay according to a valuation in the usual way. The rent is to be fixed by valuators. In order to meet the wish of the Lower Ardelve tenants Sir Kenneth has let to them a part of Conchra which they themselves pointed out, consisting of 5 acres of arable land and 27 acres pastures. They are now in possession and the rent is to be fixed by valuators. The tenants of Cambuslonguart applied to the Crofters Commission for one of the fields on Conchra as an addition to their holding. The Commissioners did not grant the application but awarded them another field extending to 9 acres which they now possess at the rent of £4 fixed by the Commission. They are not satisfied, but there is no other land available for them without destroying the farm of Conchra.

Advantage was taken of the re-letting of Conchra farm to give small pieces of arable land as grazing to two tenants in Camuslonguart and one in Ardelve who had no share of the common grazing of these townships, and to divide a field containing 8 acres arable into 15 allotments for the same number of cottars mostly resident in Dornie and Brindalloch who had no land before.

Aultnasuth was in 1727 held by two separate tenants and had one portion waste and in 1756 it was held by one tenant. Afterwards it was apparently united to Sallachy. In course of his possession Sir Hugh Innes formed Sallachy into a sheep farm, removing a number of the tenants to Altnasuth which was then formed into a township and has remained so ever since. The tenants applied to the Crofters Commission for an addition to their holding of a part of Conchra and the Commission awarded them a piece of grazing land extending to 83 acres and (with his own consent) appointed the proprietor to furnish materials for fencing it and the tenants to erect the fence. At the same time Mr Commissioner Macintyre advised that an additional piece of land should be given to these tenants on condition that they fenced it themselves. Sir Kenneth agreed to adopt the recommendation and it was found that the fencing material awarded by the Commission would by alteration of the line fence about half of the additional land. The fencing materials were supplied and lay on the beach at Aultnasuth for nearly a year, nothing being done by the tenants towards the erection of the fence. I remonstrated with them several times and at last they told me they would not erect the fence unless a small crofter who had been a sub-tenant of Dr Duncan, and so did not come under the Act, and whose croft was bounded on two sides by the land awarded to them by the commissioners, was removed. I declined to remove this man, and lodged a minute with the Commission complaining of the delay in erecting the fence. A few weeks ago they did begin to erect the fence; a skilled fencer was sent to assist them and the fence so far as the materials supplied by the proprietor would go has been erected. The rent of the land awarded by the Commission has not yet been fixed, and the rent of the portion given by the proprietor will be fixed by valuation.

In Sallachy there have been numerous variations in the state of possession, Achnabean which appears in the rentals of 1727, 1756 and 1798, as a separate holding was added to it before 1803. In 1803 it was possessed by three tenants, in 1823 by twenty-nine, in 1833 and 1843 by three, in 1852 by twenty-three, and on the rearrangement of holdings in 1852-53 the number was reduced to nineteen. In 1883 the farms of Nonach and Blackwater were out of lease and they were added to the farm of Sallachy except a small portion taken to form along with other lands two holdings in Attadale and a portion added to the farm of Achmore.

Kirkton seems to have been possessed by small tenants in varying numbers from 1727. In 1859 the old glebe of Lochalsh, which belongs to the estate in virtue of an excambion which took place in 1775, fell out of lease. It was added to Kirkton, which adjoins it, and the whole was divided into six shares and let to six tenants. Good slated cottages have been erected for all the tenants and three large and substantial barns each of which is occupied by two tenants were also erected; land was reclaimed and drainage executed. Altogether during Sir Alexander's and Sir Kenneth's possession £2926, 12s. 9d. have been expended on this holding. The rent, which in 1872 after the principal expenditure had been incurred was £180, was reduced by successive reductions to £115, 4s., and this was still further reduced by the Crofters Commission to £90; but the tenants are not satisfied, and have appealed. Part of the reclaimed land in this holding is, owing to the neglect of the tenants to clean out the drains and ditches, fast returning to swamp. It was in contemplation to give these tenants an additional piece of grazing adjoining their holding called Portmore, but until the appeal as to the rent is disposed of no decision on this point can be come to.

Achmore was possessed in 1852–53 by four tenants each paying £36. It is now possessed in three separate holdings, one possessed by one of the original tenants, paying a rent of £108, one by the descendant of another of the original tenants, who has a good slated house and steading, at a rent of £27, 4s., and one by a widow who has a good slated cottage and a small croft for which she pays £5, 8s.

The tenants of Kennamoine applied to the Crofters Commission for an extension of holding, claiming a considerable part of the portion of Conchra which was claimed by the Upper Ardelve tenants. Their request was not granted, but the Commissioners awarded to them a portion of an old enclosure called Nostie Park extending to 17 acres at a rent of £3, and of this they are now in possession

At the time he acquired the estate Sir Hugh Innes erected Plocktown into a burgh of barony, with a right to elect two bailies, and laid out ground for the erection of a considerable town. I exhibit the plan with report thereon by Mr Cumming, Land Surveyor. The sites were let on building leases for ninety-nine years I am not aware whether the right to elect bailies was ever exercised, but if it was it has long been in abeyance. For a time the town increased and prospered, and at one time there was a number of sailing vessels owned in it and sailed by the owners or other natives of the place, now there are only one or two of those vessels remaining, and the place is not improving. There are, however, a number of substantial and comfortable houses, and when the railway comes to it it may improve again. At the time the town was laid out, a considerable extent of ground was apportioned to it as cows' grazing and as allotments for the inhabitants, and for a time the farm of Lundie was let to the townspeople as grazing for cows and horses. At one time as many as sixty of the townspeople has either cows' grazing or allotments. When Sir Alexander built Duncraig Castle he resumed possession of Lundie, or part of it, and included it in the policies and home farm; and about the same time he spent a large sum (£1684, 14s. 11d.) in draining, fencing, and improving the portion of the land left to the townspeople. The number now holding allotments and cows' grazing is thirty-three and the number of cows grazed is forty-six. These holders of allotments and grazing did not come within the Crofters Act, in respect that they did not live on thei holdings; but the holdings were valued last year by Messrs Macrae and Adam, the assessors of the Crofters Commission, with the result that the rents were reduced from £110, 3s. 6d. to £87, 11s. Advantage was taken of the visit of these gentlemen to have a set of rules drawn up for the regulation and management of the common grazing about which there had previously been many disputes among the people. All the tenants of holdings have signed agreements binding themselves to abide by these rules and have elected managers in accordance with them.

In 1885, the small farm of Avernish which had previously been held by Mr Brown, Killilan, was relinquished by him and given as a common grazing to the tenants of Averinsh at the rent of £60 which had been paid by Mr Brown.

The estate of Attadale was as I have stated acquired by Sir Alexander in 1861, and I have no information as to the state of possession of it previous to that year, although I believe there were small tenants on it at one time. In 1861 the whole estate was in possession of one tenant as a sheep farm at a rent of £335. In 1883 it was out of lease, the tenants Messrs Weir & Kellie having been allowed to relinquish it along with Nonach and Blackwater which they also held, at their own request, made on the ground that the farms were causing them a heavy loss. They were allowed a year's possession rent free to enable them to clear off their stock. Part of the farm with a small part of Blackwater was divided into three holdings and let to three tenants, two of them having a club stock of sheep.

Out of the parts of the higher or wedder ground of this farm the Attadale Forest has been formed and it is now let along with Attadale House and the shooting over the holdings of the three tenants mentioned at a rent of £800. The remainder of the wedder ground was added to the afforested part of Killilan mentioned in my statement regarding the property in Kintail, and is now let to Lord Lovat at a rent of £740, Mr Winans being the sub-tenant.

When Sir Alexander acquired the Estate of Edderacharron it was held as follows:—(1) the township of Achintee by ten tenants; (2) the township of Arieneckaig by ten tenants; (3) the large sheep farm of New Kelso by one tenant; and (4) the blacksmith's croft by one tenant. Sir Alexander spent a great deal of money on this property. He reclaimed land at Achintee and divided the arable land of the township into five fields which are cultivated in rotation, and embanked burns and rivers. This is the third example of club farms given by Mr Mackenzie, the former Factor in his Report on club farms published in the Report of the Napier Commission. In the case of Arieneckaig the houses were all close together at one end of the farm, and the arable land was in detached patches. A considerable extent of land was trenched and reclaimed, and the arable land was divided into distinct holdings and fenced off from the hill ground. Seven new slated houses have been built for as many of the tenants; a road has been made from the Strathcarron Railway Station to the farthest end of the township, and other improvements effected. The proprietor spent in all in these two townships principally on Arieneckaig a sum of about £5000. The rent of Arieneckaig after the improvements was fixed at £131, 11s. 4d.

It was afterwards reduced by successive reductions to £102, 17s. and the Crofters Commission further reduced it to £101, 7s. Against this decision the tenants have appealed. The tenants of Achintee are under lease and renewed their lease last year. When the Highland Railway opened Sir Alexander Matheson built an hotel and a number of cottages near the station, and assigned small pieces of land to each.

I submit as an Appendix a tabulated statement of the holdings, rents, and number of tenants (exclusive of shooting rents and tenants, and feu-duties and ground rents) on these estates for the years 1852–53, 1862–63, 1872–73, and 1892 [for Appendix, see page 460] from which it appears that the number of tenants and rents in these years has been as follows:—

Years.	No. of Tenants.	Rents.
1852–3,	259	3406	16	4
1862–3,	262	3912	2	5
1872–3,	256	5155	16	4
1882–3,	268	4181	16	6
1892,	276	3119	9	4

With the exception of the grazing rents of the portions of land afforested, and the reduction of £160, 14s. 8d. made by the Crofters' Commission in cases finally disposed of the large reduction of rent since 1872–73 is due almost entirely to voluntary reductions by the proprietor. In these years the sporting rental was as follows:—

Years.	Rents.
1852–3,	...
1872–3,	750	0	0
1892,	3035	0	0

What I have hitherto stated refers to the estates in the parishes of Lochalsh and Lochcarron. What I have now to state refers to these estates and to the estates in Kintail and Glenshiel as well, the properties in all these parishes having been, since they were acquired, held and managed as one estate.

The following are the particulars of the townships on the estate at present, viz.:—

Township.	No. of Tenants.	Rents.
		£	s.	d.
Parish of Lochalsh.
Upper Ardelve,	9	40	3	0

Parish of Lochcarron.
Arieneckaig,	9	101	7	0
Achintee,	9	108	0	0

Of these the following are club farms having a common sheep stock managed by a committee or managers appointed by the tenants, viz.:—Upper Ardelve, Ardanarff, Craig, Kirkton, Kyle, Sallachy, Camuslunie, Carr and Wester Keppoch, Dornie, Bundalloch, Inverinate, Drudaig, Arieneckaig, Achintee. They vary in extent from about 6000 acres to 600. On most of these farms the arable land is held by the tenants in separate lots, each tenant farming his own land independently of the others, but in some of them a modified system of runrig prevails. In Achintee the arable land is divided into five regular shifts and cultivated in rotation. Each field is divided by furrows into nine equal shares (one for each tenant), and at the commencement of a rotation in each field lots are cast for the shares. The tenants retain their lots through the whole rotation until the hay is removed when the grazing becomes common. In Kirkton the arable land is in the same way divided into regular fields and cultivated in rotation, but each tenant has his share of each field permanently assigned to him. The sheep stock on the club farms varies, of course, with the extent. The largest common sheep stock is held by the tenants of Sallachy, Arineckaig, and Achintee, their number being about 1000, and the smallest by the tenants of Ardanarff whose number is about 200.

From the time of their acquisition until his death or shortly before it Sir Alexander spent on these estates the whole of the rental derived from them, and his successor although not able to do this has spent considerable sums. There has been expended on these estates since Sir Alexander purchased them a total sum of £257,169, 16s. 9d., and of this sum £27,150, 5s. 7d. was for improvements on the holdings of tenants paying under £30 of rent. These figures given above do not represent the whole expenditure on small holdings, for large sums were spent since 1883 in the purchase of building and fencing materials, and otherwise in connection with improvements which were not at the time, and cannot now be appropriated to particular subjects. In addition the value of estate grown wood supplied to tenants was not, until within the last two years, entered in the accounts. Large quantities of estate wood manufactured and unmanufactured were from time to time given to the small tenants. In addition to the money actually spent on the estates, Sir Alexander invested in the Dingwall and Skye Railway for the benefit of the estate £26,553. For this he got no return till 1882. In 1880 the line was amalgamated with the Highland Railway, and the shareholders got in exchange for their stock half the amount of Highland stock, carrying a dividend from 1882.

Since 1883 the expenditure has been as follows—

	£	s.	d.
On repairs and improvements for tenants over £30,	19,323	0	11
On repairs and improvements for tenants under £30,	5,324	0	7
On woods,	8,038	0	4
On preservation of game, expense of shootings,	6,817	9	5
Upkeep and improvements of mansion houses, gardens and grounds,	5,336	19	9
Upkeep and repairs of river embankments,	2,114	15	11
Sundries, principally building and fencing materials,	4,689	14	1
Total,	51,644	1	0

A very large proportion of this expenditure went as wages to persons resident in the district.

Last year Sir Kenneth's expenditure was as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
Rates, taxes and public burdens,	1816	19	6½
Maintenance and improvements,	1961	6	10
Preservation of game, &c.,	616	1	6
Woods,	701	1	5
Total,	5095	9	3½

Of the last three items about three-fourths consists of wages to residents on the estate.

There are on the estate 34 miles of roads made and maintained by the proprietor for the benefit of the estate.

The area of the estates let to tenants or occupied by the proprietor as home farm is as nearly as can be calculated as follows :—

	Arable.	Pasture, &c.
	Acres.	Acres.
Held by tenents paying over £30, and by proprietor,	972	51,066
Held by tenants paying under £30,	1505	34,655
Forests,	...	34,871
Total,	2477	120,592

The deer forests, as I have already stated, were formed out of the wedder ground of several of the large farms when wedder farming became unprofitable. At the prices for wool and the cost of the wintering of hoggs which have prevailed for a number of years, these forests could not be profitably occupied as grazings by either large or small farmers. There never were inhabitants in any of them.

It may be true that in the Glomach forest two or three small tenants might be placed at some particular place, but they could cultivate nothing but potatoes, and in a bad winter such as those which we have recently had when the deer have left the forests, they would have to remove their whole stock to lower ground or lose them, and the placing of them there would destroy the forest, causing a loss of the rent to the proprietor, of the rates on the rent to the parish and county, and throwing out of employment more persons than could be placed in holdings in the forest. The same may be said of the Attadale forest. The Killilan, Patt and Riochan forest is absolutely unfit for occupation by small or large tenants.

On the subject of deer forests I may state that the expenditure by the tenants on wages is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
Glomach Forest,	218	3	10
Killilan Forest,	150	0	0
Total,	768	3	10

It is an accident that Mr Winans has not for some time shot over the forests he rents, but a resident tenant would spend very much larger sums than he spends on wages, and would besides, as the tenant of Attadale does, spend largely in the district otherwise.

With reference to the grazing land occupied by the large farmers, I am satisfied that this land could not be profitably occupied by small tenants or by any tenants apart from the arable land attached to these farms. There may be patches of old arable land here and there through the grazing land, but nothing at all adequate to the profitable use of the grazing. The only farms on the estate, in excess of very moderate size, are Killilan, which extends to 18,000 acres, and Lienassie, which extends to 7,000. On Killilan there are only 43 acres of old arable apart from what is cultivated or used for cutting hay by the present tenant. But assume that the whole of this farm could be taken for small tenants, I invite the consideration of the Commission to the capital which would be required.

The witness Alexander Macrae, who was examined at Glenshiel, stated that this farm would accommodate twenty small tenants. To settle twenty tenants on the land the following expenditure would have to be incurred :—

	£	s.	d.
The price of say 7000 sheep, say at the very moderate estimate of 30s. per head,	10,500	0	0
One hundred head of cattle, at say £10,	1,000	0	0
Twenty horses at £10,	200	0	0
Cost of 20 houses at £150 each,	3,000	0	0
Cost of 20 small steadings at £100 each,	2,000	0	0

Something might be saved by utilising the houses of the present shepherds, and by evicting one or two pensioners of the tenants who have houses and potato land, but on the other hand the present farm house and buildings would become useless as not suitable for a small tenant. To accomplish the settlement of these twenty families, the following people at present employed on the farm would be displaced, viz.:—seven shepherds, one ploughman, one herd, one woman servant for out work, one domestic servant, in all eleven persons besides the tenant, and the small tenants and cottars in the neighbourhood would lose the sum of about £70 per annum which the tenants at present pays for extra labour. In the case of the farm of Lienassie the expense of settling the four tenants whom Mr Macrae mentioned it would maintain, would be in the same proportion, while the number of people displaced would be three shepherds, one ploughman, one general servant, two domestic servants, one female servant for out work, and one herd boy, in all nine persons besides the tenant, and the neighbourhood would lose the benefit of about £100 a year which the tenant spends in extra labour.

The population of the four parishes with which I have been dealing, so far as known from the Census returns and previous estimates, has been as follows :—

As I have said, the whole of the parish of Lochalsh belongs to Sir Kenneth Matheson, and the whole inhabited area of Kintail also does. There have been no evictions from these parishes except in the case of Avernish, where it has been said that Mr Lillingston removed a few tenants, and these have since been replaced. From what I have stated, it will be seen that there has been no contraction of the land held by small tenants, but on the contrary an increase of it, and notwithstanding since 1861 there has been a steady decline of population in Lochalsh and since 1841 in Kintail. The decrease is due to natural causes, and will in my belief continue. Within the last two years, during which I have had charge of the estates, four holdings have been relinquished by the tenants, and I expect from what I have learned and observed that within a few years a good many more will be relinquished.

So far as I have been able to observe, the small tenants on these estates are in a comparatively comfortable condition. As a class they have certainly participated as much in the increase in material comfort which has taken place during the last century as any other class; and during this century they have emerged from the semi-servile condition in which they lived under the old tacksman to the more independent position of tenants holding directly of the landlord for a fixed money rent. They are all well fed and well clothed, and the children in particular look bright and well nurtured. There is no poverty among them, at least nothing approaching to the poverty one is accustomed to in towns and even in some rural districts. There are in Lochalsh, no doubt, a number of paupers, but I think the poor law is administered with great leniency and there are no beggars. I have never been asked for charity in any part of these estates, and as compared with Inverness and its neighbourhood that is very remarkable experience. The poorest of the tenants has a fairly good house, land enough to graze two or three heads of cattle, to raise enough potatoes for the use of the family, and winter provender for his cattle, has fuel for the labour of cutting it and taking it home, and all this in very many cases for less rent than an artisan or labourer pays even in a town like Inverness for one bare room for his family.

The people are courteous, especially the older men, and pleasant to deal with. They are hardworking when they have work to do, and are ready to take work when it is to be got.

They could without doubt improve their own condition in many ways, as by better methods of cultivation, the cultivation of other vegetables than potatoes, better methods of preparing their manure, more care in the breeding of their sheep and cattle, more care in breeding and rearing poultry, by saving the price of one stirk out of tea and tobacco, and keeping at least one cow exclusively for milk for the family, by dispensing with superfluous dogs and keeping pigs instead of them, and in many other ways.

In his examination before Lord Napier's Commission the late Sir Alexander Matheson stated that he did not buy these estates as an investment for money or with the object of making money by them, but because the lands had once belonged to his ancestors, and because he desired to improve the condition of the people on them. It was with the latter object that a very great deal of the large expenditure which I have mentioned was incurred. His successor has no income but what is derived from the estates, and he cannot therefore spend so largely as his father did, but he has the most earnest desire to do all in his power to promote the welfare of his tenants, more especially of the smaller tenants, and he is spending and means to spend as far as he is able for that end.

On the whole, I respectfully submit that on these estates, at least, no case can be made out for exceptional legislation or for any interference by the legislature between the proprietor and his tenants.

(Signed) H. C. Macandrew,
Commissioner for Sir Kenneth Matheson.

19,231. How many residences has Sir Kenneth Matheson on his estates?—Inverinate, Duncraig, Balmacara house, which is let to a tenant, and Attadale. I am not dealing at all with the east coast estates.

19,232. You are confining your answer to the Lochalsh estates?—Entirely to the west coast estates.

19,233. Does Sir Kenneth occupy any of these?—He is not able to live in any of them at present.

19,234. But has he occupied any of them for a period of time since he succeeded to the property?—Well, he lived sometime here; he lived at Inverinate for some time, and at Duncraig for some time.

19,235. You mean for a few months, I suppose?—Yes.

19,236. But he has not been a residential proprietor since he succeeded?—No.

19,237. And have all these mansions been let?—Generally.

19,238. To sporting tenants?—Yes.

19,239. He is not living on his property at present?—No.

19,240. With regard to Conchra farm, can you tell me what is its extent, arable and grazing?—The total is 66 acres arable and 2752 acres—I am leaving out fractions—of hill pasture; of that the Crofters Commission assigned 9 acres arable and 100 acres of pasture, part of it being the enclosed field assigned to Camuslongart.

19,241. Is that the full extent of assignment by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. Then the proprietor himself has this year given off 26 acres of arable and 732 acres of pasture.

19,242. From the same farm?—From the same farm; leaving on the farm now 31 acres arable and 1919 acres pasture.

19,243. That is the total farm held by Dr Duncan at present?—Yes.

19,244. Under a new lease?—Under a new lease.

19,245. Which began, I suppose, recently?—At Whitsunday.

19,246. You came into the position of Commissioner about five years ago, was it?—No; the beginning of 1891.

19,247. Since that date how many applications for land from crofters or cottars have you received?—Well, I can hardly say, I had recieved none until the Crofters Commission came here.

19,248. But since that?—Well, there were Ceannamoine, and Ardelve, and Camuslongart and Altnasuth, four applications to the Crofters Commission. I cannot at this moment recall any application, except in the case of the Duirinish people, who want grazing for horses, and the people of this township.

19,249–50. You mean Avernish?—No, Kirkton, who applied for the flat land down below there; and the people in Avernish who asked for grazing for horses.

19,251. Leaving aside the applications to the Crofters Commission, so far as your recollection serves you there have been three applications to the estate?—That is all that I remember. [Mr Donald Macrae.—And Port-a'-chuilinn, the land was under lease]. Yes, Port-a'-chuilinn applied to the Commission.

19,252. There have been three applications to the estate apart from applications to the Commission?—Yes.

19,253. What has been done with these applications?—In the case of Duirinish they have got grazing for their horses, which was what they wanted on the farm of Achnadarrach, and I may mention also that that farm is being at present mostly laid down in grass for the express purpose of meeting the want that exists in the district for summer grazing.

19,254. Then with regard to the other two?—With regard to Kirkton, as I have said that is hanging in abeyance until the appeal is decided. With regard to the application by the Avernish people there is really no available land unless it is taken off the low ground of the farm of Auchtertyre.

19,255. You mean arable land?—Or low ground pasture, spring pasture. The only thing available is the moss land down below. I was very anxious to grant the request, but I have been told by the most experienced farmers that that could not be taken from the farm without serious injury to the letting value, as it is the only moss ground on it.

19,256. Your own personal desire was to advise its being granted if it could reasonably be done?—Certainly.

19,257. I should like to ask you this further question. Do any of the crofters on this part of Sir Kenneth Matheson's estates live by their holdings?—I think so. I don't know that there are any townships where some of the tenants don't go out as gillies or hire out their ponies, but so far as I know the tenants of this place we are on live on their holdings, and the tenants of all the bigger farms I believe do mainly.

19,258. But I suppose we may take it that the majority of the crofting tenants on the Lochalsh estates live partly by their holdings and partly by labour?—I believe that is the case in the smaller townships.

19,259. And do a considerable number of these make their living by fishing?—I believe some of them go away to the fishing for the season, the herring fishing, I don't know any of them that fish regularly for white fish all the year round.

19,260. You don't know any who do that?—No.

19,261. Can you say how many crofters or cottars get labour on the estate in ordinary years?—I cannot.

19,262. But do a number?—A number do, a large number.

19,263. There is no indisposition, I suppose, to give such labour?—Quite the reverse; always has been the reverse.

19,264. Was that the policy of the late Sir Alexander?—Yes, and I may say a great deal of money was spent for almost no other purpose than to give labour.

19,265. You mentioned that there were 34 miles of roads on the ground maintained by the proprietor?—Yes.

19,266. Is that maintenance through crofters' labour mainly?—Well, the leading man, the boss, is not a crofter, but all the other labour is from residents in the district.

19,267. Of the crofter class?—Yes.

19,268. What wages do you pay to men of the crofter or cottar class getting labour on the estate or on the roads?—From 2s. 6d. to 3s. 4d. per day.

19,269. Now you mentioned among other figures that there had been an expenditure of £27,000 by the late Sir Alexander upon holdings, or for the benefit of holdings not exceeding £30 of rent?—Yes.

19,270. What, may I ask, was the main purpose of that expenditure; was it on buildings or reclamation?—Buildings, reclamation, embanking, and so forth; and on fencing a very large amount.

19,271. Fencing for the benefit of the crofters?—For the benefit of the crofters. Of course I take these figures, up till 1883, from the returns given by my predecessor to Lord Napier's Commission. The accounts for that period have not come into my hands, but since then I made up the figures myself. A good deal was spent in building.

19,272. What sort of building?—Building new houses.

19,273. For the tenants?—Yes.

19,274. And was there a charge made of interest for such expenditure?—In some cases the charge was made, but it never lasted for more than two or three years.

19,275. Then there is no such charge running now?—No such charge running now. The rents are greatly below what they were before the expenditure was incurred.

19,276. May we take it that the whole of that £27,000 is money expended more or less directly for the benefit of holdings under a rent of £30, which expenditure is not at present yielding any return to the estate?—The holdings are yielding less rent than they did before the expenditure began.

19,277. You said, I think, that there were 34,000 acres of common hill grazing held by crofters, and 34,000 acres under deer?—Yes.

19,278. The two figures happen to coincide?—Yes, they do. I am sure about the correctness of the forest area and I will substantiate the other, but I believe it is correct.

19,279. As far as your materials at present enable you to say, there is the same area under crofters as under deer?—Yes; but, of course, I say that what is under deer is not suitable for crofters.

19,280. Yes, I quite understand. You make that clear enough in your statement. Then how many forests, what may be called separate forests, are there on the estates?—There is the Attadale forest; Patt, Riochan, or Killilan (it gets all three names), which is let to Lord Lovat and sublet to Mr Winans, and the Glomach forest, which is let direct to Mr Winans.

19,281. Glomach, Killilan and Attadale?—Yes.

19,282. In point of fact I think you mentioned that Mr Winans has not been on that forest for a number of years?—I believe he was never on it; he never shot on it at all events.

19,283. And how long has he had it?—About ten years.

19,284. And he has not been seen upon it?—No.

19,285. You made a remark in your paper with regard to the township of Altnasuth. I gathered from what you read that at one time a number of crofters had been added to it?—In Sir Hugh Innes's time,—I am talking from the evidence the tenants gave before the Crofters Commission,—the tenants were removed from Sallachy to Altnasuth.

19,286. Do you know how many?—There were nineteen, I think, in Sallachy at that time. In 1803 there were three tenants. In 1823 there were twenty-nine. In 1843 these came down to three again.

19,287. Before 1829 what was the figure?—Three. It was formed into a township by Sir Hugh Innes.

19,288. Did that introduction of additional tenants to Altnasuth take place without any addition of land to the township?—As I mentioned in my statement, at that time Altnasuth was included in Sallachy. Sir Hugh Innes took the greater part of Sallachy into his own hands as a sheep farm, and removed the tenants to other parts of the estate. A number of them settled at Altnasuth, which has continued a township ever since.

19,289. Those who settled in Altnasuth, I suppose, shared with the Altnasuth tenants the land they had; they did not get additional land?—No.

19,290. That, I suppose, produced some congestion in Altnasuth?—Probably; the word was not invented at that time.

19,291. Well, we will use it now. I mean to say it put into Altnasuth a greater number of small tenants than had been there before, without additional land?—It put on Sallachy, if you take them together. Sir

Balmacara. — Sir Henry Cockburn Macandrew.

Balmacara. — Sir Henry Cockburn Macandrew

Hugh Innes took the greater part of Sallachy grazing into his own farms and put the greater number of tenants into Altnasuth. Then a very few years after he gave up the sheep farm and brought back the tenants to Sallachy and made it into a township again. He did not bring back the old tenants; he brought people from other parts of the estate.

19,292. Then he did not relieve Altnasuth?—No.

19,293. Do you know if any change was made on the rents of the Altnasuth tenants when the Sallachy tenants were introduced to Altnasuth?—I could give that; I don't know at present. I know there was a large rise of rents in Sir Hugh Innes' time.

19,294. Which are the largest townships on this part of Sir Kenneth Matheson's estate?—Arineckaig, Sallachy, and Achantee. These have each a stock of somewhere about a thousand sheep and an area of about 6000 acres.

19,295. Mr Sutherland.—You speak, Sir Henry, with the full authority of the landlord here?—Yes.

19,296. And we can take your sentiments to be his on this point?—Yes.

19,297. Shall we have an opportunity of asking some questions on this statement at a future period? I mean to say will you be giving evidence before us with regard to the east coast estate?—If you go there, certainly.

19,298. You know that is a very large and important mass of figures to throw at us of a sudden?—I will certainly appear before you at any later time if you wish to put any question to me.

19,299. There are some of these statistics that I would like to understand the bearing of?—If at all possible I will appear at Lochcarron.

19,300. Your general opinion is that there is not on the Lochalsh estate land at present occupied as a deer forest or as grazing, which could be cultivated to profit or otherwise advantageously occupied by crofters or other small tenants?—I am quite sure there is no land in the deer forest that could be cultivated or occupied by small tenants.

19,301. Or on any of the grazing farms?—On any of the grazing farms. I am quite sure there is no land at present uncultivated that could be profitably cultivated.

19,302. You no doubt have seen the marks of old cultivation on certain lands?—I have seen that.

19,303. Are you of opinion that these were cultivated to profit when they were cultivated?—I am of opinion that they could not be cultivated to profit now, and that they were cultivated formerly merely in conjunction with bits of grazing. They are all very small patches.

19,304. But when you speak of profitable cultivation, to whose profit do you mean?—I don't understand.

19,305. Had you any other profit in your mind except the profit to the cultivator?—No, clearly not; but I mean they could not be cultivated as arable land alone to profit. It might be worth the while of a man who has grazing to cultivate a bit of land along with it, although the arable land itself was cultivated at a loss.

19,306. But as to the other alternative, what do you say 'or otherwise advantageously occupied?'—Well, I say, in my opinion, and from the best information I can get, and I have endeavoured to get it from the very best sources, the land in these deer forests could not be profitably occupied by itself, or as wedder ground, which is all that it is suited for, either by large or small tenants.

19,307. But taking it in the way in which it has been used in the olden times, concerning which evidence has been given here to-day, what is your opinion?—My opinion is that you could send cattle up there to grazing; no doubt about that.

19,308. And it would be to the advantage of the people?—It would depend on what they paid for it, but it would not be an advantageous occupation of the land. I say that more money goes into the hands of the people in the way it is used now than they could possibly get in that manner.

19,309. What do the Duirinish people profit by the land being a deer forest up there?—They don't profit; but gamekeepers and watchers profit, and they surely have as much right to live as the people in Duirinish.

19,310. But you surely understand,—take it that they held this grazing long ago and that they have been deprived of it without compensation?—I don't admit that at all. Balmacara. — Sir Henry Cockburn Macandrew

19,311. But I think the evidence was brought out here to-day that curtailment of their low pasture was almost contemporaneous with that afforestment?—The lands were valued when Sir Alexander took possession, and they got their holdings without this.

19,312. But what was the natural result to them?—I believe in some cases the rents were fixed as high as when they had these summer grazings, at least so they say. I have no special means of knowing.

19,313. But with regard to the advantage to the people down here, what advantage was there really, Sir Henry, in the whole transaction?—I did not say there was any advantage to the Duirinish people in not getting these grazings, but they would probably have had to pay a higher rent if they had been left with them. What I say is that as many people are supported and maintained by means of that land being let as deer forest as ever could be by any other way of using the land—there is more wages got I say out of it, more goes into the hands of the working people out of it than any advantage there could possibly be by the low townships being allowed to send their cattle up there.

19,314. But you recognise a man could be very comfortable although he got no wages?—I recognise a man could be very comfortable living on the interest of his capital.

19,314*a*. Or on the result of the cultivation of the soil?—Yes.

19,315. Do you still then maintain that the land up there is as profitably and advantageously occupied to the people as it could be?—Certainly, I would put it again. There are as many of the people supported by it as to more than counterbalance any advantage that would be given to the Duirinish people by getting it. And if the Duirinish people got it a great number of respectable people would be put out of employment.

19,316. Is it your statement that the land could not keep more people than we have seen while going through this deer forest?—I don't think we understand each other exactly. If you gave these shielings to the people in the townships lower down, undoubtedly there might be an advantage to them, if it is an advantage to anybody to have sheep grazings.

19,317. Yes.—But I say you would put out of employment a number of people who are earning very much more than the Duirinish or other crofters could earn by having these holdings as summer grazings.

19,318. That is to say that if these people were displaced, which they might not necessarily be if it were occupied as grazing, that would more than counterbalance the number of people who would be benefitted down here by getting it as grazing?—Yes, distinctly.

19,319. How many people occupied these townships when they had the benefit of them; can you tell me those who had this right of grazing?—About the same number as at present.

19,320. But there are townships mentioned that are not there now at all?—There are many townships now on the estate that were not there fifty years ago.

19,321. And there are places away that were there?—No.

19,322. Achnadarroch?—It was never a township.

19,323. It was mentioned here?—That is a mistake; it was occupied by father and son.

19,324. Then on Achmore, how many were there?—Four, and there are three now.

19,325. Tenants?—Yes.

19,326. Braintra, that is another place?—Well, there, there were several.

19,327. And had all these not right of grazing in the Monadh-Aillseach?—Some of them had, but that is not peculiar to this estate. It was once universal all over the Highlands, and it has been abandoned everywhere as an unprofitable and semi-civilised method of using land.

19,328. As unprofitable to the landlord?—And to the country generally.

Balmacara. — Sir Henry Cockburn Macandrew.

19,329. Well, if the landlord's interests and the country's are identical, what would follow?—Well, I should think they are.

19,330. But I understand,—you have stated, in fact, Sir Henry,—that you do not see that on this estate there is any necessity for any interference between the landlord and the tenant by legislation?—Most distinctly.

19,331. Do you say that with regard to the Crofters Act as well?—Yes.

19,332. You have stated that the people have advanced very much, and I was glad to hear that you were able to say so,—that they are keeping pace with the advancement of the country?—I think so.

19,333. Do you think any of that is due to the legislation of 1886?—Not a penny's worth of it.

19,334. Don't you think the people are more independent and self-respecting than they were before?—I don't know, I think it has hardly had time to have any effect of that kind.

19,335. I quite acknowledge that this estate is far before a number of estates in the Highlands, when I make that remark. We saw improvements, for instance, in other places in the houses; have you not noticed any improvement in general in the country in the housing of the people since 1886?—Well, a good many houses have been built here. I have seen fewer improved houses than I expected to find when I came here, but I believe in every case Sir Alexander was willing to assist largely anybody who wanted to improve their house, and Sir Kenneth is now.

19,336. I have no doubt of that; in fact, I was always given to believe that; but the case is general, isn't it, all over the Highlands to your knowledge that the houses are improving in consequence of that legislation?—Of the legislation, do you mean the Crofters Act?

19,337. Yes.—I am not aware of it.

19,338. Then with regard to the population; the population here has varied considerably?—Yes.

19,339. There have been variations in the population and in the area of land at their disposal?—Yes, that quite negatives your idea of an ancient inalienable right.

19,340. But there is a time beyond that. This is from the report of Lord Napier's Commission. 'The 'processes by which the comminution of crofters' 'holdings and the displacement of the people were 'effected are too familiar to require detailed description. 'The reduction or withdrawal of common pasture, the 'diminution of arable ground, the obliteration of 'townships, and the transfer of the inhabitants to the 'moor, the shore, or the cultivated area of other 'communities, were the methods by which a revolution 'in the rural economy of the country was effected.' (Vol. V., p. 16.)

19,341. Does that apply to any extent, may I ask, to this estate?—To no extent at all.

19,342. This is the exception?—I don't know that it is the only exception, but that certainly does not apply to this estate. The area occupied by small tenants has been extended.

19,343. Yes; it has at any rate been changed?—Extended.

19,344. So that this does not cover the case?—It does not apply to this estate in the least, and when you come to Ardross I will show you that the very reverse applies very strongly.

19,345. Well, we have heard to-day of holdings of half an acre?—Yes.

19,346. And any credit that is due in regard to that is certainly due to you, Sir Henry. I am quite willing to admit that, but at any rate it came under your administration?—It is due to Sir Kenneth, and I may just as well explain how that happened. Ever since I came here a few people in Bundalloch have been asking me to get this particular field where Dr Duncan sometimes gave them leave to plant potatoes, and when the farm came out of lease I put it to Sir Kenneth that it would be a good opportunity of granting their request, and it was divided into 15 half-acre lots for these people; the proprietor has fenced it at a very considerable expense; it is all arable land and they have got the lots at 10s. apiece, which would perhaps not much more than pay for the fencing of it.

Balmacara. — Sir Henry Cockburn Macandrew.

19,347. There were fifteen shares, did you say, Sir Henry?—Yes.

19,348. Seven and a half acres?—No, there is a little more than half an acre in each, I believe there are about eight acres.

19,349. But bearing upon the question of the distribution of the land, here we have got seven families—I presume, or fifteen families—who have got 7½ acres; and on the other hand we have got this huge accumulation of how many thousands of acres of deer forest let to one?—They could not get potato land in a deer forest. You must take it this way, that fifteen families who had no potato land before have got it now, with the usual result that some of them now want a cow as well. [The Chairman.—Which is natural.]

19,350. A very natural desire?—And one that I would most earnestly desire to grant if possible.

19,351. That has been put already to you, I think, by his lordship. Would there not be a desire to reduce those extremely large holdings to the benefit of those who have only half an acre?—You cannot break up a big farm to give a dozen people a cow's grazing.

19,352. But, as a matter of fact, have not large farms been broken up frequently?—Yes.

19,353. And have not the same arguments been used before to prevent them?—None have been broken up to give ten or twelve people grazing for one cow.

19,354. Have you ever seen a large farm broken up, that there were not the same arguments used against it?—Which argument?

19,355. The argument that it would not benefit them to the amount that it would destroy the benefit of the public?—I daresay it has been used, and I daresay it was true in very many cases. You would not recommend Sir Kenneth to spoil the farm of Conchra in order to give cow's grass to two people?

19,356. If you ask my opinion I think it would be very much to his advantage to do so; but don't you think there is too great a discrepancy between the size of the holdings, one man having a deer forest of several thousand acres, and the other man having only one half-acre to maintain a family?—No more discrepancy than between one man having a million of money and another having only £50. Such differences exist in the whole universe.

19,357. But not with regard to land?—Land is only one form of property, and all over the universe land is in the hands of few.

19,358. But you know that you can multiply money indefinitely, but you cannot multiply land?—I know that that is a stock argument.

19,359. But is it a right argument?—I don't think it. I don't think there is any inherent right in anybody born on land to live by it any more than in any other way.

19,360. What other way can he live except by land?—Take the case of a professional man: you cannot multiply the number of legal practitioners who can make a living.

19,361. I hope not?—Employment for legal practitioners is just as limited as land. I could not make my son a legal practitioner, and so he went abroad. I don't see why a crofter in Lochalsh should have a right to have his son settled beside him any more than I have.

19,362. Then I wish to ask you a question. I don't know what you wished us to infer from the facts you stated regarding the village of Plockton. Was it that it did not succeed as well as was expected of it?—Well, I gave you the account of it as a matter of history; it was prosperous at one time, and I say there was a large number of ships there, but wooden ships have gone out of fashion.

19,363. So that there are other causes at work which no doubt quite account for changes such as you have indicated and in fact a good deal of the trade went by rail?—Plockton was never intended to be a place to live by agriculture or by grazing at all. It was intended for a commercial town.

Balmacara.

Sir Henry Cockburn Macandrew.

19,364. One other point; you said that a large sum, I forget it at the present moment, was expended upon small holdings?—Yes.

19,365. And that interest was added to the rent?—In some cases.

19,366. Not in all cases?—No.

19,367. But generally was it added to the rent?—Only I think where there had been very considerable expenditure.

19,368. And then you said that the rent was subsequently reduced?—All the interest disappeared before my time, the charges of interest on the tenants had all been wiped off long before I became factor.

19,369. Were they separately stated in the estate books and separately rendered?—Sometimes they were. I have seen the books where they were so stated.

19,370. But were they in all cases, or were they ever embodied in the rent? [Mr Watson.—In some of the cases it was embraced in the lease, the lease mentioned it.]

19,371. And did the interest terminate? Was a period specified in the lease at which the interest terminated?—Oh no, that is the idea people here have that when they have paid 5 per cent. for twenty years the thing should stop.

19,372. But what I want to know is, did the reduction come off the rent or off the interest?—Well, in some cases I know that the interest was first taken off.

19,373. Was that at the time of a reduction of rent?—I can't tell you.

19,374. It would be perfectly easy to transpose the charges you know?—There is no case where a separate charge of interest was made and the interest taken off and added to the rent; there is no case of that kind. Where the interest was taken off it was taken off as a reduction from the payment.

19,375. But there were some reductions of rent made by the Crofters Commission?—Yes, £160 odds.

19,376. Would it not have been stated to the Crofters Commission that such and such was on account of interest, and such and such on account of rent?—There was no separate charge of interest made against any tenant at that time.

19,377. Was it because it was wiped out or because it was merged in the rental?—Because it was wiped out.

19,378. As interest?—As interest or as an increase of rent. Sir Kenneth and his father made several reductions of rent, and in one year, 1886 I think it was, there was a reduction over the whole of the estates of 20 per cent.

19,379. But are you prepared to state that in every case where there was interest upon money spent upon improving the land, that was taken off first before there was any reduction of rent?—Yes.

19,380. Mr Munro.—Could you give us any idea what the population of the west coast properties was when Sir Alexander acquired them?—That will appear in the Census returns; there was a Census in 1851.

19,381. But can you tell us whether the population has much decreased or increased?—In 1851 the population of Lochalsh was 2299 and it is now 1851. Kintail was 1009 and it is now 588. Glenshiel was 573 and it is now 394. Lochcarron was 1612 and it is now 1390. Sir Kenneth's property is not a considerable proportion of either of the parishes of Glenshiel or Lochcarron.

19,382. So that the population of these estates has very considerably decreased since Sir Alexander acquired them?—Yes, since 1851, but it increased for a time.

19,383. You yourself describe the tenantry on these properties as courteous and industrious?—Hardworking, if you can distinguish that from industrious.

19,384. Don't you consider it a great loss to the community to lose such a class of people?—No doubt it is, but if the condition of these people is improved by going elsewhere that is a gain to the community somewhere else and a gain to the people themselves.

19,385. But do you really think there is no possibility of conceding land to these people in response to their several applications on the properties?—Well, if one felt quite sure that anything that was conceded would not be taken from the landlord by some future legislation there would be less hesitation about giving it.

Balmacara.

Sir Henry Cockburn Macandrew.

19,386. You have not much confidence in the future, I see?—No. Some legislators have very advanced opinions.

19,387. You stated that Sir Alexander expended £257,000 on the Lochalsh estates since he acquired them?—Yes.

19,388. Might I ask of you what proportion of that large sum was expended upon mansion houses, and the making of roads to mansion houses, and other amenities?—A very large sum was expended on Duncraig, about £70,000 I believe. Mr Watson says £90,000, but the return made to Lord Napier's Commission was £69,000. I think. Might I add, with reference to that, that a very large amount of that went in labour on the estate.

19,389. I think I heard you state that you expended £25,000 upon the crofters' holdings?—£27,000.

19,390. Mr Gordon.—With reference to this occupation of this forest land as cattle or sheep grazing, you are well acquainted with the present condition of the Highlands as to sheep stock?—Well, I have lived in the Highlands all my life.

19,391. It is an important thing that this should be clearly brought out. Is it not a fact that in these cases or in a good many other cases that higher ground was principally under wedders and was abandoned by the tenants of their own free will and accord?—Yes.

19,392. What was the reason?—In the case of Killilan and Lienassie, the places were out of lease and the tenants both willingly gave up the wedder ground.

19,393. In consequence of what?—Because wedder farming did not pay.

19,394. And even supposing that they were going up to occupy these lands, they could only occupy them with a smaller or more inferior class of Highland cattle?—I believe, and I have heard that on one occasion the cattle were left in a summer sheiling all winter, and they died.

19,395. But even suppose they lived, the improvement of these animals for the summer grazing up there would be extremely small?—Very small indeed.

19,396. And in all probability would entail loss rather than profit to those that sent them up?—Well, unless in a very good year, it would entail loss; they had better sell their cattle before they go up there. There has not been a beast sold in Lochalsh this year that has not been a serious loss to the owner of it.

19,397. Then you think it would be better for them to keep fewer and keep them better and sell them earlier?—Yes, and to kill some of their calves and use more milk.

19,398. Mr Donald Macrae.—Could Sir Henry Macandrew mention any crofting township that threw up their hill-grazing voluntarily?—It was long before my time; it was forty years ago. I don't know anything about it.

19,399. But you are not aware of any township having thrown up their hill-grazing?—I am not aware of anything, but the fact that about the time that Sir Alexander succeeded, the summer sheilings ceased to be occupied by the low farms.

19,400. Then there is just one point I should like to have the privilege of asking Sir Henry a question about. Is it about the crofting township of Port-a'-chuilinn. Sir Henry knows the township well. The question of rent and of arrears, and extras I think was settled by voluntary arrangement two years ago?—Yes.

19,401. Sir Henry is aware that these crofters applied for an extension of holding from the big farm of Fernaig?—Yes, but they applied for the farm steading and house.

19,402. Is Sir Henry not aware that in their application, or in pursuit of their application, they defined lands that they applied for 'or any other lands' subject to modification according to circumstances?—I have no doubt that is the case; I don't remember, but I have no doubt it is.

19,403. Is it not the fact that the Crofters Commission had to reject that application solely and entirely on the ground that the land was under lease?—Well it was under lease, and I have no doubt that was the ground. [The Chairman.—Entered into before?]

19,404. No, a lease current at the passing of the Act. Does my memory serve me rightly if I say that Sir Henry on that occasion did approach the tenant with the view to induce him to allow Sir Kenneth Matheson to give the people an addition at the time?—I did speak to him about it, I know.

19,405. And wrote a letter, and he wrote a letter back, the tenant, that he would not consent?—I don't recollect that, but if you do I am quite willing to take it from you that that is so. I know I did either speak to him or write to him.

19,406. Since then Sir Henry is aware that there is a prospect of the Highland Railway being extended through this township in such a way as to deprive these people of their arable holdings?—I am afraid it will trench on their arable holdings, but I have seen the engineer twice about it, and he has promised to avoid the arable land as much as possible.

19,407. But even as it is Sir Henry admits that their holdings are too small?—If the tenants are going to attempt to live by their holdings most distinctly. They cannot live by these holdings; they must have other employment, and if it is desirable that every man born in the parish should live by crofting in it, they are not big enough, but one of them might suit the gentleman here who wanted a small croft as an assistance to his labour.

19,408. Would Sir Henry consider the case of these people when the lease of Fernaig expired?—I have no doubt that Sir Kenneth will consider that most anxiously, particularly with reference to the injury that is likely to be done to them by the railway. Of course they will get compensation for that.

19,409. It is nothing compared to the damage done to them. Does Sir Henry know the farm of Braintra?—Yes.

19,410. It was occupied by a number of small tenants at one time, in the beginning of this century?—Yes, it appears in some of the rentals, I know, as occupied by several tenants, I know there was a number of tenants at one time.

19,411. What was the rent twelve years ago when the Macraes had it?—I don't remember but Mr Watson says £160.

19,412. What is the present rent?—£95, but I may state that it has been largely reduced. It is a lease that has only run for eight or nine years.

19,413. Reduced in what respect?—It was let at £160, with interest on the expenditure, and it has been reduced.

19,414. How much money was expended?—I cannot tell you at this moment.

19,415. Were there not thousands expended in reclaiming land?—Over £2000.

19,416. And yet a farm that my clansmen, the Macraes, were charged £160 for without any expenditure, was reduced to a stranger down to £90 after an expenditure of over £2000?—But you must recollect that a very serious change of circumstances occurred in the interval; and also I may state that I think the rent was unduly reduced.

19,417. Does not Sir Henry consider that farm a very suitable one in view of the fact as we all hope that the railway will extend to Kyleakin. Does he not consider that a very suitable place for division into smaller holdings for the Port-a'-chuilinn crofters?—Braintra is most decidedly the farm that is most easily adapted to small holdings on the estate.

19,418. And I may be allowed to take it that Sir Henry will act as a good faithful interceder on behalf of my countrymen?—I will make no promises.

19,419. I know Sir Henry is always fully better than his promises.

19,420. The Chairman.—Was the stoppage of interest for expenditure on small holdings made by the estate prior to the crofters holdings being dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Oh yes, long before.

19,421. Then was not this the fact, that when the Crofters Commission were here, the expenditure by the proprietor was stated as an element to be considered in fixing the fair rent?—Well, the statements that we laid before the Commission were not prepared by me, but in most cases it was stated in the paper that was laid before the Commission what the expenditure had been.

19,422. Suppose it to be the fact that that expenditure was laid before us as an element to be considered in fixing the fair rent, would you say now that that was an erroneous statement in so far as it included interest?—I would say that it never occurred to me that it would influence the mind of the Commissioners. I understood that they were to go to each holding and examine the subject and form their own opinion of what it was worth as it stood.

19,423. Quite; but you remember, of course, that the expenditure on the estate was one of the things submitted to the Commission on behalf of the estate?—Yes.

19,424. Then was there expenditure submitted to the Crofters Commission on behalf of the estate which had ceased a considerable time before the Commission were here?—Expenditure on which interest had ceased. All interest laid on directly as interest on the rents had been wiped off before the Crofters Commission came here at all.

19,425. And yet was not that expenditure mentioned as an element to be considered by the Commission?—It was mentioned in these papers, but as I say, it never occurred to my mind that it would be used as an element in fixing the fair rents, because, as I say, I understood the Commissioners were going there to judge for themselves and examine the subjects and see what they were worth as they stood. [Mr Watson.—Subject to what the landlord had contributed to making them in that state, and also to what the tenant had contributed to making them in that state]. It never occurred to me, and I never put it to the Commissioners, that they should fix the rent any higher or lower than a holding was worth because money had been spent on it. They, of course, had to consider whether the holdings had been put into the condition in which they saw them by the proprietor, or by the tenant or his predecessors.

[Adjourned].

TWENTIETH SITTING.

LOCHCARRON, July 28, 1893.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
HENRY MUNRO, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

RODERICK MACKENZIE, Retired Farmer, Strathcarron (58)—examined.

19,426. The Chairman.—You are described as a retired farmer; have you a croft now?—I have a house and a little park,—about an acre or an acre and a half.

19,427. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No, I was not in the country.

19,428. What rent do you pay?—I paid £8, 10s. between the house and the little park.

19,429. And is that what you are paying at present?—Yes, besides road money and taxes.

19,430. You have an acre and a half of arable land?—Well, I cannot be quite sure, but I think it is an acre or an acre and a half.

19,431. And you have some grazing, I suppose?—No, only the park itself, that is all.

19,432. What estate are you on?—The estate of Sir Kenneth Matheson.

19,433. Do you know the lands hereabout very well?—Yes.

19,434. You had a farm at one time?—Yes.

19,435. Where was it?—In Kintail; and I was also one of the club farmers at Achantee, Lochcarron. I left there in the year 1877.

19,436. And what rent did you pay when you were in the club farm?—We paid £21 each.

19,437. What extent of ground had you?—I cannot tell you that.

19,438. It was a sheep grazing?—Sheep grazing and arable land.

19,439. And had you sheilings?—Yes, but they gave up sheilings about forty years ago; but the sheep were under one mark, a club farm mark.

19,440. How many were in the club farm?—We were ten. We were only eight at first, but there was a township in Achnashellach evicted, and two came from Achnashellach.

19,441. And made ten?—And made ten; we had been only eight at first.

19,442. It was eight, and it became ten; was that the way of it?—Yes, the two came down in the year 1863.

19,443. And had each of these crofters separate holdings?—Yes, they had the houses, and the arable land was rig-about.

19,444. The arable land was rig-about, and the grazing?—Yes, the grazing was in partnership.

19,445. Just tell us the locality of this township.—It is situated just at the head of the loch.

19,446. Which loch?—Loch Carron on the south side, marching with Lochalsh estate. [Mr Watson.—It is just at the Strathcarron Railway Station]. The south side of the railway.

19,447. What was the name of the township?—Achantee.

19,448. How is that land of Achantee occupied now?—It is occupied by nine tenants.

19,449. Can you mention the names of any old townships in that locality that are now obliterated?—Yes.

19,450. Would you just give us their names?—Coulin.

19,451. How many tenants were in Coulin?—Four, in the year 1818.

19,452. Where was that place exactly; was it near Achantee?—No, it is about 14 miles from Achantee.

19,453. In what direction?—North.

19,454. And on whose estate?—The proprietor is Mr Dalgleish, I think.

19,455. Is that Mr Scott Dalgleish?—Mr William Ogilvie Dalgleish.

19,456. Now the next township?—Craig.

19,457. How many tenants were in it?—Six.

19,458. In what year?—They were evicted in the year 1818.

19,459. Is that on the same estate?—No, it is on the estate of Lord Wimborne.

19,460. What is the name of that estate?—Achnashellach.

19,461. And are the remains of houses to be seen there?—Yes.

19,462. Both at Coulin and at Craig?—Yes. There are the remains of one house there which was my father's house. The next place again is Easter Corrievanie.

19,463. How many tenants were there?—Two.

19,464. And whose estate is that on?—Lord Wimborne's.

19,465. Are the remains of old houses there?—Yes, they took all these townships for banking up the river, and such like.

19,466. When did it cease to be a township?—This place was evicted in the year 1818 also.

19,467. That is before your recollection?—Yes, but my father was still in it.

19,468. He is now dead?—Yes.

19,469. When did he die?—He died in the year 1864.

19,470. Give us the name of the next township.—Wester Corrievanie.

19,471. That is close to Easter Corrievanie?—Yes, there is only the burn coming down between them.

19,472. And how many tenants were there?—Two.

19,473. Was that also on Lord Wimborne's property?—Yes.

19,474. Did it cease to be a township about the same time, 1818?—Yes, they were evicted at the same time.

19,475. Was that with a view to the formation of sheep farms?—Yes.

19,476. How old was your father when he died in 1864?—He was 89.

19,477. Was he born in one of these townships?—He was born at Craig.

19,478. And you were born at Craig too, I suppose?—No, I was born at Achantee.

19,479. What is the name of the next township?—Coire-Liridh.

19,480. How many tenants were there?—Two.

19,481. Is that on Lord Wimborne's property?—Yes.

19,482. And was there a removal there about the same time?—Yes, all these were removed about the same time.

19,483. Are there any more?—Lair.

19,484. How many tenants were there?—Three.

19,485. Were they removed at the same time?—No, these were removed before that time.

19,486. And is the landlord Lord Wimborne?—Yes.

19,487. Did your father tell you the date of the removal in that case?—No.

19,488. But it was before 1818?—Yes.

19,489. That land is now under sheep grazing, I suppose?—No, it is under deer, every inch of it.

19,490. The whole of these townships?—Yes.

19,491. The whole of Lord Wimborne's property that we have been hearing about is under deer?—Yes, except two townships up here; they had the low ground and a piece of the grazing above the road, but they lost the hill grazing they had.

19,492. What is the name of the next township?—Tullochanan.

19,493. How many were there?—Five.

Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

19,494. Is that still in Achnashellach?—Yes.

19,495. Were there any removals there?—Yes, they were removed in the same year.

19,496. What year is that?—That is more than I can tell you, but they were there in the year 1756.

19,497. And I suppose we may take it they were removed before the year 1818?—Yes, that is quite true.

19,498. And that land is under deer?—Yes. There is another place here, the Change-house; it is an old inn.

10,499. How many tenants were there?—One.

19,500. And was he removed?—Yes, he was removed in the year 1818.

19,501. That is Lord Wimborne's, is it?—Yes.

19,502. Now there are other two townships here?—Yes, Coulags and Balnacra. They had a piece of the grazings.

19,503. How many tenants were there in Coulags?—Six.

19,504. And how many in Balnacra?—Six, I think, or seven; I believe it was six.

19,505. Is that on Lord Wimborne's estate?—Yes, and the grazing they had at Achnashellach.

19,506. Can you tell us the dates of the removals from these places, Coulags and Balnacra?—They are in the same place yet, only they lost this grazing in the year 1818 when the other tenants were evicted.

19,507. And the grazing is now under deer?—Yes.

19,508. Can you give us any idea of the extent of grazing these tenants lost?—That is more than I can tell; a person could not get near these to measure them.

19,509. Any other townships?—About here?

19,510. About the place you are now describing?—After that New Kelso or Edderacharron.

19,511. Were there any tenants there?—Yes.

19,512. How many?—There were in the year 1756 four tenants there.

19,513. Were these tenants removed?—Yes, two of them were removed, and the other two got the place to themselves altogether.

19,514. Are their successors there now?—No.

19,515. Well, what has become of the lands that belonged to the other two who were not removed?—It is made under one farm.

19,516. Then they were removed at some date?—Yes, but I cannot give you the particular date. They were there in 1756.

19,517. You have told us that there were four tenants there in 1756; two of these you say were removed, but you have not accounted for the other two?—The other two took the whole farm to themselves.

19,518. What ultimately became of them? Are their successors there now?—No, there are other tenants; it is only one tenant to-day.

19,519. What is his name?—Norman Reid.

19,520. And what rent does he pay?—I am not sure what he pays.

19,521. Does he pay over £30?—He pays nearly £200.

19,522. Is that on Lord Wimborne's estate?—No, but on Sir Kenneth Matheson's estate.

19,523. What is the name of that part of the estate?—They call it the Strathcarron estate.

19,524. The Strathcarron portion of the Matheson estate?—Yes.

19,525. Now can you give us the names of any others?—Well, Attadale again, there were thirty-five there paying rent in the year 1837.

19,526. Was that a township?—Yes, the proprietor was stopping there, the grandfather of the present Sir Kenneth.

19,527. It is not about the proprietor I am asking. What I want to know is were there small tenants in Attadale at one time?—Yes, there were thirty-five in the year 1837; they were evicted in the year 1838.

19,528. By whom?—By Macbarnet, who was proprietor at the time.

19,529. They were all tenants of the crofter class?—Yes, besides cottars.

19,530. Were there cottars in addition to the thirty-five?—Yes.

Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

19,531. How many cottars?—There were sixty altogether, thirty-five paying rent and the rest cottars.

19,532. Twenty-five cottars who paid no rent?—Yes.

19,533. And the whole of these persons, thirty-five crofters paying rent, and twenty-five cottars were removed?—Yes.

19,534. In 1838, by a man called Macbarnet?—Yes, he was the proprietor; and the tenant who came in, the sheep farmer, was Peter Mitchell.

19,535. All that land was turned into a sheep farm?—Yes, every inch of it.

19,536. Did Peter Mitchell get the whole of the land?—Yes, arable and grazing.

19,537. And what rent was he asked to pay?—He came to value the place; Macbarnet was a man from Badenoch, who made his money in India, and he bought this estate from Macleod of Raasay. This Mitchell had a farm in Badenoch, and he took Mitchell to value the land, and he valued the land at £600 yearly rent. Macbarnet asked him would he take the farm himself at that rent, and he said he would; but it never paid him. He got it down at last to £400.

19,538. Mitchell became the farmer in those lands previously occupied by sixty tenants?—Thirty-five tenants, the rest were cottars.

19,539. Well, thirty-five tenants at the rent of £600, afterwards reduced to £400?—Yes.

19,540. And what became of him afterwards?—He took then the hill grazing again, what is deer forest now, called Ben Dronnaig forest.

19,541. In addition?—In addition; he took it from the Lochalsh crofters.

19,542. Having got hold of this, he added to it the Ben Dronnaig grazing?—Yes.

19,543. Taken from the Lochalsh crofters?—Yes.

19,544. Was that Macbarnet's?—No, that belonged to Sir Alexander Matheson at the time.

19,545. And what rent did he pay for that?—He was paying between that and Attadale for three years £750 as far as I understand.

19,546. That rent was afterwards reduced, I suppose?—No, it was not reduced. On the first lease I think he paid £750 or so; and the rent was raised next lease.

19,547. Now you have told us about the Attadale tenants and the Ben Dronnaig tenants. Did this gentleman Mitchell make any other addition to his grazing farm?—Not since that.

19,548. Were there any tenants removed from Ben Dronnaig?—No, the Lochalsh tenants had it for grazing for their cattle in the summer time.

19,549. For common hill pasture?—Yes.

19,550. Sheilings?—Yes, there was a piece put up to every township.

19,551. And this man got the whole of it?—Yes.

19,552. Now is that Attadale the same Attadale we see across the water?—Yes, just over here.

19,553. Was any other farm made out of the land which had been occupied by the Attadale small tenants except this farm of Mitchell's?—No, Mitchell took the whole.

19,554. You have given us a very distinct account of these townships; are there any other places you can mention?—Yes, this farm of Tullich here.

19,555. Whose land is it upon?—It is on Mr Murray's estate.

19,556. Mr C. J. Murray of Lochcarron?—Yes.

19,557. Can you give us any particulars about it; what is the rent of it?—The present tenant was paying over £600 when he came in there about forty years ago; he came in there, I think, about the year 1864.

19,558. What do you wish to tell us about that farm?—It is a good farm.

19,559. Very possibly; anything more?—Very good grazing, and very good arable land. The sea is coming in on both sides of it, the north side and the south side.

19,560. Were there old townships on any part of it?

Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

—In the year 1756 it was taken by one farmer, Mackenzie of Fairburn; before that two farmers had it.

19,561. But at any rate it has been in the condition of large farms since 1756 at all events?—Yes, it was just under one tenant since that, but there were some cottars on it.

19,562. Who were labourers on the farm, I suppose?—Yes.

19,563. Do you know how many cottars?—I daresay about four or five.

19,564. All working on the farm?—Yes, they were just working on the farm.

19,565. They got labour on the farm, and they had cots on the ground?—Yes.

19,566. Is there any other ground you desire to speak of?—Yes.

19,567. What is that?—Kirkton.

19,568. Where is it?—It is one farm now, occupied by the hotel-keeper.

19,569. Has there been any township there?—Yes, but it was sub-tenants; they were paying rent to the hotel-keeper. There were four of them.

19,570. Are they away now?—Yes, they are away.

19,571. When were they removed?—I daresay it would be,—I don't think there were any there in the year 1872. It was all given to the hotel-keeper.

19,572. And that farm is in the hands of the hotel-keeper at present, I suppose?—Yes.

19,573. Is there land on that farm available for occupation by crofters?—Yes, as good as there is in the country.

19,574. The best in the country?—Every bit as good.

19,575. The grazing land is easily capable of cultivation, is it?—There is not much grazing land, only just a piece.

19,576. It is mostly arable?—Mostly arable. There is a good piece of grazing too, but it is not large.

19,577. Can you tell me what rent is paid for that farm?—The tenants who were at Kirkton hill were paying £6 each.

19,578. You mean the sub-tenants?—Yes.

19,579. But what rent does the hotelkeeper pay?—He was paying £100 for this farm once; I don't know what he pays now.

19,580. Is there any other land you wish to mention?—Yes, but it is over in Kishorn.

19,581. Let us hear about it?—There is another farm.

19,582. That is on Mr Stuart's property?—There is another farm in the hands of Mr Murray down at Reraig.

19,583. Where is it?—It is on the north side of Strome Ferry.

19,584. Do you know if there were old townships there?—Yes. My sister was there for one.

19,585. What was the name of her township?—Reraig.

19,586. Is she dead?—Yes; she does not live now.

19,587. She does not live there?—She died last year.

19,588. How many, do you know, were in that township of Reraig where your sister lived?—Three.

19,589. And let me ask you, what was your sister's name?—Her husband was Roderick Mackenzie.

19,590. She was Mrs Roderick Mackenzie?—Yes. There were three brothers, John, Ewen, and Roderick Mackenzie.

19,591. And they all paid rent, I suppose?—Yes, they were paying at that time £15, 10s. each.

19,592. What stock had they?—They had sheep and cattle.

19,593. And horses?—Yes, they had one horse each.

19,594. Was their land all upon the farm of Reraig?—Yes.

19,595. Or had they hill grazing besides?—No, the hill grazing and the low grazing were together.

19,596. They together occupied and possessed the whole of the land which now forms the farms of Reraig?—Yes; it is in the hands of the proprietor now.

19,597. Can you give me the size of it, roughly?—That is more than I can say.

19,598. And had they Kishorn island besides?—No, the Kishorn island was on the other side; it is not in the same parish. It is in the parish of Applecross.

Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

19,599. What parish are you talking of just now?—Lochcarron parish.

19,600. That was the only township there, was it?—Yes, but there were small crofters down the seashore, marching with Reraig to Kishorn.

19,601. Crofters from Reraig to Kishorn?—Aird, Kishorn.

19,602. How many were in Aird?—I am not very sure.

19,603. Any other townships?—Yes, there are other townships there again, on the estate of Mr John Stuart.

19,604. But was there more than the township of Aird?—Yes, there were four or five of them, I think, altogether.

19,605. Townships?—Yes; small places.

19,606. Along Loch Kishorn?—Yes, between Achintraid and Reraig.

19,607. But you cannot give us the names of any but Aird itself?—Yes, I can tell more places that crofters were in.

19,608. Let us both have our minds on the same point. What I want to know is the names of any townships, running from Achintraid round the coast to Reraig?—There were four or five small tenants round the coast from Achintraid to Reraig.

19,609. Now do you wish to mention any other place?—Yes, there are places where crofters were in Kishorn.

19,610. Do you mean townships?—Yes.

19,611. Just give us their names.—There is a place called Rossal, on the estate of Mr Murray.

19,612. How many were in Rossal?—Four tenants.

19,613. Do you know when they were removed? Was it this century or last century?—More than a hundred years ago.

19,614. And how is the land now occupied?—Under sheep.

19,615. Any other townships in Kishorn?—Yes, Tornapreas; the proprietor is Mr John Stuart.

19,616. How many were in Tornapreas?—It was only one tenant when the estate was divided in the year 1857.

19,617. Do you know what rent he paid?—No.

19,618. Any other township?—Yes, there was Glenbeg.

19,619. How many were there?—Only one tenant was there, at last.

19,620. It was a sort of farm?—Yes.

19,621. And it is all consolidated now?—It is sublet to the farmer at Glenmore.

19,622. What is his name?—David Jackson.

19,623. Any more townships?—Yes, there was a place there called Achavanie.

19,624. How many were there?—I think only one tenant.

19,625. What has become of it?—I think it is let by Mr Stuart to Mr Murray.

19,626. For sheep or for deer?—For the home farm, I believe.

19,627. Is it near the mansion house?—Yes, near Mr Murray's mansion house.

19,628. Close to it?—Just above it.

19,629. Is there any other place you wish to mention?—There is Lag-nan-Copag, on the estate of Mr Stuart.

19,630. That is the Kishorn estate?—Yes.

19,631. How many tenants were there?—One.

19,632. And what has become of it now?—It is let to Mr Murray.

19,633. By whom?—By Mr Stuart.

19,634. Is it under sheep?—Under cattle; it is on the home farm.

19,635. Any other place?—Sanachan, on the Kishorn estate.

19,636. Was there one tenant?—Yes.

19,637. And is it let by Mr Stuart to Mr Murray?—Yes.

19,638. Any other?—Yes, Seafield.

Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

19,639. Was there one tenant there?—It is let by Mr Stuart to Mr Murray.

19,640. Was Seafield formerly in the hands of a tenant?—Yes, the last tenant that was there was Kennedy.

19,641. Only one?—Only one tenant; he had Achavanie and Sanachan also.

19,642. When did he give up possession?—I do not recollect, but it would be about five or six years ago.

19,643. Did he give it up because it did not pay, or why?—I cannot say indeed; whether he was in arrear or not I am not sure.

19,644. Is there any other place you would like to mention?—Another little place there was called Bruach-nan-goirtean.

19,645. How many were there?—I think there were once two crofters there, but it was in the hands of this Kennedy at last.

19,646. And did he remove these two crofters?—Yes, his grandfather. [Mr Stuart.—They died out]. Perhaps they died out.

19,647. Any other lands you wish to mention?—No; all this land called Glas-Chnoc, these tenants in Kishorn had for grazing and for sheilings once.

19,648. That is the land lying inland?—Yes, at the head of Loch Kishorn.

19,649. The whole of the grazings at the head of Loch Kishorn were used by these tenants and crofters and cottars for summer grazings?—Yes, the place called Glas-Chnoc was following Tullich, but the tenants of Kishorn had the rest for sheilings and grazing.

19,650. Do you wish to mention any other lands?—I don't know any more in the parish.

19,651. You have been dealing all along with the parish of Lochcarron?—Yes. But Achintraid belongs to the parish of Applecross, but it was put to the parish of Lochcarron since a year or two.

19,652. That was under the Local Government Act, I suppose. We will deal with it as part of the parish of Lochcarron. These lands that you say were formerly under small tenants, are they in your opinion, suitable for occupation now, either as arable land or grazing land?—Well, you can see them. It is not the crofts that made the crofters so good in this parish at all, but the good grazing, along with the low ground.

19,653. Is the arable soil low ground too?—Yes, at Achnashellach.

19,654. But speaking generally, is it good?—Yes, it is good; it was good at the time the crofters were there, for I heard my mother saying it would take out double the quantity of grain that could be done at Achantee.

19,655. Then is the grazing good?—Yes, the best on the west coast, so far as I know. Achnashellach has as good grazing as any on the west coast.

19,656. Do you think that crofters could be settled there in such holdings as regards size that they would be able to live by their holdings?—Yes, I am quite sure of that.

19,657. Having an extent of hill ground, and arable ground in proportion?—Yes, I am sure of it. There was not a penny of arrear from this township when they were evicted.

19,658. You mentioned crofters who paid a rent of £15, 10s., and others who paid other rents,—£6 I think you mentioned. Were these people able to live by their holdings alone?—Yes, between the croft and the hill; they had different kinds of stock,—goats, Highland cattle, and sheep.

19,659. And horses?—Yes.

19,660. Did they live between the arable land they had below, and the hill land they had above?—Yes.

19,661. Without labour?—No labour at all.

19,662. Without fishing?—There was no fishing up at Achnashellach.

19,663. I do not profess to know the ground very well. But in point of fact, they did not need to supplement their work on the crofts by other labour?—Those down here on the loch side were fishing; they were evicted from Achnashellach, from Jeantown here, when the lodge was made in 1818, and were put in some of the townships.

19,664. But I am speaking of those who were inland, and who had crofts of the size you have been describing. Did they subsist without fishing?—Yes, at Achnashellach. Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

19,665. And without having to go out for labour?—No, there was no labour going in the country at that time at all.

19,666. And do you think the same thing could be done again?—Yes, I am quite sure of it; but I can say this, that the grazing is not so fat to-day as it was in those years.

19,667. The grazing has gone back?—Yes, because there is no cattle going over it.

19,668. But it could be brought forward again?—Oh yes.

19,669. In a few years?—Yes, the Highland cattle would improve it.

19,670. You said just now that the village of Jeantown consisted of crofters from inland who had been brought down to the shore?—Yes.

19,671. And that took place in the time of the removals in 1818?—Yes.

19,672. Then before that, was there no village of Jeantown?—No; in the year 1756 the minister, Mr Sage, had Kirkton all the way down to this burn here, but he was paying rent for it.

19,673. He had it as a farm?—Yes, I can show you it before you leave.

19,674. These men who were brought down here were turned from crofters,—self-sustaining crofters,—to fishermen on the coast here, with houses by the seashore?—Yes, they had to put up their houses themselves.

19,675. And is that the year in which Jeantown was built,—1818 or 1819?—It was growing larger every year; there were only a few houses at that time, 1818. It was called Tor-nan-Clar.

19,676. And when was the name changed into Jeantown?—It was so called after one of the ladies of Applecross. [Mr Stuart.—The liferenters of the estate.]

19,677. Do you remember in what year it was changed from Tor-nan-Clar into Jeantown?—No.

19,678. It is a long time ago?—Yes. [Mr Shaw.—I think it received its name after the wife of one of the proprietors of Applecross]. The land agitation commenced in Lochcarron here in the year 1818, by the Rev. Lachlan Mackenzie, the minister.*

19,679. He set it agoing, did he, or at least helped to start it?—He started the land agitation here. Murdoch Maclennan, who was at Tullich, was trying in every way to take the glebe farm from him, and the minister commenced an agitation; that was at the time of the evictions from Achnashellach, in the year 1818.

19,680. I pass now from these matters. How long is it since you ceased to be a farmer?—I came into the farm after my father; I was the youngest of the family.

19,681. What farm was that?—The club farm of Achantee.

19,682. And when did you leave Achantee?—I left Achantee in the year 1877; the proprietor moved me over to a place in Kintail, a farm there called Keppoch. I left that in the year 1880.

19,683. And where are you living now?—At Strathcarron. I have been abroad for seven years.

19,684. Mr Sutherland.—You have described localities in which there were tenants before, and which have got no tenants now. These places are divided into three groups, as I follow you,—the south side of Lochcarron, the north side of Lochcarron, and Loch Kishorn?—Yes.

19,685. Beginning with the south side of Lochcarron, you mentioned the summer grazing that the tenants in Attadale had?—No, in Achnashellach.

19,686. Where had they these grazings?—They are just marching with Ledgown.

19,687. But where had they them before?—At

* At the time that Tor-nan-Clar was converted into a village and called Jeantown, the Rev. Lachlan Mackenzie, minister of Lochcarron, commemorated the change in the following quatrain, which old people still quote:—

Faire, Faire, Tor-nan-Clar,
'Se Baile-Sine 'th'ort an drasd;
Cha'n eil tigh anns am bi teine
Air nach bi similear no dha.

Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

Achnashellach; there was a piece of grazing put up for every township, Coulags, Balnacra, Craig, two Corrievanies, and Coire-Lirldh.

19,688. Are these places all on the north side or the south side of Loch Carron?—They were on both sides of the river, above Loch-Dhughaill.

19,689. And they had their summer grazings up the Ben Dronnaig way?—No, it was not up the Ben Dronnaig way, but marching with Monar and Gleann-Fhiodhaig. Monar was on the south side, and on the north side again, it was marching with Ledgown and Sir Kenneth Mackenzie's property of Gairloch.

19,690. So that all those grazings that are now either under deer or sheep were at one time in possession of these townships as summer grazings?—Yes.

19,691. Were they deprived of these summer grazings before they were removed from the townships?—No, they were removed at once. Sheep came in there on the hill called Moruisg, which was in the hands of the proprietor, Mackenzie of Applecross.

19,692. They were deprived of their summer grazings and of their township grazings, and were removed at the same time?—Yes, just in one day.

19,693. Does that apply equally to the other districts that we have referred to, both the north and the south of Loch Carron and Loch Kishorn?—In Rossal, again, they were removed at a different time.

19,694. Subsequent to 1818?—No, about a hundred years ago.

19,695. Before 1818?—Yes.

19,696. I think you stated, in reply to the Chairman, that it was about that time that the village of Jeantown was formed?—Yes, in the year 1818.

19,697. Was the formation of the village of Jeantown the result of these clearances?—Yes.

19,698. The people were swept in here, and made into a village?—Yes.

19,699. What state was this land in before?—It was the estate of Applecross.

19,700. What state was it in? Was it cultivated before the people came to Jeantown?—No, it was themselves that took in the whole of the land.

19,701. Was the quality of it any better than we see in the land round about?—No, nothing better, only just it was rough ground.

19,702. Had they to build their own houses when they came here?—Yes.

19,703. On what sort of tenure did they hold their houses?—The whole of the houses on the estate belong to the crofters, and when the crofter would be removed out of it he would get a yearly rent for the house, for the holding.

19,704. Where?—On the estate of Applecross. That was the regulation.

19,705. But I was asking about the village of Jeantown. What sort of tenure do they hold their houses by; are they feuars?—Most of them,—you see the houses were not on the crofts at all.

19,706. But had they leases?—No, I do not think so.

19,707. Were they feuars, or under feu charter? Are they all crofters under the Act now?—Yes, Mr Murray, the proprietor, allowed them to come under the Act. But the houses were not connected, I believe, with the crofts; some of them at any rate.

19,708. But when the people came here, there were neither houses nor land for them?—No.

19,709. They had to build the houses and reclaim the land themselves?—Yes, that is quite true.

19,710. And is the land better than the land they were put from, or worse?—The land at Achnashellach from which they were sent down was better land, better grazing. They had the grazing up here at Coire-each, they had thirty-five stirks there.

19,711. They were better off than when they came down here?—Yes.

19,712. Do you think, if any means were devised of sending them back again, they would thrive better in the better land than they did here in the inferior land?—There is not the least doubt about that.

19,713. They overcame the difficulties which met them when they came down here, and if they were put in better circumstances they would get on as well?—The tenant Murdoch Maclennan would not allow a single beast to graze on the place if he could help it.

Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

19,714. What is your opinion generally about the reasons for the clearing of the people? Have you heard it stated that it was because the people were not well off there?—No.

19,715. You never heard that?—No.

19,716. But what is your opinion about it? If it were stated, would it be true, in your opinion?—It is my opinion that the way this Maclennan evicted them—

19,717. I am not talking about Maclennan, or any other person, but just about this district?—Because sheep were paying better at that time. The sheep farmers were coming in from the south, and they were taking every bit of the high lands from the crofters.

19,718. Were they offering bigger rents?—Yes.

19,719. So that it was altogether, you think, a question of rent?—Yes. The crofters were well liked by the proprietor.

19,720. Then with regard to the rent, was that rent that they paid at first maintained afterwards? Are they paying as high a rent now as they did before the sheep farmers came?—Yes, I can show you here. [Producing a document.]

19,721. What particular point do you refer to? I am asking you if the rents which the large farmers offered over the heads of the tenants were kept up, or are they lower now than then?—They are not paying the half of what they were paying at first.

19,722. So that the expectations of the landlords themselves in regard to rent were not realised; they had to lower the rent?—Yes, when prices came down in the year 1878 or 1879.

19,723. Is it your opinion that the people were better off when they were in the glens and the places you have described, than when they came to the sea shore?—They were far better off. They had goats and sheep and cattle, and they could kill a sheep or a goat any time they liked. Now, when they came down here they had neither sheep nor goats.

19,723*a*. The Chairman.—When they came down to the shore here, did they bring any stock with them?—Only perhaps a cow or two, that was all.

19,724. Except for a cow's grass, they had no stock of sheep or cattle or horses?—No. Well, sometimes they would have horses for the spring work here, but they would require to put them away in the summer time.

19,725. Did they get any land?—When they came down from Achnashellach part of them were put down into this township here, Slumbay.

19,726. But did they get any land?—Yes, and some of them got no land.

19,727. But those who settled here, did they get some moorland?—They got the land above here.

19,728. Which they have yet?—Yes, and some in Achnashellach were put in other townships, Achantee.

19,729. Mr Sutherland.—In what state did they get that land?—It was just moorland; there was never crop on it before.

19,730. And they had to reclaim it?—Yes.

19,731. Themselves?—Yes, themselves.

19,732. Now you have referred to places where tenants used to be. In all these places,—which I have no doubt you could show us?—Yes.

19,733. There were tenants at one time?—Yes.

19,734. And had they arable land there?—Yes, they had arable land, and grazing along with it at Achnashellach.

19,735. And is it your opinion that they reclaimed the best land in these places,—that the old arable is the best land?—Yes, it is as good as ever, and better now.

19,736. It was cleared of stones in the old times?—Yes.

19,737. Rocks that were in it were taken away?—Yes, and everything. You can see by that paper. They had so many cottars first, and then you see when the lease was out they were taken in, the crofters.

Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

19,738. You are referring now to sub-tenants, I suppose, that were under the tacksmen, who were the tenants of the principal proprietor. Is that what you mean?—Yes, they were cottars first to take in the ground, and they were getting a share of it.

19,739. The cottars reclaimed the land, and in virtue of such reclamation were called crofters?—Yes. Sometimes one or two of the tenants would be in for the whole of the rent.

19,740. Is it your opinion that if there was an opportunity given, there is other land besides the old arable, that might be made arable now?—What the other tenants had before.

19,741. No, but over and above that?—There are plenty of places, but up higher.

19,742. There is plenty of land that is as good as this land up here when the people came to it?—Yes, and far better, in the deer forest of Achnashellach; no doubt about that.

19,743. So that, if the arable land was found too small in area, are you of opinion that the people would reclaim more land if they got back to these places?—Yes.

19,744. And better subjects to work upon than they reclaimed up here?—Yes, it is better ground.

19,745. Mr Gordon.—You have spoken mostly about the deer forest of Achnashellach?—Yes.

19,746. I suppose you have no personal experience of what that country could do?—Yes, because I know it perfectly well, I know it from my youth.

19,747. There was no arable land there since 1818, you say?—Well, it was under one farmer at that time.

19,748. Now, assuming that you put back crofters there, what size of holding would you propose to give them?—Any size you like. Giving them the whole grazing as a club farm would be the best thing.

19,749. What size of a club farm? How many would you put into it?—Say four or six.

19,750. How many sheep would you propose for the club farm? What size of a grazing would it be?—Just according to how many tenants you would put on the ground.

19,751. But how many sheep would you propose to give to each tenant?—I would say from 100 to 130 or 140, or the like of that.

19,752. And you would give them some cattle?—Yes, say six milk cows and their followers.

19,753. Any horses?—A horse a-piece.

19,754. Six cows, 130 sheep, and a horse?—Yes, or 140 sheep.

19,755. Now, what money would a crofter require to stock that?—According to the price of stock when they would get it.

19,756. Take the present prices, which are low?—It would be quite easy to put the stock on this year.

19,757. What would you value the sheep stock at?—It would be according to the kind of sheep, whether blackfaced sheep or cheviots.

19,758. Take the blackfaced sheep; they are cheaper?—According to the last wool market, they would be quite cheap.

19,759. But you must have them of different ages?—Yes, ewes and wedders.

19,760. You would not put old ewes on a new farm?—No.

19,761. Would it be fair to estimate the cost of the sheep at £1 a-piece?—Yes, you would get hoggs this year, good cheviot hoggs, for 21s. to 14s.

19,762. Suppose we put the sheep in at £100, and say six milk cows, would you put them in at £10 a-piece?—You could buy the sheep cheaper than £100.

19,763. I will let you put your own price upon them; tell us your own mind?—I would say I could put in the sheep for £80.

19,764. And how much for the six cows?—Say according to this year's price £6 or £7 a head.

19,765. They would not be very good at that price?—They would this year.

19,766. Then the horse?—Between £10 and £15.

19,767. Say £14, making a total of £150, as a round sum?—Yes.

19,768. Now you must provide for buildings?—Yes. Lochcarr

19,769. Would they cost you another £150?—No.

19,770. How much?—That would be according to the way they would be put up. If they were stone and lime and slates they would be dear, but with wood they would be cheaper. Roderick Mackenzi

19,771. Would you get a crofter to pay £200 or £250 in round money, or how would you provide the sum required to stock and build?—There are plenty who could pay for stock and all.

19,772. Are there crofters who could do so at present; or who do you propose should take these holdings?—Plenty in the country would take them. I for one would.

19,773. Are you living in this quarter just now?—Yes.

19,774. And you think you could get men that would have £250 of capital willing to take these places?—Yes, some of them and some not.

19,775. Now suppose you had a holding capable of grazing 130 sheep, 6 cows and followers, and a horse, what rent would you suppose that place would be worth?—I cannot tell you; it is according to the price of the year they would get the crop.

19,776. Well, but we will take the present, it is a cheap time?—In the year 1863, when they were evicted, they were paying £8 a-piece, eight of them.

19,777. And would you expect to get a croft of that size for £8?—Well, they had it there at that time.

19,778. Are you acquainted with the fishermen down this loch side?—Yes.

19,779. Are they making a good living down here?—No, because there is no fishing in the loch.

19,780. Is there no fishing in the loch?—A little, but not much.

19,781. Is there a township down this loch called Airdaniaskan?—There is.

19,782. Are the fishermen there successful or not?—There is a railway station there, and they get a better chance to send the fish away.

19,783. Are they not, as a whole, a successful body of fishermen?—Yes, they are very good fishermen, as good as there are in the country.

19,784. Are they in good circumstances from fishing?—Well, it is not by the croft they are.

19,785. I don't say that, but it is by the fishing?—Yes, they are making their living by the fishing, except that they have the grazing of their cows.

19,786. And they are in good circumstances?—Middling well, according to the year.

19,787. I take it as you say that they are middling well. Now you were farming in another part of the country, in the farm of Keppoch?—Yes.

19,788. How did the land of Keppoch compare with the land of Achnashellach?—It was not so good as Achnashellach.

19,789. Take the face of the hill next the sea, is that not as good as Achnashellach?—It was just down to the sea, it was not so good as Achnashellach, it was too green and steep, and it was narrow below at the low ground.

19,790. Is Keppoch not a good mixed farm?—Yes.

19,791. Is it a farm you would recommend being put under crofters?—Well, it is not very easy for crofters; it is so steep.

19,792. But it is not the crofter so much as his sheep that have to be suited?—It is good arable land, what is in it.

19,793. What was your own personal experience of farming?—I was just after sheep.

19,794. How long were you in Keppoch?—Only three years; I had to give it up.

19,795. Why?—Because the price of sheep came down and my security failed, and I had not as much money as would stock the place myself.

19,796. In point of fact, you yourself did not find farming a profitable occupation?—You see when my security failed I had to give it up. [The Chairman.—You mean the cautioner?—Yes, I gave up the farm.—Who do you mean by the security?—The security that was on me with the bank failed, and I had to give it up.]

Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

19,797. Your own experience is that you could not stock the farm without a cautioner, and if you got a cautioner, he might fail, and you might in consequence have to give up the farm?—I don't understand the word.

19,798. Security?—You see it was not so easy for me to get a security at that time; that was at the time the City of Glasgow Bank and the Caledonian Bank went down; and I thought it would be better for me to leave, because the proprietor took it off my hands.

19,799. But supposing your security had stood good, were you making money on the farm?—No, because prices came down.

19,800. They were not very low in 1878?—Yes, they were; in 1880 they were low whatever.

19,801. Mr Munro.—You furnished us with a long list of holdings from which families had been evicted at the beginning of this century, and later on?—In the year 1818.

19,802. I think I understood you to say that these holdings could be advantageously occupied by crofters if an opportunity were presented of getting them?—Yes.

19,803. In coming to that conclusion, have you taken into consideration the altered conditions of living between to-day and the beginning of this century?—Yes, there is a great difference.

19,804. You can, of course, understand that in 1818 crofters mostly lived upon the entire produce of their croft?—They lived just on flesh and cheese and butter and fish and venison.

19,805. They fed and clothed themselves from the produce of their own crofts?—They were paying nothing but the weaving. They tanned their own leather; they made their own clothes and their own shoes; and they were not giving a penny except to the tailor and the weaver.

19,806. But you are sensible of the fact that to-day crofters have to a large extent to purchase those necessaries?—Can they not do it as well to-day as in those days, if they like?

19,807. But I am pointing out to you that they produced those things in these days themselves, and to-day they have to purchase them, so that there must be some considerable difference in the working of a croft to-day as compared with 1818, is that not so?—I don't see but they could do the very same to-day as they did in these old times; they can tan the leather if they like, their women can spin their own yarn, and there are plenty of weavers for making the cloth.

19,808. Now, supposing that crofters got possession of these crofts, did I understand you to say they would be in a position to stock them, and to build their houses, without any outside help?—Some of them would and some would not.

19,809. And they could work them to advantage?—Yes, there is no doubt about that.

19,810. The Chairman.—Supposing you got a holding yourself of the kind we have been having in view, could you stock that holding, and put up the necessary buildings, without any outside assistance?—Well, perhaps I would get some assistance from some friend.

19,811. I have no doubt you have many good friends; but could you do it without their assistance, or would you require such assistance?—Not for a croft of six cows, a horse, and a hundred sheep.

19,812. You could establish yourself in a holding with six cows and followers, a hundred sheep and a horse, and put up the buildings without any assistance?—Just very little.

19,813. How much?—According to the year.

19,814. Take the present year?—You see I might not buy everything the first year. I would be getting it by-and-bye.

19,815. Take the present year, with the prospects for the future. Suppose you were to proceed to establish yourself this year, would you look forward to doing so without assistance, and if not, what extent of assistance would you require?—You mean that I should pay the whole stock myself.

19,816. Would you desire assistance, and if so how much?—I would have a little assistance.

19,817. How much?—I would say about £30 or £40.

19,818. You think if you had £30 or £40 you could establish yourself in a holding, and go on with a prospect of profit, and with the view of maintaining yourself?—Yes.

19,819. Now you spoke of the bank. The bank had a security for your rent, I suppose, in Keppoch?—No, you see I had to pay for the sheep stock when I went in. The stock was valued by three men, and I had not as much money when I went to Keppoch as would buy the stock outright, so I had to borrow part of the money from the bank.

19,820. And the bank got a security?—Yes, they would not take the stock as security.

19,821. They got a security for the repayment of the advance?—Yes.

19,822. And did that security fail?—Yes.

19,823. And was that the reason you had to leave Keppoch?—Yes.

19,824. Then it was not because Keppoch failed to yield a profit, but because of the accident that your security happened to fail?—Yes.

19,825. And, but for that, you might have remained much longer at Keppoch?—Yes, and there was not a penny of rent on me.

19,826. Mr Sutherland.—I wish, with regard to this, to ask you one question. You have had experience as a large farmer, have you not?—Yes.

19,827. And you know what the custom is with regard to these large farms, I have no doubt,—when a farmer enters into possession of a large sheep farm is it necessary that he should have the whole capital to pay for his whole stock in cash right away?—It would be better for himself.

19,828. But is it a common thing that he has?—Not in the western parts here.

19,829. He has to obtain assistance elsewhere?—Yes, some have and others have not.

19,830. And no doubt the amount of assistance he will require will be very much larger than a crofter would require, because of the stock being larger?—Yes, there is no doubt of that.

19,831. And if there is no difficulty with regard to the large farmer, why should there be any difficulty with regard to the smaller farmer, who would require less?—The one could do it as well as the other.

19,832. Are you aware, with regard to the proposals that were made for sending people to Manitoba and North America, one of the conditions was that for five years they were allowed to sit rent free, without paying interest on capital or anything else?—I have been over in America myself; I never was in Manitoba, but I have seen plenty who have been there. They are just tied hand and foot there, and they never can get out of it. You see, although they might get the land, the time is so short after sowing the seed; and then one bad night may take it all away at once.

19,833. Are you aware that it was proposed that these settlers in North America who were to be sent from this country were to be left five years in which they were to pay neither rent nor interest?—No, I never heard of that.

19,834. That was the proposal in that case; and if it were found necessary do you not think it might be tried in this country too?—Oh, indeed yes, that would suit very well in this country; no doubt about that.

19,835. Apart from that, are there not some parties at present who, if you were to send them to a new place, would take a certain amount of stock to begin with?—Yes, the sooner they could get stock on the place the better for themselves and the proprietor.

19,836. And when the people were sent to Jeantown from these places, they got no assistance whatever?—No. Now you can see there (refers to document produced) in the year 1756 all the crofters that were in the whole parish.

19,837. The Chairman.—Who wrote this?—I copied it.

19,838. Where did you copy it from?—From a rental book of Applecross.

19,839. Have you got that rental book?—No, but that is just as correct as it could be.

19,840. I have no doubt it is. How did you come into possession of an Applecross rental book?—I had seen it at the time of the Applecross sale, after the Mackenzies left. There was a table left by some parties, and there was a rental book in the drawer of the table.

19,841. And you got possession of it in that way, and copied out the names?—I got a while of it.

19,842. And what did you do with the book?—I gave it back to the same man who gave it me.

19,843. Who was he? You do not wish to tell us. Very good. [Mr Sutherland.—It is a public document, is it?—Yes. And it can be seen in Edinburgh at any time?—The man that gave it to me is living yet.]

19,844. It was got in a drawer of a table, and you gave it back to the man you got it from?—Yes.

19,845. Do you know any more about it?—No, but I am sure that the man who had it is in possession of it now.

19,846. Then it is not in Edinburgh?—No.

19,847. I don't suppose it is?—But Sir Henry Macandrew told me he had one of the same kind himself.

19,848. It is not in Edinburgh either?—No.

19,849. You are willing to sign this?—Yes.

19,850. And what do you say it contains?—It contains the tenants and the rents of the parish of Lochcarron.

19,851. In the year 1756?—Yes.

19,852. Mr Duncan Shaw, W.S., Inverness, agent for Mr C. J. Murray of Lochcarron.—There is one question I should like to ask. You said there was a good deal of arable land on the estate of Achnashellach; now is not a great part of that land in the valley of the Carron, in the hollow?—Yes, the Carron comes down in the middle of that.

19,853. Does not that river overflow its banks a good deal?—Yes, because the proprietor never turned the river.

19,854. But as a matter of fact, the river does overflow its banks, does not it?—Undoubtedly.

19,855. Do you think that is a safe place for crofters to have houses and crops if the river overflows its banks?—The river is not much higher than it used to be sixty or eighty years ago, in the former times.

19,856. But does it not flood the valley now, I am speaking of the present time?—If the river was banked it would not overflow; it only overflows a little part of the low ground.

19,857. Does it not go over the whole of the low ground?—No.

19,858. And you think it would be perfectly safe for the crofters?—You can see the crofters' houses on the edge of the river. At Craig, where my father was, it is not 60 yards from the bed of the river, and there was never a house taken away by the flood there.

19,859. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Sir Henry Macandrew in Lochalsh referred to the high grazing lands as wedder ground, and he said that the big sheep farmers were very glad to get clear of those lands. Is the name 'wedder ground' a suitable description for those high lands at Ben Dronnaig?—It was ewes that were on Ben Dronnaig all the time.

19,860. All the time?—No, at first, since Peter Mitchell got it.

19,861. Tell us all you know about it?—Since Peter Mitchell got the Lochalsh hills it was ewes that were on Ben Dronnaig, but before that it was wedders; it was attached to the Auchtertyre farm. There were three-year old wedders and two-year-old wedders, and so on, but they were sending their noggs, like the rest of the farmers between this and Skye down the country to winter.

19,862. The one-year-olds?—Just the hoggs.

19,863. But Ben Dronnaig was the mere grazing ground?—Yes, it was ewes that Peter Mitchell had on it the whole time.

19,864. And did the ewe stock graze there all summer and winter?—Yes, and Mitchell was keeping the best of the hoggs there in summer as well.

19,865. And these grazings wintered the ewe stock of the big sheep farmers to your own knowledge?—Yes, I mind the time the sheep went on it.

Lochcarron. — Roderick Mackenzie.

19,866. And do you believe these same lands would winter the ewe sheep stock of crofters. If crofters got the same lands?—I am certain they would.

19,867. The winter would be as kind to the crofter's stock as to the big farmer's?—Every bit, and kinder, because if a snowstorm came they would go out themselves and help the shepherd to gather in the stock.

19,868. Now there is another matter. Sir Henry Macandrew said most distinctly that some of these big farmers were very glad to get clear of that land?—Well, that might be.

19,869. Do you know anything about that?—I don't believe that. I know that as to Killilan, when it went into a forest he was very sorry to part with it—I mean Mr Brown, Killilan. He was very sorry to part with his farm, and he never came back since he left the hill grazing.

19,870. Since the high ground was taken from him?—He never came back since.

19,871. So that, as a matter of fact, he was not glad that it was taken from him, but very sorry?—I was present myself, and some of people he had taken to Strome Ferry.

19,872. And what did you hear yourself?—I heard that Mr Brown was very sorry to lose the farm.

19,873. Can you give us the character of the high hill ground that used to touch with Achnashellach when tenants were there?—Yes.

19,874. What are the names of the places?—Coille-bhreac was attached to Balnacra, and Coillebhan to Coulags, and Allt-dearg to Wester Coire-bhanie and Craig.

19,875. What hill grazing attached to Craig?—Leathad-an-tobair and Coire-Choinnich and Eardach and Coirag-sheilich. Again to Coire-liridh, Coineas and Malafiiuchart and to Easter Coire-bhanie, the Corries of Coire-bhanie. And it was attached to the other townships besides.

19,876. Did those high hill grazings include all that land?—Yes.

19,877. The whole of the land?—The whole of the land. [Mr Gordon.—Up to Loch Monar?—No, it was marching at Balachruinn.]

19,878. Was Gleann-Fhiodhaig a boundary?—Yes, it belongs to the estate of Coul.

19,879. Was that the boundary on the north side?—Yes, Gleann-Fhiodhaig was marching with a portion of Glen Carron on the east side, and Monar on the south side; the three proprietors might shake hands in the one spot—Balachruinn.

19,880. And the Lochalsh tenants had the rest?—Yes, the south side of it.

19,881. Is that near the top of Sgurr-na-Fantaig?—Yes.

19,882. Is that superior hill grazing to your own knowledge?—There is no better grazing in Ross-shire.

19,883. And is the whole of that under deer now?—Every inch of it.

19,884. Now supposing these lands were given back to the people, and the people occupied them as they did before 1818, how would you propose that their sheep stock should be managed?—The way that I would say is just to make club farms of it. Sheep are very easy to buy in these days, being so cheap.

19,885. And would every man have his own share separately, or would it be common property?—No, it would be one mark in the sheep stock, but you would have cattle of your own.

19,886. And one shepherd?—Yes.

19,887. Paid by the community?—Paid by the club farm.

19,888. And then in summer would you graze the farrow cattle there?—Yes, they used to be there.

19,889. Each crofter having his own stock of cattle?—Yes.

19,890. And would the whole of the sheep stock, with the exception of the hoggs, winter there?—Yes, every one of them.

19,891. The whole stock?—Yes. Mr Scott took the farm there after Maclennan was there, and he wintered his hoggs there.

19,892. Wintered the whole stock?—Yes, mostly the whole stock, when he took it first. You see they were not going to the low country in those days at all.

19,893. And then before the big sheep farmers were introduced into this country, and before the evictions you referred to, was there such a thing as rack rent?—What do you mean by that?

19,894. Were the people rack-rented?—Too high rented.

19,895. In the olden time?—No. One of the proprietors went to Edinburgh and he never came back, and he took £2 off each township, and he said if he came back and if it did not pay, he would take it down.

19,896. Was it after the lands were taken from them that the rents began to go up?—Yes. The price of sheep and cattle was rising, and the rent was rising.

19,897. The Chairman.—Have you any personal knowledge of the use to which these places you have mentioned were put for wintering?—I don't understand.

19,898. Have you any personal knowledge of these lands you have mentioned being used for wintering?—For wintering sheep?

19,899. Yes?—Oh yes, my lord. When Mr Scott had the farm of the height of Lochcarron there, he was wintering the whole of the sheep there except the hoggs; and he was leaving some of the hoggs themselves, the best of them.

19,900. The whole of the sheep were wintered there?—Except the hoggs.

19,901. And even some of them. What was the name of that place?—Achnashellach.

19,902. What was the death-rate?—In the sheep?

19,903. Yes?—I cannot tell you; it would be according to the winter, and the snowstorms.

19,904. Was it sometimes very high?—Not very high in this good grazing, but it is high in bad grazing. It is always high in bad grazing.

19,905. Mr Donald Macrae.—Your lordship might ask him when the sheep stock was cleared off Achnashellach; that is a question that we omitted.

19,906. The Chairman.—When was the sheep stock cleared from Achnashellach?—In the year 1863. [Mr Stuart.—When Scott's lease expired.] Scott's lease expired about that time; Sir Alexander Matheson had the higher part of it for some time.

Strathcarron, 28*th July* 1893.

JOHN KENNEDY, Crofter, Arineckaig (34)—examined.

19,907. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

19,908. What rent do you pay?—£11, 4s.

19,909. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

19,910. Did they make any change upon it?—Not the least.

19,911. It remained the same?—Yes.

19,912. Where is your croft?—Arineckaig.

19,913. I see the extent is 13 acres 2 roods 27 poles arable, and 3 acres outrun; present rent £11, 4s., fair rent £11, 4s. Whose estate are you on?—Sir Kenneth Matheson's.

19,914. What is it you wish to say?—Part of the old township lands was taken from us in the year 1819.

19,915. Can you point us to any new lands suitable for settlement?—That part of it would be to the advantage of the township, the part that was taken from them.

19,916. For grazing?—Yes.

19,917. Have you any desire to leave your present holding?—To extend it.

19,918. But not to leave it?—Not at present.

19,919. And the only extension you ask for is in the way of hill grazing?—Yes, there is no arable land near hand.

19,920. What was the extent of the land taken, can you tell us?—I cannot tell you the extent, but I could give the names of the marches.

19,921. You could show us the marches on the ground?—Yes. After that was taken from us we were overcrowded in 1863 by evictions from Achnashellach.

19,922. You mean that the township of Arineckaig was crowded up by evictions from Achnashellach?—Yes, three more crofters from Achnashellach. There were seven crofters at first, and one had two shares, so that there were only two crofters added to the township in that way; one of the three got the odd share.

19,923. And were there any other additions made to the township?—No, but the rent was raised. In 1818 the rent was £9, 4s. 5d.; and in 1858 it was raised to £15, 12s. In 1863 it was reduced to £10, 15s. The township was not very good afterwards; it was overcrowded.

19,924. Are you mentioning the rent of the township, or of each croft?—Each croft.

19,925. When was your rent made £11, 4s.?—In 1884.

19,926. Is there any other land you wish to tell us about?—There are lands in the hands of Sir Kenneth Matheson as deer forest,—Ben Tarsuinn; from Allt-

Lochcarron. — John Kennedy.

beath to Ben Tarsuinn the land would suit as it marches with the township. [Mr Gordon.—Is that Ben Dronnaig?—No, Ben Dronnaig lies to the southwest of Ben Tarsuinn. Is it above Loch Lunndaidh?—Yes.]

19,927. From Allt beath to Ben Tarsuinn is grazing land?—It is a deer forest now, part of Ben Dronnaig deer forest.

19,928. Which deer forest are you speaking about?—Ben Dronnaig deer forest in the hands of Sir Kenneth Matheson.

19,929. Any other lands?—Not close to the township; but there were 300 acres taken away by Sir Alexander Matheson of the common low ground pasture.

19,930. And what did Sir Alexander do with it?—It is in Sir Kenneth Matheson's hands still.

19,931. What is it used for?—There is one crofter settled on it, and some of it was added to the neighbouring township of Achantee.

19,932. Are all the 300 acres in the hands of crofters?—There is just part of it in the hands of one crofter.

19,933. And the other part of it?—It is in the hands of the proprietor, and the other part added to the township of Achantee. [Mr Gordon.—The whole of that hill face is in the hands of crofters, is it not?—The low ground.—Who has it?—It is in the hands of Sir Kenneth Matheson.]

19,934. That is exactly contrary to what you said to me just now. You said Sir Alexander took away 300 acres, and of these 300 acres a part is in the hands of crofters now?—What we had for our shepherd is in the possession of a crofter,—I don't know whether he is a crofter or not, but he is staying there.

19,935. And the rest of that land?—The rest of that land is in Sir Kenneth Matheson's hands.

19,936. What is he doing with it?—They cut peats there.

19,937. Who cut peats there?—The Achantee township, and several other townships.

19,938. Then is the whole of that land being used by crofters, either for cultivation or for grazing or for peats?—It is used for peats, part of it, but he took 40 acres back to the township last year.

19,939. He gave it back to the township?—Yes.

19,940. So that the whole of that land is being used by crofters in one form or another?—Oh certainly. [Mr Sutherland.—Who grazes on it?—There is no restriction on anybody, as far as I understand.]

19,941. It is all being used by crofters in one way or another?—And by cutting peats for distilling from Inverness, Dingwall and other parts.

19,942. Have the crofters free access to it to cut peats?—Oh certainly.

19,943. Are there any other lands you wish to mention?—Not next the township; but at Achnashellach there is very good land.

19,944. You have heard the evidence given by Roderick Mackenzie about that?—Yes.

19,945. And you agree with it?—Yes.

19,946. His statement was a very full one; you have nothing to add to it, have you?—No.

19,947. Mr Sutherland.—You referred to some grazing that was adjoining your grazing, out the way of Ben-Tarsuinn?—Yes.

19,948. It is at present used as a deer forest?—Yes.

19,949. Would it be a desirable addition to your grazing if you could get it?—It would be a great benefit to the township.

19,950. Is it better grazing than you have now got?—Yes, it is better grazing than any we have got; it is higher up.

19,951. It bounds with your present grazing?—Yes.

19,952. Can you give us any idea of the amount of grazing the township has got?—5769 acres.

19,953. Can you tell us how much the Achantee people have got?—No, I have no idea of that.

16,954. How many sheep have you got at Arineckaig?—Something like 800 sheep.

19,955. Is it managed as a club stock?—It is a club stock.

19,956. And if you got the piece you referred to from the deer forest, how much additional stock would it enable you to keep?—It would keep a good many more.

Lochcarron. — John Kennedy.

19,957. How many?—I could not tell the exact number.

19,958. Would it enable you to keep an additional hundred sheep?—Yes, and more, with the other side that was taken from us in 1818.

19,959. What part is that?—It is a deer forest as well.

19,960. How far up does it extend?—From Loch Dhughaill along our march to Bealachvernish, on the east side of our present march.

19,961. And where did it go then?—The march stopped there at that part.

19,962. And you would like to get that part along with the other part of the forest you referred to first?—Yes.

19,963. If you got it, would you be able to stock it?—We would.

19,964. How many families are there in Arineckaig?—Nine.

19,965. Have they equal shares in the club?—Equal shares in the common pasture, not in the arable land. They had at one time, but some have now double the number others have. They had at one time an equal share, and it was taken from them without any compensation and given to others.

19,966. About these 300 acres that you referred to, how do you say it was taken from you?—We never got any word that it was to be taken from us, they just took it themselves.

19,967. Who did?—Sir Alexander Matheson's factor.

19,968. And what did he do with it?—We had to carry wooden posts and to put stone on the ground.

19,969. And who got it after that?—It is in his own hands still.

19,970. Whose?—Sir Kenneth Matheson's. [The Chairman.—That is not in accordance with the information you gave me a few minutes ago.]

19,971. Sir Kenneth Matheson took the land from you and you have not got it back yet, is that it?—We have got 40 acres of it last year.

19,972. Of the 300?—Yes, that is all.

19,973. And did the Achantee crofters get the remainder?—They got part of it,—the most of it.

19,974. How much of it remains now?—And another man has part of it, but the greater part of it is in Sir Kenneth Matheson's hands.

19,975. You did not make it very clear for what purpose it was used?—It is not used except for cutting peats.

19,976. But is it not used for grazing?—There are people at Carnach who may graze their cows on it.

19,977. Is your contention that it was taken from you and given to some other crofters?—Part of it was given to one man.

19,978. You said that your desire was to have your present hill grazing extended?—Yes.

19,979. And you know the ground from which the additions could be taken with advantage?—Yes.

19,980. The Chairman.—Do you make any complaint with regard to that area of 300 acres?—Of course, it was a great complaint.

19,981. What is your complaint?—It was a great drawback.

19,982. What is your complaint?—That we used to winter our hoggs and cattle there through the winter time. They used to graze there whenever April and May came on; there was good grazing there.

19,983. And who has that now?—It is mostly in Sir Kenneth Matheson's hands.

19,984. Is it not the fact that the whole of that land is being used by crofters at present?—One crofter has part of it.

19,985. And the rest of it?—By peats.

19,986. And who get the peats?—The crofters; not us.

19,987. But it is used by crofters?—Oh certainly.

19,988. Then if it is used by crofters it is not land before us at all?—It is not rented by anybody.

19,989. Do you know about, it Mr Watson? [Mr

Watson.—There is some peat land that was reserved for the houses at Strathcarron and the crofters at Achantee and the other people there; and I believe at one time there was a bit of it proposed to be feued as a peat bank for the Ben Wyvis distillery; whether that is going on I cannot say.]

19,990. Mr Sutherland.—Is it used for grazing purposes, Mr Watson? [Mr Watson.—I do not think so; I think the crofters get the benefit of any crop that is on it.]

19,991. It is not appropriated by the proprietor?—I don't think so.

KENNETH MURCHISON, Ground Officer, Strathcarron (70)—examined.

19,992. The Chairman.—You are ground officer on the estate of Sir Kenneth Matheson?—Yes.

19,993. In Strathcarron?—In Strathcarron.

19,994. How long have you been ground officer?—Since first the time when the late Mackenzie of Applecross sold it I was under the proprietors of the estate.

19,995. You were under Mackenzie of Applecross?—Yes, I was in the same place.

19,996. Would you give your own explanation about these 300 acres to which Kennedy alluded?—It is a common for the use of the estate between the townships of Achantee and Arineckaig for cutting peats there, and the tenants agreed to give the land to the proprietor for improving it, taking in lands, and this land was taken at the same time which belonged to Arineckaig.

19,997. It was taken from Arineckaig, and when so taken what was done with it?—It was given for a common; there is a peat-moss there and it is a common for cutting peats.

19,998. It is a common for Arineckaig, I suppose, and not for Achantee?—Yes.

19,999. And who else?—And for Strathcarron, and whoever the proprietor would give leave to is getting it.

20,000. Did he give leave to the Ben Wyvis distillery?—Yes.

20,001. Are they using it now?—Yes.

20,002. Besides Achantee, Arineckaig and Strathcarron, and the Ben-Wyvis distillery, does anybody else use it?—Yes, the Inverness distillery.

20,003. Anyone else?—Well, they are giving it to some on Mr Murray's estate, some at Lochcarron village got leave to cut peats there. It is a common.

20,004. That land was taken from the Achantee tenants, was it?—The Arineckaig tenants.

20,005. Did they get any other lands instead of it?—I don't think so.

20,006. Was it a serious loss to them, this being taken away?—I believe it was, so far.

20,007. Was there any change made on their rents? [John Kennedy.—The rents were raised.]

20,008. Were the rents raised?—I am not sure if the rents were raised.

20,009. You are ground officer and ought to know?—I don't know everything.

20,010. When these lands were taken away were the rents raised?—I don't know; I am not sure. [Mr Watson.—There were very extensive improvements made for the whole of them, and the rents were rearranged by the late factor, Mr Mackenzie; some of the rents were increased according to the extent of the expenditure thus made.]

20,011. Mr Gordon.—But it is a fact that the last witness's croft, when inspected by the Crofters Commissioners, was found to be fairly rented? [Kennedy.—There is an appeal.]

20,012. Mr Sutherland.—The Arineckaig people lost the right of grazing over what you call a common?—Well, I don't think that, except as to the low ground that there is a tenant in and they would lose what the tenant fences; but the common was between them and others.

20,013. In other words, they had first the right of grazing and the right of cutting peats there?—Yes. Lochcarron.

20,014. And the one right was taken away?—It is not taken away yet. Kenneth Murchison.

20,015. The grazing right?—No; they could have their grazing. They have the grazing as well as ever, except the low ground that the one tenant has.

20,016. What was the extent of that?—The extent of this ground is this that was taken from us.

20,017. Forty acres?—I believe it was about that, between lochs and bogs.

20,018. And rights of peat cutting were given to others along with them who had no rights before?—Yes.

20,019. And there was no reduction of rent? They got no new right, but their old right was decreased?—The Achantee people were taken in with them, and the distilleries. It is called a common ground.

20,020. Yes, but what is it? Had these people at first a right of grazing and of peat cutting?—Yes.

20,021. They afterwards had to share that with others, and lost, as you admit, some of the grazing?—They lost the grazing.

20,022. And they got no reduction of rent?—It was raised for the improvement.

20,023. The Chairman.—Did Sir Alexander Matheson at the time make considerable improvements?—A great deal. It was for the improvements that the rents were raised; new houses, &c.

20,024. Did he build new houses for the tenants?—For some of them.

20,025. For several of them?—Yes.

20,026. And what other improvements did he make for the tenants?—He drained and fenced and ploughed their lands.

20,027. Their own lands?—He reclaimed new lands for them.

20,028. And was it after all that was done that the rents were readjusted and some of them raised?—Yes.

20,029. But was there any case of land being taken, the 300 acres being taken, and nothing else done for the tenant, and yet the rent raised?—I don't know about that; I don't think so.

20,030. Mr Gordon.—I quite understand that these additional townships got the right of grazing and cutting peats wherethey had not it before?—Well, it was the rule on the estate before, when it was in the hands of Mackenzie of Applecross, that they should cut peats where it was convenient for them, and it is for them that the people of Lochcarron are going from Mr Murray's ground to Sir Alexander's estate for peats,—their own peat ground is not convenient for them and they sign a book every year for liberty to cut peats there.

20,031. In point of fact, before the estates were broken up and sold, the Strathcarron people cut peats on this moss?—Yes, part of moss, where it was convenient for them.

20,032. Do you know the deer forest that the last witness spoke to before he mentioned the deer forest of Ben Dronnaig and the portion of it called Alltbeath?—I don't know about that, that is the south side, and I don't know about it. [Mr Watson.—It is part of the estate of Lochalsh.]

20,033. It was Achnashellach you spoke of first, was it not? [Kennedy.—Yes, on the east side of the township, above Loch Dhughaill.]

20,034. That was not part of Sir Kenneth Matheson's? [Kennedy.—No, it stretched from Loch Dhughaill upwards.]

20,035. You would like to get from Loch Dhughaill up to Loch Calaire? [Kennedy.—He would cut the march up to Bealach-an-Sgoltaidh and leave the rest for others.]

KENNETH MACDONALD, Crofter, Coulags (38)—examined. Kenneth Macdonald.

20,036. The Chairman.—What rent do you pay?—I pay no rent, I am not a crofter.

20,037. You are a cottar?—I am a labourer.

Lochcarron.
Kenneth Macdonald.

20,038. You have no land and no stock?—No stock.

20,039. You live solely by your labour?—I assist on the croft; the croft is held by my brother.

20,040. What is your brother's name?—Malcolm Macdonald.

20,041. What rent does he pay?—£11.

20,042. Was his rent fixed by the Crofters Commission?—No.

20,043. He did not apply to them?—No.

20,044. Is he under lease?—Yes.

20,045. A nineteen years' lease?—There are nineteen to run still.

20,046. It is a new lease then?—No, the lease was signed six years ago.

20,047. What is the length of the lease?—Twenty-five years.

20,048. At a rent of £11?—That is the rent of each; there are three in the township.

20,049. That is the township of Coulags?—Yes.

20,050. Are they all under lease?—All under lease.

20,051. Do you wish to get a holding for yourself?—Certainly.

20,052. Did you hear the evidence given by Roderick Mackenzie?—Yes, the most of it.

20,053. And does it state your views on the matter?—Yes, but there were some things he did not give evidence about.

20,054. I would like you to give your evidence with regard to what he omitted?—There was a township of Goirtean-Fraoich.

20,055. Where is that?—On the estate of Achnashellach.

20,056. When did it cease to be a township?—1863.

20,057. How many were in it?—Eight tenants.

20,058. Who cleared it?—Lord Hill.

20,059. When did Lord Hill come into possession of the estate?—I could not tell the year. [Mr Stuart.—1861.]

20,060. Did he make any other clearances?—No.

20,061. Do you mention any other place?—Not that Lord Hill cleared.

20,062. But anywhere?—There was some land taken off the township of Balnacra. All their hill grazing was taken away except a very small portion.

20,063. Where is that?—That is to the east of Coulags.

20,064. How many were there, do you say?—Six tenants.

20,065. And is there land there suitable for occupation now?—They have their crofts, the low ground.

20,066. But the hill grazing was taken away?—Not altogether; the lowest portion was left to them.

20,067. They kept the lower, and the higher was taken away and put under deer?—Yes, under deer.

20,068. Can you tell us how much was taken away?—I cannot give you the extent.

20,069. Can you give me the carry of it?—They would have between 300 and 400 sheep, I should say.

20,070. And how many have they now?—That would be taken for them, they lost the grazing of the number.

20,071. Now do you mention anywhere else?—The township of Coulags.

20,072. What about it?—Their hill grazing was taken away.

20,073. The whole of it?—The higher portions.

20,074. The whole of the higher portions?—Yes.

20,075. Anywhere else?—No, except the grazing that was taken from those townships in the year 1818.

20,076. I suppose we may take the evidence of Mackenzie as pretty complete on the point?—Yes, my father and grandfather and great grandfather were there.

20,077. What was your father's name?—Donald Macdonald.

20,078. When did he die?—1859.

20,079. Where was his township?—Coulags.

20,080. When he was living as a crofter or small tenant in Coulags, how many tenants were there?—Six, but not when he died; there would be six crofters when he died.

20,081. And they are all away now?—No, there are three left. Lochcarron. Kenneth Macdonald.

20,082. What became of the other three?—They left of their own accord.

20,083. What became of their holdings?—Most of it was added to the township.

20,084. It was not taken from the township?—Part of their low grounds was taken.

20,085. And the rest was added to the township?—Yes.

20,086. What became of the part of the low ground that was taken away?—It was added to the township of Balnacra when their hill grazing was made a deer forest.

20,087. To make up for the lost hill grazing?—Yes, but it was not half the loss.

20,088. That was the arrangement, at any rate?—Yes.

20,089. Is there any other place you would like to mention?—The land that was taken from Achnashellach, from Coulags and Balnacra.

20,090. Give us the names of the places taken from Coulags and Balnacra?—Coille-breac was taken from Balnacra in the year 1818; and Coille-bhan was taken from Coulags in the same year.

20,091. And is now under deer?—Yes.

20,092. Was that grazing land?—Grazing land. They used it as grazing land; they used to live there mostly all the summer.

20,093. But they did not live there all the year round?—No.

20,094. Have you mentioned all you wish to mention?—Yes, I think I have. In 1879 the hill grazing was taken from Coulags, the upper portion, and made a deer forest.

20,095. By Lord Hill?—By Lord Wimborne.

20,096. Can you tell us the extent of the carry of the land taken by Lord Wimborne?—I cannot tell you the extent of the land, but I know the number of sheep that were delivered to him.

20,097. How many were delivered to him?—494.

20,098. He took them over at a valuation?—Yes.

20,099. And I suppose paid for them?—Certainly.

20,100. Did he make any removals in 1879?—No.

20,101. Mr Gordon.—Is Coulags, to which you refer, the lowest place on the Wimborne estate?—Yes.

20,102. That burn that goes past Coulags, is that the march of the property?—The burn is the march between Sir Kenneth Matheson and Lord Wimborne.

20,103. Sir Kenneth goes up between Lord Wimborne and Mr Murray?—Yes.

20,104. Was the grazing common to Coulags and Balnacra?—No, each of them had their own common grazing.

20,105. But it was only the highest portion of the hill that was taken from them?—Yes.

20,106. How many sheep have they at present?—Close on 200.

20,107. And this place of Goirtean you have told us about, was that a sheep place?—It was a club farm; they were all made club farms, what was left of them.

20,108. Are there any crofters at Goirtean now?—Not one.

20,109. Are you acquainted with sheep stock? Have you been a shepherd at all?—No.

20,110. What are you?—I am a labourer.

20,111. Do you act as a gillie at all?—Yes, I have done that sometimes.

20,112. Do you usually do that?—No, not for the last six years.

20,113. Do you think it would be an advantage if Coulags and Balnacra got back their hill?—I know their whole class of stock deteriorated in value since they lost their hill grazing,—their sheep and cattle I mean.

20,114. Is it green ground up at the march of the burn there?—No, it is black ground at the burn; it is mixed pasture.

20,115. Mr Sutherland.—How far did the hill grazing of the Coulags people extend before it was curtailed?—It marched with the New Kelso and Balnacra grounds.

20,116. But how far outward did it extend towards the hill?—About six miles.

20,117. And how far does it extend now?—It extends now about a mile from the township.

20,118. What was done with the grazing as soon as it was taken away from the Coulags crofters?—Made into deer forest.

20,119. Was it taken away since the deer forest was formed?—Yes, certainly. Achnashellach was a forest long before that time.

20,120. And it was added to the forest?—It was added to the forest.

20,121. Then with regard to the township of Goirtean-Fraoch, how far does their pasture extend?—How far did it extend?

20,122. Yes?—It extended into the march with Sir Kenneth Mackenzie of Gairloch.

20,123. What is the name of the place?—It is called the Big Moss.

20,124. And what was done with it again?—It was made a deer forest.

20,125. Also added to the deer forest?—Yes, but it was some time under sheep afterwards.

20,126. It was added to a sheep farm first?—I don't think so, but it was put under sheep some time afterwards by another proprietor—the portion that came into the hands of the Coulin proprietor.

20,127. He put sheep on it, did he?—He had a tenant there.

20,128. And the tenant's holding was afterwards added to the deer forest?—When Lord Wimborne bought Coulin he turned out the tenant and made it deer forest.

20,129. Was it good stock that was in Goirtean?—It was the best crofter stock in Lochcarron.

20,130. Were they able to winter hoggs there?—Yes, they were sending them nowhere else. Two of them came to our township, Coulags,—three of them.

20,131. How many tenants are in Goirtean?—Not one.

20,132. They are all blotted out?—All blotted out. I would know their class of stock when they came to Coulags; I would have known it although I had been a stranger in the place.

20,133. And do you attribute the good qualities of the stock to the grazing?—Certainly; bad land would never make a good stock.

20,134. And that land is now devoted to raising deer?—It is devoted to a deer forest.

20,135. Now if there was a possibility of getting such a holding as this with the hill grazing extended, would you be glad to take one yourself?—Certainly.

20,136. You would be glad to get the chance?—Certainly.

20,137. And have you any doubt as to whether you would be able to stock it and work it?—Perhaps I might not be able to stock it altogether.

20,138. The first year, you mean?—Yes.

20,139. But if you got a reasonable time, would you be able to do it?—I think so; I don't know what I might do.

20,140. But taking all the circumstances into account with which you are acquainted, as I have no doubt you are acquainted with them all, you would be very glad to get the opportunity of taking such a croft?—Certainly.

20,141. And as to the question of rent, you would be perfectly satisfied to take the rent that would be fixed by a public tribunal?—A fair rent.

20,142. And you would be quite willing to leave the fixing of the fair rent to any competent parties?—Yes.

20,143. Or a public tribunal appointed by Parliament?—Still better.

20,144. Mr Duncan Shaw.—Are not the crofters of Balnacra getting some of the grazing back?—Yes.

20,145. Lord Wimborne spent a great deal of money on improvements at Coulags, did he not?—No, he never erected a post or fence to us.

20,146. Did he erect any cottages?—He gave us help to erect them.

20,147. And did he do any fencing?—No, he never erected a post to us. He gave us a few posts and about nine cwts of wire; that is all he gave us. Lochcarron. — Kenneth Macdonald.

20,148. I suppose you don't know what it cost him?—No.

20,149. The Chairman.—Would you mention, Mr Shaw, what was the extent of the land restored by Lord Wimborne? [Mr Shaw.—I cannot tell that, but I have it here that the crofters of Coulags and Balnacra now have about 2000 acres between them.]

20,150. What this man says is that only a very small portion was restored compared with what was taken away. (To witness). I want to ask you this, I think you said you had no stock?—No.

20,151. Have you any capital of your own, any private means?—Yes.

20,152. And would you be able to venture upon a new holding without assistance, or would you look for partial assistance?—Partial assistance.

20,153. Mr Donald Macrae.—Your lordship might ask him is he aware that there are others in this part of the country who have no land at all and yet who would be very glad if facilities were offered, and who are able to stock if they got the chance.

20,154. The Chairman.—Do you know of others in a position similar to yourself, viz., who are anxious to get new holdings if they could obtain them on reasonable terms?—There are very few left in the part of the district where I live.

20,155. How many?—I don't know one.

20,156. I mean in the district?—There are several in the parish.

20,157. How many?—I cannot tell you.

20,158. Will there be half a dozen?—Oh yes.

20,159. Any more?—I would not venture upon numbers. (A voice).—There is another here who would take land if there was a chance.

DUNCAN MACLEAN, Crofter, Balnacra (82)—examined. Duncan Maclean.

20,160. The Chairman.—Were you formerly in Slumbay?—Yes.

20,161. And you went last year to Balnacra?—I got possession of it last year.

20,162. Of a croft at Balnacra?—Yes.

20,163. What rent have you to pay?—£4, 10s.

20,164. You are not under the Crofters Act, I think?—Under lease.

20,165. You got a lease, did you?—Yes, the lease and the Crofters Act too.

20,166. We need not go into that subject. But did you get a written lease from the proprietor?—No indeed.

20,167. Mr Shaw.—I can explain about that. He succeeded his brother, who had a right in common with the other tenants to a lease of the Balnacra township, and the lease gives them the privileges of the Crofters Act; but it is a lease.

20,168. The Chairman.—For a term of years? [Mr Shaw.—For a term of years.]

20,169. Specially bringing the tenants by its terms within the scope of the Act? [Mr Shaw.—Yes. I understand, however, that the proprietor is entitled to take advantage of the lease.]

20,170. They must either be inside the Act or outside the Act? [Mr Shaw.—Well, but there are questions of compensation.]

20,171. You mean that they are partly under the Act and partly outside the Act? [Mr Shaw.—I fancy that is the way of it.]

20,172. Have they the security of tenure that the Act confers? [Mr Shaw.—No, I think not, because the lease fixes a term of years.]

20,173. I should like to see that lease; it seems to be a nondescript sort of document.

20,174. Mr Sutherland.—It ratifies the Act of Parliament, does it? [Mr Shaw.—It gives the crofter, as I understand it, the privileges of the Act so far as not inconsistent with the lease. I daresay Mr Manners will produce it if required.]

20,175. The Chairman.—Are you satisfied with the holding you have got at Balnacra?—It is not easy to say.

20,176. What is it you wish to tell us?—I have seen nine proprietors on this estate.

20,177. Who were the nine proprietors?—There was one of the name of Thomas Og Mackenzie of Applecross. I mind of him well enough.

20,178. Who succeeded him?—A sister of his.

20,179. What was her name?—I don't know that.

20,180. Who succeeded the sister?—Another Thomas.

20,181. And who came after him?—The Duke of Leeds; he sold it to the Duke of Leeds.

20,182. Who succeeded the Duke of Leeds?—The Duchess. [Mr Stuart.—Lord Conyers succeeded him.]

20,183. Who succeeded the Duchess?—I think Lord Conyers succeeded the Duke of Leeds.

20,184. Who succeeded Lord Conyers?—The Hon. Sir John Stuart.

20,185. And who came after Sir John Stuart?—Mr Dugald Stuart.

20,186. Then Mr Murray?—Yes.

20,187. Do you know the land of Balnacra very well?—Yes, I know Balnacra very well; I was brought up there, and was there for forty years.

20,188. Is the land there suitable for new holdings?—There are too many on already.

20,189. Is there anything more you would like to tell us?—I would like to tell you about this village here that my brother told me of.

20,190. What was the name of the place?—Torr-nan-clar.

20,191. There were four tenants there?—At that time.

20,192. And are they away now?—Of course, they came down to this low place.

20,193. To Jeantown?—To Jeantown. That was when Jeantown was made plots; there are 35 plots in it and surrounding, about Tullich and Kirkton and New Kelso and thereabout. I join with Mackenzie there.

20,194. You agree with Mackenzie's evidence about Tullich and Kirkton and Aird?—And New Kelso. At Goirtean-Fraoich, where my mother lived, they had a hill pasture, on which there were 1000 sheep. I know about Moruisg; I was going to Falkirk, and I have seen about 600 wedders going from Moruisg to Falkirk.

20,195. During the season?—Yes, and there were about 200 going from the head of Coire-bhanie.

20,196. Were these crofters' sheep?—They were crofters' at one time, but Scott got it, and there were nine shepherds about that time in all the forest of Strathcarron.

20,197. How many sheep would they have?—About 400 or 500 each.

20,198. How many hirsels had they?—There were nine hirsels.

20,199. They would require 400 or 500 sheep each?—There is not the least doubt of that, and more, but I will make it as easy as anything.

20,200. Now do you wish to mention any other old township that Mackenzie referred to?—Wester and Easter Coire-bhanie and Coire-liridh and Craig.

20,201. You remember these places?—I remember them when they were evicted in the year 1818, and I know the name of the people that were there.

20,202. You remember the evictions themselves?—Yes.

20,203. And you remember the names of the people who were evicted?—Yes.

20,204. You saw the evictions taking place?—Well, I did.

20,205. Who carried out the evictions?—It was one of the name of Murdo Maclennan.

20,206. Was he factor, or ground officer, or what?—He was the man that took the place, of course; Thomas Og, the first Thomas that I mentioned, was the proprietor.

20,207. The removals were at his instance, and what became of the people evicted?—Oh indeed, they were put among other people.

20,208. Some were thrust in upon other townships?—Yes.

20,209. Some were brought down to the shore?—To these plots, and so on.

Lochearron. Duncan Maclean.

20,210. And some found a home in another country?—Some had pity on them, and got them homes; it was not so easy to leave the country at that time as it is now; the sea was very rough to them in those days.

20,211. They had not steamers in those days?—No.

20,212. Were you evicted yourself?—No.

20,213. Was your father evicted?—No, but my mother was evicted from Goirtean-Fraoich.

20,214. And where did she go?—She went as one of the intruders to Coulags.

20,215. Was your father dead at that time?—Long before that.

20,216. And how many of a family were you?—Six.

20,217. Including yourself?—Five and myself.

20,218. Were you in arrear of rent at the time?—No, not a penny. I have had crofts myself for forty years, and I never was in arrear.

20,219. You despise being in arrear?—Yes.

20,220. Who got the land from which your mother was evicted?—Lord Hill evicted them, and made a forest of it; and even this river you speak about as overflowing, it is like the river Nile, it would grow grass in the summer time just like anything.

20,221. The same as the Nile?—The very same. I know a great deal of the country, by driving and going about, and I know both the high ground and down the country.

20,222. Did you ever go to Falkirk with sheep?—Yes.

20,223. How often?—I went several times.

20,224. Helping to drive sheep to the market at Falkirk?—Yes, for Scott, and I have been for nine years with one Peter Brown, a brother of Col. Brown.

20,225. Mr Sutherland.—I would like to ask you one question. It is about the sheep that were put on this grazing; they were good sheep, you say?—Oh, they were that.

20,226. Those that you drove yourself to Falkirk?—They were cheviot sheep that Scott had.

20,227. And they fetched a high price, did they?—Oh, they were good sheep.

20,228. Did they winter them up there?—They wintered so many of them; some of them were sent down at any rate to the low country, and they would have them about on these moors. It was the first place that big sheep were ever put on. Well, then, when they were wintering the old would go away, and they would winter what you call the two-year olds.

20,229. But what did they send down?—The three-year olds.

20,230. The youngest sheep and the weakest?—Yes.

20,231. The rest were there all the winter, of course?—Yes.

20,232. And the land that reared these good sheep, how is it used now?—It is used as a deer forest.

20,233. Did you ever see deer on that ground the time the sheep were there?—That I did.

20,234. Plenty?—Several times.

20,235. The deer were there along with the sheep, were they?—Yes, a few would come now and then, but they were not so plentiful at that time.

20,236. You think there were not so many as there are now?—Oh, not at all so many.

20,237. Do you think the deer then come to a place when the sheep are cleared away?—I think they are rogues and thieves, the deer. They will take something from the croft whenever they can get it.

20,238. And when the deer forest is cleared, it gathers all the deer from the sheep farms round about?—Oh, they will be about the best ground.

20,239. And when one deer forest is made in a place where there is no other one made, do they all gather in there?—They know very well that there is such a place; they smell it.

20,240. And is that a reason why they are making deer forests, do you think?—I don't know what is the reason.

20,241. Do you think then that the deer come in from the sheep farms all round when a deer forest is made?—Applecross was the only place where the deer were plenty in my former days, and it was mostly the home farm even. In the winter time, if it came heavy snow storms, you would see them coming down the side of the hill and going to Applecross and the sea-shore.

20,242. And do they die?—That they do, in scores every year.

20,243. Did you ever hear what is called the rate of mortality in deer? Did you ever hear how many of them die in a hundred?—There will not be some very well pleased to tell about that, those who will be following me.

20,244. Did you ever hear the number of deer that are now in the deer forest?—No.

20,245. Have you any idea of the number of acres it takes to keep a deer?—He will wander from here to there and everywhere.

20,246. You say they gather from other places?—So they do, in a good place.

20,247. Have you any reason to suppose that they are any more plentiful now than they used to be?—Oh, they are.

20,248. Where?—In the deer forest.

20,249. But they are less numerous in the sheep farms?—Oh, they are.

20,250. They are simply gathered from one place into another?—They don't like people to go in among them.

20,251. But is it your own opinion that the land would be put to far better use in rearing sheep, the same as it was?—The ground is not so good.

20,252. As it was?—As it was.

20,253. Why?—I don't know.

20,254. Is it because it is not grazed?—Oh indeed, it was better about my first days than it is now.

20,255. When it was carrying more sheep?—It was carrying more sheep, but the west country was never for anything but grazing unless what would keep the cattle, and green crop would grow, and these things.

20,256. Then about the river; you were saying it was like the River Nile. Did it give a better crop after the floods?—Yes.

20,257. Did it bring down soil on the top of the land, and top-dress it?—It brought some stuff or another on the green ground, and they could grow grass when warm weather would come. It would grow uncommonly well, better than any other place in the country.

20,258. What is the name of the river, the Carron is it?—Yes, the head of the Carron, Achnashellach river we call it at the head of the loch.

20,259. Mr Gordon.—Do you live upon your croft?—I live sometimes on the one.

20,260. Have you two crofts?—No, I have one son in a croft and another son in another croft.

20,261. When you were younger, did you work at anything off your croft?—I did, and was forty years on the croft.

20,262. You could not live upon your croft without making money otherwise?—I tried the best way; a croft hardly keeps a person, it would require a good croft.

20,263. What size of a croft up at Craig would be necessary to keep a man and his family?—It is not according to the arable land; I would not give too much arable land at all, for it is expensive; but three or four cows and about 100 or 130 sheep on the hill pasture would do.

20,264. You think that would be enough to keep a man and his family?—So I think. It used to do us forty years ago.

20,265. Is there any work about there that the crofters could get to do off their crofts, because the attending on the sheep, especially if it was a club farm, would not be required; the sheep would be under a shepherd? Is there any other work to be got in that quarter except what is on the croft?—Not any, except from these great people.

20,266. But if they are cleared out of the country, there would be no work?—If the deer forest was broken and the sportsmen sent out, there would be no work.

Lochcarron. — Duncan Maclean.

20,267. Then you mean that in the meantime, if on the one hand they have taken away the sheep ground, they are of use, on the other hand, in giving work to the people in the neighbourhood?—The sportsmen, yes. And those that come first they give work, and then they get tired of it and give it up.

20,268. Then you are the better of a change of laird occasionally?—Oh, it is not that, but I think I had a right to do as I did in Morayshire.

20,269. What were you doing in Morayshire? Were you a shepherd?—Yes.

20,270. At the glen of Rothes?—Yes. I knew a great deal of Morayshire; I know the whole of it.

20,271. So do I. You were a shepherd up there?—Yes.

20,272. Then you know well enough about sheep?—I ought to know about sheep.

20,273. Supposing these lands were put under sheep again, or a part of them, would you recommend their being put under the club farm system, or each man to have his own stock?—I know when Goirtean Fraoich was there, every one had his own sheep, but, of course, they had one shepherd between them. But it was about that time that they were put under the same mark by the factor.

20,274. Would it not be of importance to have the whole of them in a club farm; would they not sell better with one mark?—Most likely they would; I would approve of that.

20,275. And they would have a better chance of being kept clean and dipped in time?—Yes, they would.

20,276. There is always some man who would be behind,—a black sheep in every flock?—Yes, there is; sometimes two or three.

20,277. Then you would approve of the club farm?—Yes.

20,278. The Chairman.—You said you would not give too much arable for a croft up there. What extent of arable would you give?—I think it would be plenty if a man had about 12 acres or thereabouts, with plenty of hill pasture.

20,279. Hill pasture to carry 130 sheep?—Yes, and a few cattle.

20,280. And a horse?—And a horse.

20,281. How many cows?—I think four cows would do. It would not do to keep too many cows there; they are expensive to keep.

20,282. Now, I am going to read you a passage from Hogg, The Ettrick Shepherd's Tour made in the Highlands in 1805, that is ninety years ago or eight years before you were born. He says:—'Proceeding up the 'glen, I lost sight of Loch Carron, crossed a rapid river 'which issued from amongst the hills to the north, saw 'numbers of Highland cottages in clusters, sheep, mostly 'of the old Highland breed, and some goats, and at last 'came to a change-house, of which I do not know the name, 'at the north-east corner of a lake in the middle of the 'Strath.' That seems to describe the state of matters in his day pretty accurately. Do you remember the change-house?—That I do; I was for eleven years in it.

20,283. In the change-house?—In the old change-house.

20,284. Who kept it?—It was not a change-house in my days; when the new road was made there was a public house put up at Craig, and my father went and took it.

20,285. And you lived with your father in the change-house?—Yes, for eleven years, just close to where the lodge of Achnashellach is, at the end of the loch.

20,286. That is Loch-Dhughaill?—Yes.

20,287. Do you remember the name of the man that used to be in the change-house before?—He was of the name of Duncan Macgregor.

20,288. Mr Duncan Shaw.—You said the ground near the river was like the banks of the Nile, very good for producing crops of hay. Don't you think the land near about there would be rather dangerous for producing crop?—Oh, the proprietor would have to bank the river.

Lochcarron. — Duncan Maclean.

20,289. Mr John Stuart.—Do you remember when Applecross and Lochcarron estate was sold to Lord Middleton and Lord Hill?—Yes.

20,290. Do you remember that at Achnashellach there was a man Scott who held as a sheep farm one-third of the whole of this estate?—Yes, I know that.

20,291. The Chairman.—Scott held the best of it, did he?—Oh yes, far the best of it.

20,292. What was the date of that?—I can hardly tell about the date; I would say about fifty years ago, and later. The farm was not taken from him until the Duke of Leeds got it.

22,293. He was a very large sheep farmer?—He was a very large sheep farmer.

20,294. The largest in the district?—Yes.

20,295. And he used to send his sheep to Falkirk?—Yes.

Alexander Macnair.

ALEXANDER MACNAIR, Crofter, Jeantown (67).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

20,296. The Chairman.—Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

20,297. What was your old rent?—£4.

20,298. And what is the new rent?—£2, 8s.

20,299. Do you remember coming into Jeantown to live?—I was born in Jeantown.

20,300. Where had your father been before?—In Jeantown.

20,301. And your grandfather?—Not in Jeantown.

20,302. Where was he?—In Mid-Strome.

20,303. Why did your grandfather leave Mid-Strome to come to Jeantown?—He did not care for Mid-Strome, and he went east to Arineckaig for some time.

20,304. And then he came from Arineckaig to Jeantown?—No, he died there.

20,305. Do you wish to tell us anything about land?—No, but the hill pasture was taken from us twenty-three years ago, and we were still paying rent for it until the Commission came.

20,306. Who occupies that hill pasture now?—Captain Ferguson of Tullich, but one Mackenzie had it before.

20,307. Do you wish to get back that pasture, or to get other pasture?—We expect to get it back until we get repaid for what we paid for it.

20,308. Do you wish an extension of your hill grazing?—Yes, indeed we do.

20,309. Have you any hill grazing at present?—Very little but black moss.

20,310. What stock have you at present?—One cow and calf.

20,311. And no sheep?—Two lambs.

20,312. You wish to be able to keep sheep?—Yes, if we get the hill pasture.

20,313. Did you keep sheep when you had that hill pasture which you lost?—No, but cattle.

20,314. What cattle had you then?—Two cows and a stirk each, and whoever wished to keep a horse might do so; I myself kept a horse.

20,315. You don't keep a horse now?—No.

20,316. Are you willing and ready to pay the necessary rent for additional grazing, if you get it?—We are still paying rent for it.

20,316*a*. Mr Munro.—How many of a family have you?—Four.

20,317. Are they all living with you still?—Only one.

20,318. Did you manage to bring your children up and send them out to the world from a small croft?—Yes.

20,319. If you got additional land, would you be able to take it and stock it without assistance from outside?—It would be heavy upon me now, for I am an old man now and my family away.

20,320. From whom would you expect help to come?—From government.

20,321. Would you be able to repay the government any advance made?—Little by little, as the place itself repaid it.

20,322. And you think you could do that and pay rent as well?—If the fair rent was like fair rent. Lochcarron. — Alexander Macnair.

20,323. Mr Gordon.—Are you a fisherman?—I gave it up long ago.

20,324. Could you describe to us the hill ground that was lost, what extent it was?—Yes.

20,325. Did it extend over above the club pasture?—Yes.

20,326. It crossed over above Kirkton, and marched with the club? Did they keep sheep on that hill pasture?—No.

20,327. What did they graze on it?—Seventy cows in all, and a stirk each, and sometimes horses.

20,328. Mr Sutherland.—What was done with the grazing of theirs that was taken away?—Capt. Ferguson has it under sheep.

20,329. Mr Duncan Shaw.—You stated that you were still paying for the grazing that was taken away. But was not your rent fixed by the Crofters Commission?—It was.

20,330. Did not the Commission look at your arable land and your grazing?—Yes.

20,331. Mr Sutherland.—When was the grazing taken away from you?—Twenty-three years ago.

20,332. And when did the Commission hear your cases?—Two years ago.

20,333. Was your rent reduced twenty-three years ago when the grazing was taken away from you?—Not until the Commission came.

20,334. So that for twenty years you were paying for a grazing that had been taken away from you?—Yes.

20,335. Mr Duncan Shaw.—Did not the proprietor reduce your rent before the Commission came? Was not Mr Murray giving reductions?—I did not hear of it.

20,336. Did you get no reduction from the proprietor off that rent of £4 that you said you were paying before the Commission came?—Yes, a little then.

20,337. Mr Sutherland.—What date was that?—I cannot say.

20,338. Is it six years ago?—I believe it is.

20,339. The Chairman.—What was the reduction, Mr Shaw? [Mr Shaw.—15 per cent.]

20,340. When? [Mr Shaw.—That was in 1885–86, and then subsequently it was further reduced until the Commission came.]

20,341. At what date was it further reduced before the Commission came? [Mr Shaw.—In 1887.]

20,342. And what was the reduction then made? [Mr Shaw.—33½ per cent.]

20,343. It would simplify the matter if you could give us the original rent of this man's holding, the amount of the first reduction, and the amount of the second reduction before the Commission came, with the dates. Can you give the figures for his individual case? [Mr Shaw.—I cannot give you the dates exactly, because I have not the estate rental here, but the original rent was £4, 5s. 2d. with 5s. of interest.]

20,344. And what was the amount of the first reduction? [Mr Shaw.—It was 15 per cent. on that rent. As far as I recollect it was reduced in 1887 to £3.]

20,345. That was a reduction of—? [Mr Shaw.—33½ per cent.]

20,346. Additional or altogether?—[Mr Shaw.—Altogether.]

20,347. Then when the Commission came they reduced the £3 to £2, 8s.? [Mr Shaw.—Yes.]

20,348. But that does not quite meet the man's complaint. He says that for a long number of years he had been paying rent for grazing that was taken away? [Mr Shaw.—I don't see how he can hold the present management liable for that.]

20,349. Mr Donald Macrae.—Was this reduction offered in 1886 by the estate, confined exclusively to those tenants who paid up all their arrears? I know this case thoroughly, we had it thrashed out thoroughly in the land court?—I cannot say indeed, but there may be some one present who can.

20,350. Did the crofters all apply to the Crofters Commission for an extension of their holdings? Did they apply for Corraig, for these lands of which you were deprived twenty-three years ago?—Yes, and we applied to Mr Murray himself when he bought the estate.

20,351. Did Mr Macintyre's branch of the Crofters Commission come and deal with that application?—Yes, they were speaking about it, but they said it was under lease.

20,352. When the crofters of Jeantown had Corraig originally, what lump rent did Jeantown pay for Corraig?—They paid £30, and four men collected it.

20,353. It was a separate rent, paid separately. Then how many years is it that that rent for Corraig was amalgamated with the rents of the crofts?—Mackenzie of Applecross put the rent of Corraig together with the rents of the crofts.

20,354. And then for twenty-one years, until the Crofters Commission came, they were paying that £30 for Corraig while the tenant of Tullich had it, and while the laird was getting another rent from the tenant of Tullich for it?—Mackenzie had it first, and we were paying rent for it while Mackenzie had it, and Captain Ferguson of Tullich, came after Mackenzie.

20,355. And there was no word on the part of the estate of reducing your rent in consideration of that until the Act of Parliament put the crofters in a position to apply for a fair rent?—No.

William Mackenzie.

WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Crofter, Jeantown (72)—examined.

20,356. The Chairman.—Was your rent fixed by the Commission?—Yes.

20,357. What was the old rent?—£9, 14s.

20,358. And the new rent?—£5, 14s.

20,359. I see the area of your holding is 8 acres 3 roods 30 poles arable, 1 acre 0 roods 31 poles outrun, and two shares in a grazing of 164 acres common to 27 individuals, with 35 shares?—Yes.

20,360. Did you hear the evidence of Roderick Mackenzie?—Yes.

20,361. And do you concur in that evidence?—I think I do.

20,362. Have you any addition to make to it?—I am not too well acquainted east there.

20,363. What is it you wish to tell us?—I would like to tell you about the land that was taken away from us.

20,364. What land was that?—Corraig.

20,365. When was it taken?—Twenty-three years ago; our stock w s given off.

20,366. Is that the land of which the previous witness, Alexander Macnair spoke?—Yes.

20,367. Is this the state of matters, that when the land was taken your rent was not reduced?—That was the reason of the proprietor granting an abatement,—so that he might get in the arrears.

20,368. Is it the fact that when you lost that grazing, there was no reduction made upon your rent?—No reduction.

20,369. And was the land that had been taken from you let to some one else at a rent?—Yes, and it is let now.

20,370. So that the landlord was taking two rents for the same ground, one from the new tenant, and one from you?—Yes.

20,371. And you would like to get hill grazing now?—Yes, indeed, why would we not get it, and we are paying for it.

20,372. Is that the principal thing you wish to tell us?—Yes.

20,373. What was the carry of the ground taken away?—Seventy cows and thirty-five stirks.

20,374. Any sheep?—No sheep.

20,375. Had the township as much stock as that upon it when it was taken away?—I cannot say if there was that much, but I remember when there was not that amount.

20,376. You have no desire to leave your present holding then?—No, not if we get that.

20,377. Mr Duncan Shaw.—You are not paying rent for Corraig now?—Not since the Commission came; but before for twenty-one years.

Lochcarron. — William Mackenzie.

20,378. But the proprietor gave you a reduction of rent before the Commission came?—On whomsoever arrears were he got no abatement. [The Chairman.—Does that consist with your own knowledge?—Yes.]

20,379. Is it not the case that when you came with the money to the landlord he always gave you the abatement?—Yes, if I paid the whole rent.

20,380. But you got back the abatement, did not you?—Yes, if I paid the whole rent.

20,381. But even though you did not pay the whole rent, did not you get the abatement?—No.

20,382. That is not the case.

20,383. The Chairman.—Mr Shaw, you don't seem to meet this man's evidence. The period of time from the date when the land was taken to the date when the first reduction was made on the rent was from 1870 to 1885. He says rightly or wrongly that he and others lost this additional grazing twenty-three years ago, and the previous witness said the first reduction was made in 1885. [Mr Shaw.—The estate changed hands in the meantime; Mr Murray bought the estate in 1882.]

20,384. And he began making a reduction in 1885? [Mr Shaw.—Yes. There were some abatements before that, but I will put in a separate statement.]

20,385. It would appear to be the case that for a considerable period, whoever the proprietor was, they went on paying rent for land that had been taken away; that is the gravamen of their complaint.

John Mackenzie.

JOHN MACKENZIE, Crofter, Strome-More (71)—examined.

20,386. The Chairman.—Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

20,387. What was your old rent?—I forget to a shilling, but it was somewhere about £16. [The Secretary.—£15, 17s. 8d.]

20,388. And what is your new rent?—£9, 10s.

20,389. I see your holding extends to 2 acres 3 roods 29 poles arable, 1 acre 0 roods 38 poles outrun, and a share in 682 acres, common to ten. What is it you wish to tell us?—I have nothing to tell, no trouble that I know; they went all over it before.

20,390. Did you hear the evidence of Roderick Mackenzie?—Yes.

20,391. And do you concur in that evidence?—Yes, I think it is quite correct.

20,392. And very complete?—Very complete. There are some townships in the heights of Kishorn where there were more tenants than he spoke about. I was born there.

20,393. To what townships do you refer specially?—I was born in Tornapreas, where there were eight tenants. And there were eight tenants in Rossal again.

20,394. Is there any other place you would like to mention?—Conamor or North-glen; I heard my father say there were sixteen tenants there between the two.

20,395. Any other place?—Several small places, but I forget them; I have heard my father speak about them.

20,396. But except for these corrections that you make upon the number of tenants in these townships, you agree entirely with Mackenzie's evidence?—Yes.

20,397. And you do not wish to make any additions?—No.

20,397*a*. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to your own township, do you wish an extension of the grazing, or would you like to change altogether if you got a better holding?—It is not worth my while to change; and we have plenty of grazing if the rent was reasonable; but the rent is now about double what it should be.

20,398. Do you think that if an opportunity was given to some others in the locality to form new holdings where these old holdings were, they would like to go there?—Part of them would; those who have strong families.

20,399. You think they would like to go to new places?—I think so.

20,400. And what would you suggest should be done with the holdings they have at present?—I cannot say.

20,401. Would it be an improvement to add them to those that remain?—It would by reducing the rent. If I had three shares for the rent of two, I might live on it perhaps.

20,402. But at present you think your holding is too small to use it to the best advantage?—It is far too small to keep people on; it requires three or four people to work a croft, and there is no income to pay that.

20,403. You think that, beyond a certain size, it is not so easy to make a livelihood out of the croft?—No, sir; if I had 15 or 16 acres of arable land and a horse on it and half a dozen cows, and perhaps a 100 sheep at a reasonable rent, a family could take a living out of that.

20,404. And it would be right for them, or it would be easier for them, to pay a rent in proportion to that than a smaller one?—Oh, three times easier. I will give you the plain fact of it. Last year we got £7, 2s. out of our sheep stock; my rent, which is the lowest rent in the place, is £9, 10s. I got £3 for two stirks, but I spent £3 in buying hay for them. Well, that was all my income off the croft for the twelvemonth.

20,405. So that the beasts you sold were not in fact raised upon your holding at all?—No.

20,406. And if you had a bigger holding, you think you could raise them off your croft entirely?—If I had plenty of arable land.

20,407. And is that holding you have indicated to us the size you would recommend as a minimum? Do you think it would be a wise thing not to have a smaller holding than that?—Not smaller than 12 to 15 acres. It is impossible for any man to take anything out of the ground without a horse as far as I can see. Of course, I am not a farmer; I was a sailor, and I know little about farming; but, of course, I found out this by experience.

20,408. Mr Gordon.—Are you a fisherman now?—I was not a fisherman; I was a sailor, going all round the world.

20,409. How long is it since you left the sea?—Five years since I lost the last vessel I had.

20,410. Had you a vessel of your own?—Yes, several of them, one after another.

20,411. And is this place you have nearest to Strome Ferry?—Just at Strome Ferry, exactly.

20,412. A man occupying the croft you have just now would likely be a fisherman?—Well, there were several people occupying the croft since the lots were made, before I got it.

20,413. Are the people mostly fishermen in your township?—Yes, all fishermen. They make their living by the sea and by working in the best way that they can get on.

20,414. Do many of your townsmen own boats?—Very small boats.

20,415. But it is more a fishing village than a crofting township?—Oh, it is more a crofting township, because the people go away to work.

20,416. How many crofts are there in it?—Ten.

20,417. And you have a tenth share?—Yes.

20,418. And you think it would keep three crofters comfortably?—Yes, I think it would keep three.

20,419. You want three lots for the rent of two? You think they are about a third too highly rented just now?—I know they are. I think for every cow in the Highlands here a rent of £1 would be plenty for the grazing and what would keep her in the winter time.

20,420. I quite agree with you that there is not much profit made off a cow. Have you any sheep in your township?—Yes.

20,421. How many?—About 400 between ten of us.

20,422. And is there not land in your neighbourhood that you could get added to your grazing?—No, there is another township to the east of it, and Mr Murray's property on the north of it; and there is no other land.

Lochcarron. — John Mackenzie.

20,423. The only way you could better your position would be to remove some of the people from your township to better land?—Certainly.

20,424. The Chairman.—You told us how much you made out of your stirks, and how much you made out of your sheep?—We made £7, 2s. out of our sheep stock.

20,425. And out of your stirks?—£3, 4s.

20,426. But against that you have to put the cost of feeding?—I paid £3, 5s. for hay and straw for them.

20,427. How did you live? Was it by fishing?—I live by the money I made when I was young.

20,428. You had a little laid aside?—Yes.

20,429. Have you not sons that go to the fishing?—No. I have one son at sea; he arrived in Dunedin, New Zealand, on the 21st of this month. I have another son in Glasgow, a policeman, and the youngest son is at home along with me; and that is all the family I have.

20,430. Do your sons help you?—I do not want help from them yet.

20,431. Mr Donald Macrae.—Your lordship might ask him, if your lordship considers it of any importance, with regard to the reduction made by Mr Murray. Is it a fact that the reductions were made only to those who paid up the full amount of rent and arrears, and if that was not done, was it not the old rent that was carried forward as a deficit?

20,432. The Chairman.—Were there any reductions given by Mr Murray except to those who paid up their whole arrears?—Not that I know of.

20,433. And when arrears were carried forward, were these the arrears of the old rent?—The arrears of the old rent.

William Mackintosh, Crofter, Kishorn (67). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Willliam Mackintosh

20,434. The Chairman.—Was your rent fixed by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

20,435. What was the old rent?—£5.

20,436. What is the new rent?—£3, 5s.

20,437. Did you hear the evidence of the previous witness with regard to Kishorn?—No, I was too far off.

20,438. What is it you wish to say to us about land? You do not wish to leave your present holding, do you?—No.

20,439. Well, what is it you wish?—I wish to tell you anything that you would ask me; that is the thing.

20,440. What stock have you at present?—Two cows.

20,441. And any stirks?—No, not at present; I might have.

20,442. Have you any sheep?—Two sheep.

20,443. Have you a horse?—No.

20,444. You have just two cows and two sheep?—Yes.

20,445. Have you enough of grazing for them?—I have plenty for that which I have.

20,446. Do you wish any more?—We were asking a bit of grass that was taken from us.

20,447. When was the grazing taken from you?—I cannot tell.

20,448. Did you ever make any application for additional grazing?—No, I did not.

20,449. Mr Shaw.—There was an application made by the township for some additional grazing on part of the farm of Reraig, which is at present in the proprietor's hands and is entered in the valuation roll at £75. When Mr Murray bought the estate he set great store by this farm for himself and was very anxious to keep it entire; and he objected to this application being granted on the ground that the farm was less than £100 a year. On that ground the application was thrown out.

20,450. The Chairman.—I see the decision is as follows:—'Finds that the said objection is well 'founded in point of fact and law, and that the applica- 'tion is incompetent; therefore dismisses the same. It was a part of the farm of Reraig that you wanted?—No; it belonged to themselves, but it was added to us.

20,451. It is a part of Reraig now?—Yes.

20,452. And you wanted it back?—Yes, if that be your will.

20,453. Are you still desirous of getting it back?—I do not know indeed.

20,454. Mr Sutherland.—Would you take back the home farm of Reraig if you got it?—No.

20,455. Why?—We could not manage it.

20,456. Is it too large?—Yes, it is too large for us.

20,457. Do you know what stock is on it now?—No.

20,458. Why do you think it is too large? (No answer.)

20,459. Would you not stock it?—I don't believe we could.

20,460. Would you stock it in two or three years?—I could not say.

20,461. What part of Reraig farm was taken from you?—Glaican-dorain, the nearest part.

20,462. And who occupied Reraig before that time?—Donald Kennedy.

20,463. Did he hold the remainder of the present farm as a farm then?—Yes, he had the whole farm.

20,464. And then a piece of your pasture was taken away from you and added to the farm that already existed?—It was Kennedy that got it after that.

20,465. And there was nothing left with you, but what would hold two cows and two sheep?—No, nothing left but that.

20,466. How much stock would the tenant of Reraig have before he got your ground?—I don't know.

20,467. Had he 100 sheep, can you say?—Yes, and more than that.

JOHN MACLEAN, Labourer, Arineckaig, (40)—examined.

20,468. The Chairman.—You are not a crofter?—No, I have a house at Arineckaig. I am a cottar.

20,469. You have no land?—No.

20,470. And you pay no rent?—No.

20,471. Where do you get your labouring work mostly?—Railway surfaceman.

20,472. How long have you been a railway surfaceman?—Over two years.

20,473. What wage have you for that?—17s. a week.

20,474. And, of course, you have steady employment?—Steady employment.

20,475. What had you done before you were a surfaceman?—Every job that would come in the way; fencing.

20,476. A general labourer?—Yes, and taking contracts.

20,477. What sort of contracts?—Fencing contracts.

20,478. Are you anxious to take a holding if it can be got?—Yes, where I was born, at Achnashellach.

20,479. What part?—Goirtean-Fraoich.

20,480. You want to go back there?—Yes, where my forefathers were.

20,481. And where your father lived when you were born?—Yes.

20,482. And your grandfather?—Yes, and his grandfather too.

20,483. What size of holding had your grandfather and great grandfather in Achnashellach?—I cannot tell the state of my grandfather's, but my father's I will tell. There were eight tenants.

20,484. The houses were all in a cluster, I suppose?—They were near each other.

20,485. And the land was in runrig?—Yes.

20,486. What was the total extent arable?—I cannot tell you that, but I will tell of the sheep; there were about 1000 sheep among them.

20,487. And what cattle had they?—They would have six cows each and followers.

20,488. Had they a shepherd?—Yes.

20,489. Had they one hirsels or more than one?—Two hirsels.

20,490. And you think there is good land there that would afford a place for settling you as well as other people?—Yes, plenty land, and good land too, and about the river this man was speaking about.

20,491. Well, say this gentleman?—I mind when I was there, I was but a young boy at the time, my father and another man were working there three days, working at estate labour, embanking the river, and they were keeping the river from flowing out upon the arable land.

20,492. And did they succeed in keeping it out?—Yes, as long as they were there.

20,493. Then if you got a holding, what size of holding would you like?—I would take between 16 and 17 acres of good arable land.

20,494. And a carry of how many sheep?—100 or 130.

20,495. How many cows?—Five or six, and followers.

20,496. Could you venture upon an undertaking of that size without assistance?—No, with assistance.

20,497. You would need some?—Yes, I would need some, my family is rising and they would help me.

20,498. How many sons have you?—Three.

20,499. And you would depend upon their help?—Yes, if they would be living.

20,500. Is there a general desire among the descendants of those who lived at Achnashellach in the district to get back there?—Yes, some of them are wanting back there.

20,501. And you would be very glad to give up your job as a surfaceman if you got a croft at Achnashellach?—Yes, very glad.

20,502. And give up your 17s. a week?—Yes.

20,503. Mr Sutherland.—Did you ever hear anything said about the ground that the people had in Achnashellach forest before, as to its quality? Was it good grazing ground?—Yes, the best in the country.

20,504. And did you ever hear anything about the quality of the sheep it produced?—Yes, they were good.

20,505. Did you ever hear that all the sheep, or a great number of them perished from storms or floods, or anything of that kind?—No, I did not hear of that.

20,506. And do you think if that had happened you would have heard of it?—I think I would.

20,507. You think it is likely you would have heard?—I think I would.

20,508. Do you know how much pasture those people had attached to their holdings when they were there? how far east did they go?—They were marching with Sir Kenneth Mackenzie of Gairloch at some parts.

20,509. Could you tell us the boundaries? did they go to the top of Bealach-sgoltaidh?—Oh no, that is on the other side.

20,510. In what direction, then, did they go?—Towards Moine-mhor and Carnabreac.

20,511. Do you know that ground yourself now?—Yes, I do.

20,512. What use is it put to now?—Under deer.

20,513. What was done with it after the people were put out of it?—Under deer.

20,514. Was it put under deer at the time it was taken from the crofters?—Yes, so far as I remember.

20,515. How many years ago was that?—Thirty years.

20,516. You said, in answer to a question by the chairman, that you would very gladly take a holding if you got it under likely conditions of success?—Yes.

20,517. And you would be quite willing to give up your present occupation if you got such a holding?—Yes.

20,518. That is because you expect it would make a better livelihood?—To be sure.

20,519. And was there any other idea present in your mind when you made that statement? Are you secure of the employment you have from the Highland

Lochcarron. — John Maclean.

Railway?—Oh yes, but they might put me out of it any day they like.

20,520. And I suppose, in any holding you are contemplating, you would expect to get the benefit of the present Act which gives security of tenure?—Yes.

20,521. And then you would have a permanent home, you think, and a motive to work?—Yes.

20,522. And given all these conditions and the others you mentioned you think you could make a good livelihood, better than you have now?—Well, my forefathers were doing it whatever.

20,523. But quite apart from what your forefathers did, judging by the circumstances to-day, are you of opinion that you also could make a good livelihood?—Yes, I am.

20,524. Then with regard to the river that was said to overflow its banks?—Yes, I will tell you about that.

20,525. You stated, I think, that while people were there they kept the embankment in repair and did not allow the river to overflow?—Yes.

20,526. It is only since the people were put out of there that the bank was allowed to go to ruin?—Yes.

20,527. There is, in fact, no one interested in keeping it within its bounds in the deer forest, is there?—No, they are only wanting to get it away altogether.

20,528. But if it was occupied and tenants were there, it would be their interest to keep up the embankment in the part?—Yes.

20,529. And they did keep it up, you say?—Yes, they did that.

20,530. Mr Munro.—Did I understand you to say that you had 17s. a week in permanent employment from the Railway Company?—Yes.

20,531. And you would be prepared to give that up for a croft?—Yes, rather than be a slave all the days of my life.

20,532. 17s. a week is very nearly £45 a year. Now do you think you would make that out of your croft?—Yes.

20,533. And I suppose you would consider yourself very much more independent on a croft than in railway service?—Yes, to be sure.

20,534. That is one of the inducements that lead you to desire possession of a croft?—Yes.

20,535. The Chairman.—Has your wage been raised during the two years you have been with the company?—Yes, it was raised a sixpence, from 16s. 6d. to 17s. a week.

20,536. And are there surfacemen on the line that get a little more than you do?—Yes, the foremen.

20,537. What do they get?—They get 2s. over that.

20,538. They get 19s.?—And some of them over that.

20,539. What is the highest a surfaceman gets on the Highland Railway within your district?—I think it is £1.

20,540. So that you may, by diligence and attention to your duties, rise to £1 a week?—Yes, that is according if they leave me there; but they may put me out of that, may be to-morrow.

20,541. You are paying no rent at all?—No rent at all.

20,542. Have you a patch of potato ground?—No, except if the tenants will give me just a drill.

20,543. Have you any drills this year?—Yes.

20,544. How many?—I cannot tell.

20,545. More than one?—Yes.

20,546. Have you ten?—Oh no.

20,547. How many have you?—I cannot tell you.

20,548. As many as six?—Well, I have a drill from one or two of them; from two or three; yes, I will have six.

20,549. Do you pay anything for that?—No.

20,550. And do you get sufficient potatoes from your drills in an ordinary year to carry you through the winter?—Not half.

20,551. But they help you?—Yes, they help me.

20,552. What do you do for fuel? do you get peats?—Yes, I get peats.

20,553. Where?—At Arineckaig.

20,554. Do you pay anything for that?—No.

20,555. So that you have your house rent free, and peats, and some drills of potatoes from your neighbours, and 17s. a week?—Yes.

Lochcarron. — John Maclean.

20,556. Now do you think it would be safe, notwithstanding the fact, of course, that you may lose your employment from the company, to throw up all that and venture on a holding of the kind you describe at Achnashellach?—Yes.

20,557. You are quite prepared to do that?—Yes.

KENNETH MACLEAN, Crofter, Arineckaig (87). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.) — Kenneth Maclean.

20,558. The Chairman.—Did you hear the evidence of Roderick Mackenzie?—Yes, and he gave it correctly.

20,559. What was your old rent?—I was born in Craig and I was in Goirtean-Fraoich.

20,560. What was your old rent?—£8.

20,561. And your present rent?—I am not there now; they put me out.

20,562. Was the rent for your holding at Arineckaig fixed by the Crofters Commission?—Yes, but I would prefer to pay my rent in Goirtean-Fraoich rather than get the present place for nothing.

20,563. What was your old rent at Arineckaig?—£12 and a few shillings.

20,564. And what is the new rent?—£11, 3s.

20,565. You would like to get a holding at Goirtean-Fraoich, would you?—Yes, indeed I would.

20,566. Is that where you were born?—No, but at Craig.

20,567. Why are you so anxious to go to Goirtean-Fraoich?—Because I would prefer to be there and pay the rent for it, than though I got the place I have for nothing.

20,568. Is the land so much better?—Yes; one acre of it is better than four of those I have.

20,569. You would be ready to pay the rent of such a holding and to put up the necessary holdings?—Yes, indeed I would.

20,570. Have you a family?—Yes, my son is here.

20,571. What family have you?—Three sons and two daughters, and one son died two years ago.

20,572. How many of the family are at home with you?—Only one of the sons.

20,573. How old is he?—Twenty-nine or thirty.

20,574. And if you went to a new holding he would help you, I suppose?—Perhaps he would; yes.

20,575. Does the evidence given by Roderick Mackenzie express your views fully?—Yes, I think so.

20,576. Mr Sutherland.—What stock have you?—Three cows and followers.

20,577. Any sheep?—Yes.

20,578. How many?—About eighty or thereabout, a club stock.

20,579. Among how many?—Nine.

20,580. Do you mean the eighty among the nine?—No.

20,581. Eighty sheep each?—Yes, between lambs and others.

DUNCAN SHAW (42), W.S., Inverness, Factor for Lochcarron—examined. — Duncan Shaw.

20,582. The Chairman.—You have a statement to make, I think?—I should like first to make a statement on behalf of Mr Manners, the agent for the Achnashellach estate, who, as surveyor of the second district of the Inverness-shire County Council, was obliged to attend a meeting to day in connection with Beauly Bridge, and who is therefore unable to be present. [Mr Shaw read the statement.]

20,583. I think the circumstances under which you appear, Mr Shaw, on behalf of Mr Manners, are properly explained in his letter to the secretary of 26th July, in which he says:—'Dear Sir, Thanks for yours of 24th inst. As I find I have to go south to-day and cannot return before Friday morning in time for my Road meeting of C.C., so that I shall not receive a reply to my last to you in time to enable me to take any steps, I have asked Mr D. Shaw, who will appear on behalf of Mr Murray of Lochcarron, to kindly read my statement as to Achnashellach Forest. Of course I alone am responsible for this statement, but am quite ready to show my estate books showing the expenditure, if required.' The statement which you have read is not your own, but is a statement by Mr Manners, and, of course, as he says, you are not responsible for what is in it. Are you prepared to answer questions upon it?—No, I don't think it would do for me to answer questions.

20,584. Personally, I happen to know how Mr Manners is not here to-day; he had to attend a meeting in which undoubtedly the public interest is materially concerned, and it was a choice between coming here and attending that meeting. Therefore, the reason he gives for his absence is a good one; but as you say you are unable to answer questions with regard to that statement, it is difficult for us to accept it, unless Mr Manners can give us an opportunity of examining him upon the statements it contains?—I have no doubt Mr Manners will be prepared to do that at such time as will suit the Commission.

20,585. We can hardly come back here for the purpose of examining him?—He will no doubt attend any meeting, on getting sufficient notice of it.

20,586. Very well, we may have to take him some distance. Do you know anything of the transference of this property?—I do know a little; I have a reference to it in my own statement. It was originally part of the estate of Applecross.

20,587. You quite understand, with reference to the paper you have read, that we cannot take it without Mr Manners?—Subject to Mr Manners allowing himself to be examined.*

20,588. Quite so. Then you were going to read a statement with regard to the Lochcarron property?—Yes. It is as follows:—

I am factor for the estate of Lochcarron, and have been so since 1st January 1886.

This estate formed part of the old Applecross property and was sold along with another considerable extent of territory by the late Thomas Mackenzie to the Duke of Leeds in 1854. In 1862, the late Vice-Chancellor, Sir John Stuart, purchased the estate from the Duke of Leeds' successor. Upon his death he left the greater portion of it to his eldest son, Mr Dugald Stuart, but he left the portion now known as the estate of Kishorn to his younger son, Mr John Stuart. The division which the Vice-Chancellor made as between the two portions was very complicated and inconvenient.

With reference to this division it may be sufficient here to state that Courthill House, which is the Mansion House of the property, has only a few acres of land attached to it, and is surrounded by the estate of Kishorn while another portion of the estate of Kishorn cuts into this estate most inconveniently at the Eastern extremity of the former estate. In 1882 Mr Charles James Murray, the present proprietor, purchased the Estate that is the whole of what was known previously as the estate of Lochcarron—less that portion now known as Kishorn—from Mr Dugald Stuart.

In addition to the purchase money Mr Murray has spent in improvements on the property in the shape of building, fencing, draining, planting, and the like, up to this date upwards of £19,000. Of this sum upwards of £2000 has been spent in repairs on tenants' buildings.

20,589. How much on tenants' buildings?—£2000.

29,590. Do you mean by that crofters' buildings?—Both crofters and farmers.

20,591. How much on farmers?—I have not exact details; you may take it perhaps the half. Upwards of £800 has also been spent on fencing for tenants

20,592. Both crofter tenants and farmers?—Yes. And upwards of £800 on drainage for tenants.

20,593. The same observation applies there, I presume?—Yes, and upwards of £1300 on wages outside of the estate establishment, and of the wages paid by the contractors for the improvements of which the estate has no record.

Lochcarron. Duncan Shaw.

20,594. Did much of that £1,300 go into the pockets of the crofters?—Oh yes, it was all local labour. Of course there was a lot more that the contractors for the various buildings employed.

A great proportion of the people employed in carrying out the various works for the proprietor and contractors who were requested to give the preference to local workmen, both skilled and unskilled, were from the locality, and a large share of the expenditure thus found its way into their pockets.

I may here note as bearing further on the expenditure, that in 1887, in commemoration of the Queen's Jubilee, Mr Murray placed in the bank at Lochcarron a sum of £500 as a building fund, out of which the smaller tenants on his estate could get loans for the purpose of repairing or rebuilding houses, barns, steadings, &c. on the property without any charge for interest. These loans are made repayable by easy instalments, and the money is put back again into the fund, so that it is practically never exhausted. Mr Murray, of course, reserves to himself the right of considering and if thought proper rejecting any individual application. At present there are twenty-five loans out of the fund, averaging about £13 each, and the average instalments for the repayement of loans is eight. For house building about £40 is usually advanced in suitable cases.

At the date of purchase the rental of the estate was, exclusive of sporting subjects, £1963, of which £730 was paid by the larger tenants and £1233 by the smaller.

The present rental of the estate, exclusive of sporting subjects which are entered in the valuation roll at £730, is £1455, of which £603 is payable by the larger tenants and £852 by the smaller tenants. The Crofters Commission visited the estate in 1891-92 and fixed fair rents for these tenants who came under the Act. The proprietor had himself been previously giving these tenants large deductions. The Commission ordered £243 of arrears to be paid, but the present arrears on the crofters' rents amount to £309, upwards of 50 per cent. of the crofter rental.

The average estate expenditure for the last three years has been upwards of £2700, made up as follows:—

Public burdens and taxes, . . .	£500
Ordinary repairs and estate upkeep,	800
Expenses of management, . .	200
Game, garden, wood, . . .	500
Establishment at Courthill, . .	700
Total, ...	£2,700

And that for the preceding years has been, if anything, greater. It will be observed that the first three items alone, public burdens, repairs, and management swallow up the whole rents, even assuming them all to be punctually paid. Over and above the foregoing expenditure, which with the exception of some small items for raw materials is made entirely in the Highlands and principally in the district, there is the expenditure for the household at Courthill, also largely made in the district, which is seldom less than an average of £100 a month. There are twenty-four permanent employees on the estate and in the mansion house who are Highlanders, and several others who are employed pretty continuously on day's wages.

I have endeavoured to get any documents that would throw light on how the estate was divided and occupied in former times, but I have only been able to get an old plan prepared at the time the lots were laid out, from which it appears that in the year 1817 there were six crofters' lots in the township of Janetown or Lochcarron, 12 at Strome, 20 at Achintraid, and 49 in the Shieldaig district—or 87 lots in all. There may have been, and probably were more, but from all that can be learned now, the number seems to have been considerably less than at the present day.

There are at present from 165 to 170 lots on the estate, of which only 24 are in the Shieldaig district. Mr

* Mr Manners appeared at a meeting of the Commissioners at Tain on 2nd November 1893 and was examined. For his statement see report of Tain sitting (Question 31,905–31,915).

Lochcarron. —— Duncan Shaw.

Murray has not during his tenure of the estate turned off a single crofter or altered a crofter's holding, except where circumstances such as death rendered this necessary.

In the township of Lochcarron, the average holding of each crofter is about 4 acres, with a share of a common grazing of 164 acres. In addition to the crofters there are upwards of 70 other tenants or cottars in this township.

In the Slumbays which lie immediately to the West of Lochcarron, the average extent of the croft is about 4 acres arable, and these townships have common grazing which extends to upwards of 800 acres.

The township of Strome-Carronach which adjoins the Slumbays to the west is worked runrig for the arable land and as a club farm for the pasture by six tenants who have 40 acres arable, 98 acres low ground grazing, and about 530 acres hill pasture.

In the Stromemore township, which marches with Stromecarronach to the west and which absorbed another township called Stromemeanach, the average extent of arable land in each holding is about 4 acres and the 10 lots have 142 acres of old arable ground and wood pasture and about 540 acres of hill grazing in common.

In the township of Ardniaskan, at the north of Lochcarron, which is practically a fishing community, the average croft contains a little over an acre arable, and the hill pasture extends to about 330 acres and is common to the 19 lots.

In the township of Achintraid, on the south side of Loch Kishorn, the average croft contains about 3½ acres arable and the hill pasture extends to 580 acres and is common to the 21 lots of the township.

In the township of Shieldaig, on the north side of the estate, the average croft is about 2 acres, and there are about 344 acres of common pasture for the 8 lots. There are in this township upwards of 40 cottars and tenants not under the Crofters Act.

Altogether there are at present on the estate 154 crofters or small tenants and about 138 cottars.* There is one farmer who pays a rent of over £300 and whose farm extends to 88 acres arable and capable of cultivation and 8400 pasture; another who pays a rent of £48 and whose farm extends to 36½ acres arable and 1420 acres pasture; another who pays a rent of £105 for an inn and farm, the farm extending to about 113 acres arable and 300 acres pasture; and another who pays a rent of £37, 10s. for another inn, a ferry, and two shares in the Stromemore township. There is a small sheep farm in the proprietor's own hands valued in the valuation roll at £75, containing about 24 acres arable and 1465 pasture, and a large croft not included in the above with 8 acres arable and 800 acres pasture. There is a deer forest in the hands of the proprietor extending to about 11,000 acres.

The total extent of the estate is about 28,900 acres, of which 1050 acres may roughly be said to be arable and 27,850 acres pasture. Of this land the larger farms have 262 acres arable and 11,585 pasture; and the crofters 725 acres arable and 5270 pasture.

Of land not at present in cultivation there is only about 75 acres that could be cultivated. Of this land 20 acres are on Tullich farm, 24 on Reraig farm, and 31 in the deer forest.

The wintering ground on the forest is at Balgy, where 30 of the above acres are, and at Glenshieldaig, where there is about an acre of arable land. If these were taken away for crofts the deer forest would be ruined.

Assuming that the estate were to be divided up among the crofters and cottars, this would give a little over 3 acres arable and a little over 93 acres pasture to each.

* To prevent misconception, I think it right to add that when I stated there were 138 cottars on the estate, I used the term "cottars" not simply as applying to persons who had squatted down on crofts or held sub-tenancies from crofters, but as including all who occupy houses alone or houses and gardens as distinct from Crofts. Of mere squatters or sub-tenants there are comparatively few, and the other class of cottars includes about forty-two fishermen, fourteen tradesmen such as shoemakers, tailors, &c., eight merchants or dealers, and seven labourers. A number of the houses are occupied by women who earn their livelihood by keeping lodgers and otherwise.

Lochcarron. —— Duncan Shaw.

It is of importance, however, to consider what extent of land is required for a holding out of which a tenant could make a living without other resource, and it seems to me that the minimum is somewhat as follows:—about 20 acres arable of fairly good quality and 300 acres pasture. This would enable the tenant to keep approximately the following stock:—2 ponies, 6 cows and followers, and 50 sheep.

On the footing of this minimum extent, the estate would provide holdings only for between 50 and 90 tenants in all, as against 154 crofters at present on it, and these would require to be provided with better houses, offices and stock. The average cost of forming such a new holding might be taken as follows:—

House and Offices, . . .	£300
Stock, ...	170
Making a total of . . .	£470

for each holding, and for say, 50 holdings £23,500. Allowing an average rent of £25 for each croft, the rental of the estate with 50 crofts would then be £1250 as against £2185 (including the sporting land) at present. It is manifest that this large reduction of rental—nearly 50 per cent.—would, especially if similar reductions took place on the neighbouring estates, greatly increase the local rates, already very high, while the demands on the rates would certainly not diminish with an increasing population.

On the other hand, the large sums at present spent on the estate, and circulated among the people, would cease so soon as the attraction of sport should be withdrawn.

It is of importance, too, to consider how such a change would work out in the course of time, and a very important point to keep in view is the character and productiveness of the soil. There can be no question that the arable portion has deteriorated very much since it was brought into cultivation, and even the pasture will no longer keep such a number of stock as it used to. When the Crofters Commission visited this district, tenant after tenant complained of the poor return they got from their land. The following are instances:—

Alexander Macdonald, Slumbay, said that corn would not grow on his croft and he had to buy meal every year.

John Maclean, Slumbay, who has two lots extending to about eight acres, said he could not make a living out of his croft, that he made three bolls meal in 1890, but less the previous year, and had to buy seed.

John Stewart, Slumbay, complained of his land being full of stones and very small patches of arable land.

Angus Maclean, Slumbay Island, said he got little or no return out of the land.

Alexander Mackenzie, Stromemore, said he could not cultivate much on account of the thinness of the soil and also rocks, and had to plough sideways.

John Mackenzie, Stromemore, said the soil had deteriorated one third.

Farquhar Mackay, Ardniaskan, complained of the bad quality of the hill pasture.

Widow Margaret Maclean, Shieldaig, refused to make one holding of her house and land so as to come under the Crofters Act, because as she said 'we cannot 'make anything of it.'

It is not surprising to hear complaints such as these. The soil originally was poor. It has been cultivated year after year, in most cases without any regard to a proper rotation, and with almost no assistance from fertilizers, the great bulk of the manure used being seaware, which is more of a stimulating than a feeding manure. A large proportion of the annual crop is potatoes, and these make a great demand on the soil, being heavy feeders and rapidly using up all the organic matter in the soil. How this is to end it is hard to say. At present the average return from corn is said to be only about one and a half and from potatoes four fold as against a minimum return of three of corn and of from six to eight fold of potatoes in the Lowlands, but by-and-bye even these present scanty crops are bound to become still less, unless means are used to put a stop to the deterioration. This can only be done in one of two ways, either by letting the ground get a rest, or better still, by sowing it down with grass and pasturing it with cattle, or by applying artificial manure. The one process is long, the other expensive, and it is the latter which has been generally adopted in the southern counties (for even they, with a much richer soil, suffer from continuous cropping) as they cannot there afford the long delay involved in the former.

What is to become of the people if the first plan be adopted, and where are they to get the money if the second is tried?

But there is almost a more important point than this. At the present day agriculture is universally admitted to be in a state of terrible depression. Even large farmers who cultivate their land with the highest skill and with unstinted application of artificial manures and who breed the very best of stock insist that they cannot make farming pay. How then can the poor crofter with inferior soil, little agricultural skill, inferior stock, and dependant on the sea shore for manure make a proper living out of his holding?

It seems to me a necessary preliminary to increasing the number of holdings, assuming this in itself to be a desirable thing to do something to relieve the present agricultural depression and improve the price of stock and produce. It would be out of place to enter into a discussion of this matter here, but many who have thought over the matter carefully are convinced that a great deal could be done by the alteration of the currency laws, the introduction of legislation for the marking of home produce as distinct from foreign produce, the more equitable distribution of taxation on land, and the bringing of the producer into more direct relationship with the consumer.

To divide up the land amongst cottars and crofters, and increase the number of small holdings without first doing something to relieve the existing depression, would only accentuate the evils at present complained of, and at the end of no distant period, with the increase of the population, the continued deterioration of the soil and growing poverty of the people, the same procedure would be applied for again, and if there were then no further land to divide, remedies quite outside of the scope of the present commission would have to be thought of.

(Signed). Duncan Shaw.

20,595. I want to call your attention to a passage from certain "Letters from the Highlands," reprinted from the Times by Messrs Blackwood & Sons in 1884, to see if it contains, according to the best of your knowledge, a correct account of the transferences of the estate of Applecross. On p. 59 we have the following:—'The 'late Duke of Leeds bought the whole of this property 'for £135,000, and I believe that the following remark- 'able figures may be relied upon. The acreage is '144,000, consequently the price per acre was 18s. 4d. 'On the death of the Duke, Lord Conyers, who inherited, 'broke up the property into three lots, Applecross 'proper, 63,000 acres, was sold to Lord Middleton for '£78,000; Courthill, 32,000 acres, to Vice-Chancellor 'Sir John Stuart, a cadet of the Stuarts of Ballachulish, 'for £52,000; and Achnashellach, 49,000 acres, to 'Lord Hill for £76,000. Lord Middleton is still in 'possession of his 63,000 acres. As for Courthill, '26,000 acres were sold by the Vice-Chancellor's heir in '1882 to Mr C. J. Murray, the member for Hastings, 'for £95,000. In 1866, Auchnashellach had been 'again sub-divided. Mr Robert Tennant bought 'Achnashellach proper, 19,000 acres; Lord Elphin- 'stone the 12,000 acres of Coulin; Mr Shaw the '8,300 acres of Glencarron; and Sir Alexander 'Matheson the 10,000 acres of New Kelso. The 'aggregate sum paid was £120,000. In 1872, Lord 'Wimborne gave £70,000 for Achnashellach; in '1873, £75,000 for Coulin; in 1875, £50,000 for 'Glencarron. Thus in six to nine years there was an 'advance of £75,000 upon £120,000; but it is to be 'noted that in the meantime the Dingwall and Skye 'Railway had been opened, a striking proof of the 'effect of improved communications upon Highland 'property.' I suppose we may take it that these figures are correct?—I think they are correct; but I cannot speak with certainty as to the prices, except that of the Lochcarron estate, which is correct.

20,596. So far as you are able to say it is correct?—So far as I am able to say.

20,597. Because these are very striking figures, and the matter is there put in a compact form. The name of the author of the book is not given?—I believe it may be quite correct. I have heard that there was a tremendous increase.

20,598. Now with regard to Jeantown, you mentioned that in 1816 there were six lots?—Yes, I said that was shown on the plan.

29,599. Well, we find from Hogg, The Ettrick Shepherd's Tour in the Highlands in 1803, at pp. 72–3, the following passage:—'I was exceedingly gratified at 'here meeting with a long straggling village, consisting 'wholly of neat, modern, commodious houses. Having 'never heard of it, I made enquiry concerning its 'erection, and was informed that it had lately arisen 'under the auspices of Mackenzie of Applecross, who 'had let it off in feus to the fishermen, and such as 'chose to settle there. This is a most laudable ex- 'ample set by this gentleman, an example of which 'every reflecting mind must approve, and which can 'never be too much encouraged, either by individuals 'or by public bodies of men. It is only by concen- 'trating these hardy and determined people into such 'bodies, that they shall ever be enabled to acquire the 'proper benefit of the inestimable fishings on their 'coasts, or that ever the germs of manufactures shall 'be successfully planted on these distant shores. This 'spot, pitched on by Applecross for so beneficial a 'purpose, is not so commodious in every respect as 'it might be wished that it were; but perhaps Apple- 'cross had no better. In this spot it is impossible to 'unite utility with compactness and elegance, for there 'being no valley the houses are drawn out in an 'irregular line along the side of the loch, and however 'well situated for taking advantage of trade and fishing, 'it is a very untoward field for improvements in agri- 'culture.' I suppose you agree with all that?—I think so; the plan shows a lot of little dotted houses along the line of the shore, but only the six lots on the land. There appear to have been houses without any land attached to them.

20,600. Do you know anything of the transference of people who had been evicted from various places that were mentioned in the course of our inquiry to-day, down to this parish?—No, I cannot say that I do; we have no documents to show that. Of course, we have only been in possession since 1882. I believe there were some changes made from one estate to the other.

20,601. You say there are 154 crofters and 138 cottars on the estate?—Yes.

20,602. These cottars have no land?—Nothing beyond perhaps a patch of garden.

20,603. Any patches they have, I suppose, are on land already in the occupation of crofters?—They are surrounded by crofting lands.

20,604. I mean to say, they are within the area of land occupied by crofters?—They are within the area of the townships.

20,605. And constitute, therefore, a very serious burden upon the townships?—Yes, I would think so.

20,606. That, I daresay you would admit, is a very undesirable state of matters?—Well, of course, they make their living, I suppose, in other ways; for instance, fishing.

20,607. But the living of a cottar is necessarily precarious; more precarious than that of a crofter?—If he were a good fisherman I should think he would do better than a crofter.

20,608. You would prefer a man to be a cottar?—If he were a good fisherman, beside the sea, I should say he could make more out of his fishing than he could out of land; that is my impression.

20,609. Don't you think that the exclusive occupation of land in forest and large farms, in the immediate neighbourhood of 154 crofters and 138 cottars, is rather an anomalous state of matters?—I don't know that it is.

20,610. That is to say, a total of nearly 300 families on the outskirts?—You would not have land enough for them all if you tried to divide it up to benefit them really. You would require to give them enough land, I take it, to be of real benefit to them, and I don't see how you could work it out, they are such a large number, and with the quantity of land available.

20,611. The crofter acreage, you have mentioned, is in some cases 4 acres arable and in other cases 2 acres arable, as an average?—Yes.

20,612. That I suppose you would admit to be a somewhat narrow holding?—As a holding by itself, it is a small holding.

20,613. Too small to live by?—I fancy there would be great difficulty under the present conditions, which have greatly altered from what they used to be long ago. In the days of old, the crofter got most of his living round about him; now, I take it, he incurs grocery bills, and that sort of thing, and consequently has to find much more cash than he used to.

20,614. You would be in favour, theoretically I mean, and if the thing could be done in a legitimate manner, of increasing such holdings?—Yes, to enable a man to make his living by his holding alone; if you want to benefit him in any way you would require to do that.

20,615. Are you in favour of crofters being divided into two classes, those who live by their holdings and those who live partly by their holdings and partly by labour?—Do you include fishing in the labour?

20,616. Yes?—I have a strong idea that those who are near the sea ought to live by the harvest of the sea rather than the harvest of the land, and that their holdings should only be something like a house and a garden.

20,617. You would be in favour of holdings where the occupant depended on the sea for his livelihood?—Yes.

20,618. Then you have other two classes,—those who live by their holdings alone, and those who live partly by their holdings and partly by outside labour other than fishing. Now, are you in favour of a continuance of that system as it exists?—I don't see any way of improving it and keeping the people there.

20,619. But I suppose you do not contend that that system in itself is a good system?—Well, when a man gets constant employment.

20,620. Yes, but we know they do not?—It is not a bad thing; but when he does get employment he may sometimes neglect his land; it sometimes tends in that direction.

20,621. I suppose you admit there are no holdings at present on this estate which enable the crofter to live exclusively upon his holdings?—There is no holding of the size I mentioned in my paper.

20,622. But is there any holding on the estate at present where the crofter lives by the cultivation of his croft?—I am afraid I could not say.

20,623. Do you know of any?—Well, I would not like to say.

20,624. Now don't you think, if the thing could be done in a legitimate manner, that it would be desirable both in the interests of the estate and in the interest of the inhabitants generally to have holdings where the men could live by their holdings, just as the farmer lives by his farm?—If you were commencing an entirely new laying out of the land that might do.

20,625. We are asked to inquire into available land. Suppose the thing could be done legitimately, would not you be in favour of the extension of holdings by which the crofter could live on his croft,—I say legitimately and properly?—I don't know; I don't go so much against the case of a crofter who supplements the produce of his croft by the earnings of his labour.

20,626. I am not at all saying anything against that. But don't you think it would be a good thing if there could be holdings legitimately got by which the crofter could live, in fair average circumstances?—Well, I certainly would not approve of increasing the number of crofters, if that is involved.

20,627. Then would you diminish the number of crofters, and add the holdings of the vacated crofts to the remaining crofters?—Yes, I think that would be preferable.

20,628. Then what would you do with the men that you remove? would they have to go to the Antipodes, or would you try to get them land elsewhere in the neighbourhood?—I should certainly say, from what I know and have heard, that they would do far better in the Colonies.

20,629. You would send them off to the Colonies?—I think they would be better there.

20,630. So that you would leave the large estate and the large farms untouched, but you would consolidate the crofts and turn off the crofters to find their living anywhere else on the surface of the globe?—That is not exactly what I said.

20,631. Does it not come to that? Don't you think it would be just as feasible a plan to consolidate some of the crofts, allow certain crofters to occupy the consolidated holdings, and remove the surplus of the crofters to available land near, if there be such land upon the larger estates?—I could not approve of that, because I am afraid you would have the same difficulty to deal with in a certain number of years hence.

20,632. In what way?—By the increase of the population.

20,633. The population is increasing under the old and bad system, you know?—And by the deterioration of the soil.

20,634. You would have an increase of population in either case?—But you would have cut away all remedy at the time when readjustment was required in the future.

20,635. I take it, you admit that the present system has its faults?—It is a great misfortune for a man to be born poor, with a scanty livelihood, and that is very apparent in the Highlands.

20,636. Is not that poverty and scanty livelihood to a considerable extent the result of evictions from other quarters, and men being pressed down upon the shore?—I do not think so.

20,637. You do not think so?—No.

20,638. Then are all the stories of evictions that we have heard to-day fables and romances?—I suppose there is a certain amount of truth in them.

20,639. A good deal of truth in them?—Yes.

20,640. And if it were right to take the steps which were done in the past by the large land-owners in putting these people down on the shore, it would be analogously equally defensible to send back some of them to the land from which they were evicted? if the one is right the other cannot be wrong?—You may make matters worse by doing that.

20,641. Is that your only answer?—I should much rather see them in the Colonies.

20,642. You would remove them from the country altogether?—I would much rather see them go, I confess.

20,643. Is it your doctrine that the best way would be just to clear off the whole of them?—No, no.

20,644. It comes a little like that, I think. Are some of the townships there what you would call congested?—Well, there are townships where there are cottars settled.

20,645. And these townships are congested?—I don't think there is very much of it on this estate.

20,646. But is not there some of it?—Well, there is this township of Lochcarron, where there are a number of crofters. But there is the fishing and other outlets.

20,647. Is not the number of cottars a much larger percentage to the crofter than is usual in Highland districts?—Yes, I daresay it is, but I have explained that I used the word 'cottar' in a wider than the ordinary sense.

20,648. It is much larger, I think, than any that we have come across yet?—An experiment of Mr Mackenzie of Applecross in a large measure accounts for that,—the establishment of this village, to which reference was made at first.

20,649. We have heard a great deal, both here and elsewhere, of crofters who lived partly by the croft and partly by labour, and of crofters who live mainly, if not entirely, by the sea. Don't you think there is room for another class, viz., crofters who lived by their holdings alone, and that it would be a legitimate and proper thing to encourage the creation of this last class, if it could be accomplished?—I don't think it would be a good thing to go and create this class straight off; but where holdings fall in by death or otherwise, I think it would be a good thing to add them to other holdings, so as to enlarge them.

20,650. So that while you are willing to deal with crofters' holdings, and consolidate them, you absolutely refuse to deal with the larger estates, with the farms and forests?—In this case I do not think there is room for it.

20,651. Why? Do you mean because the forest and the farm are compact things which cannot be touched without material damage?—There is one great consideration to be borne in mind; the Highlands are very poor, and I think every inducement should be made to get capital to come here from other parts of the country. Now, if you go and divide up the deer forests and farms in that way, you will inevitably stop that inflow of capital.

20,652. The Highlands cannot have been very poor when these enormous prices which I have quoted were given for these properties?—But it was not the crofters who paid these prices.

20,653. I would like to ask you how many people belonging to the crofter class are under lease on this estate?—We have got none under lease, but we have got some who refuse to go under the Crofters Act.

20,654. Refuse?—Yes. At Shieldaig there were several who came forward and would not agree to make their houses and their land one holding as required by the Act. They preferred to continue as they were.

20,655. You mentioned a case which came out in the course of the inquiry, where parties were under the Act so far, and otherwise not?—That was on Lord Wimborne's estate.

20,656. And you say you have no cases of lease on this estate?—Not for the smaller tenants; there are long leases, what you would call building leases, in the parish of Lochcarron, and one or two feus.

20,657. Mr Donald Macrae.—Might I at this stage, in justice to Mr Murray, make the remark, as I acted as agent for those crofters before the Crofters Commission, that Mr Murray made all who were feuars at that time, or held down by legal documents of that kind, welcome to the benefits of the Crofters Act.

20,658. The Chairman.—And did they make use of that privilege?

20,659. Mr Donald Macrae.—The great majority of them did. [Witness.—What Mr Macrae refers to is the fact that where a technical objection might have been taken by Mr Murray, that was not done.]

20,660. The Chairman.—In fact, he in no way interposed to prevent tenants of the crofter class from coming before the Commission if so advised?—Nothing whatever, except that he always made the house go along with the land.

20,661. Of course, that was a natural thing to do. You indicated that a remedy might be found in the alteration of the currency laws?—Yes.

20,662. What do you refer to?—That is rather a complicated question; it opens up the subject of bi-metallism.

20,663. What is your view upon that matter?—My view upon it is that the present appreciation of gold and depreciation of silver affects prices; it increases foreign competition from countries which have a silver currency, and, of course, the appreciation of gold lowers the prices in this country. Practically all rents have to be paid in gold at present, and when gold is appreciated you require a considerable amount more of produce to make up the necessary amount of gold.

20,664. So that you invite us to direct the attention of Government to that instead of the problem of finding available land?—I think that is one remedy.

20,665. Mr Sutherland.—You read us a long statement, Mr Shaw, interesting in itself, no doubt, but you are aware of the object for which we are appointed, and the nature of the inquiry which we are asked to pursue?—I know generally the scope of it.

20,666. And did you in that paper offer us any help at all towards our object?—I gave you all the statistics I could about the estate.

20,667. But we are asked to report upon the existence of certain land; did you give us any help to do that?—I told you the amount of uncultivated land upon the estate which might be cultivated.

20,668. Would you call it evidence of a negative kind?—Oh, I don't think that; you cannot increase the amount of arable land.

20,669. Indeed; but you told us in fact there was no available land, that is, on the estate you are responsible for?—I told you where there was the land, but it happens to be a very small quantity.

20,670. But I took it that the whole of your evidence was directed to the point that there is no such land on the estate for which you are responsible?—I gave you a statement of what land there is.

20,671. How much farther on are we in our object on account of that evidence?—Well, I don't know that.

20,672. But surely it would occur to you while giving evidence here and knowing the terms of our remit, that you would come forward with the object of helping us?—I gave you all the information I could regarding the position of the estate, which I think is a very important element.

20,673. A commission issued to inquire whether any, and if any, what land in the county of Ross and Cromarty, among others, is available for certain purposes,—have you told us anything about that?—I told you of so many acres arable, or what you may consider arable on this estate, which were in the hands of the proprietor, either in connection with the farm or in connection with the deer forest.

20,674. But your general deduction is that there are none?—Well, that is my impression, but you have to make up your own mind upon that point.

20,675. Quite so, but I should think that a gentleman with your knowledge of the subject, and with the materials at your command, should keep before you when making the statements, the objects of our inquiry?—My object, of course, is not to help the Commissioners.

20,676. That is what I wanted to know?—The Commissioners must make up their own minds; I should not like to direct you in any way. My object was to give you all the information I could in reference to the estate.

20,677. Your admission, sir, that you did not wish to help the Commission forward, covers the whole case?—To arrive at a decision. I gave you all the information that I could, but would not it be out of place for me to put forward a special plea for the objects in view?

20,678. You might state shortly the conclusion to which you have come,—summarise your evidence?—The conclusion I come to, of course, is a very different one from what the objects of the Commission are.

20,679. Just so, that is what I mean. Then with regard to the information you have given us, did you not think of saying how the land is divided? Could you not have thought that the materials at your command that it would help us forward to know the number of people upon the whole estate, the number of people who have holdings over £30 of rent, the limit in the Crofters Act, and the number of people who have holdings under that, and the people who have no holdings at all?—I have given that.

20,680. Was that given in a tabular form or scattered up and down the statement?—It is all given in the same paragraph.

20,681. Could I trouble you to give us it again? How many families on the Lochcarron estate have holdings above £30, and how many acres do they hold?—There are 154 crofters at present on the estate and 138 cottars, using the term in the sense I have explained.

20,682. How much land have these between them?—725 acres arable and 5270 pasture.

Lochcarron. — Duncan Shaw.

20,683. Then over £30, how many families are there holding land?—I gave you the details of these; there are very few. There is what you call a big sheep farm and there is a small sheep farm.

20,684. Can you give me the acreage of the big sheep farm?—Yes, I gave it you. The rent is £300, and the extent is 88 acres arable and 8400 acres pasture.

20,685. The gross acreage will be sufficient for me?—Well, 8488 acres.

20,686. And the other farm?—It has 36½ acres arable and 1420 pasture.

20,687. I won't trouble you farther?—I have got here one holding containing more land than the holdings of the 292 people, the remainder of the population?—Yes.

20,688. Now, do you justify upon grounds either public or otherwise such a distribution of the land?—Yes, certainly, in the same way that I know plenty men have £100,000, and I should like to have that too.

20,689. But we are talking of acres just now, not pounds?—Oh, but I think the same principle applies.

20,690. Yes, if land and money were the same; but they do not happen to be the same?—Well, money buys land.

20,691. But have you considered that, apart from all these considerations, land-occupying must be the principal industry in a country like this?—Agriculture is no doubt the principal industry in this country.

20,692. And do you think that the means of obtaining a livelihood from agriculture here is sufficient; 292 families have between them less than 6000 acres, and one family has over 8000?—Well, there might be something in your argument if it were land in the Lothians.

20,693. But it is not land in the Lothians, excuse me?—That is just the difficulty. It is land which I really do not think it would benefit these families to have.

20,694. Then with regard to your proposal for rectifying this state of matters, was I right in gathering that your proposal is that, as the present holdings fall vacant by death or otherwise, they should be added to the remainder?—Yes, I think that would be desirable.

20,695. To what length would you recommend that that should be carried? where would you stop?—I gave a sort of idea of a farm which in my opinion would be self-sustaining.

20,696. But take what actually exists on the estate at the present time. There are 6000 acres in the occupation of crofters and cottars. There is one farm with 8400 acres. Don't you see that, according to your idea, before you would reach the 8400 acres for each family, you would practically exterminate the whole of the population?—How so?

20,697. Because you would require to evict other 292 people to form a holding of that size.—Oh, I did not propose to make a farm the size of that.

20,698. But we take what you have at present?—I gave a kind of estimate of holdings that might be self-sustaining.

20,699. But you have done nothing to bring about that state of matters. We must take what we find on the estate?—Mr Murray took the estate as he found it.

20,700. I am not talking of you, or of Mr Murray, or of any person; I am talking of the state of the facts as we find them on the estate. I am not saying who is responsible for that state, I am not blaming Mr Murray at all, but does it not appear to you that that is the view that could be rationally taken of the matter?—I do not think so, because I would only propose to consolidate up to that reasonably sized farm that I referred to.

20,701. May we take it that there is a desire on the part of the proprietor of this estate to carry out the proposal which you have stated?—I should think he would agree to it.

20,702. Is it a mere 'pious opinion' on your part?—I think that is Mr Murray's view.

20,703. You see you are in a position to carry this out?—Mr Murray is going to read a short statement to you.

20,704. Very good; I shall be very glad to have any information in regard to that. Then, with regard to the question of emigration, I don't suppose I need say much about it, but do you really for a moment mean to believe, or think, or state that the people of this country would stand quietly by and see the native population of the country driven out of it altogether, in order that you might keep intact your deer forest and your large farms?—Well, those people who have gone abroad, in my experience, have had no cause to regret it, and are very anxious to get their friends out to them. If you would allow me I would give you two personal instances.

Lochcarron. — Duncan Shaw.

20,705. I should be very glad to hear them?—My father was Sheriff of the Long Island district, and during the course of his holding that office there were some evictions from a township in the island.

20,706. Was that Sollas?—Sollas, with which he was supposed to have something to do. Well, he was standing at the pier-head when the people who were evicted from Sollas left the country by steamer, and as the vessel steamed out, one of these men, whose name was Macaskill, stood at the bow, cursing and swearing at my father as being the cause of his being sent away. Nothing was heard of that man for a long time; but about the year 1861 my father received a letter from him saying that he was getting on uncommonly well, along with the people who had gone out with him, and expressing gratitude for the part my father had taken, whatever it was, in his going abroad, and also enclosing a sum of money to buy a ring for my mother.

20,707. That was a case of doing evil that good might come out of it?—That is a matter of opinion.

20,708. Did you hear or do you know that some of the Sollas people had to be bound hand and foot and put aboard the ship in that state?—No, I don't think that is the case. There is a statement by my father to the Napier Commission on that subject, which I think disproves that.

20,709. I never saw it disproved. But apart from that altogether—I do not wish to pursue anything that is in any degree personal?—I have another personal case; this was a man in service, who went abroad to Manitoba, and who wrote a letter quite recently in which he says he is getting on very well. His letter is dated 20th December 1892, and he says that he and the man who is along with him have two pairs of horses, a pair of oxen, four cows, &c., and their crop had yielded 300 bushels of wheat and 200 bushels of oats. 'We are getting on well.' He adds:—'So far, we have nothing 'to complain of at all. I would like my sister to come 'out in the spring to keep house for me.'

20,710. Who is that letter from?—Archibald Stewart, the son of a shepherd that my uncle had.

20,711. Where is he now?—In Canada; Qu' Appelle is the name of the station.

20,712. Did you see a statement made by the Secretary for Scotland in the House of Commons a few nights ago, in regard to the Scottish emigration scheme to Canada?—No; this, of course, is a personal case that I know about.

20,713. It represents two isolated cases out of thousands?—Every case I have had to do with, and I have had several, has turned out well. I may have had the misfortune to know only the good ones.

20,714. Is it not a likely thing that it is only those who get on well that you hear about?—No, I don't think that is the case.

20,715. Sir George Trevelyan said the other night in Parliament, speaking of the Saltcoats settlement:—'I 'certainly think the money which was allotted could 'not have been worse spent than in the emigration 'which was conducted under the circumstances in 'which that of the Saltcoats settlement was conducted.' Have you noticed that statement?—I saw the heading of it, but I do not think I read it.

20,716. Are you aware that that was a deliberately organised scheme of emigration which it took seven years to mature, and where every possible precaution was taken, and this is the result?—Somebody must have been at fault there.

20,717. May it not have been the system which was at fault?—I do not think so; if they had got good land and the thing was well managed, they should have done well.

20,718. You stated, I think, that 75 acres were all that in your opinion could be cultivated; to what area did you refer?—'That are not at present cultivated on the estate;' I think that was my statement.

20,719. Now let us come back to this spot upon which we are now. Of course, you know that in a statement of that kind a great deal depends upon what you consider arable land?—Yes.

20,720. There is no one standard of arable land yet agreed on?—No, I suppose not.

20,721. Take your mind back to the time when the Jeantown people were settled here. What do you think the lands up above this village were like; supposing you were to see it in its state of nature, would you be likely to put it down as arable land?—Certainly not, at that time.

20,722. But it is now?—It is now.

20,723. Well, supposing you take as arable land, all the land in the estate of Lochcarron equal in quality to that land in a state of nature, how much would there be?—I could not say; but a great deal would depend on its position; if it were up on the top of a hill it would be of no use even if the soil were good.

20,724. But at this level; how much would that increase the area you have put down? Would it increase it a hundred-fold? Supposing you took all the land like what these people got at Jeantown here, how much of that land is there on the estate?—I could not say.

20,725. More than 75 acres?—Not very much, I should think. You must take other considerations into view, besides merely looking at the nature of the soil.

20,726. What other considerations?—The position, for one thing.

20,727. Take all the circumstances you can think of into account, and how many acres do you imagine are in the estate as good as that land was before it was reclaimed?—I would not like to say; you will be able to judge for yourselves.

20,728. But we want the benefit of your opinion?—Well, I should not like to put it at very much more than I have stated.

20,729. There are not upon the estate of Lochcarron more than 75 acres of land better than that land when it was in a state of nature; is that your statement?—Well, you see, I did not see the land then.

20,730. But you see the land adjoining outside the fence; the breadth of a fence makes no difference?—Where?

20,731. Up there on the side of the hill?—But that is away up the hill; you would not go and cultivate it up there.

20,732. How much land do you think equal to that is on the estate? more than 75 acres, surely you would admit?—Probably there would be a little.

20,733. A little more?—You also talked of the deterioration of the pasture, and what was your remedy for the deterioration of the pasture?—I suggested that there might be two remedies; if you allow the land rest, of course that would improve it; then if you apply fertilisers, that is another way; or if you pasture with cattle and sow it down that is still another way.

20,734. You say that the land down here is exhausted with too much cropping and no rest?—If it gets no rest.

20,735. And the land in the upper reaches of the country is deteriorated from too much rest?—Oh, I cannot tell you that 20,736. Would not the obvious way of amending it be to allow the land down here to rest and give the other a turn of cultivation? Is not land that has lain waste for a long time improved by cultivation as pasture afterwards?—For a while it gives better returns.

20,737. I quite agree with you?—Only for a while.

20,738. If it is left waste for a long time it deteriorates very rapidly?—Well, I don't know.

20,739. You have admitted that it does?—It is the land that is cultivated, I say, that does.

20,740. But land that is allowed to lie waste too long, does it not also deteriorate? don't lichens and other things choke up the grass, and has it not a tendency to run back again to heather?—I suppose in the Highlands it would.

20,741. And would not the obvious cure for that be to turn it up and cultivate it?—I don't know that it is worth doing it, in these days the returns are so poor.

29,742. You think it is better going on cropping the old exhausted land?—I would stop that if I could.

20,743. You would stop all cultivation then?—Oh no; give it a rest for a while.

20,744. But if you don't allow these people to cultivate the old land that has deteriorated for want of cutivation, and if you say the cultivated land is also exhausted through too much cultivation, the obvious cure is to allow both to go out of cultivation; is that not your cure? What land then would be cultivated at all?—One of the difficulties I started with was what to do with the people while the land was under rest.

20,745. Do you think there is no suitable land in all the country we have been wandering over for the last fortnight?—But you have got a great many more people than the people of this estate to deal with.

20,746. I grant you that; but I think the reason you gave was that, as you could not give enough land to all, you would prefer to give land to none?—I don't think I said that.

20,747. I think you did. I think you said that there was not sufficient land on the estate to give enough to all?—I stated that there was a very small quantity of arable land on the estate, and if you gave that to small tenants you would spoil the existing use of the land, and I did not think it was worth while.

20,748. You would decrease the area the large farmer has got, and the deer forest?—You would spoil the deer forest, I pointed out.

20,749. But if it is to be a question of existence of deer as against the existence of men, do you not think it is a proper thing that the deer should go to the wall?—But it does not come to that point. It is a question of increasing the number of crofters, as against spoiling the deer forest.

20,750. But have you not admitted to the chairman that there was congestion of the population here? is that congestion voluntary on the part of the people?—It is because they do not seek employment elsewhere. The sons of families in better circumstances have always to leave the place where they were born; there may be one left, but the younger members of the family have to go and seek a livelihood elsewhere.

20,751. Do you mean to say they don't do that from Lochcarron?—I suppose they do it, more or less.

20,752. Especially more?—I cannot say as to that.

20,753. But is not the obvious cure for that to take the resources that are at their door first?—I don't think that.

20,754. You would people the Colonies first, before you people the Highlands?—I would apply the same rule to them as any other parts of the country.

20,755. A large farmer occupies 15,000 acres, and a cottar or a crofter occupies 4 acres; you say that it is open to both to do alike. Do you not know perfectly well that a knowledge of the world is a preliminary necessity for successful emigration? How can a man go into the wide world with any hope of success if he knows nothing of it?—I have seen cases where a man has done that, and has done uncommonly well. Men have gone from the island of Uist straight away to Australia or Canada.

20,756. But if you wish the people to emigrate, is it not the best way to put them into circumstances of affluence at home, so that they may know what the world is like?—They have the whole of this country before them to make money out of if they can.

20,757. How can they have the whole of the country before them if they have only got two acres?—They can go and get work.

20,758. Anywhere but on the land?—They may leave say the eldest son on the land to work it; the younger members may go away, that is what is usually done in other grades of society.

20,759. They go away?—Yes; you very seldom see the whole of a family at home. Take a farmer's family; they do not all stay on the farm.

Lochcarron. Duncan Shaw.

20,760. And do the crofters stay at home more than any other class?—I think they have more of a tendency to do that.

20,761. Who have peopled the Colonies from Scotland; is it the sheep farmers?—They are of all classes.

20,762. Is not the overwhelming majority of emigrants from the crofter class?—Are you prepared deliberately to state that there has been too little emigration from the Highlands of Scotland in times past?—I have no statistics on the subject, but undoubtedly there is a large number of crofters, and the fact that the Colonies have been prosperous is in great measure due to men of their class.

20,763. Are you aware that there are more Highlanders in Canada alone than in the Highlands of Scotland?—No.

20,764. Will you take it from me as a fact that it has been officially returned that such is the case?—Yes, if it has been officially returned.

20,765. And in the face of that do you still hold that the crofters do not emigrate as much as any other class?—I suppose they may, but they probably increase rapidly.

20,766. Did you ever hear of ship loads of sheep farmers or deer foresters going away from this country? You told us, I think, of a transaction in which your father was concerned, where a ship-load of crofters was sent abroad?—No, I did not say that. It was a party from Sollas, and they went in an ordinary steamer, not an emigrant ship.

20,767. The ordinary steamer that went to America?—The ordinary steamer that went to North Uist.

29,768. You never heard of emigrant ships from the Highlands?—Yes.

20,769. And do you think these were loaded with large farmers or with crofters?—I should think they were principally crofters and cottars.

20,770. So that they have emigrated more than any other class, have they not?—I would not like to say that as regards the whole of Scotland.

20,771. But I am talking of the Highlands of Scotland?—Of course, they form much the largest proportion of the population there.

20,772. Then I wish to ask you a question with regard to what was in my mind the most interesting part of your statement,—the attempt made to better the houses of the people. I am very much interested in the success of the experiment; could you give us any information as far as it has gone?—I stated the facts, but I can give you the details if you like.

20,773. What I am interested to know is whether the instalments advanced to the people have been repaid within the time agreed upon?—No, they have not, but they have been fairly well paid. It was one of the conditions of giving the loan, that unless the instalments were regularly paid interest would be charged; but as a matter of fact we have not charged the interest.

20,774. But has the necessity for charging interest arisen?—It has in one or two cases.

20,775. You stated that the average advance was £13 or so?—Yes.

20,776. Now, can you tell us what amount of improvement has been made upon the holdings, take one particular case, or more if you know them, fora sum like £13?—I only took the average, but I could tell you all the sums that were advanced.

20,777. Kindly do that, without the names?—The sums were as follows:—£10, £8, £40, £40, £10, £40, £10, £15, £5, £7, £7, £27, £17, £9, £5, £40, £40, £40, £40, £12, £30, £40, £12, £10.

20,778. Does the amount advanced depend on the amount of capital a man may have already, does he only want to supplement certain means he has got already himself?—It depends very much on what he proposes to do; one man may want to rebuild his house entirely; another man may want to substitute a slated roof for a thatched roof; another to put a new end to a barn; it all depends on the requirements.

20,779. What is the greatest change you have seen yourself? have you seen the change from a small black house to a slated house with four or five apartments?—There have been slated houses built with the money.

Lochcarron. Duncan Shaw.

20,780. With the assistance of £40?—Oh yes; you will see several in the township of Ardaniaskan.

20,781. I am not talking of houses that have been repaired or changed, but built from the foundation?—Yes built from the foundation.

20,782. And houses of four or five apartments with a slated roof?—You will see some in the township of Ardaniaskan.

20,783. That has not been done for £40?—No, no; that is in addition to what the crofter may have himself.

20,784. With £40 of assistance?—£40 of assistance? I don't remember any case. [Mr Macrae.—Houses such as would cost £200 were so built.]

20,785. Houses that I have frequently heard credited as being of the value of £200 to £260?—I should think £100 to £150.

20,786. Now supposing you were making a statement to a Royal Commission on behalf of a landlord, and you actually gave an estimate of what was the charge for such houses,—do you remember what it was?—£150 for the dwelling-house, and £150 for the steading.

20,787. But here we have, as a matter of fact, a house built with £40 of assistance?—No, no; with the help of £40 of extraneous assistance.

20,788. May I ask the general question if there is the prospect of this scheme being a success?—Well, we hope so, we try to keep the fund going; whatever we get back in the shape of instalments is paid into the building fund account at the bank, and thus the thing goes on.

20,789. What is the amount of the building fund at present?—It was £500 to start with.

20,790. What is it now?—There is about £181 in bank just now.

20,791. I suppose you will not be able at any time to invest any part of this fund otherwise?—No.

20,792. It is always being used?—Always being used.

20,793. Mr Gordon.—You have indicated your disapproval generally of making new crofting townships?—Yes.

20,794. Assuming that you found tenants with sufficient capital, and willing to take small holdings of from £20 to £50 of rent, would you object to increasing the number of them on the estate?—If we had a suitable place for them I would not.

20,795. I assume that; assuming that some of the larger possessions could be broken up into holdings of that size, would the same objection in your mind exist as it does with regard to the crofter townships?—Not to the same extent.

20,796. If you got the rents paid, what objection would you have?—Of course, the buildings would be multiplied, and it is very difficult to keep up buildings on the west coast.

20,797. I don't suppose that any proprietor would put up buildings for a new scheme of this kind; but assuming that the buildings were provided by the tenants, would the same objection in your mind exist with regard to the small tenants that you say exists with regard to the crofter townships?—Oh, not to the same extent.

20,798. But why should you have any objections, if you get the same rent and if you were put to no expense for building?—Of course, if the buildings were put there for you, I suppose that would be a distinct advantage to the estate.

20,799. You would always have the buildings as a security of a class,—I don't say they would be of much use if they were not wanted, but at all events there would not be the same objection in your mind?—No, I don't think so.

20,800. Have you any idea what would be the relative rents obtained from land under crofters, and land under the larger tacksmen, or land under holdings of £30 and upwards?—I should not like to go into a question of that kind.

20,801. I mean with regard to crofts which would be of a size that the tenant would expect to make his living from. If you were to break up a farm rented at £100 and divide it into ten crofts, would you expect that the ten crofters should be able to pay the same rent as the tacksman?—No, I should not think so.

20,802. Have you any idea what would be the difference?—I have not worked that out, and am not prepared to say.

20,803. But assuming that you could see your way to form small tenancies, you have not the same objections to their existence as you would have to increasing the number of the crofters?—Not tenancies of the size that I indicated.

20,804. £30 and upwards?—I think it was £25 or thereabouts.

20,805. I understand you do not object to the creation of these, provided you are not put to the expense of buildings?—Not occasionally, where there is suitable ground.

20,806. Mr Munro.—Did I understand you to say that crofts generally at Lochcarron were not paying the holders?—At the time of the Crofters Commission the majority of the crofters came forward and said they were not.

20,807. I understood you to say that some of them were not able to obtain a sufficiency of milk or even of seed?—That is what they said before the Commission.

20,808. And your only remedy for that is emigration?—I suggested that as crofts fell vacant, you could consolidate them, and thus enlarge the present holdings.

20,809. Don't you think that if these crofters who manage to exist upon their present limited holdings were to get an extension, they could maintain themselves in comparative comfort?—They might or might not; if they are sustaining themselves at present by labour, and if by getting a larger holding they could not go in for labour, they would have to devote themselves to the croft.

20,810. Do you not think it natural to infer that a man working for himself should make more than working for another?—Not always, because he may lose money when he is working for himself, whereas his wage is secured to him if he is working for another.

20,811. You stated, I think, that large farms are not paying at present or for some years back?—So I believe, from the tenants.

20,812. Would you suggest emigration in their case also as a remedy?—Certainly, if they thought they could do better.

20,813. Don't you think that is rather a heavy order?—Which?

20,814. To suggest that the large farmers should emigrate as well as the small ones?—You see there is not the same number of them. They have got much the best chance when prices are good.

20,815. I see you are evidently determined to make the number as small as possible, both of large and small tenants?—I would like to see such a number that each man could make his living on his holding.

20,816. You were good enough to suggest some remedies for the improvement of the condition of the crofters; and among others you suggested an improvement in the rotation of cropping?—I said that if the present deterioration of the soil, which I understand is usually admitted, were to be stopped, something would require to be done.

20,817. And a proper system of rotation introduced, I think you said?—I suggested that the land should get a rest, or that fertilisers should be used.

20,818. Now do you not consider that if crofters acquired larger holdings they could then manage to cultivate them to greater advantage than they do at present?—Yes, I think they could.

20,819. I have always heard it stated here, Mr Shaw, and I was glad to hear it, that Mr Murray has acquired the reputation of being a kind and considerate landlord?—I think there is no better in the country, and I appeal confidently to the people behind me.

20,820. Now if it can be shown that there are lands in the vicinity of Lochcarron not at present in the possession of crofters, which could be advantageously occupied by them, would Mr Murray of his own free will be disposed to concede these lands to the crofters?—We had a case before the Crofters Commission with reference to that land called Corrags which lies up from the township here. The Lochcarron crofters had that grazing, I believe, about twenty-three years ago, and it was taken from them by a former proprietor. Shortly after Mr Murray purchased the estate, application was made to him to see if he would give the people back this grazing. He showed every disposition to help them, but the land was then under lease, as it is still to another farmer. But he had a meeting with the crofters who wanted this land, and he said to them that as the land was under lease, he would do some drainage for them in the village, and only charge them 3 per cent. interest, I think it was, on the outlay. At that meeting he understood they were quite agreeable to go in for that arrangement, and that they accepted that as in full of anything he could do for them in regard to Corrags. But afterwards it turned out, though the drainage went on, that some of them did not hold to what was the understanding, and, therefore, the drainage was stopped. Then the application was made before the Crofters Commission to get Corrags as an extension of the common grazing. Well, Corrags was still under lease then, and Mr Murray could do nothing without the consent of the farm tenant. He approached the farm tenant, and got him to agree to give a certain portion of the Corrags land, the lower portion, and the better grazing, and really about the only portion that could be profitably used by them as an addition. This was offered, but they declined it.

Lochcarron. — Duncan Shaw.

20,821. Another remedy which you were good enough to suggest for the improvement of the crofters was bringing more into direct contact the producer and the consumer?—Yes.

20,822. How would you propose to bring about that arrangement?—I suggest that more as a general remedy; it does not apply so much to this case in particular as to agriculture in general.

20,823. What is the value of the suggestion if it does not apply to this district, with which we are now immediately dealing?—I stated it with reference to the general improvement of agriculture throughout the country.

20,824. All over Scotland?—Yes.

20,825. But we are not dealing with the subject of agriculture all over Scotland. How would it materially affect the position of the crofter now?—It would not affect him, of course, unless he did get into closer contact with the consumer.

20,826. You would not propose, I suppose, that the crofter should slay his own beasts, and go about with them in a barrow and sell them retail?—Oh no; but there have been proposals to form farmers' associations, and in fact to start butchers' shops.

20,827. I have seen such proposals more than once made, but these could not properly be applied to the Highlands here, with the small farmer, is that your view?—It would be more difficult to apply them, certainly.

20,828. Now as to this question of currency, that is rather a large subject to enter on. Supposing now that you got your ideas carried into affect, how would it improve the position of the crofters themselves? give us an illustration of it.—I think it would raise the price of stock.

20,829. How would it raise the price of stock?—At present there is a great deal of stock coming from South America. They have got a silver currency there, and if you were to send out gold to South America to buy produce there, you would get a very much larger number of dollars for it, and through the dollars a very much larger number of sheep and cattle than if silver were high. When the silver goes down, it pays a man to send out gold from this country and convert it into stock, and bring the stock to this country to compete with the home market.

20,830. I quite understand that?—The same applies to wheat from India.

20,831. And your recommendation would be that the same standard for silver should prevail as now prevails for gold?—That is my personal view.

20,832. But have you any hope of ever attaining such a result?—Oh yes.

Lochcarron.

Duncan Shaw.

20,833. You think the time is coming when there will be a standard for silver as there is for gold?—I think a crisis will come some day that will necessitate something of that sort.

20,834. And your advice now is that crofters should wait patiently until that silver standard is obtained?—I merely point out that that would improve the condition of matters if it did come about.

20,835. Do you not consider it a very great misfortune for a country to see such an immense area of land absolutely unproductive, while there are hundreds of people wanting a small holding to live upon?—I tried to show in this statement how much money is involved in a small deer forest connected with this estate. Where would you get that money from if there were no deer forest?

20,836. I am not going to enter into any argument with you upon this question; but you would surely make some distinction between the mere circulation of wealth and its production?—How do you mean the production of wealth?

20,837. If a crofter occupying a farm, say of fifteen acres arable and 100 or 200 of hill pasture, produces a certain quantity of food for the country, is that not adding so far to the wealth of the country?—I suspect he would require all the food for his own consumption.

20,838. Now can you point out to me any single article of wealth that a deer forest produces?—It produces deer.

20,839. Where is the wealth there?—You would be astonished at the price of it, and the amount of food that is involved.

20,840. Does it produce any wealth for the country?—To the extent of that feeding it does, and it brings a lot of money into the district.

20,841. Is venison, generally speaking, a marketable commodity, to any extent I mean?—It is comparatively limited.

20,842. Very limited, I should say?—Yes.

20,843. The Chairman.—It is only fair to Mr Murray to mention that in the case of the Tullich application, to which you referred, Mr Macintyre was obliged to refuse it on account of a lease with Mr Ferguson for fourteen years from Whitsunday 1883. Mr Macintyre, while refusing the application, adds this note:—"The 'respondent, though unable to accede to the application as 'made, made offer to the applicants, provided he obtained 'the consent of the tenant of the farm of Tullich to add 'to their common grazings that portion of the said farm 'lying to the south-east or south of a line drawn on 'the ordnance sheet produced and marked B1283, 'provided the applicants fenced the said land and 'undertook to keep the fence in repair, and provided 'also that the Commissioner was satisfied that the 'applicants were able and willing properly to stock the 'ground and paid a fair rent therefor. As the applicants 'refused the said offer, and the respondent has in con-'sequence pressed his objection, which is good in point 'of law, it has been sustained, and the application dis-'missed." But if the applicants had accepted the offer, it would appear from the nature of its terms that Mr Murray was perfectly willing that they should have the assignment of grazing from the farm of Tullich?—There was a minute to that affect lodged.

20,844. There was no indisposition on his part to let them have the portion of land described here, provided they agreed to fence and maintain it, and provided the Commissioner was satisfied that they could properly stock the ground and pay a fair rent for it?—That is so.

20,845. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—I understood Mr Shaw to say that as crofters' holdings fell out, it was the disposition of the estate to add them to existing holdings?—I said I thought it might be of advantage.

20,846. Does Mr Shaw remember of an application for more land made by the crofter township of Daoraonair several years ago?—Yes, I do.

20,847. And of that application coming before the Crofters Commission two years ago at Shieldaig?—Yes.

20,848. It is a fact that the crofters modified that application, which was an application for a stretch of hill grazing out of the deer forest, to another proposal, an alternative proposal, that if the proprietor objected to this land being taken from the deer forest and added to the crofting township, they would take crofter holdings that had fallen out in the township of Rudha-Rhoin?—There was something said about Rudha-Rhoin.

Lochcarron.

Duncan Shaw.

20,849. The most of the old pasture land was in the deer forest, and they applied for the restoration of the old boundaries; and the objection was raised that it would materially damage the deer forest. We then agreed to amend the application or "alternately the crofting 'township of Rudha-Rhoin." All the crofters in Rudha-Rhoin and the adjoining township had either died or left, and we applied alternately for the lands of Rudha-Rhoin; is that not the fact?—I rather think so.

20,850. And did not the proprietor put every obstacle in the way of our getting them?—The proprietor offered certain extension of grazing to the township of Daoraonair, provided the Commissioners were satisfied that those applicants could stock the additional ground. It turned out that there were only two who could at all reasonably be supposed to be able to do that; one of them was more or less a pauper.

20,851. The Chairman.—I think it is right to read 'the order in the case:—"Finds that the respondent 'by Minute marked C/1282, and under reservation of his 'objections, offered to let to the applicants, at such a rent 'as might be fixed by the Commissioner, certain lands 'which partially included the land applied for, but under 'reservation to himself of certain souming rights of cattle 'and sheep; Finds farther that the said offer is made on 'the footing that the Commissioner is satisfied that the 'applicants are able and willing properly to stock the 'ground offered, and to pay a fair rent therefor; Finds 'as the result of the inquiry, that the applicants failed to 'satisfy the Commissioner that they are able properly 'to stock the said ground offered under and in terms of 'Sect. 12 [2] of the Act; Therefore refuses the applica-'tion, reserving to the applicants to apply further if 'they and the respondent can come to an arrangement 'for extension of their holdings to which the Com-'missioner may interpone authority."

20,852. Mr Donald Macrae.—May I put a further question with regard to that? [The Chairman.—Yes].—My further question is this. In approaching the discussion of that subject, did not the proprietor reserve all the arable land within the boundaries of the township?—Of which township?

20,853. The township of Rudha-Rhoin; so that the proprietor would have to himself all the arable land to graze his own cattle, and that his gamekeeper would have a right of souming over the hill grazing of Rudha-Rhoin?—I don't think Rudha-Rhoin was mentioned.

20,854. The Chairman.—There is nothing about arable land in the order; the application was to take land from the deer forest of Shieldaig, the part applied for being known as 'Daoraonair Hill.' It says nothing about arable land, and the obligation on the crofters was an obligation to stock.

20,855. Mr Donald Macrae.—That is not inconsistent with my contention. They applied for Daoraonair Hill, but the application was amended 'or alternately 'the crofting township of Rudha-Rhoin.'

20,856. The Chairman.—I do not wish to take up time, but there is no reference in the order to Rudha-Rhoin, not the slightest.

20,857. Mr Donald Macrae.—I know that perfectly well, I signed the minute; these are the facts of the case. There was a minute signed by the two of us.

20,858. Mr Sutherland.—May I ask what has become of this vacant croft at Rudha-Rhoin?—We are looking for a tenant. I think it was only one tenant who was there latterly.

20,859. Mr Donald Macrae.—Would you tell us what is the arable land of each crofter in Daoraonair?—A propos of what you said about the offer, there was an increase of 800 acres offered to this township of Daoraonair by the proprietor.

20,860. What is the arable acreage of each crofter?—One has 3 acres 1 rood 32 poles, another has 1 acre 1 rood, a third has 3 roods 38 poles, and a fourth 1 acre 3 roods 3 poles, and they have a large stretch of grazing.

Lochcarron. Duncan Shaw.

In the case of Maclean, who is one of these crofters, he actually gave up Rudha-Rhoin where he had been.

20,861. But he was one of the most strenuous applicants for arable land as well as grazing?—That is surely inconsistent on his part, because he had Rudha-Rhoin before.

20,862. Exactly so; but Rudha-Rhoin was too small also; he cleared out of it because it was too small, and there were too many tenants—Rudha-Rhoin has 8 acres arable. [Mr Sutherland.—Can you give us the hill pasture?—It has not been laid down, but I think about 500 acres.]

20,863. Is not this Rudha-Rhoin immediately adjoining the crofting township of Daoraonair? It could not be nearer than it is; is not that so?—Yes, I think it is.

20,864. What use is made of that old township at the present moment?—We are looking for a tenant for it.

20,865. What use has the proprietor been making of it for the last six years?—While it was vacant he was grazing it with cattle of his own.

20,866. How many years is it since it became vacant?—About five years.

20,867. It has been in the hands of the proprietor for five years?—Yes.

20,868. Don't you think it would have been an advantage to the crofting township of Daoraonair, especially to those crofters there who have less than an acre of arable land, if the arable land in Rudha-Rhoin was added to their present holdings?—The arable land of Rudha-Rhoin is separated by a good distance from Daoraonair; I would not like to say how much, but a considerable distance.

20,869. A mile?—What I referred to was the case of crofts lying side by side; supposing it was a mile away, that makes a considerable difference.

20,870. Oh, not at all, when the arable land is enclosed. Don't you think it would have been of advantage,—don't you think it was a splendid opportunity for improving Daoraonair by adding this old crofting township to it? don't you think you would have put the land to better use, from the public point of view, than by conserving it in your own hands as an addition to your home farm?—We had one tenant at Rudha-Rhoin, and he went to Daoraonair, and three tenants, it was proved, could not stock, so I don't think it would have been of any advantage to them.

20,871. Do you remember our signing a joint minute at that time, departing altogether from the original form of the application, that is an application for a stretch of the deer forest,—departing altogether, from that application, on condition that the proprietor would give the arable land and the hill grazing of Rudha-Rhoin to Daoraonair?—Oh no, there was no joint minute to that effect; there was a joint minute to this effect, that you restricted your application for additional grazing to certain ground which I was willing to agree to, then if the Commissioners were satisfied on these other points, that additional land would be given; that is my recollection of it.

20,872. And do you not remember the people standing upon this, that they would have nothing to do with the hill grazing of Rudha-Rhoin unless they got the arable land also, because they stood as much in need, more in fact, of arable land than of hill grazing?—I think that came up afterwards. They agreed to this at the time, and then after several weeks interval, probably when they had thought over it and changed their minds, they withdrew from this joint minute, and the Commissioners, I understand, repeatedly asked them whether they were willing to abide by the proprietor's offer.

20,873. Is it not a fact that at that time you said that the proprietor could part with the hill grazing of Rudha-Rhoin, but that the arable land of Rudha-Rhoin was absolutely necessary as a pendicle of the home farm?—It was required at that time for certain cattle that the proprietor had.

20,874. How many miles is the arable land of Rudha-Rhoin that we are speaking about from Courthill House?—Oh, it is a long distance, but that does not matter with grazing cattle.

20,875. Can you say how many miles?—I would not like to say. Lochcarron.

20,876. Is it less than 15?—Twelve miles I should say. Duncan Shaw.

20,877. Or more. Now at that very time was not the proprietor in possession of Reraig farm?—Yes, he was.

20,878. And was not he also in possession of Glenbeg?—No; there may be a small portion of Glenbeg, but it is divided up.

20,879. Was he not in possession of Achavanie?—That is not his own; he rents Achavanie and Glenbeg from Mr John Stuart, but the greater part of Glenbeg is sublet, I think, to Mr Jackson.

20,880. Was he not in possession of Laganduin as a portion of the home farm at the head of Loch Kishorn and of Sanachan?—He has not got that, it is on the Kishorn estate. Reraig is the only farm he has suitable for a home farm that he can call his own, the other is simply rented from the proprietor. [Explains it on map.]

20,881. Is not the big farm of Glenmore on Mr Murray's estate?—Yes.

20,882. Could not Mr Murray make Glenmore, or a portion of it, his home farm?—He would require to evict the tenant first.

20,883. Could he not at the end of the lease make Glenmore or a portion of it his home farm?—Certainly not, because if the tenant wanted to stay on he would not like to be turned out.

20,884. And what do you propose to do with the crofters of Daoraonair who have only three quarters of an acre of arable land? You refuse to extend their arable holdings by giving them the lands of Rudha-Rhoin; what do you propose doing?—We offered at that time to extend their grazing.

20,885. Their hill grazing only?—Yes.

20,886. Did you not refuse the arable land?—The arable land is not in their township, it is a mile away.

20,887. It is in Rudha-Rhoin?—That is a different township.

20,888. But they said before the Commission that it was sufficiently near for all practical purposes?—I should doubt that.

20,889. Do you not consider the low lying land at the head of Lochcarron between the inn and the extreme east boundary, pasture land, very suitable for cultivation, more suitable than the patches behind the houses?—Which land is that?

20,890. Straight east of the hotel, on the farm of Tullich, the low lying lands there?—Yes, but that would spoil the farm of Tullich.

20,891. But would it not improve the condition of the people to give them an opportunity of making that into arable land?—You would require, I suppose, pasture along with it.

20,892. And is not the mountain behind it with a southern exposure?—There again, you might be spoiling a good farm and not benefitting the crofters.

20,893. But you might be creating half a dozen or twenty splendid farms?—Who is to build the houses for them?

20,894. The Chairman.—I think the matter has been sufficiently discussed.

CHARLES JAMES MURRAY, Proprietor of the estate of Lochcarron—examined. Charles James Murray.

20,895. The Chairman. — Do you desire to be examined, Mr Murray?—Yes, I should like to say a few words, as some statements have been made of a hostile character.

Looking to the general 'Small Holdings Question' as affecting the estate of Loch Carron, it is submitted that in this estate small holdings are proportionately well represented.

There are on the south side of the estate opportunities, developed by facilities of communication, for remunerative work; specially at the fishing, but also in other ways. Here then we find that the system of small crofts—crofts on whose exclusive produce no man can pretend to live and thrive—is working fairly satisfactorily.

Further investigation tends to show that larger crofts are less satisfactory until they assume the proportions of small farms and fully occupy the time of a man who decides to devote his life to agriculture.

The smaller crofts are unsatisfactory (1) where there is individual want of enterprise and the family tries to drift along just trying to exist on the croft. Where you see an able-bodied man spending days herding one or two cows among scanty patches of crop. (2) Whereas in the northern part of this estate there is no facility for disposing of fish and no regular demand for labour. In this latter case, while there is no reason for interfering with the traditional habits of the people, we can certainly only look for evil results from artificially stimulating such a system, or from actually laying out national funds in planting a population where it may vegetate but cannot really prosper.

Looking to the question generally of replanting this ground with crofters, there is no doubt that a certain additional number could be planted by ousting larger tenants and landlord. The individual wrongs of the latter are small matters. Capital brought hopefully across the seas in the hope of good work and useful development in the Highlands, can, though diminished in quantity, go back whence it came at very short notice. But the question remains, is the state of crofter farming so admittedly prosperous that a graduated scale now working fairly satisfactorily should be arbitarily upset for the supposed good of one section of the community until the result to that section of the almost complete withdrawal of capital and employment has been considered—and the question pondered by the nation whether it is prepared to lay out for the benefit of that one section exclusively the sums necessary to provide houses, steadings, and stock.

While the numbers of small crofters are moderate, the opportunities of work, estate, railway, domestic, and sporting come fairly round to all. Increase those numbers out of proportion, and while the opportunities of work, estate, domestic, and sporting disappear, the prizes of local railway and trade employment would be competed for by largely increased numbers, and wages would sink below their present level.

The outlay represented by the owner of an estate of this character has been referred to by my factor; the other class, the sheep farmer, is well represented here by industrious men, the tenant of the principal sheep farm is a man whose record of life, while he enjoyed good health, is a local record of useful public service to which he has devoted knowledge, experience, and education which would be beyond the reach of an average crofter.

The remaining class the crofter tenantry have now the opportunity of showing how they can thrive under the system of state fixed rent emancipation from the mingled system of estate partnership and estate control which formely held good.

In the future of many of those who are active, intelligent, and industrious I have every confidence, but I am bound to say that, looking to the returns given respectivly by sea and land, I forsee that the more enterprising will continue to devote themselves to the former, and I should look with grave anxiety to the development of any scheme which proposed to apply a sudden and artificial stimulus to the crofter system.

By well considered extension of small holdings in districts more favoured by climate, soil, and accessibility to market for garden produce we may do some good. But such proposals point to a system having for its very aim and object the development of individual energy and agricultural skill.

We have here, where the crofter system exists, a system already working which is in some respects similar, but is in others very inferior—for the crofter township system, with all that may be said in its favour, is obsolutely antagonistic to individual enterprise and the standard of township management and stock selection is not always the standard of the most go-a-head or of the most sagacious individual.

(Signed) Charles Murray.

July 1893.

20,896. Your factor, Mr Shaw, has been examined at great length; may we take the answers he gave to questions put by the Commissioners and otherwise as representing your views?—With regard to estate management, certainly.

20,897. You do not wish to express any difference of opinion from what he has said?—No; with regard to the management of the estate I wish to lay stress on the fact that, taking the estate as I found it, and looking to what has been laid out upon it, I have always looked to the possibility of improving the condition of the large number of small holdings. I certainly admit that, while looking to the maintenance of the general state of affairs on the estate, I have looked in one or two cases to see how I could be of use locally. I appear before the Crofters Commission, and I admit here that the outrun of the tenants in this township is too limited. I tried to see whether we could arrange for a small extension towards Corraig. That extension I admit was small, but it was specially with a view to providing outrun and cows' grazing for the western portion, which is confined by the other township grazing coming in behind them which we cannot touch. This rather shuts them off, and I had in view a small part of Corraig which I thought would give facilities to the inhabitants of that part of the village, at all events, to pasture their cows. With regard to what has been said about Daoraonair, I do not wish to go back upon the evidence given about it; but as to the ability of the people to stock that if they had got it, the thing was simply ridiculous. I admit that that is a case where extension of holding should be given if at all possible; but this is a small forest, and looking to what has been laid out, and my length of residence, and the record of what I have spent on the place, I submit that it would be injudicious to touch it. The forest is, comparatively speaking, a small one, and it is also a low lying one; and to take out a large slice of it would be simply to destroy the forest. There was an area of some 800 acres which I was willing to add to the holdings of the Daoraonair people; but some of these proved to be perfectly incapable of stocking it, and it really would have meant adding it to only one or two, considering the large amount of assistance they would require. To have given what they asked for generally, would, as I say, have absolutely spoilt that part of the forest; to have given what I did offer would, I think, have materially assisted them. The question of Rudha-Rhoin has also been raised, and my answer to that is very simple. Some of the applicants were absolutely incompetent to stock anything; in fact they are almost paupers. I had to thatch their houses for them, and never expected payment. When the request was made for Rudha-Rhoin, I looked to the possibility of letting that as a separate holding. There was nothing whatever mentioned about a gamekeeper. In the event of my subletting the cultivated part of Rudha-Rhoin to a new tenant, I naturally wished to keep a portion of outrun. In giving the hill outrun to two townships, which, of course, is a great deal more than 800 acres, I reserved what was considered to be suitable for any tenant who might afterwards come to occupy Rudha-Rhoin.

20,898. Mr Sutherland.—I do not wish to ask any questions regarding the personal management of your estate; I think there has been enough said about that; but you made some general observations with regard to the crofter system as it is called?—Yes.

20,899. I take it that you rather disapprove of the whole system?—I cannot say that, generally speaking, I am very glad to see the people here, and where they have additional work, or where you can get them additional work, I think it is a very good thing that a man should have a croft for his family and a cow's grazing. But I think when you increase the size of the croft you get cases which do not give satisfactory results until you reach about the size that was indicated by Mr Shaw,—in fact until you have a holding which will occupy a man's whole time.

20,900. I do not dispute that at all, but I think you took exception to some things which you characterised as want of enterprise, where a man spent part of a day attending a cow?—Yes.

Lochcarron. — Charles James Murray.

20,901. Did you consider whether that man voluntarily accepted that position?—I take him as I find him.

20,902. But you are speaking of the system that produced him?—I am talking of what I find, I am not going into theories, but simply dealing with matters of hard fact.

20,903. This is not a theory at all, it is a very hard fact. Did the man make the system under which he lived?—None of us made the system under which we live.

20,904. Was the crofting system made by the people or by the landlords?—I should think the crofting system,—I am not dealing with any special developments of it, but the system generally, I should think, has a pretty long history.

20,905. Was the crofter, as you find him, a free agent in forming that system?—I really could not answer that question.

20,906. The distinction you made between a farmer and a crofter is that the one is more restricted in regard to the amount of land that he holds?—Yes. That is, the small holding which a man can work for the comfort of his family, and for his general benefit, in addition to other work; and if you go beyond that I say you would do better when a man has a holding which will give him continual occupation.

20,907. As to the holdings, when they were made of their present size, was that done in accordance with the wishes of the people, or against the wish of the people?—I cannot tell you.

20,908. Is it natural to suppose that a man would come forward publicly and ask for a larger holding if he could get it otherwise?—Yes, I daresay it is quite a natural feeling; we would all desire more than we have.

20,909. Every one wishes more land rather than less land?—Yes, generally, if a man wishes land at all; some men would have none.

20,910. Then you think they were quite free agents in making the system under which they exist?—That I cannot tell you; it is going too far back, I am afraid.

20,911. We heard certain evidence regarding the formation of this village; you do not see any reasonable occasion to doubt that?—No, I don't.

20,912. And the circumstances under which they were removed from other places and sent down here were truly detailed to-day?—Well, I would expect that if men were put into holdings of that size, they would take what they could get.

20,913. And this man attending one cow on a miserable patch,—is that the natural result?—I am not talking of the general state of things as they might have been; I talk of the man as he exists, and I say it is a mistake to produce such results as that. But please don't run away with the idea that I make any such general accusation,—I said there were one or two cases in which the small crofting system had failed, and this is one.

20,914. I see; it is an accusation against the system which produced that state of things?—I don't think so, because I say if that man had energy he would instead of that be doing something else.

20,915. What would he exercise his energy upon?—Chiefly fishing.

20,916. But supposing he were in such circumstances that he could not get a boat or nets?—Well, I daresay all through the world there are poor people who are in distress. But a man who has no boat of his own can generally assist others. That is a system very common all over the country; and by that means a man might in time save money to enable him to have a boat of his own.

20,917. Coming away again from the personal case to the system, I take it that you approve of the Crofters Act,—I think some observation dropped from you to that effect?—Well, there is no doubt that there are many cases where harsh measures had been adopted towards crofters, and in these cases the Act was a very necessary measure of precaution; but there are other cases where the same necessity does not arise.

20,918. Was not that the first statutory interference with the power of landlords in the Highlands?—I should think not.

20,919. But you admit it was good?—I admit it did good in many cases.

20,920 And therefore necessary?—It does not always follow that if a thing is good it is necessary. But I do admit it has gone a long way to improve matters in certain cases.

20,921. This is a question you may answer or not, just as you choose. Were you opposed to the Crofters Act at the time it was being made part of our legislation?—No, I took no active part in regard to it; I was not in the House at the time.

20,922. Had you any opinion on the matter?—No, I looked upon it with some regret, for the reason that it prevents a man from making a bargain with his tenants, and may thus put a stop to a good deal of useful expenditure on an estate; but taken generally I daresay it did good in some cases.

20,923. Supposing any measures were passed for getting people rationally placed upon the land under favourable circumstances, once such measures were passed would that make you change your mind in any way? Would you accept such a measure loyally and try to carry it out?—That would depend on how it might interfere with the objects I had in view in purchasing this estate.

20,924. Have you any hope that you would become reconciled to such a measure?—I am afraid I cannot be reconciled to things which are directed against myself.

20,925. That is a very natural view to take of it.—I have given instances in which I have been perfectly willing to meet all reasonable demands.

20,926. I take no exception to your statement, which could not, I think, have been better?—But I wish to point out, in regard to sheep farming, that a man in the position of Captain Ferguson is an advantage to a countryside.

20,927. Only you will admit that it is a great pity that the same consideration was not shown to the people when they were deprived of their small holdings, and when these grazings were taken from them?—Even when I say that small holdings are good, I do not suggest that there should be nothing but small holdings. I suggest both small holdings and sheep farmers on a graduated scale.

20,928. And you anticipate that if such a system were established, it would result in good to the public generally?—I believe so.

29,929. Then I think you said it was your opinion that some of the statements made by witnesses, with regard to their financial ability I suppose, were ridiculous?—Yes. Well, I would rather not dwell on that point.

20,930. I will not insist upon it; but you think at all events they were exaggerated?—With regard to their powers of stocking.

20,931. You think they had not such powers as they said?—No.

20,932. But apart from that, dont you think, supposing they were to begin in the easy way you spoke of, and with a graduation of holdings, there might be a ladder constructed by which they could rise up to bigger things?—Certainly, I should like to see that.

20,933. And that though they might not have the means to stock large places, they might have the means to stock small places?—Yes, that is why I wish them rather to remain in the small place; not increasing a man's holding beyond his power of stocking.

20,934. But his power of stocking would increase?—Take the case I spoke of. If these crofters had been in a position to stock land at that time I should have accepted them as tenants.

20,935. And if they got larger holdings, perhaps in a short time they would be able to stock them also?—You cannot put more than a pint into a pint pot. It becomes a question of doing away with the forest, or giving them that part.

20,936. Don't you think the disproportion of acreage held by the individual is very great?—No, I don't admit that at all. I hold that it is quite in accordance with the fitness of things that one man should have more than another, unless you go in for undiluted socialism, and a dead level all round.

Lochcarron.

Charles James Murray.

20,937. I would not anticipate such a result for a moment; but is not the inequality too great where you find 292 families living on an acreage of about 4000?—I do not go by acreages. I fancy some of them would not care for the hill tops that are included in my own acreage. I think you will find that, round the fringe of this estate, the crofters occupy a very considerable portion of land. Of course, there is the farm of Tullich; but take from this village right away round to the point where you come to my small farm of Reraig, it is all in the hands of crofters. The whole of Achintraid is in the hands of crofters.

20,938. And how do these places compare with the hill?—Naturally it is the lower ground, and more convenient for access to seaware.

20,939. Is it not the most rocky part of the country which they have?—No, I should say not altogether.

20,940. What sort of land is up the glen?—Rossal is good, but beyond that I should think crofters would prefer to remain on the sea-shore, where they can get their seaware for manuring purposes.

[Adjourned.]

TWENTY-FIRST SITTING.

Wick.

WICK, August 23, 1893.

Present:—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
Michael Hugh Shaw Stewart, Esq., M.P.
Angus Sutherland, Esq., M.P.
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
Henry Munro, Esq.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

20,941. The Chairman.—Gentlemen, as this is our first sitting in Caithness, it may be convenient to remind you of the terms of reference. We are directed to inquire whether any, and if any, what land in the county of Caithness now occupied for the purposes of a deer forest, grouse moor, or other sporting purposes, or for grazing, not in the occupation of crofters or other small tenants, is capable of being cultivated to profit or otherwise advantageously occupied by crofters or other small tenants. These are the terms of the remit. We have received the names of a number of those who are desirous of giving us information upon these matters, and we shall take these names in the order in which the list has been made up.

Donald Reid.

Donald Reid, Crofter, Slickly, Canisbay (60)—examined.

20,942. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

20,943. What rent do you pay?—I pay £14, 6s.

20,944. Was your case dealt with by the Commission?—Yes, the Commission sat on our croft and fixed the rent.

20,945. £14, 6s. is the rent you pay now?—Just now.

20,946. What rent did you pay before the Commission dealt with it?—£23. It is my nieces that hold the farm; I manage it. Their names are Margaret and Johan Reid.

20,947. The area is 28 acres 2 roods 27 poles arable, and 58 acres 3 roods 31 poles outrun. The common pasture is 103 acres and 860 acres; you hold one share of that, and it is described as held in common by the crofters of Slickly and Brabster and the tenant of the farm of Brabster?—Scoulary is included also in the pasture.

Wick.

Donald

20,948. Are you to give your evidence orally, or have you a written statement?—I have nothing but the names of the tenants evicted from these grazing farms.

20,949. What are the names of the grazing farms of which you wish to speak?—The first is Brabstermire.

20,950. Who is the tenant of it?—The present grazing tenant?

20,951. Yes?—Messrs Murray & Angus.

20,952. Is it under lease?—I think so, but I am not sure.

20,953. What do you wish to tell us about that farm?—All that I have to tell is the tenants that were evicted off it when it was put into a grazing farm.

20,954. Do you remember when it was turned into a grazing farm?—It was before my day; it was in or about the year 1813.

20,955. What are the names you wish to give us?—The first name is John Mowat; there are two John Mowats.

20,956. And who are the others?—Alexander Harper; Misses Reid—I don't know their first names—Barbara Rosie; D. and M. Murray; Alexander Cormack; George Sinclair; Adam Sutherland; there were other two crofts, but I could not find out the names of the tenants.

20,957. These were all separate holdings?—All separate holdings.

20,958. And now all included in this farm of Brabstermire?—And likewise the proprietor, Mr George Sutherland, had his home farm on along with them.

20,959. What do these holdings consist of now?—It is all included in the grazing of Brabstermire.

20,960. Sheep grazing?—Sheep grazing.

20,961. Can you give me the total extent of land which was occupied by these holdings?—No, I cannot give any decided answer to that.

20,962. Is there any evidence of remains of these holdings still?—There are still remains of a good many of the old stances of the old houses on the ground, but the extent of land that they occupied is a thing that I can't give any decided statement upon, but they all had less or more crofts.

20,963. Where did you get that information?—I got it from old people that I spoke to.

20,964. You mean people still living, or people who are now dead?—Some of them that were alive remembered from their fore people; my father herded on it when old Captain Sutherland or the old proprietor had the farm of Brabstermire.

20,965. Can you give me any idea of the extent of arable land upon that farm?—What was arable or what could be made arable?

20,966. No, I mean under cultivation at present?—There is not very much under cultivation at present, about 15 acres, I think.

20,967. I mean under rotation?—Yes, the new tenant has taken in about 15 acres, this Murray.

20,968. Can you tell me what sheep stock the farm carries?—It carried at one time between 400 and 500, when Mr Clyne of Reaster had it, as near as I can calculate.

20,969. And does it carry that still?—Well, I suppose not, as sheep runs are deteriorating fast, and I suppose it is like the rest, it won't carry the same stock.

20,970. Is there one hirsel or more than one?—One hirsel. I think 300 is the regular stock now, as near as I can guess.

20,971. There are no tenants on the farm now, I suppose?—None but one; he has about four acres.

20,972. He labours on the farm?—His father was grass-cutter on the farm to the late proprietor, and he had a small part included as part of his pay and he fenced it in and his son still holds that—about 5 acres I think, 4 or 5 acres. He has that, but he does not work on the farm.

20,973. Do you consider that land from which these persons were evicted long ago, and which you have been describing, suitable for occupation now?—Certainly, I think so indeed.

20,974. Now what form of occupation? By cultivation or for grazing purposes?—By cultivation.

20,975. And is it your opinion that that land, suppose it divided into crofts of a suitable size, could be cultivated to a profit?—I think so; that is my opinion at any rate.

20,976. What would the land grow?—It would grow oats and turnips and clover grass, such as other farms on rotation.

20,977. And potatoes?—And potatoes.

20,978. What size of holding would you be in favour of forming upon that land?—Really that is a gey critical question for me to answer, it depends on other men's opinions from my own.

20,979. But I want your opinion?—But at the same time I would consider that a man, if he got at a reasonable rent from 40 to 50 acres, would make a reasonable croft for a man.

20,980. Including arable and grazing?—Not grazing, as there is an outside hill which, if they had the farm for cultivation, they would have along with it.

20,981. Does the hill form part of the farm?—Yes, there is a piece of hill that forms part of the farm too, and there is a piece of common that the tenants have together. You referred to it already.

20,982. Is there a desire among persons in the locality for such holdings as you indicate?—There was one time that they had a demonstration about getting the farm of Brabstermire.

20,983. How long ago is that?—I think seven or eight years ago.

20,984. Have you heard anything more of a desire to get land on the farm since that?—They made a deputation to the late factor on the estate, and he objected to give the thing altogether; he said he had by far too many crofters on the estate.

20,985. And it did not come to anything?—It did not come to anything, because, of course, they would not get it.

20,986. You mentioned that there were other farms of which you wished to tell us. You have dealt with Brabstermire, what are the names of the others?—Holland Mey.

20,987. Who is the tenant there?—The present tenant is Finlayson.

20,988. Is it a grazing farm?—It is a grazing farm.

20,989. Can you give me the extent of it?—Mr Purves left it at the last term and this man entered it then—at Whitsunday.

20,990. Can you give me the extent of it?—I consider it would be about—taking the whole extent, the hill and all perhaps—2000 acres. I never measured it; that is my calculation.

20,991. Were there persons at one time living upon that part of the farm?—Yes, I have some of the names as far as I could gather; perhaps there might be more.

20,992. Give me the names?—Adam Barnie; Peter Nicolson; Andrew Harper; Bell and Margaret Laing; Hugh Mackay; William Mackay; Alexander Mackay; David Nicolson.

20,993. Any more?—There are some more, but not in connection with Holland Mey.

20,994. That is all?—That is all I could find out, but perhaps there might be some more.

20,995. How long is it since these occupants ceased to live on the farm?—As near as I could calculate or can find out it would be something passing fifty years.

20,996. And that land, I suppose, is now under sheep?—Under sheep.

20,997. As permanent grazing?—Yes.

20,998. Can you tell me how many sheep the farm carries?—That is more than I can decidedly and definitely say, but I think at times it would be 600, but to say that it carried that exactly is more than I could say.

20,999. Is there one hirsel?—There are two herds on; you may call it two hirsels if you like.

21,000. And do you remember the extent of the arable on that farm?—As to the extent that these tenants had I can't say.

21,001. But I mean the farm now?—I think there should be about 700 acres that could be cultivated on the farm.

21,002. But what is the extent of arable land under cultivation at present?—There was no cultivation until this same year, for many a year back.

21,003. There are only a few acres, I suppose?—Mr Purves in his lease had to leave Holland Mey—there were 65 acres enclosed on Hollnad Mey and he was bound under lease to leave it in a kind of rotation; he ploughed up three parts of that; I suppose that would be about 30 acres.

21,004. But you say there are between 600 and 700 acres that might be brought into cultivation?—I think so, as near as I can guess, though I never measured the ground.

21,005. Is that land old arable?—A good many acres of it, and there might be some that never was in cultivation that is quite capable of cultivation.

21,006. And capable of growing the same sort of crops as you mentioned with reference to Brabstermire?—The same crops.

21,007. On that farm are there farm buildings?—There is one farm steading on it; there is a house and byre, a stable and a barn.

21,008. I should have asked you the question, are there similar buildings on the farm of Brabstermire?—The old mansion house is on Brabstermire that the proprietor lived in.

21,009. And a steading, I suppose?—There is a small steading. There is a byre that holds some cattle, and there is a stable put up since the present tenant came to it that holds from two to three horses. During Mr Clyne's lease there were no such things as a byre, more than a one-cow byre for the shepherd's cow.

21,010. Did Mr Purves occupy the farm of Holland Mey as an adjunct to other farms?—He occupied Holland Mey as a joint farm with Barrogill Mains.

21,011. And he lived on Barrogill Mains?—He lived on Barrogill Mains.

21,012. And had he a manager or a shepherd or anybody living upon Holland Mey?—He had two shepherds.

21,013. Are they there still?—No, there is only one shepherd now.

21,014. Now are there any other farms that you would like to mention?—There is something that I will mention in connection with the farm of Barrogill. There is what is called the Scrime Hill Park.

21,015. Who occupies the farm of Barrogill at present?—The proprietor has it in his own hands.

21,016. And is it a grazing farm?—No.

21,017. An arable farm?—Yes, but this Scrime Hill is a grazing.

21,018. But would you describe the farm as an arable farm?—Certainly.

21,019. What is it you wish to say?—There were three tenants in Scrime Hill at one time.

21,020. What part of the farm did they live on?—On the Scrime Hill park or grazing.

21,021. What were their names?—John Banks; Alexander Bremner; Donald Mackay.

21,022. How long is it since they were there?—I hardly could give a decided answer to that, but I consider it would be passing forty years.

21,023. And they each had separate holdings?—Separate holdings.

21,024. Which are now absorbed in the grazing of the farm of Barrogill; is that so?—Yes, that is correct.

21,025. What extent of land there is capable of cultivation, in your opinion?—Well, I think as near as I can calculate the park would include 100 acres or fully that. I don't think I am over-reaching it. And the most of that park I think could be cultivated. There might be some that would not be very fine or productive ground in it, but I think the most of it could be cultivated.

21,026. And grow the usual crops grown in the neighbourhood?—The usual crops.

21,027. Are there any other farms you wish to bring under our notice?—There is a small patch yet, that is Rigifall.

21,028. Is it a grazing farm?—It is into grazing along with Philips Mains.

21,029. And who occupies Philips Mains?—The proprietor, Mr Heathcote Sinclair.

21,030. What is the extent of land at Rigifall?—I could say nothing just exactly definite on this, further than a bird's eye view of it, but I think there should be two or three reasonably sized crofts on it. There is a piece of hill that is not fit for cultivation along with it, but there were two crofters on that; I have the names.

21,031. What are the names?—John Banks and John Mackay.

21,032. And they left that long ago, I suppose?—They left when it was turned into grazing; they were put out. To give you the proper sense of it, all this Philips Mains and Rigifall was all in with Holland Mey at one time. Now when the late Lord Caithness took it into his head, he had laboured Philips Mains, and it was taken off the grazings of Holland Mey, and this is a patch now on the north east side of Philips and it is along with Philips; but at one time the whole thing was along with Holland Mey.

21,033. The farm, as it now exists, was formed partly out of land that belonged to Holland Mey and partly out of this crofting land?—It was all crofting land at one time, and it all went into the grazings of Holland Mey. He took this off the grazings of Holland Mey and cultivated a portion of this farm.

21,034. Are there any other lands to which you invite our attention?—Well, there is nothing of grazings that I have anything further to give in my district that I was appointed for.

21,035. What shall we say was the name of the district you were appointed for?—The name of the district I have been over is the Mey district.

21,036. You say you were appointed, was that at a meeting?—I was appointed at a Land League meeting in Canisbay.

21,037. Recently?—Recently, when we came to the knowledge that we were to get a hearing before this Commission.

21,038. In coming here to-day you are representing the views of those who appointed you at that meeting?—Certainly.

21,039. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is it your opinion that crofters would get more value out of the land of Holland Mey farm, taking it first, than one tenant as at present?—Really at present I don't think crofters have any good of it at all.

21,040. I don't think you quite understand my question. Looking at the land itself from an agricultural point of view only, would crofters get more value out of the land than one farm tenant?—That is a question, of course; do you mean the crofters would take more value than one tenant?

21,041. That is what I am asking?—Well, I would think so, because I suppose even the corn that would be grown on that place would pay more, would give more money than the sheep it would keep; the corn crop alone. That is my opinion.

21,042. Is it good land; we have not seen it yet?—You have not seen it, but in my opinion it is like other places; there is a lot of good land upon it and perhaps there might be some on it that might be cultivated that was not so good; but the land will speak for itself. I think there is plenty good land on it. There are a good many acres of capital land on it.

21,043. Supposing it were divided into holdings of 40 to 50 acres, if there is good land in it would not the rent come to over £30 a year?—That depended on how the rent was levied on. That is a question I don't think I could answer.

21,044. Not even as a practical agriculturist?—Because the proprietor has the power to rent it, and he might rent it according to his own idea, and I have no power of renting. If I had the power of renting I might speak.

21,045. Let us take your view of a fair rent. I won't ask you what you consider a fair rent to be, but supposing it were rented on what you consider to be a fair rent, and divided into lots of 40 or 50 acres each, would not you expect that for land capable of such cultivation as that the small tenant would pay over £30 rent?—Well, the tenant is paying I say £125, the present tenant, and I consider about 700 acres is under labour, and it is a pretty good calculation what the rent per acre would be at the present time.

21,046. At any rate your divisions would be of 40 to 50 acres?—That is my calculation.

21,047. That is more like a small farm than a croft, isn't it? It comes to be almost a two-horse farm?—It is but a small farm; just what a pair of ponies would work.

21,048. Now, with regard to the tenants who were formerly on the farm, do you know anything of their circumstances, whether they were prosperous?—Well, I was speaking to some of the families that were on, not long ago, and they were quite confident that if they had been allowed to stay on it they would succeed.

21,049. Do you know how they derived their profit, whether from the sale of grain or from the sale of cattle, or both?—The times that they occupied Holland Mey, between fifty and sixty years ago, rents were quite low in Caithness besides what they were of late. I did not ask how they made the rent, but they told me they were quite comfortable; but it would likely be off the produce of the farm, there was no other way to make it.

21,050. I want to know what the produce was; whether it was more grain or cattle?—It would be grain and cattle combined.

21,051. But the prices of grain and cattle fifty years ago were much better than they are now?—I believe they were; well, I don't know fifty years ago if they were better.

21,052. Surely grain?—Grain might be better, but not cattle, I think, but the rents were very low then besides now, I think, if I am not mistaken. The rents were not so high as they are now.

21,053. Mr Munro.—You mentioned just now, in answer to Mr Shaw Stewart, that the price of grain fifty years ago was higher than it is to-day?—Well, I can't say that, because I don't quite recollect. I might say that the price of cattle, I think, was not much higher then than now, but the rents were lower.

21,054. But assuming that the value of grain fifty years ago was higher than it is to-day, you no doubt are aware that at that time there was a heavy import duty levied upon grain?—Yes, I believe there was.

21,055. Are you quite satisfied that if crofters got this land you speak of in small holdings they could cultivate it to advantage?—Why wouldn't they cultivate it to advantage as well as other holdings, if they got it at a reasonable rent?

21,056. And when you speak of a reasonable rent I suppose you would be prepared to submit to the rental that would be fixed by a competent tribunal?—Well, at the time that the rental was fixed, of course, it was kind of reasonable and fair, but the times are altered since then, and we have as much need now for a Crofters Commission as ever, with the fall of the times.

21,057. But speaking of to-day, you would be perfectly prepared to say that people would take these farms at such rental as might be fixed by a competent tribunal, say like the Crofters Commission?—I would think so; I would go in for that.

21,058. Mr Sutherland.—I think you stated that about twenty people were moved from these holdings to make these large farms that you spoke about. Where were they sent to?—They just went away and tried to get holdings anywhere they could. They were put off the ground altogether.

21,059. Did a large proportion of them remain in the county of Caithness?—Well, I suppose they did; most of them took some place in some kind of hole or other that they could get into. They did not all get crofts.

21,060. Do you know the successors of any of these men living in Caithness now?—Yes, I have one man; that is William Mackay.

Wick. Donald Reid.

21,061. What is he doing?—He is dead. I have his daughter living next neighbour to me.

21,062. What was he sent to do?—Old William Mackay was a pensioner; he was a sergeant in the army.

21,063. And as a rule did they get new holdings upon which there was no cultivated land?—They went to the estates, as far as I know.

21,064. And got land in a state of nature?—Some not.

21,065. Did you know or did you hear of any person who got new land to reclaim?—That Alexander Mackay that was in Crackadale, I am not sure if he was put out, but he went out to the Gill burn, and to put a holding up on the side of that burn; it was most iniquitous to put a man to live in it.

21,066. And what did he make of it?—Nothing at all.

21,067. Did he reclaim any of it?—About half an acre.

21,068. Was it inferior land?—It was not fit for cultivation at all. It was a wee bit strip between two high braes; it was quite unfit for cultivation.

21,069. Was it inferior to the land from which he was removed?—It was not the least like that at all, and being alongside a burn it was subject to mildews and frost.

21,070. Was it worth fourpence an acre when he went there?—I would not give twopence an acre for it when he went there.

21,071. And what was he paying afterwards?—I never asked, and I did not hear, and I could give no decided answer as to that.

21,072. But supposing that man was cleared out of there a second time?—He was cleared out of there a second time.

21,073. What was done with the holding?—It was knocked down and put into grazing.

21,074. Do you think it was better?—The grazing where he was it was quite right enough to put into grazing.

21,075. Did his labour improve that grazing?—Well, of course, it improved it for a time, the bit that he did labour; no doubt about that.

21,076. Now going back again to the places they were sent from; these farms Brabstermire, Holland Mey, Scrime Hill Farm, Barrogill Farm and Rigifall Farm; these places had all tenants before?—All tenants.

21,077. And they partly improved the land?—I would think so; of course, I could not say who improved the ground, but they laboured the ground.

21,078. You are pretty sure it was not the grazing farmer that improved it?—It was only when these tenants were put out that it was put into a grazing farm.

21,079. And it got value from the fact that their improvements were on it?—The proprietor confiscated that to his own behoof.

21,080. As to the question of value; it was the crofter that gave the value?—Certainly. There was no compensation for any improvements to a crofter though he had to make the whole thing and leave it as it was.

21,081. And he gave the value to the field?—Certainly, or to the laird at any rate.

21,082. Now with regard to that land, it is not land of any great elevation above the sea, is it?—Well, it is not of a high elevation but it is pretty far.

21,083. Have you any idea of the height of it?—No, I could not give a very decided opinion.

21,084. But it is not very high land. You live at Slickly?—Yes.

21,085. There are a number of families in Slickly?—About nine or ten, I think.

21,086. How long have there been nine or ten there?—You are giving me a pretty difficult question.

21,087. Has the population been added to by making new holdings since you remember?—Since I remember, of course, they have improved a good deal of ground, but the most of the holdings are in yet since I remembered. I think they have doubled the ground since I remember.

Wick. Donald Reid.

21,088. They have doubled the amount under cultivation?—Yes.

21,089. Did you ever know a large farmer to double the amount of arable land on his holding by reclamation?—I don't know, it may be possible, but I don't know it.

21,090. And do you know of any other way of adding value to land except by reclaiming it?—I don't think it.

21,091. Is it your opinion generally that the most of the value of the land in Caithness was given to it by crofters or small tenants?—Given from crofters.

21,092. That the value that it now has was given to it mostly by the labour of small holders?—Certainly. A great part of it was cultivated by small holders and turned into large farms or grazings, and the tenant or proprietor received the benefit of the crofters.

21,093. So you would say generally, I suppose, that the value of the land of Caithness was given to it—three-fourths of it at least—by the small holders?—I think so.

21,094. And none by large grazing tenants?—I don't think it. I think they looked cut quite well for themselves.

21,095. And, in your opinion, could holdings be made to advantage in those places you have referred to?—That is my opinion.

21,096. You are decidedly of that opinion?—Yes, decidedly.

21,097. And are you of opinion that there are a number of men in Caithness both willing and able to take these holdings if they got them on reasonable terms?—There are plenty men willing to take it if they had the capital, but the people have been so distressed and trodden down that the capital has fled from them and they have no way of making capital, but I think if we had gotten the money from the government that was given for boats, and given for emigration, and turned to benefit our own country, we would get men quite willing to cultivate the ground.

21,098. But have the people of Caithness hitherto been given any money by government for reclamations they have made?—Well, of course, the large farmers have got money from government.

21,099. But the small farmers who have made most of the reclamation?—Got money for improvements?

21,100. Yes?—Not to my knowledge.

21,101. And don't you think that to the same extent they would still be able to reclaim without assistance?—No, I don't think so.

21,102. Are they poorer than they were?—Yes, and this last year back the fishing has been bad.

21,103. What has the fishing to do with the cultivation of the land?—We have a great many fishermen here who, if they had made money, would take land.

21,104. That is to reclaim land?—Ay.

21,105. And to occupy it afterwards?—Many of the fishermen have small crofts.

21,106. Do you mean this, that they are paying the rent of the land out of the sea?—I do mean it and I am sure of it; paying the rent of the land out of the sea. I am perfectly assured of it, and I can give proof to that effect.

21,107. But your opinion is this, that the land you have already referred to is land that could be profitably occupied under the reference referred to by the Chairman?—I think so; that is my opinion.

21,108. Mr Maccallum.—You did not say why these tenants were removed?—No, I did not say that, but my opinion is that it was to get the land into a grazing farm.

21,109. Were they removed against their will do you think?—Certainly. It is not many tenants put out, four or five at a time, who go out of their own will.

21,110. Did the farmer who took these lands pay a much higher rent than was paid by the tenants?—I could not say decidedly.

21,111. And can you say whether the rent of these farms has fallen since they were consolidated?—Well, of course, I don't know what Mr Smith paid out of Holland Mey when he had it. He was the tenant of Holland Mey, and I think that Lord Caithness had it in his own hands, if I mistake not, at the first start of the grazing. I am not sure what was paid by the first tenant. It was long back, and I never expected to be questioned on the matter and I did not pay much attention to it.

21,112. You cannot say whether the rent is now higher or lower?—The rent of the grazing has fallen considerably. Mr Purves, the last tenant, paid £147, and the present tenant pays £125. That is a good bit of downcome on the rent.

21,113. Can you give us any idea of the amount of land that was cultivated on Brabstermire?—Well, as to the extent—it is so long ago—it is as near as I can guess 1813 or thereabout. That was the time the proprietor left Brabster and went to Canisbay and that is the time that Brabster was turned into grazing. He had his mansion house at Brabster, and the house still stands yet, and he went down to Canisbay in 1813, and I think as near as I can calculate that was about the time that Brabstermire was turned into a grazing farm. It was turned into a grazing farm for horses and cattle.

21,114. Can you give any idea at all of the amount that was formerly cultivated?—I believe the most of them had middling sized crofts, but I can't give any knowledge of the extent of the ground of what they had cultivated, but the ground will almost speak for itself to see what had been laboured on it because the rigs are perfectly visible on the most of it yet.

21,115. Can you say how many acres on Brabstermire have been cultivated?—I think about 600, as near as I can say.

21,116. That was with regard to Holland Mey?—No, 700 for Holland Mey.

21,117. Mr Malcolm on behalf of the Highland Property Defence Association.—Am I right in saying that the information you have given the Commission about those farms was not obtained from any of the former tenants directly who occupied that land?—Well, I got some of it not from a tenant, but from some of the tenants' family, because the tenants that occupied these farms are all dead.

21,118. I am right, am I, in saying that the information you have just given the Commission is derived mainly at all events from hearsay sources?—The most of it from people that were acquainted with the ground, and knew the tenants on the ground, old people, I can name some of them, I think. I did not get any writings to that effect.

21,119. But from nobody who occupied the ground himself or herself did you get any of the information?—Yes, I got it from some of the occupants' family.

21,120. But not the actual tenant?—The actual tenant was dead and I could not get it.

21,121. The Chairman.—In every case the actual tenant was dead?—As far as I know; either dead or away to some other place distant.

21,122. Was your information derived for the most part from successors of the actual tenant who had lived in the croft along with him and survived him?—In that way and from people that had lived near by when the tenants were in, in close proximity.

21,123. Your information is based upon the best evidence you could get in the district?—That is it.

21,124. Mr G. M. Sutherland.—Did you make any examination of Sheriff Court Records?—I did, and I could not find Brabstermire but I found Canisbay. The proprietor of Brabster left Canisbay in 1813, and that was the time he evicted the tenants off the estate of West Canisbay or the present farm of West Canisbay. It was all into small holdings before the proprietor went there.

21,125. The Chairman.—Did you get any information from the Sheriff Court?—Not as to Brabstermire; I could not find it, but I got the time that the proprietor left the farm, which was 1813. I consider that was on or about the very time the tenants were put off and it was turned into a grazing farm.

21,126. What was it you found in the records. Was it decrees of removal or what?—Decrees of removal.

21,127. How many did you find?—It is a pity I did not think I would be questioned on it or I would have brought them with me.

21,128. Did you find more than one?—I did, five or six.

21,129. Mr Maccallum.—Are you personally acquainted with these farms?—Personally acquainted; I was born on the estate of Brabstermire.

21,130. And in speaking of the number that could be accommodated there you gave us that as the result of your own personal knowledge?—Personal knowledge.

21,131. And not hearsay?—Not hearsay, my own eyesight.

THOMAS INNES, Fisherman and Crofter, Gills, Canisbay (58)—examined.

21,132. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Fisherman and crofter.

21,133. What rent do you pay?—£1, 17s. 6d.

21,134. Your case was not dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No.

21,135. Did you not apply?—No, I did not. It is my mother's name that is in for the place.

21,136. Do you live along with your mother?—Occasionally.

21,137. But you have a separate holding of your own?—No.

21,138. Are you here only as representing your mother or yourself?—I am representing the same district as the previous witness, Mr Reid, simply to corroborate his statement.

21,139. You heard his evidence?—Yes.

21,140. And do you concur in it?—Yes, I think it was very much to the point.

21,141. But does it accord with your own information and knowledge on the matter, so far as it goes?—Yes.

21,142. Were you appointed at the same meeting as Mr Reid was appointed?—Yes.

21,143. For the district of Mey or Canisbay?—Yes.

21,144. Is there a desire among your neighbours for new crofts?—There is, very much.

21,145. Are the crofts they have near the sea?—Yes, most of them are.

21,146. Where do they desire to get such new crofts?—Anywhere where the land is fairly good.

21,147. But would they go away from the sea?—Oh, I expect they would.

21,148. Would you yourself?—If I got a good enough place I would.

21,149. As I understand, you obtain your livelihood at present mainly from the sea?—Yes.

21,150. Then are you desirous of giving up the occupation of fisherman and becoming a crofter wholly?—Well, yes, at the present state of matters.

21,151. What do you mean by the present state of matters?—Because the fishing industry is very bad at present.

21,152. Is the crofting industry good?—It is bad too, but I believe the fishing is even worse; this season at any rate.

21,153. Were you brought up a fisherman?—Yes.

21,154. And if you had a croft inland of considerable size, would you know how to manage it?—I think I would.

21,155. What size of holding have you in view?—Well, I should say that for suiting the district a graduated system of crofts along the seashore, smaller crofts would do, because they might make something out of the sea.

21,156. Now in that case of small crofts do you propose that the occupants should live wholly by the sea or mainly by the sea?—Partly, I think the one should assist the other.

21,157. Is that a good sort of croft do you think; is that not a kind of croft where there is a danger of the occupant failing in both?—Well, if the one industry failed he might fall back on the other a little.

21,158. But is there not some danger of a man who has both the croft and the sea to look to, to succeed in neither, because he spends his time between the two?—No, I don't think so, a sensible man would look after them comfortably enough.

21,159. What size of holding would you give to a man who has to live partly by the sea and partly by his holding?—From perhaps ten to a dozen acres.

21,160. Arable?—Yes.

21,161. Do you think a man could cultivate ten to a dozen acres arable and attend to the fishing besides?—Well, two of the fishings at any rate, but perhaps if he could not manage two, he could have one.

21,162. Which fishing?—The present one that is about finished.

21,163. The July and August fishing?—Yes.

21,164. The harvest here is generally later than that?—Yes, generally.

21,165. It is earlier this year?—Much.

21,166. Now you said you would be in favour of a graduated system of holdings. Apart from fishermen's holdings such as you have described, what size of holdings would you next be in favour of?—I think if a man had ground at its proper value, he could live on from 20 up to 50 acres; I should say not more than 50.

21,167. Do you mean arable?—Yes.

21,168. And a corresponding pasture?—Well, he might live if he had not pasture if the land was good and not too dear rented.

21,169. Would you be willing to undertake a holding of that size away from the sea?—I think I would, if I had the means.

21,170. But are you clear about it or are you in doubt?—Not much doubt.

21,171. Some?—Well, I would just consider the matter a bit.

21,172. Could you put up the necessary buildings without assistance?—No, I don't think so, but I think the government might do a little in that way if they saw it was a feasible project.

21,173. But would you require considerable assistance?—Well, yes, I think most people in my class would.

21,174. And you say that you yourself would?—Yes.

23,175. Then you believe that all those whom you represent to-day, as well as yourself, if they got a holding each of them of the size you have in view, would require considerable assistance to start with?—Some not, but a good many would.

21,176. The majority?—Well, perhaps the majority.

21,177. Now what rent have you in view?—It depends on the ground very much.

21,178. But you know the ground in the neighbourhood?—Well, say for 10 acres, about £3 or £4 I think would be plenty, and it should be good ground, fairly good ground.

21,179. Of course you would have to pay the interest upon your loan in addition?—Yes.

21,180. And would you look to repaying that loan in full in the course of years?—Certainly.

21,181. Now would you be in favour of holdings larger than that and higher rented?—No, I don't think so; I don't think a man requires any more land than he can live comfortably on and cultivate with the assistance of his family.

21,182. And you think 10 or 20 acres would be sufficient?—Up to 50 acres in some cases.

21,183. What stock would a crofter with 50 acres keep in the ordinary case?—Perhaps two or three horses and corresponding number of cattle.

21,184. How many?—It depends if the farm is good.

21,185. Have you considered what the stocking of a holding of 50 acres would be?—I have never given that matter particular attention. I am better acquainted with smaller places.

21,186. Have you considered what the stocking of a holding of 10 acres ought to be?—Yes.

21,187. What ought it to be?—Well, one horse would work that and perhaps two cows and a stirk or so, and perhaps a few sheep.

21,188. Perhaps a few sheep?—Ay, if he had any outrun, but if he had not he could not keep any sheep. That is the general stock that crofters keep.

21,189. Would you at present leave the holding you have, and undertake the formation and carrying on of a larger holding without assistance?—Yes, if the terms were to my mind, if the terms and conditions were suitable.

21,190. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I am going to ask you a question which I won't press if you don't wish to answer it, but is it the general idea among the people in this part of the country that government is going to help crofters to stock their land and build houses?—Well, they have hoped so, they have hoped for that, but they are not very sanguine on the point.

21,191. Did you hear what the last witness said about the money that was advanced for boats?—Yes.

21,192. And do you agree with it?—Well, partly.

21,193. I gathered from him that he looked upon it as rather a mistake?—Well, I am rather inclined to think that way too, because there were plenty of people engaged in the fishing industry before that, and certainly it was worse for those who were engaged when they had to compete with those others.

21,194. Well, but do you think that the results of the government advance in the fishing industry have not been very successful?—I do.

21,195. You don't think they were very successful?—No, I don't think so.

21,196. Then I suppose it is not very encouraging to Parliament to suggest that the government should advance money for land?—Well, it is a different affair altogether, the land.

21,197. In what way?—Any industry connected with the sea is very unstable and very unsteady; the land is more of a solid substance anyhow.

21,198. But the produce of the land depends a great deal upon bad and good seasons?—Certainly.

21,199. And to that extent it is uncertain and unstable?—But not so much as the sea, I think.

21,200. Of course on the sea you depend so much on the herrings as well as on the weather; but a man requires capital to embark on agriculture as well as in fishing?—Yes.

21,201. Do I understand you to say that it would not be easy to find men with capital enough to embark on new holdings without assistance?—I believe it would be quite possible to find a good many, but it would leave out perhaps the most necessitous; those who were not able to take these places; what I mean is that the worst off class of the people would be left out if there is no assistance given from government for stocking on these new places.

21,202. I suppose I may take it that a man who is able to stock and start agriculture on the small holdings, if he has got capital enough for that he has got capital enough to become a tenant of a small farm?—Yes.

21,203. And, therefore, the men we will say of the crofter class whom you would like to see in possession of more land would not be able to work that land without some assistance?—Not in a great many cases.

21,204. In the majority?—In the majority; I believe that would be the case; but they have built new houses on very poor bits of land at their own expense and stocked it too. They were forced to do so. That was one case on this estate of Lord Caithness, they were forced to build good slate houses or else leave their holdings, so they accomplished it.

21,205. They did accomplish it?—Yes, with small assistance I believe, they got a small assistance from the landlord.

21,206. That means an abatement of rent, does it, or do you mean a money payment?—No, I mean that he gave them the slate and I think lime and a small amount of money if they finished within a certain time. I am also informed that he supplied flooring, ridging, and tabling. [The Chairman.—And made no addition to the rent?—No addition to the rent, so far as I am aware.]

Wick.
Thomas Innes.

21,207. I did not quite gather what size of holding you would suggest in connection with the sea?—Well, I would have them of various sizes.

21,208. But your own view; I understand you would like a holding where you would be able to help your profits from the sea; you would like to work the sea and the land together, wouldn't you?—Yes, and a good many of the people along the seashore would like the same.

21,209. Take a man who has got an interest in a boat and would like to prosecute the fishing to a certain extent. What size of holding would he wish to have on the land?—I should say from ten to a dozen acres or thereby.

21,210. And you think that would be more profitable than a croft upon which alone the occupier would be dependent without the sea?—Well, I think it might be quite as profitable, and some people would like that way of living better. I refer here to small crofters along the shore.

21,211. It is what you yourself would like?—Yes, I would like that very well.

21,212. Mr Munro.—To return to this question of advances to small tenants, you no doubt expect that the money would be advanced for the purpose of enabling a tenant to build the necessary houses and offices in connection with a small farm?—Yes.

21,213. And the money so expended would, of course, afford a fair security for the advance?—Yes.

21,214. Now in such a case do you expect that the tenant himself would be able to advance a portion of the money that he would require?—In a good many cases I think he would.

21,215. So that in that case there would be a fair margin of security for any money that might be advanced by the government?—Just so.

21,216. And there is no comparison between money advanced to enable fishermen to buy boats and money advanced to enable a farmer to stock a small farm; there is no comparison, I mean, between the two in the value of the security, you allow that, don't you?—Yes.

21,217. I think you said that you were in the habit of cultivating a small croft and prosecuting the fishing at the same time?—Yes.

21,218. Now is it possible to follow the fishing industry and to cultivate the croft as it ought to be cultivated?—Quite possible, but you just can't prosecute the fishing the whole year round; you have sometimes to leave the fishing and attend to the croft, but it is quite possible if a man is active and pays attention.

21,219. Now if you got a small croft of the size you mentioned, 10 to 12 acres, could you pay the rent of that croft from the produce of the croft itself or would you require to supplement it out of your fishing?—That would depend upon if it were cheap enough, for one thing, and also on the price of any animals you would have to dispose of.

21,220. But assuming that you got the croft at its fair value, could you pay the rent out of the croft itself?—Yes, I think you might pay the rent, yes, I believe you would pay the rent.

21,221. Out of the croft itself?—Yes.

21,222. Mr Sutherland.—You said that if the one failed you could fall back on the other?—Yes.

21,223. Which do you mean to fall back on?—The one that did not fail, if the fishing failed you might have a good harvest.

21,224. Which one have you in your mind that you would fall back upon?—I had none in particular.

21,225. As a matter of fact, which have the men mostly to fall back upon, the land or the sea?—On the land, I should say, when unable to follow the fishing, but at present the rent is mostly paid out of the sea.

21,226. And you say that you are in favour of a man being a crofter and a fisherman at the same time?—Yes, along the seashore.

21,227. In certain circumstances?—Yes.

21,228. Do you know any such?—Many.

21,229. Where?—All along the coast here.

21,230. Of Caithness?—Yes.

21,231. Do you know them in any other part of the country?—Yes, they are in some other parts of the country too, I believe.

21,232. But not to the extent that they are in Caithness?—I could not give a definite answer to that question.

21,233. You have been all over Scotland, I presume?—Yes.

21,234. And have you seen crofter fishermen elsewhere to any large extent, or to the same extent as in Caithness?—I believe not.

21,235. And I have no doubt that your mind was influenced by the fact that you have been brought up among such people when you advocate such a thing?—Very likely. All are influenced by their surroundings.

21,236. What is the experience of these crofter fishermen with regard to living; are they more or less comfortable than other fishermen?—I should say since the fishing industry has turned bad, the crofter fishermen are the better class of the two, because if there is a bad fishing they have the land to fall back upon. Although perhaps it is not worth very much as a crofters' ground.

21,237. Have you any opinion regarding the matter of how they became fishermen at all?—Yes.

21,238. Well, what is it?—Because they were evicted from the ground, forced off their holdings by the landlords. They were forced to do something for their living, and they naturally went to the sea.

21,239. But couldn't they get their living out of the land?—They could not stay on the land.

21,240. But what made these men who are crofters and fishermen together take to the sea?—Well, I believe the landlords would allow them to take some barren patches along the seashore and they occupied that and cultivated that, and to eke out a living they had to try the sea too.

21,241. Wasn't it to get the rent?—I expect so, that was one great thing.

21,242. Because the crofts were not self-sustaining?—Yes.

21,243. Is that your opinion?—Yes.

21,244. Do you think the starting of such a class was actuated by that, to a certain extent?—Yes, I feel certain of that.

21,245. Now is it your experience that all these people who were crofters and fishermen in Caithness twenty years ago are the same now; have some of them dropped the fishing altogether in your experience?—Yes, a good many have.

21,246. And do you know any reason for that?—Well, one reason is that a man could start to the fishing formerly much easier than now.

21,247. There is more capital required now to embark in the fishing?—Yes.

21,248. How much capital is required to start as a herring fisherman now?—It depends on the share you want.

21,249. But suppose yourself to be the owner of a boat, what is the value of a fishing boat and nets and all in Wick at the present time?—A good boat and proper drift would cost—(Turning to audience. Is there any practical fisherman here?)

21,250. £700?—£400.

21,251. Would not a man require to be a pretty large capitalist before he could start as the proprietor of a boat?—Yes, but they perhaps don't require to have all the money just at once, they might get some time to pay out that amount.

21,252. Would he require to be a bigger capitalist to take a small croft?—Oh, I don't think so.

21,253. You could as easily then take a reasonably sized croft as you could start as a fisherman?—Yes, if you were to have the whole boat and drift for yourself.

21,254. I am supposing you could make the same arrangements regarding the land as you could for the fishing?—I should say it is as easy.

21,255. And a man that could start as a fisherman without government aid could as easily start as a small farmer?—Yes, that is my opinion.

21,256. Now with regard to the advances that were made to the fishermen, do you admit that they were a failure?—Well, I think it was.

21,257. What is the ground of your belief that they have been a failure?—Because many of them have been unable to pay up the policies.

21,258. Do you know how much money had to be written off for the Wick district?—No, I don't.

21,259. You have no idea how much it was?—No, I don't know.

21,260. Would you be surprised to learn that it is only about a tenth of the whole of the advances?—Yes, I would.

21,261. Did you think that the loss was greater than that?—Yes, I thought so indeed.

21,262. Now with regard to the advances themselves, did you ever hear that an agitation had been got up over the country by fishermen for the purpose of getting these advances for buying boats?—No, I never heard them.

21,263. Do you know who advocated the giving of the advances; was it the fishermen themselves?—I don't think it was the fishermen.

21,264. You never heard of any agitation or any demand on the part of the fishermen to get these advances?—No.

21,265. As a matter of fact they were offered to them by the Executive of the government of the time?—Yes, that is my opinion.

21,266. So it was not the demand of the people at all?—No, I don't think it.

21,267. At any rate there was not any amount of demand for these advances to fishermen like what there is with regard to giving the land to the people now?—No, not in our district anyway.

21,268. The Chairman.—Do a considerable number of fishermen on the coast of Caithness go out as hired hands?—A few, not many.

21,269. A good many go out as holding a share or part of a share of a boat?—Yes.

21,270. And it does not need much capital for that?—Not a great amount.

21,271. Do you know of any fishermen on this coast who have only patches of potato or garden ground and trust for their livelihood entirely to the sea?—Yes, there are a few of them.

21,272. How do they succeed?—Well, they just have a pretty hard time of it I think in most cases.

21,273. Have they a harder time in your judgment than those who have crofts?—Yes, I think so.

21,274. Or are they, upon the whole, better off?—I don't think so.

21,275. Are there any cases of fishermen who have only patches of land and not crofter holdings in the district you represent?—Yes, there are a few but not many.

21,276. And you represent them as well as the others I suppose?—Yes, they just asked me to appear here.

DAVID MACKAY Crofter, Auckingill (50)—examined.

21,277. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

21,278. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

21,279. What was your old rent?—£26.

21,280. And what is the new rent?—£20.

21,281. The area is 26 acres 1 rood 0 poles arable, 2 acres 2 roods 12 poles outrun; one share in a common of 1305 acres. Have you any written statement?—No.

21,282. Were you appointed to come here at a meeting?—I am here in the place of one who was appointed; he is absent, and I am here in his place, John Manson.

21,283. You come here instead of Manson who was appointed?—Yes.

21,284. What district do you represent?—Auckingill.

21,285. How many tenants are there for whom you are appearing?—I am not sure.

21,286. A considerable number?—Yes.

21,287. There are about twenty tenants in the township who appeared before the Crofters Commission?—There are more than twenty altogether.

21,288. Is there any land to which you wish to ask our attention?—Yes, the farm of Stroupster. That was a farm at one time.

21,289. Is that a grazing farm?—Yes, now.

21,290. What is the name of the tenant?—Alexander.

21,291. Do you know what rent he pays?—I am not aware.

21,292. Do you know if he is under lease?—I believe he is under lease as yet.

21,293. Do you know what number of sheep the farm carries?—I could not say, but I believe about 600 or 700.

21,294. Were there tenants there in former days?—Yes.

21,295. Do you know how many?—There was one in my recollection, Alexander Nicolson.

21,296. Alexander Nicolson within your own recollection, and were there any before your time?—I could not say.

21,297. Is there old arable land on that farm?—Oh, yes, good ground there, some of it.

21,298. Suitable for cultivation?—Perfectly.

21,299. And occupation by crofters?—Yes.

21,300. And you think that holdings could be made there which crofters could occupy at a profit?—I am sure of that.

21,301. In average years?—Yes.

21,302. You are certain of that?—Certain of that.

21,303. Can you tell us what extent of land there is on that farm?—I could not tell exactly the acres.

21,304. But will there be some hundreds of acres or only a few?—It is all included in one park with a dyke round it, about 80 acres I think.

21,305. What is the name of the park?—There is not a special name for it.

21,306. Is it enclosed?—All enclosed with a dyke round it.

21,307. And was it within that park that this man Alexander Nicolson once lived?—Yes.

21,308. How far is that park from the neighbouring crofters' land?—It is in the middle of their hill pasture.

21,309. What is the name of their hill pasture?—No special name.

21,310. Then is that park separate from the rest of the farm of Stroupster?—That is the part of the farm that was made into sheep grazing; the arable ground was put into sheep grazing.

21,311. Had all that park at one time been under cultivation?—Not altogether; to make it square they took in some that was never under cultivation.

21,312. Some of it had and some of it had not?—Yes.

21,313. Are the crofters whom you represent in want of additional land?—Some of them.

21,314. You mean their holdings are too small?—There are some grown up that have to leave the place for want of ground.

21,315. And would relief be afforded by consolidating some of the holdings becoming vacant with others that are occupied and transferring the persons who leave to this new ground?—Undoubtedly it would.

21,316. And would you be in favour of such a course as that?—Yes, I would.

21,317. Is there any other land in your mind which you wish us to look to?—No.

21,318. Only this part?—This part, and it has been a great disadvantage to the people, because at one time we put two or three yeld cattle there and got them away to the summer, and he charged the nominal price of half-a-crown a head and when we got them home, of course, they helped to pay the rent.

21,319. But you can't do that now?—No.

21,320. The land is wholly occupied by the farmer?—Yes.

21,321. What use does he make of it mainly?—It is all under sheep.

21,322. He has one hirsel I suppose?—Yes.

Wick.
David Mackay.

21,323. Is there any crofter in Auckingill pays as large a rent as you do?—No.

21,324. They are all below you?—Yes.

21,325. What stock do you keep yourself?—Two horses, three cows sometimes, and sometimes two or three stirks.

21,326. Any sheep?—Sometimes six, sometimes twelve.

21,327. Have you any desire to leave your own holding?—No, if I would get it at a reasonable rent I have none.

21,328. I take it that the other holdings in Auckingill are all smaller than yours?—Most of them are.

21,329. Do you remember the size of the smallest holding there?—About four acres, I think three or four acres arable.

21,330. What rent was paid for that?—I could not say, about £2, 10s., or something like that.

21,331. Mr Sutherland.—Do you desire more an extension of your grazing than anything else?—No, not an extension of the grazing.

21,332. How far does your present grazing go? Does it go as far as the Loch of Auckingill?—We could not tell exactly our grazing, because the big farmer, when he got that farm, intrudes on what is called our grazing.

21,333. Haven't you a properly defined boundary between you?—No, not that I am aware of.

21,334. How is that?—He comes down sometimes to our corn.

21,335. What is the boundary you claim? Do you go as far as the loch?—I don't know how far our march is. There is no march between us and him that I know of.

21,336. You are returned in the official list as having 1305 acres of pasture?—That is what the big farmer would not take.

21,337. But you are credited with 1305 acres as the township grazing; how many share in that?—I am not aware; Farquhar Mackay might let you know.

21,338. But surely if you have a share of the grazing you will know how many are interested in it?—Oh, the whole of the people.

21,339. Have you any idea of the number of families?—About sixty, but I am not sure.

21,340. You said that you kept about six sheep, could your share not keep more than that?—I cannot keep that at all times.

21,341. You cannot give the acreage of Stroupster farm can you?—No.

21,342. But you think it has 600 or 700 sheep stock?—There is sometimes that on and sometimes more.

21,343. What farm bounds with it on the west?—Brabster I think is nearest on the north west and Slickly on the west.

21,344. And does it go south of the Kirkburn?—I don't think so.

21,345. In your opinion there is some land on the Stroupster farm that could be profitably occupied by crofters or other small tenants?—I have seen as good corn growing there as ever grew in Freswick estate.

21,346. Is the park at Stroupster cultivated, the whole of that enclosed land?—Yes.

21,347. How many acres is it?—I am not sure how many, it is a great big park. I think about 80 acres.

21,348. And it is under cultivation?—No, it is not under cultivation.

21,349. Not now?—No, it is under sheep.

21,350. It is allowed to run out in pasture is it?—Yes.

21,351. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is there a resident tenant at Stroupster?—None but the shepherd.

21,352. Are there any steadings of any size?—There was a steading at one time and then there was a mill put up there and steadings for cattle and horses, but it is all demolished almost.

21,353. How many holdings would you like to see on Stroupster?—I could not say I am sure; a man would require from 20 to 30 acres at least and pasture besides.

21,354. How many acres of land that might be cultivated are there in Stroupster?—I am not sure. I know there is some outside the boundary that might be in cultivation, outside the 80.

Wick.
David Mackay.

21,355. But I am not speaking now of the land under cultivation at present, but how many acres of land on Stroupster farm could be cultivated?—I believe it could be all cultivated inside that park.

21,356. How many acres is that?—I suppose about 80, not that I am sure.

21,357. Well, then if each man should have 20 acres at least, that is four holdings?—Yes.

21,358. What would be the rent of such holdings, in your opinion a fair rent?—I will not meddle with the rent at all. I will not say anything about the rent.

21,359. But supposing you were offered a holding on this farm of 20 acres, before you declined or accepted the offer you would have to consider what the rent would be?—Well, in the present state it is in I would say 7s. or 8s. an acre was plenty.

21,360. Take it at 7s. an acre, that is £7 for each holding?—Yes.

21,361. Do you know what the present rent of the farm is?—No, I am not aware.

21,362. At any rate it is more than the rent that these tenants would be able to pay I suppose?—I could not say.

21,363. You have no idea what the present rent is?—No.

21,364. The valuation roll gives us the rent of the farm and house of Stroupster as £110, 4s.?—Is that including the pasture and all?

21,365. Yes, I take it so, but I suppose the rent of this land that you speak of would come to more than £28. I mean the part that you allude to?—There is a great number of acres of pasture along with the place.

21,366. You say you can't always keep six sheep now?—Yes.

21,367. Why is that?—Because their sheep come and eat all our pasture, the big farmer's sheep that occupies Stroupster. We have no pasture on the hills; we have the name of it but that is all.

21,368. You mean that there is not keep for them all?—That is it, and we have to keep our sheep on our own pasture at home.

21,369. If you had keep you could keep the sheep?—Certainly.

21,370. You don't complain that your rent is too high?—It will not help me at the present time to complain. I am saying nothing about my own rent.

21,371. Is it managed as a club farm this thousand acres of grazing of the township?—Everybody can go there that chooses to go.

21,372. Just to look after their sheep?—Certainly, but when we come on his pasture he dogs our sheep and cattle, but we never get a chance to dog his. He has the victory over us.

21,373. But I suppose if he can drive his sheep on your ground you can drive your sheep to his ground?—It would take some time to drive off his stock, and then we might damage some and get into trouble.

21,374. The township and the farm would be the better of a sheep fence between them?—Certainly, we would know then how far we could go.

21,375. Mr William Mackay, factor for the estate.—How long have you been tenant on your holding?—Six years past, seven years now.

21,376. What induced you to come to that holding?—Because it was larger than the place I was in.

21,377. The Chairman.—Where had you been before?—On the same estate, in the same town.

21,378. A smaller croft in the same town?—Yes.

WILLIAM REID, Boat Builder, Keiss (60)—examined.

21,379. The Chairman.—Are you here as representing the township of Keiss?—Yes.

21,380. Appointed at a meeting?—Not at a meeting but by a committee.

21,381. You are described as a boat builder; is that your main means of livelihood?—It was.

21,382. Are you not that now?—Oh, yes, when I can get work.

21,383. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

21,384. What rent do you pay?—I have got no croft.

21,385. I thought you said your case was dealt with by the Commission. Now is there land to which you wish to call our attention?—The land that I wish to call attention to is Auckhorn on the Keiss estate.

21,386. Is that a grazing farm?—Partly, both grazing and arable.

21,387. What is the name of the tenant?—Finlayson.

21,388. Do you know what rent he pays?—No.

21,389. Do you know the extent of the farm?—I don't know the acreage exactly.

21,390. Does Finlayson live upon the farm?—Yes.

21,391. He has a dwelling-house and steading there?—Yes.

21,392. Do you know the number of sheep upon it?—Perhaps about 200 I suppose.

21,393. Does he pay a rent of less than £100?—No, he pays more.

21,394. What is it you wish to say about land on that farm?—It is about the evictions when that farm was made a sheep farm.

21,395. How long ago is it since that?—Whitsunday 1842 when the tenants were evicted.

21,396. Where did you get that information?—I was personally born there.

21,397. And you were living there; you remember it yourself?—Yes.

21,398. How many were turned out?—There were nine altogether.

21,399. Do you know their names?—Yes.

21,400. What were they?—Henry Budge, Alexander Reid, George Inrig, and the successors of William Miller, Rose Cormack, Alexander Miller, John Harper and John Smith.

21,401. Was that farm formed entirely out of these holdings?—Yes.

21,402. Had there been no farm before of Auckhorn?—No, except the nine tenants represented the whole of Auckhorn.

21,403. And it was consolidated into one farm?—Yes.

21,404. Who was the first tenant?—A brother of the proprietor's held it in his own hands for a time; Mr Macleay was proprietor at that time.

21,405. His brother became the first tenant?—Yes, Alexander Macleay.

21,406. Do you know what rent?—No.

21,407. But ever since that time it has been occupied as one farm and occupied by a succession of tenants?—Yes.

21,408. And in your opinion is it suitable for occupation by crofters now?—Quite as suitable now as it was and there is a lot of ground that was arable then that is now under sheep pasture.

21,409. Under permanent pasture?—Yes.

21,410. But could it in your opinion be easily restored to cultivation again?—Oh, yes.

21,411. Do you know what became of those who had to leave this place?—Yes, I know pretty well what became of the most of them.

21,412. Did some of them get holdings in the vicinity?—They did; but some had to leave and go to other places.

21,413. In the county?—Yes, through their getting that place.

21,414. Do the crofters whom you represent desire to get new holdings if they can be obtained?—Well, I believe it is the general opinion, the general desire as far as I understand.

21,415. Are some of the holdings of the crofters for whom you appear rather small?—Yes.

21,416. Are they too small for a man to live by his holdings?—Oh, certainly they are.

21,417. Do you know crofters in your neighbourhood with holdings which enable them to live by their holdings?—They have to do it, but some of them, of course, have done pretty well at the fishing before and had to give it up.

Wick — William Reid.

21,418. But I am speaking of those who do not depend on the fishing. Do you know any crofters at present who live by their holdings exclusively?—Excuse me I meant to explain that, that all the crofters on that estate had to go to the fishing when Mr Macleay had Keiss.

21,419. To eke out the livelihood they got from the holding?—Yes.

21,420. But do you know of any crofters at present in your district who live by their holdings?—I do.

21,421. A number?—Not many.

21,422. Do most of them live partly by the holdings and partly by fishing or labour?—That is so.

21,423. Is that a system of which you are in favour; I put it to you in this way—would you be in favour of what I would call a self-subsisting holding, or of a holding whereby a man partly lived, and partly by fishing or labour, which?—I think they should be distinct as a rule, except there might be a few small cases round the seaside.

21,424. A few cases where they lived partly by the sea or labour and partly by the croft?—Yes.

21,425. And others where they lived entirely by the holding?—Yes.

21,426. Would you be in favour of the system of self-sustaining holdings being considerably extended in the county of Caithness from what it is?—It would be my opinion that the crofts are generally too small.

21,427. And you would be in favour of self-sustaining holdings?—Yes.

21,428. The Caithness crofters as a rule are good farmers?—I should think so.

21,429. That is my own experience. Is there any other land besides Auckhorn that you wish to speak of?—There is another place called Long Green, in connection with the Auckhorn farm, occupied as pasture along with Auckhorn now.

21,430. Occupied by Mr Finlayson?—Yes.

21,431. Grazed by him along with the farm of Auckhorn?—Yes.

21,432. Do you know the extent of it?—Not definitely. I should think there might be perhaps about 40 acres that could be cultivated or put under cultivation, but I could not say definitely.

21,433. Is it suitable for cultivation?—It was cultivated; there were three tenants occupying that place; and they were evicted.

21,434. Do you know their names?—Yes.

21,435. What were they?—Kenneth Alexander, Donald Macadie, Alexander Alexander.

21,436. Do you remember their being put out?—Yes. It would be thirteen or fourteen years after the Auckhorn evictions.

21,437. And that land is now grazing, and is grazed along with the farm of Auckhorn?—Yes.

21,438. Do you know what rent Finlayson pays for Long Green?—I cannot say.

21,439. The total rent is £150. That, of course, includes Long Green?—Yes, and the hill pasture.

21,440. Do you know what extent of hill pasture he has?—The whole of the hill on the estate, I suppose the whole of the moor; there is a border along the crofting part.

21,441. Does he go up to the sky line?—He goes away up to the burn where the boundary is.

21,442. Do you mean the Kirk burn?—Yes.

21,443. He goes up to that burn?—Yes.

21,444. That is above the hill of Clayton?—Yes, that is so.

21,445. That is a large extent of ground?—It is certainly a good bit.

21,446. Now besides Auckhorn and Long Green, is there any other land?—Well, there were more evictions in connection with the home farm.

21,447. The Keiss home farm?—Yes.

21,448. How many removals occurred there?—Six, I think.

Wick.

William Reid.

21,449. Do you know the names?—Yes.

21,450. What were they?—George Sinclair, Malcolm Groat, John Ross, William Ross, William Keith, William Bain, and a John Groat, I think.

21,451. Do you remember these evictions?—Oh, quite well.

21,452. The whole of them?—The whole of them.

21,453. And that land is now part of the grazing of the home farm?—It is under rotation.

21,454. Is the whole of it under rotation?—Oh, yes.

21,455. Is there a considerable extent of grazing on the home farm besides, not under rotation?—No.

21,456. It is an arable farm?—It is an arable farm.

21,457. And does this land that was in the possession of these persons you have mentioned include all the arable?—That on the lower part of the farm; that is the hill part of the farm.

21,558. Can you give me the extent of arable occupied by these people?—Not definitely, but I might give a rough guess.

21,459. Then are all these the lands you wish to speak of?—That is all.

21,460. Mr Sutherland.—When the seven tenants were turned out of the Keiss home farm, was it arable land they had?—It was not all arable that is now, but they had small patches of arable land.

21,461. And what remained as their outrun was also brought under reclamation when the home farm was made, is that the way?—Not quite. All the moors were outrun for the whole of the estate at that time.

21,462. The whole of the moors?—Yes, in the vicinity. Of course, every part of the locality had the moors right opposite where they were situated.

21,463. The small tenants had got grazing on the moors?—Yes.

21,464. And their arable land is now included in the home farm, is that it?—That is so.

21,465. And does the farm of Auckhorn come down to the back of the holdings of the people of Keiss, the grazing part of it?—Yes.

21,466. So that you are shut in on the one side by the sea, and on the other side by the farm of Auckhorn?—Yes, by the outrun, the hill pasture.

21,467. What is the distance between the high road through Keiss and the boundary of the Auckhorn grazing?—In some parts it may be nearly a mile and in some not half a mile or much more.

21,468. So you are hemmed in on the west side by the Auckhorn grazing, in some places within a mile and in other places half a mile, is that so?—That is so.

21,469. What do the people there propose themselves as a relief?—I cannot give any definite statement on that point.

21,470. Is their idea mostly that some of them should be shifted from there, or that they should get an addition to their present holdings?—I cannot say that.

21,471. Have they formed any idea with regard to that?—I suppose their idea is that they would like to have larger holdings.

21,472. In what direction do they look for an enlargement of holdings?—Long Green would be quite available, of course.

21,473. But Long Green is under cultivation, isn't it?—No, it is under pasture.

21,474. But was it cultivated at one time?—Oh, yes.

21,475. So that is quite available for arable land now?—Yes.

21,476. There is a considerable deal of arable land in the farm of Auckhorn, is there not?—It is not considered a large farm.

21,477. Does it come south of Wester Loch at all?—No, it borders on the north-east side of Wester Loch.

21,478. Mr Shaw-Stewart.—Which would be the greatest benefit to the people of Keiss; would it be that a few should get new holdings elsewhere, or that there should be an extension of grazing to the present tenants; that is to say part of Auckhorn farm grazing?—New holdings I think would be the greater benefit. I am speaking my own opinion only.

21,479. How would the new holdings be a benefit to the whole township?—It would be an outlet for some parties who have none.

Wick.

William Reid.

21,480. It would be a benefit for those who could occupy the new holdings, but how would that benefit the rest of them?—It would be very difficult to make one thing a benefit for the whole of them.

21,481. Would part of the farm grazing of Auckhorn suit the Keiss crofters for grazing as a club farm?—It would suit a part of it, but not convenient for many of the Keiss crofters.

21,482. The Auckhorn grazing runs behind the Keiss holdings?—The hills of course would; the moors.

21,483. If they could get that hill for grazing, would that not be a benefit to the Keiss crofters?—Yes, as a whole.

21,484. Would that not be a greater benefit to the whole than the removal of three or four to new holdings?—I think there is room for both of these.

21,485. But supposing it were an alternative; supposing there was no ground for new holdings as well as an extension of grazing, which would be the greater benefit, in your opinion, to the township of Keiss?—A benefit to the whole would be better than a benefit to a small part.

21,486. And therefore the extension of grazing would benefit the whole?—Yes.

21,487. Going back to the question of the small holdings. How many tenants could occupy Auckhorn farm in small holdings?—I have given you a statement of nine that did occupy it at one time.

21,488. But in your opinion, at the present day, because the circumstances are not the same. The prices of farm produce are very different from what they used to be, and agriculture is not so prosperous altogether; looking at the whole circumstances of the present day, how many crofters, in your opinion, could profitably occupy Auckhorn farm?—Perhaps five or six.

21,489. Would that be taking the whole farm, grazing and all?—No, clear of the moors. I mean the grass pasture on the farm.

21,490. Would you not give them any pasture on the hill ground?—They don't require it; they have plenty of pasture in connection with the farm.

21,491. Did you say four or five tenants?—I said five or six.

21,492. If there were holdings made for five or six tenants on the better part of the farm, that would leave the grazing unoccupied?—The grazing would be the same as it was when I remember in connection with the croft.

21,493. The grazing of the farm would then be held in connection with the new holdings, the hill grazing?—Not the hill grazing.

21,494. How was that occupied in the former days?—There is a lot of pasture in connection with the farm that is not the hill.

21,495. But the hill is now grazed, isn't it?—Yes.

21,496. How was it formerly occupied?—By all the tenants in common through the whole estate.

21,497. The Keiss tenants?—Yes.

21,498. What kind of rent would these five or six tenants be able to pay for the small holdings?—I suppose a ratio the same as other grounds, I can't say exactly.

21,499. You know the land?—Yes.

21,500. What value would you put upon it per acre?—I can't say that; I am not a practical farmer you know.

21,501. But that lessens the weight of your evidence you know with us. You are giving us evidence on very practical questions and you tell us you are not a practical farmer?—Well, of course, I am telling you the truth.

21,502. I don't doubt that for a moment, but you see it rather lessens the weight we attach to your evidence on the agricultural part of it. The fact is you are only able to speak to what has been in the past; you are not able to give any opinion as to the best way of occupying the land in the future, isn't that so, as a practical farmer?—Not as a practical man.

Wick.

William Reid.

21,503. Mr Sutherland.—Have you ever cultivated any land?—I have wrought on land.

21,504. And isn't that a practical farmer?—But that is a good while since.

21,505. Do you mean that you are not a practical hand at paying rent, or at fixing rent, but you have worked on land?—It is forty years since I wrought on land.

21,506. But you were in connection with a farm?—I was, in my youth.

21,507. Mr Munro.—I suppose you consider a fact, if it be a fact, stated by a boat-builder is just as good as a fact stated by a farmer or anybody else?—Certainly, it is a fact, whoever states it.

21,508. Mr James Nicolson (Factor on the Keiss Estate).—Is the evidence you have given to-day got at from second hand, or do you know from your own information?—I am speaking from my own personal knowledge.

21,509. You have said that there were in 1842, I think, nine tenants evicted from Auckhorn Farm?—Yes.

21,510. Did they remove voluntarily, or was there any arrangement made for them occupying holdings on other parts of the estate?—That is more than my memory can tell me; they did not do it voluntarily as far as my father was concerned, I am sure. [The Chairman.—Was he evicted?—Yes.]

21,511. Were there no terms in regard to his removal?—

21,512. The Chairman.—Were there any terms made with your father?—He got the offer of the place, and he was not much inclined to go, because there was another that would have to leave if he went there; and ultimately he did go.

21,513. Mr James Nicolson.—My lord, I have here a plan,—I am sorry I have not any prior information before 1842, but all I can say is that this plan does not agree with the witness's evidence.

21,514. The Chairman.—What is the date of the plan? [Mr Nicolson.—1843.]

21,515. But it might be made before the removals, you know. This witness is sixty years of age—and his evidence is based, according to the statement he has given, entirely on his own personal knowledge, and it seems to be confirmed by this that his own father was one of those who were turned out. You were born on the place? [Witness]. Yes; I was nine years old when I left.

21,516. Mr James Nicolson.—What year did that occur?—Whitsunday 1842, when we were put from it.

21,517. You admit that the landlord offered your father another holding on the estate at that time?—Yes, I do.

21,518. Doesn't that go to show that he was not evicted?—It does not. I don't think it does, because another was evicted in his stead. I don't think that makes the case any better.

21,519. Then you say further on that there were six removals from the second part of Auckhorn?—I said three from Long Green.

21,520. Were these tenants also evicted?—Yes.

21,521. Without voluntarily and freely going?—I cannot tell what were voluntary. They did not volunteer to go out.

21,522. You have used the word "eviction," and, from your own point of view, doesn't that indicate that they did not go voluntarily and freely, and that there was no arrangement made?—I call it an eviction if there is a lot of tenants cleared out of any place to make room for a big farm.

21,523. The Chairman.—Did they go willingly or against their will?—None of them went willingly, I think, as far as I remember.

21,524. Mr James Nicolson.—Didn't these three tenants get other holdings on the estate?—No, not all.

21,525. Didn't John Ross?—That is not from Long Green.

21,526 Well, Alexander Alexander, didn't he get a holding upon the estate?—No, I don't think so.

21,527. Didn't Kenneth Alexander get one?—Yes; Kenneth got a new place. Wick

21,528. He was just transferred from one part of the estate to the other?—He was transferred from a pretty good bit of croft to a "delvin." William Reid.

21,529. Wasn't he transferred from one part of the estate to another?—Yes.

21,530. What was the other tenant's name?—Donald Macadie.

21,531. Did he get another holding?—I don't think it; I think he went to Watten, and Alexander Alexander went to Reith, I think.

21,532. The Chairman.—That is not on the estate?—Not on the estate.

21,533. Mr James Nicolson.—Is it possible, my lord, that any relatives of these tenants could be summoned to appear here to give evidence before your lordship? [The Chairman.—If you wish to lead evidence with regard to these matters]. Because my information is certainly—my information is that they were not evicted, at least not all of them, but they voluntarily and freely removed to other places. [The Chairman.—Very well, Mr Nicolson, if you submit names of witnesses to us we will consider as to the opportunity of getting evidence from them.]

21,534. Thank you. (To witness).—Isn't it a fact that the tenants, the crofters, hold in common about 600 acres of hill ground which lies in between the pasture occupied by Auckhorn and the arable farm?—I think I have given expression to that. I think I said there was a boundary line outside the crofts, but it is all cut up in peat banks.

21,535. So that the Auckhorn sheep pasture does not adjoin the arable land of the crofts?—No.

21,536. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to these removals, were the people served with summonses of eviction, do you know?—That is past my memory.

21,537. You have no knowledge of that?—No.

21,538. Now, with regard to the people who were transferred from one part of the estate to the other, were there such within your memory?—Oh, yes.

21,539. And how did the land they got compare with the land they were removed from?—There might not be much difference with regard to the land.

21,540. Did they in any case get arable land where they were?—Not all.

21,541. Some of them, what land did some of them get?—They all got less or more; they did get places on the estate, I think, except one or two from Auckhorn; it might be better and it might be worse. I don't remember; but in most cases it was worse.

21,542. But did they in every case get arable land such as they left behind, do you know?—They did, but less quantity; some have more.

21,542*a*. Do you think that most of them lost by the transaction?—I do.

21,543. And they got no compensation for that loss?—No compensation.

21,544. Mr James Nicolson.—I presume the evidence that has been given with regard to the home farm is altogether as to arable land?

21,545. The Chairman.—I quite understand that.

21,546. Mr Donald Macrae.—I should like to ask a question. Are there two classes in this township, a class of fishermen having an interest in a boat and having an interest in the land; and another class having an interest in a fishing-boat without any land; and which of the two classes is in the better circumstances?

21,547. The Chairman.—Do you know whether there are two classes of tenants on this property; those who have an interest in a boat and a certain interest in land; the other having an interest in a boat and no land?—I do know that.

21,548. The next question Mr Macrae desires to put is this,—which of these classes prospers best?

21,549. Mr Donald Macrae.—The fishermen who have no land, or the fishermen who have some land?—I think, generally speaking, that those who have a bit land are perhaps the best; that is, of late, since the fishing interest has fallen so low.

Wick. William Reid.

21,550. The Chairman.—Take the time when the fishing was good, which of them did best?—I believe that there were some few fishermen then that were better than those who had the small crofts.

21,551. In other words, when the fishing is very good it is better to be a fisherman and nothing else, and when the fishing is not so good it is convenient to have the land to fall back upon?—There is no doubt there is force in that.

21,552. Are you of opinion that those fishermen who have land would be better off still if they had larger holdings, and remained fishermen, of course?—They cannot attend the fishings properly and have anything of a larger holding, that is my opinion.

21,553. You would not be in favour of giving to a fisherman, who is partly fisherman and partly crofter, any larger holding than he has already?—Not more than from 7 to 10 acres altogether; that is my private opinion.

21,554. And is that the average size of the holding at present, the crofter-fishermen holdings?—I think something like that.

21,555. Isn't it generally a good deal less?—They may in some cases be less, but I think the generality is something like 7 acres or thereby.

21,556. And you think it would be a good arrangement that a man should depend partly upon the sea for his livelihood, with the cultivation of a croft of from 7 to 10 acres arable?—I don't approve very much, really, of crofting and fishing together; that is my opinion.

21,557. Then you would have a man to be either the one or the other?—Yes, I think so.

21,558. Either a fisherman with a potato patch or a crofter exclusively?—Yes, with as much ground as could keep his family.

21,559. And what extent of the kind of land you know of would you assign to a man having a wife and family, say of five?—From 30 to 50 acres, I should say.

21,560. Of arable land?—Yes.

21,561. Mr Malcolm.—Can you tell me where the present tenant of this farm was employed before he came to this farm?—His father had a farm in Greenland in Dunnet.

21,562. Was that a small farm or a farm of considerable size?—It is a medium size, I think.

21,563. Did the present tenant ever occupy a croft, a holding as small as a croft?—That is more than I can tell. I suppose that he did, but it was only hearsay.

21,564. Don't you know the place which his father occupied?—Well, I have very slight acquaintance there.

21,565. Was the name Greenland?—Greenland, I think.

21,566. Was that a croft?—No, it is a pretty large farm.

21,567. You don't know that the present tenant of this farm was at one time a crofter himself?—I cannot say at all.

21,568. Mr G. M. Sutherland.—Does he occupy another farm, Wester Loch?—Yes, at least the family do, and another.

Donald Sinclair.

DONALD SINCLAIR, Crofter, Roster, Clyth (67)—examined.

21,569. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

21,570. What is your present rent?—£11, 2s.

21,571. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

21,572. What was your old rent?—£19, 10s.

21,573. The area is 13 acres 1 rood 37 poles arable, 12 acres outrun, no grazing. Were you appointed to appear?—Yes.

21,574. At a meeting?—Yes.

21,575. Along with Macleod you represent the whole of the Clyth tenants?—Yes.

21,576. Now, what land do you wish to call our attention to?—In the first part, the grazing was taken from us. Wick.

21,577. What was the name of the grazing taken from you?—It was added to Camster in the year 1840. Donald Sinclair.

21,578. When did that occur?—In the year 1840.

21,579. Can you give us any idea of the extent taken away?—It was supposed to be of the value of £30 or £35 when it was taken from the crofters.

21,580. Can you tell us, from your information, what was the carry of that ground?—I cannot say.

21,581. When it was added to the farm of Camster, did you get any land instead of it?—No.

21,582. That land, I suppose, has since been under sheep?—Ever since. We were evicted from that township in the year 1840.

21,583. Was that the township of Camster?—Yes. It belongs to Sir George—the Thurso estate.

21,584. How many were removed?—Twenty.

21,585. And were they put down upon the shore?—They were put anywhere they liked to go.

21,586. Did a number of them go to the shore?—They went to Forse, and they went to America, and they went to Reay.

21,587. Very few remained on Clyth?—A few got places on Clyth.

21,588. Now is this what you wish to say, that the crofters are in need of having their grazing extended, or rather to get grazing?—Yes.

21,589. At present you have no grazing?—We have very little grazing.

21,590. And you represent a body of men who wish both new holdings and additional grazing?—And in the year 1859 the whole was cut off from the estate—the rest of the grazing.

21,591. What land was taken in 1859?—The hill pasture belonging to the estate.

21,592. Who was the proprietor at that time?—Sir Tollemache Sinclair.

21,593. What was done with that land?—It was given to another tenant for sheep pasture.

21,594. Of Camster?—Mr Horne, Camster.

21,595. Whom was the pasture taken in 1859 given to?—To another tenant.

21,596. Do you know his name?—Yes; Angus Falconer.

21,597. Has it been occupied since as a grazing?—He occupied it for nineteen years, and other two had it since that. It is now in the hands of Mr Sharp.

21,598. Can you tell us what the rent of that piece of hill pasture was, or estimated to be, before it was taken away?—I could not tell about the value of it at that time, because it was all considered to be part of the estate; but the first rent was £40 when Falconer got it.

21,599. Was there any other land taken away?—A few small crofts that were connected with that hill pasture were put into the grazing.

21,600. You represent crofters who wish to get that grazing back if it can be got?—Yes, if it could be got.

21,601. And is the township of Clyth congested? I mean to say, are they too much crowded upon each other?—Yes.

21,602. Is the land in good heart, or is it exhausted?—We have the poorest land, and the best land is given out for sheep pasture.

21,603. Then, is the land presently in possession of the crofters in good heart and good cultivation, or is it exhausted?—Some of it is not a great deal, and some pretty fair.

21,604. Would it be an advantage to that township if some of the smaller holdings were consolidated, and those who left their crofts were supplied with holdings elsewhere?—Oh, yes; if all those who would leave it would get others, and they would be divided.

21,605. Where would you send those that left; could they get ground upon this grazing, or would they have to go farther afield?—Yes, if they would get it.

21,606. But is the land suitable for cultivation?—Yes, Camster, but the other hills are not.

21,607. How many tenants are in Clyth altogether?—I don't know.

21,608. But there are a large number?—A large number. Mr Macleod perhaps can tell.

21,609. Is this estate one where there has been a great deal of complaint and discontent for a number of years?—About the hill pasture.

21,610. And the rents?—The ground is not worth the present rent besides what it was four or five years ago; not near.

21,611. Do you keep any stock yourself?—Yes.

21,612. What stock have you?—3 cows, 2 stirks, 1 horse.

21,613. Any sheep?—Two.

21,614. And where do you get grazing for these?—Just poor grazing.

21,615. But it is grazing; is it attached to the township?—A small bit was left of black heather and the common ground of the township pasture, 2½ acres.

21,616. Is there enough of feeding for the stock which the Clyth tenants possess?—No, nor half feeding.

21,617. They would be much the better of an extension of grazing?—Yes.

21,618. Are there a considerable number of tenants in Clyth who have either no stock or very little?—Well, I am not aware of all the tenants; there are some of them with very little stock, I believe.

21,619. Are there some cottars in Clyth?—Yes.

21,620. How many?—I am not aware how many.

21,621. A good number?—Yes.

21,622. And they pay no rent?—Oh, yes; they pay some rent.

21,623. To the crofters?—No, to the proprietor.

21,624. Can you tell us what extent of land capable of being reduced to cultivation is in Camster on the grazing?—There is a great deal of grazing in it, but I think it would suit for twelve good tenants.

21,625. New holdings?—New holdings.

21,626. With good arable land?—Good arable land. It was good land when I was there, but the years may have altered since that.

21,627. You have lived there all your life?—I was there in the year 1840; removed from it.

21,628. Your recollection goes back many years. Now, when you say twelve new holdings, what size of holdings have you in view?—A man would need from 20 to 30 acres.

21,629. Of arable?—Of arable, and plenty of pasture along with that.

21,630. Pasture in proportion?—Yes, and good pasture.

21,631. Do you remember of removals from Camster?—Yes, I do.

21,632. Do you remember the names of any who were removed?—Yes.

21,633. Give us the names?—Angus Macdonald, Donald Gunn, Robert Mackay, William Sutherland, William Steven, Sandy Sutherland, Hugh Mackay, Hugh Gunn, Roderick Macbeath, Widow Mackay (two widows), William Mackay, John Macaulay, George Mackay, and another widow, Donald Mackay, Angus Mackay.

21,634. Is that all you remember?—Yes.

21,635. That is either the whole of them or a large number of them?—That were in it in my day.

21,636. And you remember all these people being removed from Camster?—Certainly they were.

21,637. And is the land of which you have been speaking on Camster as suitable for cultivation now—land which was in the occupation of these crofters?—It was splendid land.

21,638. In their occupation?—At that time.

21,639. Were these persons removed of their own free will or otherwise?—They were evicted away; they would not get leave to stop.

21,640. Do you mean it was against their will?—Certainly it was. There are none that would go away of his own will.

21,641. Now, besides this grazing of which you spoke, taken in 1840 and the grazing taken in 1859, is there any other land thereabout which you wish to speak about?—No, not that I am aware of.

21,642. Would the Clyth tenants be satisfied if it were found that an addition could be made to their grazings from that land, and additional settlements made upon the old arable?—It would be a great benefit to them if they had got some grazings along with the crofts they have.

21,643. Even if they got nothing else?—Yes, those who have it.

21,644. Mr Sutherland.—What is the Camster farm used for now?—For sheep.

21,645. It is a big sheep farm?—Yes.

21,646. Did you say it is in the hands of the proprietor himself at present?—No, it is tenanted.

21,647. Who is the tenant?—Mr George Waters from Tister, a man that had four or five farms, but he is dead recently.

21,648. He held it along with other farms?—Yes.

21,649. What is the size of the Camster farm?—I am not exactly sure.

21,650. Have you any idea of the stock it carries?—I heard it was 13,000 acres. Mr Machardy told me that.

21,651. Was it a farm before the part that was taken from you was added to it?—It was just in the same condition as it is now, except it was added to. The pasture that belonged to Clyth was added.

21,652. And the people that were residing at Camster were cleared for the purpose of making the addition that went to the farm?—They were cleared for sheep those that were in Camster. Wood was factor for Camster as well as the Clyth estate; it was one estate at the time; he took this from them, and gave it to Donald Horne to make a big farm for him.

21,653. Some, you said, went to America, and some to Caithness, and some to Roster?—Yes.

21,654. Were there tenants in Roster before?—Yes.

21,655. And how many of the Camster tenants went there?—Three or four. My father had a place down near the sea.

21,656. How many tenants were in Roster before you went there?—I don't mind. There are about fifteen tenants just now.

21,657. And there would be nine or ten then?—There were more then than now, because the land was made bigger in the year 1859. Some of the tenants went out to new land, and worked there.

21,658. Where was it that the arable land of the Camster tenants was; was it near the loch?—What loch?

21,659. The loch of Camster?—No, it is not near the loch.

21,660. Is it near the Grey Cairns?—Yes; a bit from the Cairns, north-west of the Cairns.

21,661. Some of their cultivated land?—Yes, that is where we were living.

21,662. And are you of opinion that the whole of the land about the loch and about the Grey Cairns there is good for settling tenants in now?—It is all hill ground about the Cairns.

21,663. It is good grazing, isn't it?—Yes.

21,664. Is it better than Roster ground?—Yes, for grazing; it is all green ground, the most of it. It is counted as good as any in Caithness.

21,665. When you went to the Roster township whose land did you get?—Another man's that left it.

21,666. And did you add anything to the arable land since you went there yourself?—Very little. It was lotted before I got it. I could add nothing to it.

21,667. How is it that you have been coming to pay £1 an acre for your land there?—Because the rent was put on the ground when they gave it. I think I was paying more than £1 an acre. I was paying £19, 10s. for only 15½ acres.

21,668. And would the people of Roster be very glad to get the opportunity of settling there, or getting that land you are talking about at Camster for grazing?—They would like to get the grazing whatever; they would not like to remove from the holdings they have built themselves.

21,669. But this land is adjacent to their present holdings?—It is a long distance from it.

Wick.

Donald Sinclair.

21,670. What land adjoins your holdings?—I am about the middle of the township.

21,671. But taking Roster as a whole, what adjoins their land?—Camster ground.

21,672. Roster?—Camster is next to Roster.

21,673. That is to say, this land you are talking about is adjoining your present place?—It is, except the moor.

21,674. So you could utilise it if you got it now as pasture without removing from where you are?—Oh, yes; certainly.

21,675. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Could you give us the bounds of the grazing of the Roster townships, so that we could find it on the map now?—I can't give it.

21,676. You know the boundary?—I know the ground, but I have never measured it.

21,677. But could you describe to us which way it runs; is it east or north of Roster?—It runs east and west.

21,678. Does it run up to the watershed, where the Camster Burn flows north?—The Camster Burn meets part of it, 21,679. It is both east and west of Roster, the grazing?—Yes.

21,680. And you would like it extended over the watershed?—Of course it should be as it was before; that would be fair play.

21,681. Whereabouts are the places suitable for small holdings in Camster? Where on the Camster farm is the best ground for new holdings?—Good land.

21,682. Whereabouts is the most suitable place for arable land; is it that ground up by Loch Camster?—It is not near the loch.

21,683. To the west of it?—To the west of it.

21,684. Is that to the west of the Camster Burn?—The land is not in the middle of the bound.

21,685. Is it near Ballharn Hill?—It is near the Watten district.

21,686. Could you give us the name of any place it is near, the ground that is most suitable for new holdings?—It is the whole township; any place near to it, the whole of the land that we had before is fit to be tenanted again, any of it.

21,687. Any of the land on Camster farm?—Yes.

21,688. Is it all of one quality then?—No, some is better than others.

21,689. That is what I want to know?—All lands are that way.

21,690. Mr D. W. Georgeson, Solicitor, Agent for the Clyth Estate.—Were all the tenants whose names you have mentioned evicted from land at Camster?—Certainly they were.

21,691. And are these lands not now in the occupation of Mr Strong's trustees of Camster?—Yes.

21,692. They form no part of the estate of Clyth?—It was part of the estate of Clyth once.

21,693. But they form no part of the estate of Clyth now in the possession of Mr Sharp?—I don't understand you.

21,694. Are these lands from which these tenants were evicted, now in the possession of Mr Sharp or not?—It does not belong to Mr Sharp.

21,695. And the grazings to which you refer are situated on the Camster property?—Mr Sharp never paid a penny for that. It was sold before Mr Sharp got it. Mr Sharp only bought the estate in 1863 and you was sold before that; Mr Sinclair kept the land in his own hands after Mr Sharp bought the estate.

21,696. So that the grazings to which you now refer are situated on the Camster estate, and not on Mr Sharp's?—Not on Mr Sharp's.

21,697. Mr Donald Macrae.—Do you know any other lands in your neighbourhood that, in your opinion, are suitable for new holdings besides the land that you referred to?—I don't know indeed.

21,698. Do you know Dunbeath Strath?—Yes, and I should know it; I was born there.

21,699. Is it a large farm now?—It is in one man's hands altogether.

21,700. What is the name of the man?—Mr Brown.

Wick.

Donald Sinclair.

21,701. Is that the only farm of which he is tenant?—He is tenant of another farm.

21,702. What is the name of it?—It was called in my day the Mains farm.

21,703. Which Mains?—At the Castle of Dunbeath.

21,704. Now going back to the Strath of Dunbeath, are there old townships in that farm?—Yes, plenty.

21,705. Begin at the first of them, name it?—Achorn was one township.

21,706. How many tenants were in Achorn?—Three.

21,707. The next township?—It is a small place, Balcraggich.

21,708. How many tenants were there?—Two.

21,709. The third?—Clashravin, where I was born.

21,710. Which gives it a position in history. How many tenants were there?—One, my father.

21,711. What rent did he pay?—I can't tell; he had good stock.

21,712. What stock had he?—Ninety-eight sheep when he was put away.

21,713. How many head of cattle would he have?—Four or five highland cows.

21,714. Was there a horse besides?—Yes, three horses.

21,715. How many sheep have you?—I have two.

21,716. Have you any goats?—No.

21,717. Now come to the fourth, taking them in their order?—Eodibest.

21,718. How many tenants?—Fifteen.

21,719. The next township?—There was another place with one tenant, Rhicriach.

21,720. What is the next place now?—Another place they call Garrawalt.

21,721. The next place?—Almin.

21,722. How many tenants?—One, one Gunn.

21,723. The next place?—Culvad.

21,724. How many tenants were there?—One or two; one at one time and two at another.

21,725. What is the next place?—Builtuach.

21,726. How many tenants were there?—Five, I think.

21,727. The next place?—Fleuchary.

21,728. How many tenants were there?—One.

21,729. Next place?—Uich.

21,730. How many were there?—One or two.

21,731. What rent were they paying?—It was a big rent, £40.

21,732. £40 each or £40 between them?—The whole.

21,733. What is the next place?—Flunac.

21,734. The Chairman.—Is there a place called Uig More?—Yes, there are two Uigs.

21,735. Mr Donald Macrae.—Do you yourself remember tenants?—Achnaclyth.

21,736. How many were there?—I don't know because it was under sheep; there was at one time a big farm.

21,737. In the whole of that land that you refer to, how many tenants are there to-day?—None at all.

21,738. Is there a great deal of old arable land in every one of the places that you mention?—I think there are six or seven miles of a strath.

21,739. The Chairman.—Of old arable?—Yes.

21,740. That is Dunbeath Strath, is it?—Yes.

21,741. Mr Donald Macrae.—Is there any cultivation there to-day?—No, all sheep.

21,742. For how long back has there been no cultivation there?—Since 1834, and some of them were removed before I was born.

21,743. Now since the passing of the Crofters Act (I pass from this strath) have not some crofts fallen into the hands of the proprietor, in Clyth?—Oh, yes.

21,744. What use has been made of these crofts that fell into the hands of the proprietor?—Mr Sharp has them himself.

21,745. The Chairman.—How many have fallen back into the hands of the proprietor?—Torryvaich, one Cormack, where the brother of Mr Cormack who went to America was.

21,746. Mr Sutherland.—Has he in any case added it to the neighbouring crofts?—No, I don't think so.

21,747. The Chairman.—How many crofts have passed into the hands of the proprietor?—I am not exactly sure.

21,748. You only mentioned two, and you said one of them was occupied by a crofter?—Yes.

21,749. Then is there only one that has gone back to the proprietor?—Two are in the hands of the proprietor just now.

21,750. Mr Donald Macrae.—To your own knowledge?—Yes.

21,751. Now is there another place in Clyth where small holdings could be made besides the places that you have mentioned already in your evidence. Do you know the Leans of Clyth?—Yes, it belongs to the farm of Clyth.

21,752. Is that the Mains?—Yes, the Mains farm.

21,753. The Chairman.—Who occupies the Mains of Clyth?—Mrs Gill.

21,754. What rent does she pay?—Over £300.

21,755. Is the land on the Leans suitable for cultivation?—There had been crops on it.

21,756. Did you see crops there yourself?—I did.

21,757. What kind of crops?—Oats.

21,758. Good or bad?—Pretty fair when I saw it.

21,759. Do you know any land on the Braes of Occumster?—There is a piece of ground that was given for net ground.

21,760. How many years back was it given for ground for nets?—Over thirty years ago.

21,761. What use is being made of it now?—It is in the hands of Mr Sharp again; he has it for grazing since the fishing was done.

21,762. And is that land suitable for cultivation?—I believe it is; on the face of the brae the imitation of rigs is in it from ages, but I never saw crop on it.

21,763. But you are perfectly satisfied, from what you have seen, that it was under crop at one time?—Yes, it was under crop undoubtedly, as it will show itself.

21,764. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You have been asked a good many questions about the past. I want to ask you one about the future, which is what we are chiefly concerned with. Could these places that you have mentioned be occupied in the future by crofters without any assistance?—Some could and some could not without assistance, and no wonder, they were reduced some years so much; if they had been left as they ought to be, and as they were in former times, they could occupy crofts.

21,765. It is not former times we are concerned with now, it is the future we have to look at. Could most of those holdings be occupied by crofters without any help at all in building or stock?—I think when the proprietors put down the buildings that were put up before, they ought to put up new buildings for us.

21,766. It is not a question of whether they ought to be put up or not, I am only asking you a simple question which I would like you to answer me according to your opinion. Are there crofters in your neighbourhood who could occupy new holdings without any assistance from proprietors or anybody else in building and stocking?—They will not be willing to leave where they are, because they had to put up their own buildings as they stand, and they will not be willing to leave it; but if they would get any addition where they are, they would be willing to take that; it is not easy to put up new buildings; we paid for that before.

21,767. Is it your opinion that they could stock the land and build the houses themselves, and occupy these lands with profit?—Yes, provided that they got it reasonably, according to years.

21,768. You mean it would all depend on the rent?—Yes, according to the years; these two or three years are not so good as the former years.

21,769. We must look out in the future for bad years as well as good, the same as in the past. We can't expect the future to be all good years any more than they have been in the past, and taking that into consideration, could they face these bad years as well as good without any help from the Government?—Some could and some could not.

21,770. Could most of them face it?—About half.

21,771. That is to say they have enough capital to start building and stocking without getting into debt?—Yes, on conditions.

21,772. What conditions?—Not to put up houses and give it away to proprietors in a few years again.

21,773. Fixity of tenure?—Ay.

21,774. But would you also have a condition that if they failed to pay their rent they should be removed?—Certainly.

21,775. And do you think that would often happen?—But they could pay the rent if the rent was reasonable.

21,776. I am supposing what you would consider a reasonable rent, and I want your real opinion as to whether most of these crofters could start on the business without fear of running into debt?—According to the quality of the land, and according to the grazing they would get along with it.

21,777. Assuming a fair holding?—About 10s. per acre is plenty for the land at this present day, and I believe the big farmers sit fully cheaper than that. Our crofters are dearer than that as yet; 14s. 6d. we have to pay per acre in some places.

21,778. I want your opinion clear. Say at 10s. an acre, you would give that?—Some land, but not for all.

21,779. I am speaking of the land you have been telling us about that was occupied formerly, you understand; I am only asking you about land that you have told us of as having been occupied in old days?—About that land?

21,780. About that very land?—Some of that land is not worth 10s. and some of it is better.

21,781. Then some of it is pretty poor land, I take it?—Certainly, there is poor land and good land on every place, and the climate has as much to do with the crops as the land.

21,782. Quite so; well, with your knowledge of the climate and your knowledge of the land that you speak of, would crofters be able to occupy these lands without any help at all?—To maintain themselves, they will by very little help.

21,783. I am supposing they would do more than maintain themselves?—It would be as well to give help to them here as to send it off to Manitoba.

21,784. I am not disputing the advisability of it; I am not alluding to that at all, I am only asking whether they would be requiring this help?—As to the condition of every one, I don't know, I only know my own.

21,785. Well, what is yours? Supposing you were offered a piece of this land, a good sized croft, could you undertake to stock it, and set up the buildings and pay what you consider to be a fair rent without any help at all?—Yes.

21,786. Well, are there many, do you think, in your position able to do the same?—I don't know; I don't ask their position.

21,787. Therefore you would not like to say that all these holdings could be occupied without help?—I have built a house already on the ground, and I got nothing for it.

21,788. But still you are prepared to go and live on another place elsewhere?—And my father built a house and was only four years when he was removed, and got never a sixpence for it.

21,789. Do you think now that all these holdings you have pointed out to us could be taken up by crofters so as to occupy them advantageously without any help?—Most of the crofters in the places I mentioned were well-to-do when they were put away, but plenty of them cannot do much perhaps now.

21,790. Mr Georgeson.—You mentioned that Mr Sharp has now in his possession two crofts?—Yes.

21,791. Which were held by tenants at the passing of the Crofters Act. Were the tenants who occupied these crofts under the Crofters Act?—No.

21,792. They had not the benefit of the Crofters Act?—No, the rent was above it.

Wick.

Donald Sinclair.

21,793. Are you aware that Mr Sharp has endeavoured to get tenants for these places but has failed?—Certainly, if he would give it at a reasonable rent.

21,794. But are you aware that he has endeavoured to get tenants; are you aware of any parties who made an offer for these places?—I don't know.

21,795. You never heard of any?—No. I heard of some that put in for getting part of it for grazing.

21,796. The Chairman.—What were their rents?—I think Torryvaich was £30 of rent.

21,797. And what was the other?—£40.

21,798. The rent of £30 would be under the Act. Were they leasehold? [Mr G. M. Sutherland.—They will be above £30, both of them.]

21,799. If they are beyond the Act, Mr Sharp is entitled to deal with them as with any other farm.

21,800. Mr Georgeson.—Have the Leans of Clyth been attached to any farm within your memory?—Always.

21,801. What is the extent of these Leans?—I cannot say.

21,802. You might give us an idea?—No, I cannot.

21,803. Would there be 20 acres in it?—Twenty and twenty.

21,804. About 40?—Yes.

21,805. More than 40?—Far more than that.

21,806. You spoke of Occumster, what extent of ground would there be there available for net ground?—I am not exactly sure.

21,807. How many acres?—There would be 30 drifts spread on the ground.

21,808. Six acres?—Yes, 6 and 6.

21,809. Would there be 10?—Ten and more.

21,810. Do you know if the tenants in Occumster are wishing to have an extension of their crofts?—How would they get it? they can't get it. There is nothing besides them.

21,811. The Chairman.—Do you represent the tenants of Occumster; are you here on their behalf?—No.

21,812. Mr Georgeson.—He refers to certain net ground at Occumster which he said would be available for the tenants, and it is with reference to that piece of ground that I now ask?—I am only saying it was cropped by them before, but it was taken from the tenants.

21,813. The Chairman.—We had better get evidence from Occumster tenants themselves.

Donald Macleod.

DONALD MACLEOD, Crofter, Mid Clyth (71)—examined.

21,814. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter in Mid Clyth?—Yes.

21,815. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—It was.

21,816. Area, 11 acres 0 roods 21 poles arable; 17 acres 2 roods 22 poles outrun; present rent, £12; fair rent, £5, 10s. You heard the evidence, I think, of Donald Sinclair. Are you here to represent the Clyth tenants?—Yes.

21,817. You come along with Donald Sinclair?—Yes.

21,818. Did you hear his evidence?—Yes.

21,819. And do you agree with his evidence?—I do, so far as he went.

21,820. Do you wish to go farther?—I do.

21,821. We will be glad to hear you?—Occumster, on the estate of Clyth, was ground occupied by the crofters about forty years ago.

21,822. Do you remember evictions there forty years ago?—I can't call it evictions at all.

21,823. What do you call it?—He removed them from this bit good ground and sent them up the hills and gave them small houses there; they were not evicted off the estate.

21,824. They were only removed from one part of the estate to another?—Yes.

21,825. Can you give us the names of these?—Yes; John Graham and George Sinclair.

21,826. Were these all?—The whole. They are dead, and the houses are down that were built for them.

Wick.

Donald Macleod.

21,827. And is that land, occupied formerly by Graham and Sinclair, suitable for occupation now?—Yes, the land is good, the mark of the plough is to be seen yet.

21,828. What extent of land would be occupied by Graham and Sinclair where they were put to?—No land at all but barren hills.

21,829. But the land that they were put away from?—I could not exactly say, because I did not chain measure it; but I took a guess of it.

21,830. What is your guess?—From 15 acres under the plough at one time. This is the land that was cut off Occumster Braes. Donald Sinclair told of it, but he did not tell that it was cut away from the tenants and made a pasture for Mr Sharp where he keeps his stock to-day.

21,831. Any other land you wish to speak of?—Clyth Mains.

21,832. What about it?—The remains of houses are to be seen lying on the ground from which crofters were put away at Clyth Mains, but I need not speak about that because it is in arable at present. I only speak of what is under sheep.

21,833. You do not speak of land presently under cultivation?—Not at all, only what is lying under sheep.

21,834. Well, any other land?—I can't give a particular account, but there is close upon 100 acres upon these Clyth Mains that are lying under sheep.

21,835. That land is capable of cultivation?—The marks of the plough are still in it.

21,836. Any other land?—Torryvaich, where Stewart Bain once occupied before he was put out, or went out.

21,837. And that is now occupied by Mr Sharp as grazing?—Yes.

21,838. What was the extent of arable there?—It is said that there were 50 acres, but I hold it only to be 40.

21,839. Any other lands?—Newlands, two parks that he has there that he has cattle on grazing of his own and other people's. That was at one time in my younger days, except one crop, in the pasture of the people. I take them to be about 20 acres.

21,840. Do you know who occupied there?—There was only one house on it, but it is not Mr Sharp that removed them; it was Sir Tollemache Sinclair.

21,841. What was the name of the man that lived there?—Sandie Laing.

21,842. Any other land?—Well, there are three or four small crofts that were lying for seven years. He let it to a man last year, and he ran away and left it. I would say 10 acres in it. The fellow ran away and left it.

21,843. What was his name?—Mackay Macleod.

21,844. What is the name of the place?—Newlands of Clyth.

21,845. And you think there are about 10 acres?—Yes.

21,846. It is lying vacant at present?—Yes, it is. Mr Sharp had cattle on it, and grazing, but there was none ploughed in it the last year.

21,847. How long has it been lying vacant?—For seven years. The last two crops that the man put in he ran away, and did not put a third in; because it was over-rented he could not pay his way.

21,848. Any other land?—East Clyth.

21,849. What about it?—Bogs, where Donald Sutherland was.

21,850. Is it vacant now?—It has been vacant seven years back. There are about 12 acres, in my judgment. Mr Sharp has cattle on it, and sheep. He has it fenced in now for himself.

21,851. Any other land?—There is just alongside of that the hill pasture which was taken away from us, the last piece we had, and was given to one Sandy Macaulay. He got three crofts from Mr Sharp, and he occupies one and he leaves two of them under sheep. I will be thinking there are 9 acres under the plough

Wick.

Donald Macleod.

in the two that are waste, not speaking of the one he occupies.

21,852. And what extent of hill pasture has he got?—That is a great question to me, but we had a considerable quantity of hill pasture in Tollemache's time that the tenants were allowed to cut their peats in. It would be about a quarter of a mile wide and about a mile long.

21,853. What has become of it now?—Macaulay has it along with the two crofts.

21,854. Any other land?—There is where William Clyne was—East Clyth. It is fenced in under sheep with Mr Sharp.

21,855. What is the extent?—I would say there would be 9 to 10 acres.

21,856. Any other land?—Sharp's park at the Hill of Many Stones, East Clyth. He has there a park closed in for sheep or cattle, or whatever he sees fit to put on.

21,857. What is the extent of it?—I am not sure, but I would say there are 20 acres in it.

21,858. It is capable of cultivation?—It was cultivated before, a considerable quantity, and has still the mark of cultivation.

21,859. That is enclosed ground?—It was put in to make the farm Bruan Lodge for pasture for sheep or cattle.

21,860. Any other land?—There is land still adjoining Bruan Lodge which the mark of the houses is on, which can be seen, and they are almost standing in pretty good order yet. There is William and John Malcolm that built the houses, both of them, and I think they would have 10 acres between them both; they trenched out the hills.

21,861. That land is now in the occupation of Mr Sharp himself, I suppose?—Mr Sharp has it himself for grazing.

21,862. Any other land?—There are six slated crofts in Warehouse; it is lying lea that Mr Sharp fenced in for his own sheep farm.

21,863. Any other land?—Murdo Cormack, Bruan.

21,864. Is there land there?—It is lying waste since three years. The man could not pay the rent and he had to flit away to America, and it is lying in Mr Sharp's hands. He has it fenced in, and building dykes about it.

21,865. What is the extent there?—Mr Sharp says there are 50, but I think there are 20 acres.

21,866. That is the whole, I suppose?—Not yet. James Groat.

21,867. What about him?—About 5 acres. He is not alive himself, but his son is. They had a good croft in the middle of Angus Falconer's grazing farm.

21,868. What was the name of Angus Falconer's farm?—It is called Groatags Lochies.

21,869. Do these 5 acres now form a part of Angus Falconer's farm?—No, it is just in the middle of his grazings.

21,870. Standing vacant?—Yes. It is a good half mile from the house.

21,871. Have you any more land to tell us about?—None.

21,872. Now, the whole of these different portions of land to which you have called our attention are capable of cultivation?—They are, and they have been cultivated before. The marks of the plough and the old houses are to be seen.

21,873. And would the settlement of crofters in these lands be a great relief to the neighbouring crofters, who are too much crowded?—Yes, if you could get over them, but the landlords think there is no use putting crofters on it, but it would do good to the people.

21,874. Mr Sutherland.—Have you no grazing land at all?—I have eleven acres and a half and two poles, what I improved at the hills, myself and my sisters. It is said we have 27 acres altogether of black barren rocks. I have none, but at one time I had grazing; it was taken away.

21,875. Then you said that the Occumster people were cleared off that land, and were sent farther up the hill?—No, Clyth Mains was. The ground was taken from them in Occumster, and given to Mr Sinclair, that had it then before Mr Sharp came at all; it is not Mr Sharp's doings, it is Mr Sinclair's. It was occupied as net ground when the harbour was standing. When the harbour failed, Mr Sinclair let it to people who came with cattle.

21,876. What became of the people who were put out of there?—It was cut off their lands, and a ditch put in it.

21,877. What became of the people?—They are in their small crofts yet.

21,878. Up above?—Yes, and the bottom taken away.

21,879. When they reclaimed the land?—What is above this ditch they still work it, but what is below is Mr Sharp's, and a fence in it.

21,880. And you think in all these places where there is so much arable land, new holdings could be made?—There could be no better in Scotland. It is not 100 feet above the sea level.

21,881. And you can show us all these places?—I will indeed.

21,882. Mr Georgeson.—Do the tenants at Occumster wish to have their crofts extended there?—That is a question; I cannot tell what is in a man's heart, but I know very well the land was taken from them.

21,883. Do they wish to have their holdings extended; do they require that?—They never employed me for that purpose.

21,884. You can't say whether they want the ground or not?—They will not get an animal.

21,885. Do you know whether or not they require the ground?—We know their crofts are all too small.

21,886. Do you know whether they require the ground?—People never asked me.

21,887. And you don't know?—They asked him to put their cattle in, and they would not get it without excess.

21,888. Do they get their cattle occasionally?—I don't think so. It was offered this year to put them in at an enormous charge, and he would not put them off.

21,889. Isn't it the case that they get their cattle in occasionally?—If he got plenty of money for it he would do anything.

21,890. Are you aware that they did?—I have never seen any.

21,891. You say there are about 100 acres in Clyth Mains?—Yes.

21,892. Have they always been attached to the farm?—Not always, but since it was cut away.

21,893. But within your memory?—Surely it is. I am in memory before it was cut away, because I built some of the boundary walls with my own hands when it was cut off.

21,894. Then you say Angus Macaulay has three crofts. Is he a crofter?—No, he is a big sheep farmer.

21,895. Then as to Mackay Macleod's place, and also Donald Sutherland's at Bogs. Do these adjoin Brown's farm?—Not at all; Newlands was lying waste for five years.

21,896. Some portions of the land to which you referred adjoin Brown's farm?—They adjoin none of that; they are four miles from it.

21,897. And are you sure that those portions of ground are in Mr Sharp's possession?—I am quite sure of it.

21,898. Then you spoke of that small croft in the middle of Falconer's grazings?—Yes.

21,899. Does Falconer pay rent for that ground now?—To be sure he does.

21,900. And it is part of the sheep farm?—Yes, he would not get it for nothing.

21,901. Would it be any benefit to adjoining crofters to get that?—I knew the man that lived in it; it is about the best bit in the parish; the finest in Caithness, and it is a good spot of ground, and the man that lived in it lived well in it, but he was put out of it.

21,902. Unless he would get part of the grazings, as well as this croft, it would not be of much of service?—We have all need of grazings.

Wick.

Donald Macleod.

21,903. Who were tenants of the six crofts at Warehouse to which you refer?—There was first of all David Sutherland, then Magnus Sutherland, John Miller, John Farquhar, Donald Farquhar, J. Sutherland, and where Plowman was last, James Plowman.

21,904. How long is it since they left these crofts?—The last man ran away to America, but it is twenty years since David Sutherland left.

21,905. Have all these crofts and pieces of ground become vacant in consequence of the inability of the tenants to pay their rents?—They did not leave it for that reason, but they left it for the rent was over the grazing. It is since Mr Sharp came, because the ground was not worth what was put on it.

21,906. Were you aware that each of these tenants had arrears of rent?—Indeed I would believe that; they would not be long in Clyth without being that.

21,907. Before the passing of the Crofters Act? [Mr Sutherland.—They were not judicial rents?—No.]

21,908. Were any of these tenants removed by process, by an action of law?—As to the tenants of Clyth removing, they will sit as long as they can, but they must go when they cannot keep the place.

21,909. All these tenants have gone of their own accord?—They could not keep it.

21,910. Mr Sutherland.—All these removals took place before the passing of the Crofters Act?—The whole. There were no removals except two that I know of since the Crofters Act came on.

Alexander Sutherland.

ALEXANDER SUTHERLAND, Latheronwheel (76)—examined.

21,911. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

21,912. What rent do you pay?—£5. I am a householder. I cannot do without a house, though I am living without a croft this long time.

21,913. Who is your landlord?—Major Stocks.

21,914. Do you wish to tell us about land?—No, I don't know much about Latheronwheel, I never had land on it, but I came here by a notice from Mr George Miller Sutherland to give evidence about the estate of Forse that I was brought up upon, and on which I held a small farm or a big croft once.

21,915. Was your father a crofter on the estate of Forse?—There was no line then drawn between crofters and tenants or farmers.

21,916. Was your father a tenant?—Yes, he was on the farm that I had, and where I was brought up, a placed called Golsary, on the estate of Forse, in the parish of Latheron.

21,917. What rent did your father pay?—He paid £18. He got it at first cheaper than that. It was in the proprietor's hands. There was a good proprietor then upon the estate of Forse, although we came to have bad ones afterwards. There was Major Sutherland then, and I believe my father got it at £14. It was raised in a few years to £18, and then after my father's death I took the farm. I built a new house on it according to agreement. I had a good proprietor, unfortunately he did not live long, a son of Major Sutherland. I believe he was as good a proprietor as there was in Caithness, and on the agreement I improved the farm, and I built a new house. I got a lease of fifteen years, and I lived comfortably during that fifteen years, and then when my lease was out, the breadth of the estate was advertised by the second. John Sutherland, Esq., of Forse, died, and it came to his brother, the last laird, and when my lease was out all the tenants got notice, and were desired to sign a removal, and the places were advertised. The proprietor did not get them let that year, and then we got notice to send an offer for our places when he didn't get them let, for a year or a period of years. Well, I put an offer for a period of years, but the answer came back that I would get it for a year, and £9 of a rise. So then next year I had to remove, and then in two or three years after that there were 31 families put out. That I can show any gentleman that chooses to look at it, where these families were.

Wick.

Alexander Sutherland.

21,918. In what year did the removal of the 31 families take place?—The year that I was removed, when my lease was out, 1860, and I got leave to remain another year, and my rent was raised £9, that is 1861.

21,919. Do you wish to ask our attention to the lands from which these 31 families were removed?—Well, I was desired by Mr Miller Sutherland; I have nothing to do with land these many years. I had then a weak family, and I had to do the best I could with them; so I did.

21,920. What is it you wish to tell us?—I wish to tell you about the number that was on that part of the estate. There were 31 families in two or three years removed from the estate. Most of them, of course, are dead. Some died paupers in the parish and out of it.

21,921. And is that land now held as grazing?—No, there is a place called Rumster; there were two brothers there who paid £50 of rent, and there was as good arable land on it as in the parish of Latheron.

21,922. How is that used now?—It is used now for the sheep farmers for turnip and agriculture.

21,923. It is under rotation?—Yes, it is. Then there is another place called Badereisky, and the sides of Bencheilt, where there were small crofters. It was Highland cattle.

21,924. Is a great portion of the land which had been occupied by these 31 families now under grazing?—Yes, all except the farm of Rumster.

21,925. What acreage is under grazing that had formerly been under crofters?—I cannot answer that.

21,926. Is there a considerable tract of ground?—Yes, the breadth of the estate, which is 1½ miles broad.

21,927. Is that land, now under grazing but formerly under crofters, suitable for cultivation by crofters now?—Wherever there was a croft there was a family, and there were none of these 30 families but kept Highland cattle, two cows.

21,928. If people lived there and succeeded before, there is every reason to suppose their successors might live there and succeed again, is that your idea?—I should think so. There came better times and better prices since then than there were before, or any man in this Court can give in history. There were higher prices given for cattle then than in Napoleon's time. I did not come here to inform gentlemen of what they know best themselves.

21,929. Is there any other land about which you can tell us anything, besides that from which the thirty-one tenants were evicted?—Yes, the upper part of Forse, there was a township called Stemster.

21,930. How many tenants were in it?—Nine or ten.

21,931. Were they removed?—Yes, they were removed.

21,932. What was the date of the removal?—They were removed about the year 1850.

21,933. Is that land occupied as grazing now?—No, there are two tenants in it where there were about nine or ten.

21,934. What rents do they pay?—I understand they have been let last greatly lower than they were then. It is the second tenants in it since the old tenants were put out. It was let to the first tenants at high rents, and they did not stand it long. I think the present tenants have it pretty reasonable.

21,935. Are they paying rents of under £100?—Oh, yes, it is under £100.

21,936. Now, is there any other land on Forse that you wish to speak of?—No, but the last laird of Forse wanted to put the whole estate, as far as I see, from the rocky head, where the old castle of Forse was, to the south end of the estate, into big farms, and I think he has put away all the crofters; he thought he would be comfortable without them, and the big farmers who succeeded us tenants (the man is dead and gone, and his offspring have left this country) belonged to Morayshire,

Wick.

Alexander Sutherland.

and now there is the second class of farmers in. I don't know if they are making their fortune or not. It was said it is rented cheaper than when we had it as tenant.

21,937. Mr Sutherland.—How far north does the Forse estate go? What is the northern boundary?—The edge of a place called Achswiniger, and then it goes to the parks of Latheron, I think about 1½ miles. It goes to within 100 yards of a meeting-house at Halsary, in the parish of Watten.

21,938. And you say this large farm of Rumster was made up of the thirty-one holdings?—Yes.

21,939. Where did the most of the people go?—Some went to New Zealand and some to America; very few of them got holdings ever after. We had a disadvantage the time we were put out. We were well done to in the estate of Forse, and the price of cattle was very low. In every other estate that I know of in this county, it was a forehand rent; that is, if I entered at Whitsunday, I had to pay my whole rent at Martinmas. Upon the estate at Forse, if I entered at Whitsunday, I did not pay my first rent until Candlemas, and the second half at Lammas, and that left a man, on leaving the estate of Forse, to pay two rents in one year, which was not very easy.

21,940. You said you had to sign a removal. What do you mean?—That we would leave. We could not expect to live against the proprietor when he was to summons us out.

21,941. That is to say, you signed a paper yourselves that you would go?—Yes, and then it would do, we were told—of course, I am not a lawyer—it was told that if we signed a removal, if we got a summons through the Post Office, then it would be as well as if served personally.

21,942. So then you would be called "voluntary 'removals" after that?—But it was quite the contrary; it was against my will and every one of us; we would never leave there.

21,943. Do you think that would be called a voluntary removal by lawyers?—I think not; when we were forced out by the proprietor, I think it would be quite against voluntary principles. I know that none left voluntarily. They were all willing to stop.

21,944. And do you know, as a matter of fact, that such a removal as that would be called a voluntary removal? They would say that you signed a paper yourself to go?—Yes, if I was asked that by the proprietor; but if I refused that, could he not summons me and put me out?

21,945. Yes?—Very well: take my case.

21,946. You heard it stated here to-day that there were certain voluntary removals?—Yes.

21,947. And do you believe there were any voluntary removals?—Not to my knowledge on the estate of Forse.

21,948. Did it occur to you that this might be called a voluntary removal?—No, it never occurred to me that it might be a voluntary removal. And, besides, the gentleman that was factor upon the estate during my lease, that was the procurator-fiscal of this town, Mr Henderson, I have his letter in my pocket saying that I was a good improving tenant, and that I paid my rents with punctuality. I lifted off my croft what kept me living, without being troublesome to my neighbours, and I hope I never will.

21,949. Mr Shaw Stewart.—What was the extent of your holding under lease?—It was measured by the proprietor, and by the Royal Engineers from Her Majesty at different times, but I never measured it. I think that my land was 40 acres, and, of course, we had a common called Benachailt that every man could put cattle on.

21,950. What was the rent?—My rent was £24, 8s. 6d. during my lease, and £9 of rise for the year after the lease.

21,951. You told us of the thirty-one families who were removed from the Rumster farm; could you tell me how many lived on the land which is now cultivated, and how many lived on the land which is now under grazing?—Yes, but the most of them are dead.

21,952. But I want to know the proportion that were on what is now grazing?—I can give you, I think, for my memory still serves me well, the names of the heads of the families that were in the whole of them.

21,953. I don't want to trouble you for the names, but the Rumster farm is now divided into cultivated land and into grazing?—Yes, it is occupied in agriculture.

21,954. Could you give me an idea of the number of houses that were on the land which is now cultivated, and the number of houses on the land which is now under grazing?—Yes. On Rumster: there were two brothers on the largest farm, William and Donald Sinclair; Donald was married and had a family of his own, William had sisters, so I consider there were two families.

21,955. Would half of the families have houses on the land which is now grazing, or were they mostly on the land which is now under cultivation?—Well, there are two families, we will say; we will give them a house apiece: twelve families in Rumster.

21,956. Where their houses were is now cultivated land, is it not?—Yes, and where the largest farm was that is where the present tenants live.

21,957. Looking at the land which is now under grazing at Rumster, were there any houses on that?—I have told you all the houses, the number of houses that were in Rumster; but the other place we called it Badereisky, but the last laird of Forse, I believe, styled it after the name of his father-in-law, Mr Shepherd—he called it Shepherdstown. I don't know what you may have in your books, but we called it Badereisky.

21,958. Most of the houses were on land which is now cultivated?—Yes, but all Badereisky is under sheep; it was ditched and drained and dried. It was swampy sort of ground.

21,959. How many of the houses would have been on Badereisky?—I cannot tell you at once, you must allow me a little time. Twelve.

21,960. And that is now all grazing?—All under sheep.

Alexander Polson.

ALEXANDER POLSON, Teacher, Dunbeath (37)—examined.

21,961. The Chairman.—You are a teacher at Dunbeath?—Yes.

21,962. Were you appointed as a delegate by the Dunbeath crofters to give evidence?—Yes.

21,963. Have you a written statement?—I have.

21,964. Please read it.—'At a meeting of the 'crofters, cottars, and others, held at Dunbeath on '29th June last, I was appointed to give some evidence 'regarding the estate of Dunbeath, in the parish of 'Latheron, which is the property of W. S. Thomson 'Sinclair, Esq., of Dunbeath and Freswick.

'From the last issued Valuation Roll I find there 'are 214 crofters paying a total rent of £709, 17s., and '34 cottars, including shopkeepers, paying a rent of '£111, 5s.; altogether 248 crofters and cottars pay '£821, 2s., while one farm in the hands of a couple of 'farmers (one of whom is non-resident) is valued at '£827, 14s. Shootings on the estate, with a keeper's 'house, &c., are valued at £1000, shootings in the 'proprietor's hands at £120, the home farm and 'ground officer's house at £130, and the salmon fish-'ings at £200.

'A large part of the land which at present forms 'this large farm of Mains and Borgue was at first in 'the possession of the following twenty-one crofters, 'viz.:—Donald Mackenzie, John Mackay, Roderick 'Mackay, Walter Gunn, James Sutherland, John 'Calder, George Gunn, Angus Henderson, Widow 'James Maclachlan, Widow Robert Gunn, Widow 'Henry Sutherland, Adam Sutherland, John Suther-'land, Robert Sutherland (a), Robert Sutherland (b), 'Donald Sutherland (a), Donald Sutherland (b), Alex-'ander Sutherland, Widow David Sutherland, Alex-'ander Mackay, and Widow Ross. All these were

Wick.
Alexander Polson.

'evicted from their holdings to add to what was then 'the home farm in the immediate neighbourhood of 'the castle. This was then let as a large farm and a 'new home farm formed at Inver by the eviction of at 'least sixteen crofters, of whom we have ascertained 'the names of thirteen as follows:—William Gunn, 'Robert Gunn, John Gunn, John Dunbar, William 'Mackay, Betty Grant, Betty Sutherland, Alexander 'Sinclair, William Sinclair, Peter Cormack, Alexander 'Donn, Andrew Macgregor, and Angus Sutherland. 'Besides these evictions there was taken from those in 'the neighbouring townships of Achvroal and Torbeg 'about half their land and common pasture.

'To form the farm of Ballachly, now valued at £63, the 'following seven were evicted, viz.:—Robert Sinclair, 'John Cormack, George Mackenzie, George Gunn, 'Margaret Mackenzie, Widow John Nicol, and Thomas 'and William Nicol. From Dunbeath Strath, the 'following forty-eight were evicted:—Alexander Suther-'land, George Robertson, William Gunn, Robert Mac-'gregor, Donald Sutherland, John Couper, Adam Mac-'gregor, George Mackay, Donald Mackenzie, James 'Simpson, Donald Sutherland, John Sutherland, John 'Gunn, James Mackay, Donald Matheson, William 'Macgregor, Alexander Henderson, Angus Sutherland, 'Robert Gunn, Widow Mackintosh, George Mackay, 'William Macdonald, Donald Campbell, John Suther-'land, Donald Gunn, William Gunn, William Chisholm, 'Samuel Matheson, William Keith, Alexander Keith, 'Donald Gunn, Hugh Ross, Alexander Mackay, Adam 'Gunn, John Macaulay, George Sutherland, John 'Mackay, Widow Bruce, Angus Sutherland, Widow 'Sutherland, Robert Henderson, Angus Keith, David 'Munro, Donald Weir, William Weir, Alexander 'Murray, James Mackay, and Donald Sinclair. The 'township of Borgue consisted of thirteen crofters, six 'of whom were evicted to add to Lower Borgue farm, 'and one half of the common pasture was added to the 'Mains farm. In all, ninety-eight evictions took place 'on this estate during what Lord Napier's Commission 'spoke of as the "economic transformation" of the early 'part of the century. A large part of this land is at 'present used for sporting and grazing purposes, and is 'excellently adapted for the formation of small hold-'ings. Some of the people, on being evicted, built 'themselves houses on the more barren hillsides, and 'to make a livelihood took to fishing, and the two 'industries of fishing and crofting have been pretty 'successfully combined here, though there has always 'been a desire for more land, as the inhabitants are 'very willing to work and there are intervals in the 'fishing season when they could work if only work 'could be got. The present proprietor, a few years ago, 'in compliance with a request by sixteen fishermen, and 'probably as an experiment, gave a part of his home 'farm for the formation of four crofts. The tenants 'were chosen by lot, and three of the four have since 'built substantial houses, and all have stocked or rather 'overstocked these crofts without Government or estate 'aid, and the experiment may be looked on as success-'ful. Some time ago other crofters asked that a part 'of the Mains farm should be similarly given for the 'formation of crofts, but the proprietor replied that he 'was unable to accede to the request, as the farm was 'under lease. The farmers themselves, on being 'approached, also declined to part with any part of the 'farm. At the beginning of this month a memorial in 'the following terms, and signed by eighty-five crofters, 'fishermen, and others, was sent to the proprietor:—

'Dunbeath, August 1893.

'To W.S. Thomson Sinclair, Esq.

'Sir,—We the undersigned, crofters, cottars, and fishermen 'on your estate of Dunbeath, beg very respectfully to say that we 'appreciate the efforts which you have made for the amelior-'ation of our condition, especially by the making of crofts from 'the home farm, which we now recognise to be quite small 'enough for your own use, and also by the amount of aid 'promised towards harbour accommodation. We also know that 'just at present you are legally unable to extend existing 'holdings, or to form new ones, but we would now very 'respectfully ask that when the Mains and Borgue farms again 'become vacant you will afford us an opportunity of extending 'the holdings of such of us as border on it and of making 'new holdings for such of us as may be willing to have them on 'reasonable conditions.'

Wick.
Alexander Polson.

'They have also asked me to state that, if these lands 'which I have mentioned were made available for them, 'they would, without any Government aid, be prepared 'to stock them, and to build the necessary steadings, as 'they believe that by their own labour they could get 'those things done. My fellow-delegate, Mr George 'Henderson, has proved that this may be done three 'times over in the course of one lifetime.

"His Grace the Duke of Portland has given up the 'home farm at Berriedale for the purpose of enlarging six 'crofts at Newport, four at Badrinsary, two at the shore, 'and one at Borgie; and all the crofters at Berriedale 'have got a right to the grazing of the pasture, which was 'once a part of His Grace's home farm. Here, also, no 'help was given to stock the enlarged holdings, and at 'present all the crofts are very fully stocked.

'The estate of Berriedale, at present, however, exists 'chiefly for sporting purposes, and a considerable part of 'the land in its straths, at present a part of his Grace's 'deer forest, as well as much land on the uplying part 'of Dunbeath, has been cultivated, and is now capable of 'being cultivated to profit, as will, I believe, become 'evident to this Commission when they inspect these 'lands. Of course these crofters know that the conditions 'of life now are not similar to those which existed when 'all the families which I have mentioned were evicted, 'and they believe that each of those who may yet get 'crofts should have from ten acres arable and upwards, 'according to quality, with a share of common pasture, 'i.e., land sufficient to keep, say, 1 horse, 2 cows, 2 'stirks, and from 10 to 30 sheep, and this, with a 'diligent prosecution of the fishing, would tend to 'ameliorate the conditions under which they at present 'live. (Signed) Alexander Polson.

'Wick, 23*rd August* 1893.'

21,965. A good many of the statements made in that paper are not of your own knowledge, I suppose, but are based on inquiries?—Yes. When we knew about your Commission coming, a meeting was held, and a small committee of five appointed, to get the necessary information. They were to see the oldest inhabitants, and find out the names of all those who were evicted, and supply them to me with any other information; also the size of crofts and the stock have been furnished to me.

21,966. And that paper, with this detailed statement, is the result of these inquiries and the information furnished to you?—Yes.

21,967. Are you in favour of a croft where the man lives partly by fishing and partly by his holding?—Yes, I think it has been successful in the Dunbeath district.

21,968. You don't think there is any great danger of the man, having both the sea and the croft to attend to, falling between two stools as it were?—They have not fallen between two stools in my neighbourhood.

21,969. That mode of occupation has been successful?—Yes.

21,970. In fair years?—Yes.

21,971. Are you in favour of a fisherman holding a patch of potato ground or garden ground, and the man to depend entirely upon the sea for his livelihood?—I believe that would be successful in other circumstances than we have at Dunbeath; where the fish can be disposed of, and sent to market advantageously. But in our district, where there is difficulty in doing that, and there are long intervals between the fishing, farming can be combined with it successfully.

21,972. You don't think a man could be a fisherman pure and simple there without greater facilities for the sale of his fish?—No, I don't think it.

21,973. Then are you in favour of larger holdings where a man would live entirely by his holding?—I am.

21,974. Do you think such holdings could be cultivated to a profit?—They could, I believe.

21,975. Was that subject gone into in detail by your committee?—No, not in detail.

21,976. Did they take a sheet of paper and put down figures, and try to work it out, allowing so much for dwelling-house, so much for steading, so much for draining and trenching and building dykes, so much for the purchase of stock, so much for repairs, so much for keep of the families, and so on, and bring out a debit and a credit side?—They did not go into it that way, but the experiment has been made; these fishermen have been taken and placed upon crofts, and they have built themselves, as I said in my statement, good substantial houses.

21,977. You appeal to the concrete cases?—Yes.

21,978. And you saw these cases on the Duke of Portland's property?—They are enlarged holdings there; they are not fishermen on his property.

21,979. Which have been successful?—Which have been successful, as far as we can ascertain.

21,980. Are there some other cases on the Dunbeath property?—No, not where crofters have been made.

21,981. I think you said there were some cases of crofters that had been made fishermen?—Fishermen also, combined.

21,982. And in all those cases you think the experiment, so far as made, has been attended with success?—Yes, I believe so.

21,983. Are the crofters on the Dunbeath property, and round there, men of a good deal of independence of character?—They are.

21,984. Who would do their very best to make an experiment of that sort a success?—Yes.

21,985. And more disposed to trust to themselves than to their neighbours?—Yes.

21,986. Is there any desire for assistance, or is the desire rather that they should, if possible, do without assistance?—Well, if it came in the form of a loan, I believe many of them would rather not have it; they would rather depend upon their own diligence, but I have no doubt there are some who would be glad of a grant or aid to help them to stock it. But I know some would rather do without it, because the repayment might be difficult.

21,987. And could these men build houses, stone and slated houses, and put stock on the ground?—Yes, I believe they could.

21,988. And pay the first rent?—I believe they could. I don't know whether any of these four are in arrear, but they can't be very much in arrear.

21,989. Did the committee consider the subject of rent for such new holdings?—They thought that for such new holdings from 5s. to 7s. an acre would be quite sufficient of rent.

21,990. For the arable?—Yes, for the arable land.

21,991. And what for the grazing?—That would depend on the quality.

21,992. Of course, but take the average quality of grazing in the neighbourhood?—I don't know that they have considered the matter of grazing.

21,993. Is there, in your judgment, a necessity for additional holdings and for additional grazing?—There is; they are slightly congested; many of these small crofts have difficulty in making anything from the smallness of the holdings.

21,994. Are the holdings as a rule to the small side rather than the large?—To the small side. There are 214 small crofters, and one large farmer has far more land than these 214 have.

21,995. And you mentioned a farm formerly in the hands of twenty-one crofters, the home farm with thirteen crofters, another place with seven crofters, Dunbeath Strath with forty-eight, and Borgue with nine, in all ninety-eight crofters?—Yes.

21,996. I think you said in the paper, and I suppose you confirm it now orally, that the whole of that land, or at least a very great part of it, would be suitable for occupation and settlement of crofters now?—It would be.

21,997. I mean self-sustaining holdings?—Self-sustaining holdings.

21,998. I gather from what you say here, there is no indisposition, no reluctance on the part of the landlord to help you if he could?—We believe the landlord is quite willing to help us if he could.

21,999. And has to some extent helped you already?—He has.

22,000. Did you receive any reply to that application that was made on the 1st of August?—Not yet.

22,001. You have not had much time?—There are a number of years yet before the lease is out.

22,002. When does the lease expire?—I am not quite sure, but I think some of the crofters said seven years hereafter.

22,003. What is the state of the arrears among the crofters for whom you speak?—I don't think they are much in arrear.

23,004. Most of these crofters had their rents adjusted by the Crofters Commission?—A few of them had; with the others the landlord settled. They appealed to the Commission, but they were withdrawn from Court.

22,005. And settled amicably between the estate and the crofters?—Yes.

22,006. And I suppose upon the same lines as the Crofters Commission had decided?—Yes.

22,007. Then since these settlements and decisions have the rents been, on the whole, well paid?—I believe they have been pretty well paid; I believe last year they have been as well paid as for any considerable time.

22,008. And there are no serious arrears?—There are no serious arrears that I know of.

22,009. Mr Shaw-Stewart.—Have I understood you right with regard to these extended holdings that the tenants are also fishermen?—Not on the Berriedale estate; they are fishermen on the Dunbeath estate.

22,010. But not on the Berriedale estate?—No.

22,011. How many tenants do you calculate could occupy the lands that you have indicated?—I should say from 50 to 100 profitably.

22,012. Supposing these lands were made available, would there be a great demand to occupy them?—Yes, there were 85 crofters signed that petition to the landlord lately for extended holdings.

22,013. Supposing these lands were made available, how would you apportion the land; would you let them to the highest bidder?—In the experiment made we chose the tenants by lot, and the landlord accepted these tenants.

22,014. Was that done in the recent making of holdings?—Yes, and in that case the fixing of the fair rent was left to the Crofters Commission, and they fixed the rent at what the landlord did.

22,015. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the fishermen at Dunbeath, for what length of time in the year do they fish?—They fish first through the summer fishing, then they do some haddock fishing, and then the winter fishing. They also do the Barra fishing, the west coast fishing in May and June.

22,016. They come back to the east coast fishing in July?—And August to the 1st of September.

22,017. And they cultivate land besides?—And they are able to cultivate land besides by themselves or the members of their family. A number of these crofters don't go to the west coast fishing. The fishermen, pure and simple, don't have much land, those who go to all the fishings. But a number of those who have larger crofts do the summer fishing, and the summer fishing only.

22,018. Those who have the larger crofts don't go far from home; they fish at Dunbeath, or Wick, or Helmsdale?—Yes.

22,019. That keeps them only six weeks in the year, and during the remainder they cultivate the land?—Yes.

22,020. And you think there are exceptional circumstances which permit of their being both crofters and fishermen, if they are near the fishing ground?—Yes.

22,021. Who got these holdings at Inver, was it the Inver fishermen?—No, they were cottars before, I think, with one exception.

22,022. Were they fishers?—Yes, they were fishers.

22,023. And only they had a house before?—Yes.

22,024. What is the extent that they got?—I could not say; they are rented at £3,10s.

22,025. And though they hadn't an inch of land

Wick.

Alexander Polson.

before, they had no difficulty in stocking and paying their rent?—I have heard of none.

22,026. And are you of opinion that if a man had land before, he would be in a better position to take an enlarged holding than a man who had none at all?—Certainly.

22,027. Do you think the difficulty of stocking a new holding is much over-estimated generally?—It is; I don't think it would be so difficult as it is represented to be.

22,028. Have you in your experience seen a number of people going into crofts who had none before?—Not many.

22,029. You have seen them in Sutherlandshire and Caithness?—Yes.

22,030. You have seen people going into crofts who had none before?—In a few cases.

22,031. Did you know them in any case to require loans of money to enable them to set up?—No, I have not known of that.

22,032. Did you ever hear, in your experience, of the evictions that when new holdings were given to these people, some of them got nothing but uncultivated land, and that they ever got any assistance?—They never got any assistance to my knowledge.

22,033. And in transferring the tenants to the new places you indicated in reply to the Chairman, you think there would be still less difficulty?—I think so.

22,034. They would be removed from unfavourable conditions to more favourable conditions?—Yes, in the unfavourable conditions they were able to stock and build, and I should think it would be much easier on the favourable condition.

22,035. And, as a matter of fact, they paid enhanced rents, did they not?—Yes.

22,036. You know these lands of which you spoke of your own personal knowledge?—Yes.

22,037. You know Dunbeath Strath?—Yes.

22,038. Do you know Berriedale deer forest?—I have been up to the straths.

22,039. And are you of opinion that these are better adapted places for settling people on than the places down on the shore?—There are many fertile places up these straths better adapted than some of the places by the shore.

22,040. Places where the people lived before?—Yes.

22,041. Do you remember before Berriedale was a deer forest?—No, I do not.

22,042. You don't remember people living there?—No, it was a sheep farm first.

22,043. But you have seen these lands, and you are decidedly of opinion, from your experience, that they are admirably adapted for new settlements of people now?—I am of that opinion.

22,044. And then you gave us this concrete example of the 214 people having less land than one man?—Yes.

22,045. That is the distribution of land on Dunbeath?—Yes.

22,046. And is it any better, do you think, on the estate of Berriedale?—Slightly better there; the holdings on the average are larger than on Dunbeath.

22,047. Is Borgue on the Dunbeath estate?—Yes.

22,048. The Chairman.—You referred to one matter of importance. You said that those fishermen who went to all the fishings, the early Barra fishing and on to the late fishing in autumn, had very small patches of land. What size of holdings had they?—I think one or two had just half an acre to an acre.

22,049. In fact just a patch, but depended on the sea?—Depended on the sea.

22,050. Now could they go to all the fishings if they had a croft of 9 or 10 acres arable and give it due attention?—They could not go to all the fishings perhaps, but I have seen those who have got their wives and family there very diligent when they are away and they work them.

22,051. But is it only those crofters who have very small patches who are able to go to all the fishings?—Yes, according to present circumstances.

22,052. Only the man with a small patch finds himself able to attend to all the fishings?—Yes.

22,053. On the other hand, those who have something like a stretch of ground, greater or less, only attend certain of the fishings?—That is so.

Wick.
Alexan
Polson.

22,054. In other words, they are obliged to forego any profit arising from the sea on a fishing which will interfere with the due cultivation of the croft?—Well, the fishing does not interfere with the due cultivation of the croft.

22,055. I mean of a larger croft; you say they don't go to all the fishing?—Yes, they forego one fishing, the early fishing, and the winter fishing in order to attend the croft.

22,056. That is unavoidable, isn't it?—I suppose it is, they can't cultivate the croft and be at all the fishings; it is impossible.

22,057. Now, you mention in your paper that there was a meeting of crofters, cottars, and others? How many cottars do you represent?—I think there are 11 cottars.

22,058. Are these cottars persons who have or who have not land?—Who have not land; I forget the exact number.

22,059. Eleven or thereby?—Yes.

22,060. Have they any land at all?—No land, just houses.

22,061. Or do they get patches of land from the crofters?—They get drills of potatoes.

22,062. Do they pay the crofters for that in money?—In money or its equivalent.

22,063. And they, as I understand your position, are just as anxious as the crofters to get holdings if they can be got?—They are.

22,064. Mr William Mackay, Factor for Freswick.—You state that the total number of evictions, so far as you know, was 98?—Yes.

22,065. Would you tell what time that was?—1828 to 1840.

22,066. Within a period of twelve years?—Yes.

22,067. With regard to these 98 crofters, how many of them were evicted from land that is now employed for pastoral purposes?—Most of them.

22,068. I think you divided them over different places. The first place you gave some 21 in the Ramscraigs district?—These formed what was once the home farm of Mr Thomson Sinclair, below the present highway, and a great number of them were evicted above the road to the barren land.

22,069. But that land from which the evictions were made is now in cultivation and in rotation?—It is in the Mains Farm.

22,070. It is not in pasture?—Not in pasture.

22,071. To come to another. You then gave 13 on the home farm?—There were 16 and I gave 13 names.

22,072. That also is in cultivation and not pasture?—Yes.

22,073. That is 34 that are not exactly under the scope of the inquiry?—I think the scope of the inquiry is any large farms not occupied by crofters and which could be made into smaller holdings.

22,074. Which are being used for grazing?

22,075. The Chairman.—'Now occupied for the 'purposes of a deer forest, grouse moor, or other 'sporting purposes, or for grazing.'—The large grazing farms would not work without the large arable part.

22,076. Mr William Mackay.—What I wish to know is that you should tell the Commission how many crofters were evicted from holdings that are now used for grazing purposes?—All these on the Strath, 48.

22,077. Are there any others but these?—There were these 48 at any rate.

22,078. I don't dispute that, but that practically brings the number down to 48 who were evicted from land which is now used for grazing purposes?—Yes.

22,079. Then, with regard to these small farms that the proprietor made an experiment on, the land which was given to them was it under arable, or under grazing before?—I think it was under grazing; it was under arable land, but it had been laigh land for several years.

22,080. Was it not under rotation just a year or so before, practically it was arable land?—Practically it was arable land.

22,081. It was not land that had to be reclaimed or trenched or enclosed in the same way as would have to be done in the case of land such as the Strath of Dunbeath?—Oh, no.

22,082. Then, with regard to the improvement upon these experimental crofts, are you in a position to say that all these improvements have been paid for?—I am not.

22,083. You know that they were done by the tenants, but you are not in a position to say that they have paid for them yet?—I am not in a position to say that.

22,084. Or that they have to be paid by degrees, I am not questioning that they will be?—They may be, as far as I know.

22,085. Then, with regard to the stocking of these farms, have you any idea what stock is kept upon these four farms that were thus cut up?—I was told that they were overstocked.

22,086. Have any of the four got a horse?—I don't know; I asked what stock they had, and they said they were overstocked. They said they had overstocked them themselves.

22,087. But you don't know the number?—I don't know the number.

22,088. Then, with regard to the land up the strath, I think you said that possibly from 50 to 100 farms or crofts might be made?—Not up the strath alone, but all the land to which I referred.

22,089. How many do you think could be made with profit to those who would occupy them up the strath?—Three or four dozen.

22,090. Well, that comes very near where we were, about 50. Then you stated that the size of a farm that you would recommend would be about 10 acres?—That is the amount they gave to me, from 10 acres upwards.

22,091. How much upwards?—Up to 30 acres.

22,092. That would carry, I think you said, something like 10 head of cattle and 30 sheep?—One horse, 2 cows, 2 stirks, and 10 to 30 sheep.

22,093. If there were 50 farms of that size, what do you think would be a fair rent for each of them, or what would the tenants be prepared to pay?—For the arable land, as I said, not more than 5s. an acre? [Mr Shaw-Stewart.—You said 5s. to 7s. an acre?—Yes, 5s. to 7s.]

22,094. Suppose we take it at 7s., and 10 acre farms, that would be about £3, 10s.; you would put something on also for the grazing, I suppose, for the sheep kept on it. What do you think the average rent would be, taking the grazing and arable land together, of such farms as you have been specifying?—Not more than £10.

22,095. Ten pounds for each farm, and do you think there would be 50 farms in the strath of Dunbeath that would give £10 of rent?—I don't think there would be 50.

22,096. You said there were three or four dozen, that is 48, or two less?—Well, with all these uplands and the moorlands I think there would be almost that.

22,097. And do you think there are as many crofters in Dunbeath in the present circumstances and in the present condition of agriculture who could grapple with such an undertaking as that and carry it out successfully?—I believe there are.

22,098. To your own knowledge you think there are so many men who would have the capital and skill to do that?—They have the skill, and I believe with diligence they would create capital.

22,099. Is it not the case that all those who have to face such a question as that now, have to face it under very different circumstances from those who built the houses on these lands one hundred years ago. You are a member of the County Council?—I am.

22,100. You take a considerable interest in the sanitary arrangements of the county?—I do.

22,101. Are you not aware that it is a question which has given rise to considerable discussion just now, that of the sanitary condition of the crofters' houses at Dunbeath?—Yes.

22,102. Is it not the case that a great many of ethes houses have been built practically by the tenants themselves?—They have.

22,103. If new houses were being built, do you think that the sanitary authorities would allow such houses to be built upon the estate again?—I don't think the crofters themselves would desire to build any such houses as these old ones. Those who got the crofts from the proprietors have built many houses, both sanitary and otherwise.

22,104. Therefore, the rebuilding of houses upon strath land would be a much more costly thing now than it was when these were built before?—Certainly, they are very much better.

22,105. You made a comparison, which I quite admit to be correct, with regard to the number of crofters' holdings, 214, and the rest of the estate occupied by one tenant. Now is it not the case that within the last thirty years the numbers of crofters' holdings upon that property have been considerably increased?—I don't know that.

22,106. It will be in your recollection that there was a discussion before the Crofters Commission regarding the disputed pasture on the Knockally hill?—Yes.

22,107. Do you remember one of the arguments then used against the estate was that the number of holdings had been largely increased at the expense of the crofters' common?—There were some crofts formed off that common, and I think there were some that were shifted from another part of the estate on there.

22,108. There were a good many altogether?—There were some.

22,109. And do not the crofters themselves object to that being continued?—They do, because the common pasture just now is small for the great number of crofters, because all these crofters have a right to that common pasture, and they cut their peats in it and it won't stand additional pressure.

22,110. That is just the point I am bringing out. Is it not the case that upon the Dunbeath estates hitherto, practically, if a man wanted a piece of land and paid a comparatively nominal rent for it he got it, in bygone years?—I don't know that.

22,111. You have no information about it?—I have not information about it myself and I have not been supplied with it.

22,112. You are not generally acquainted with the other estates of the county so as to make a comparison?—No.

22,113. Are you aware that there are a larger number of crofters on the Freswick estate, generally, than on any other estate in the county?—No, I don't know about that.

22,114. You mentioned that some of the land on the Dunbeath estate was devoted to sport?—I did.

22,115. What land did you refer to?—The shootings leased by the Duke of Portland.

22,116. But it is not kept for sport alone?—Not for sport alone.

22,117. Suppose that that land was occupied by crofters there would still be sport upon it?—I question if there would be.

22,118. Is it not the case that there is land at present under crofters on the Dunbeath estate that is shot over by sportsmen?—I believe that is so.

22,119. And is it not the case that that same land is very good shooting ground?—I did not know that that was so.

22,120. Put it this way: suppose matters were changed and that the crofters came to own the lands themselves. Do you think that in these circumstances they would do away with the revenue which the estate presently receives in this same way from sporting; would it not be in their interest to maintain it?—I don't think so.

22,121. Financially?—I don't think so.

22,122. The Chairman.—If they were owners of the land?—If they were landlords themselves?

22,123. Mr William Mackay, Factor for Dunbeath.—Would it be to their interest to receive the same rent which is being received for sporting purposes?—Certainly, if they would get people to pay it for the part they had.

Wick.

Alexander Polson.

22,124. Mr Hector Sutherland.—When were you last up Berriedale strath?—I was up there the year the Duke married, and I believe I have been once since.

22,125. On what grounds do you base the statements in your paper with reference to Berriedale strath?—Seeing the green land in it.

22,126. What year was it, did you say, when you were last there,—1879 was it?—I was there in that year at any rate, and I think I have been there once since.

22,127. You are not aware that Berriedale strath is at present mostly occupied by crofters? That is not within your knowledge?—That is not within my knowledge.

22,128. Did you see any of the pieces of ground in Langwell forest that you said were capable of cultivation? Did you see them yourself?—I have seen large green parts in it, and I have referred to the Commissioners that they would see it too.

22,129. But, in your statement, you referred to certain parts in Langwell forest that were capable of cultivation. Did you see these parts yourself?—I have seen parts certainly capable of cultivation.

22,130. Where?—Up Berriedale strath.

22,131. Can you locate any particular part?—I don't know the local names, but if you will come up the strath with me I will be very glad to point them out to you.

22,132. Can you tell us the altitude of these spots?—No, but if I had the contour map I would be very glad to do so.

22,133. How could you tell us the height unless you can tell us what spots you mean?—By going over it.

22,134. With reference to the crofters who got enlarged holdings at Berriedale, you said they had been successful?—So the crofters in Dunbeath regard it, and they told me so.

22,135. You have never been on these crofts yourself?—I have seen them many a time.

22,136. Can you give me any reason why that experiment has been successful?—Because they got this land, I am told, at 7s. to 8s. an acre, and were able to stock it at once, and they also got the grazings from his Grace; they have work also from his Grace.

22,137. Don't you think one of the principal reasons why that experiment has been successful is because they have been doing work on his Grace's estate there?—They do work on his Grace's estate; but I understand that the wages which his Grace paid to the gillies and others are lower than on any other sporting estate in the north.

22,138. Now I understand you said that there had been enlarged rents on the crofter's own labour?—That is on the Dunbeath estate; I don't know the Berriedale estate so well.

22,139. That reference in your paper, then, does not apply to the Duke's estates?—I don't know that it does, though it is possible that it may; it is very likely.

22,140. Can you mention any concrete case to show that it applies to the Duke's estates?—No, I cannot.

22,141. Mr William Mackay, Factor for Dunbeath.—Might I ask the same question with regard to Berriedale? Are there cases in which the tenants have to any appreciable extent been rented on their own improvements?—Those that were evicted, these twenty-one that formed the home farm were set up above the road, and the land to which they went was not worth 2d. an acre when they went, and I am sure the rent roll shows more than that now.

22,142. Are you speaking from your own knowledge?—I am speaking from information conveyed to me.

22,143. But has there been any raising of the rents since the first time they occupied these places?—A number of them had a shilling a-piece to pay, I think, for a few years.

22,144. Can you specify any case?—No, but I believe Mr George Henderson might.

22,145. Mr Sutherland.—Who improved the land on Dunbeath estate, the landlord or the tenants?—The tenants altogether.

Wick.

Alexander Polson.

22,146. You were asked a question with regard to the rental. Doubt was expressed that if the people were put back in Dunbeath strath they would be able to pay 5s. or 6s. an acre of rent?—Yes, there was a doubt as to that.

22,147. You heard it stated here to-day by Mr Macleod and Mr Sinclair from Clyth?—Yes.

22,148. You remember the statement of the acreage and the rent that they paid?—The large rents they paid.

22,149. What is your recollection of it? Was it that it was much higher?—23s. or 24s.

22,150. That is rather different from 6s. or 7s. an acre?—It is.

22,151. And if they pay 23s. they would surely be able to pay 5s. to 7s.?—That is what I think.

22,152. Then with regard to the land in Berriedale, do you know Wag [Uamhag] in Berriedale?—Not very well.

22,153. Do you know Altbea?—Yes.

22,154. Do you know Brae-na-h-eaglais?—Not very well.

22,155. Have they all been occupied by crofters?—I have been told so.

22,156. A great many more?—Yes.

22,157. Are you aware that crofters are there now?—I am aware they are not.

22,158. You rather think they are not there now?—I believe not.

22,159. Did you ever see crofters in a deer forest?—No.

22,160. Mr G. M. Sutherland.—How long have you resided in that district?—Over thirteen years.

22,161. And you have often visited the localities in the district covered by your paper there?—I have.

22,162. And you are quite able to point out the ground to the Commissioners?—I am.

George Henderson.

George Henderson, Dunbeath (63)—examined.

22,163. The Chairman.—Did you come along with Mr Polson to give evidence on behalf of the Dunbeath crofters?—Yes.

22,164. And you heard the statement read by him?—Yes.

22,165. Do you concur in that statement?—I can testify to all the statements he made.

22,166. Do you wish to make any additions to it?—No, I think to the historical part of it there cannot be an addition, because I think it is all correct, and that there cannot be anything added to it.

22,167. Then, apart from the historical part, is there anything you wish to add?—No, not that is worth occupying time to-day, but that I have been personally acquainted with the most of them evicted,—those that were kept upon the ground, that got leave to build on the hills to form new houses. Some of them were obliged to go to other parts; some went to foreign parts; some left the strath and went to the bottom of the sea.

22,168. I don't wish at this time of the day to detain you, but we will take you as concurring with Mr Polson.

Alexander Gunn.

Alexander Gunn, Killimster, Wick (79)—examined.

22,169. The Chairman.—Do you live in Wick?—I live at Killimster near Wick.

22,170. Do you wish to give evidence with regard to some part of the county?—Yes.

22,171. What part of it?—The heights of the parish of Halkirk.

22,172. Have you got a written statement?—Yes.

22,173. Just read it.—Rumsdale.

22,174. Where is that?—Parish of Halkirk.

22,175. What about Rumsdale? (Reads list of forty-eight families. See list at end of evidence.)

22,176. Was that done within your recollection?—Yes, I remember them all except the tenants of Glutt and Rumsdale.

22,177. What is that land used for now from which they have been cleared?—All sheep farms and deer.

22,178. Grazing?—Sheep farms, except Glutt, which is under deer.

22,179. Is that the Duke of Portland's?—No, Sir Tollemache Sinclair.

22,180. Is there any of that land suitable for cultivation now?—The whole strath could be put under cultivation from Glutt down to Dalmore, being a distance of upwards of 16 miles.

22,181. The strath of the river Thurso. Anything more you wish to read?—Nothing particular, but I have a list of all the farm stock they kept.

22,182. Just hand that in. Where did you get that information about the stock?—I was personally acquainted with it, and I have been at the summer sheilings which were bordering and marching with my father's farm of Braehour.

22,183. You have noted down the stock from your own memory?—Certainly.

22,184. Let me know this, where did they go for sheilings?—To the Sleach water.

22,185. Where did they go for their sheilings?—About a couple of miles north of Strathmore, which river runs down from the county march and falls into Lochmore as well at Strathmore water.

22,186. Were the sheilings up the Strathmore water?—No, but on the other water.

22,187. What was the name of the other water?—Sleach water.

22,188. Is it the stock you have down in your paper?—Yes.

22,189. Mr Sutherland.—What age were you when you saw these things?—I had been at the sheilings when I was ten years of age.

22,190. Were you born in that district?—I was born in the Highlands. My father's farm extended up to nearly the top of these grounds.

22,191. Where was his house?—Braehour.

22,192. And all these things in your paper are all of your own knowledge?—Of my own knowledge.

22,193. How many years is it since these people were cleared out of Strathmore?—Mr Horne was the proprietor of Rumsdale, and I think he cleared them out in the year 1822, and Dalnawillan and Dalglaton belonged to Hempriggs property. They were cleared out in the year 1830 or 1832 or thereabouts. That was before Sir Tollemache Sinclair bought that property.

22,194. Where did the people go to generally?—Some to Australia and some to America.

22,195. And did some of them get holdings in the low country and Caithness?—Just a few of them. Not many.

22,196. Is there more than one sheep farm there now?—Oh yes, different sheep farms.

22,197. Are those places accessible; is there a good road to them?—There is a road going up all the way to the very top.

22,198. Up to Glutt?—Yes.

22,199. Is it possible to drive up Braemore to them?—No.

22,200. Mr G. M. Sutherland.—Do you know about the estate of Braemore?—Yes, I know a little about it.

22,201. Tell the Commissioners what you know about the evictions?—There were fifteen tenants evicted from Braemore; it is under deer now.

22,202. The Chairman.—Is that the Duke of Portland's?—Yes.

22,203. Have you got their names?—They were evicted before the Duke of Portland bought that land.

22,204. He had nothing to do with it?—No, I think the lands held by the evicted tenants, together with other parts that were capable of being under cultivation, amount to about 300 to 400 acres.

22,205. In Braemore?—Yes.

22,205*a*. Mr G. M. Sutherland.—Have you the names of the tenants there?—Not here.

22,206. Have you them?—Yes.

22,207. Is there any other district near Braemore, Corriehoich and Braeval?—That is what I referred to.

22,208. Do you recollect the tenants being removed from these places yourself?—Oh yes

22,209. From Braemore and that district?—Yes, I mind the tenant being there.

22,210. Mr Angus Sutherland.—Do you remember the tenants being in Berriedale strath?—No.

22,211. When was the Berriedale strath cleared?—The clearances began there in 1793.

22,212. And when was Berriedale made into a deer forest, do you know?—I don't recollect.

22,213. Was it thirty years ago, do you know?—I think so.

22,214. Mr Hector Sutherland.—When were you last up Berriedale strath?—Perhaps two or three years ago.

22,215. Did you notice who occupied the strath then?—I could not know who occupied it then.

22,216. You don't know who occupied it then?—They were cleared out before I was born, I believe.

22,217. Mr G. M. Sutherland.—It was occupied by nobody?—Not a single soul, but rabbits in thousands.

There were thus 48 tenants evicted, with a cattle stock of 340 cows and 600 one and two year olds, or 940 in all; also 2 horses for each tenant, or 96 in all; and as each tenant was supposed to keep on the average 20 sheep, that gives a total of 960 sheep, to which add the 400 sheep of John Gordon, making a total of 1360 sheep.

The probable extent of Strathmore may be about 54,000 acres presently under sheep. This would give an average of 1125 acres to each of the 48 tenants who once occupied these lands.

In 1880 the rental of Strathmore was £1838, in 1893 it is £1251, being a reduction of £587 or nearly one third.

The 54,000 acres devoted to 41 holdings would give to each holder 1317 acres; at £30 of rent say 5½d. per acre, would amount to the present rent of £1251.

In the year 1793 Alex. Gunn was evicted from Turnal near Langwell Gardens. He was the first evicted.

Braemore deer forest carried 3000 sheep, and 15 tenants were evicted. It has 18,000 acres, of which about 400 acres is old arable land or land capable of cultivation.

Braemore since a hundred years ago was producing "colleged" men such as ministers and doctors.

JOSEPH HARLING TURNER, Factor to the Duke of Portland (34)—examined.

22,218. The Chairman.—I understand you have prepared a statement which you wish to submit to us?—Yes.

22,219. Kindly read it.

STATEMENT by J. H. Turner, Factor for his Grace, the Duke of Portland, with reference to the Duke's estate in Caithness.

In making this general statement, with reference to the Duke of Portland's properties in Caithness for the information of the Royal Commission, I am instructed by his Grace to say that his officials will give you all the information and assistance in their power, in order that you may discharge your duties under the Royal Warrant; and that as the figures which I shall hereafter submit to you are taken from the estate books, these books are open to the inspection of any members of the Commission, so that they may verify the figures if they deem it necessary to do so. I am further directed by the Duke to say that his Grace hopes that if any of his tenants or employees wish to give evidence before the Commission, that they will freely do so, and their doing so will in no way disturb the friendly relations which have hitherto existed between the Duke and his tenantry, and which his Grace, I need hardly say, hopes will always continue.

Wick.

Joseph Harling Turner.

The present Duke of Portland succeeded to the estates on the death of the fifth Duke of Portland, 6th December 1879. At that time the estates of Sandside and Keiss formed part of the Portland properties, but they have since been sold to Mr Pilkington and Mr Barry respectively. In 1881 the Duke acquired by purchase the estate of Braemore from the late Sir Robert Anstruther, Bart.

The Portland estates in Caithness consist of:—

1. Langwell, extending to 40,000 acres or thereby. Rent for crop 1892, £513, 13s. 9d. Purchased 1857 from the late Donald Horne, Esq., for	£90,000
2. Braemore, extending to 19,280 acres or thereby. Rent for crop 1892, £199, 17s. 1d. Purchased 1881 from the late Sir Robert Anstruther, Bart., for	41,000
3. Lybster, extending to 2547 acres or thereby. Rent for crop 1892, £985, 3s. 5d. Purchased 1869 from the trustees of T. Sinclair, Esq., for	24,000
4. Swiney and Munsary, extending to 9466 acres or thereby. Rent for crop 1892, £1357, 6s. 8d. Purchased 1877 from the trustees of Geo. M. Gordon, Esq., for	40,000
5. Watten, extending to 9579 acres or thereby. Rent for crop 1892, £1856, 6s. 1d. Purchased 1861 and 1869 from the trustees of David Davidson, Esq., and Sir Tollemache Sinclair, Bart., and others for	49,876
Total,	£244,876

The total extent of the estates is 80,872 acres, the purchase money of which amounted to £244,876. The total rental of the estates, therefore, is £4914, 7s. 0d., and to this falls to be added the rental of the land occupied by the proprietor, £3112, making a total rateable rental of £8026, 7s. 0d. The shooting and fishing rents let by the proprietor, included in the above total rental, are for Langwell and Braemore.

The estates of Langwell and Braemore are now principally occupied by the proprietor for sporting purposes. The forest extends to 40,000 acres, with an average altitude of about 8000 feet, the highest offshoot of which is Morven, 2313 feet, and the lowest point of the forest close to the gardener's house about 250 feet. The average rainfall as taken from the Meteorological Society, Edinburgh, for the two nearest points to Langwell, is at Helmsdale 35·93 inches, Watten 29·27 inches.

About 20,000 acres of Langwell and Braemore estates are let to tenants and crofters.

On Langwell estate there are twenty-seven crofters and one farmer. On Braemore estate five crofters and one farmer. The rents paid by the crofters vary from £2 to £28—an average, however, may be taken at £7. The total amount of the stock carried by the crofters, as nearly as can be ascertained, on both estates, is on Langwell 20 horses, 62 cattle, and 187 sheep; Braemore, 8 horses, 58 cattle, and 550 sheep. Mr Mackay, who is tenant of the farm on both Langwell and Braemore, has the following stock:—1,400 sheep, 50 cattle, 6 horses; and the land in the proprietor's own occupation carries 350 sheep, 12 to 15 cows, and about 15 to 20 horses and ponies.

Wick. Joseph Harling Turner.

When Langwell was purchased in 1857, it had a sheep stock of about 3200 breeding ewes, and the rent was £800 a year. I am led to believe that the death-rate was a very heavy one, a great portion of the land being quite unfit for carrying sheep. The western portion of the sheep run was put under deer in 1861, and the remainder in 1864.

No removals of crofters have taken place since the property was owned by the Dukes of Portland, without the consent of the tenants, nor, so far as I can discover, have any evictions taken place within the last sixty years. Certain changes did take place at Achnacraig and Badbea. At the former place there were formerly four tenants, and the land occupied by them now forms part of the farm of Ausdale. This was done by the late Mr Donald Horne. At Badbea there certainly were more tenants, but they left principally of their own accord, their crofts being added to those who remained. No part of the lands which had been occupied by small tenants has been added to the farm of Ausdale or afforested, with this exception, which I think proper to mention. In or about the year 1875, the tenant of one of the crofts at Badbea, named Joseph Grant, who paid a rent of £4, 10s., was drowned, and his widow at the expiry of a year or so thereafter gave up the croft, which extended to 5 acres of arable land and 5 acres of heather and rocks. This holding then became part of the farm of Ausdale. So far as I can find out there was no application for the croft.

At Borgue, which is close to Berriedale, in or about the year 1865, a tenant named John Mackay, who was a very old man, died. Prior to his death he was considerably in arrears. The arrears were written off by the late Duke. At Mackay's death his family, which consisted of a son and a daughter, removed on account of ill health to a house at Badbea, which they occupied rent free till their death. This croft, which extends to about 5 acres, then became part of an adjoining croft. One of the other crofters at Badbea, named Robert Gordon, gave up his croft to take up some reclaimed land at Newport, near to Borgue. His croft at Badbea was added to one of the adjoining crofts now occupied by Alexander Mackay. This was in 1889 and 1890. The land now occupied by Robert Gordon at Newport extends to about 18 acres or thereby, and was reclaimed, viz., fenced, limed, and drained at considerable cost by the Duke for the purpose of giving employment to the tenants. The rental is £6, 6s. The rent of the croft at Badbea, given up by Robert Gordon, was £3, 5s.

On the Langwell Strath, there appear to have been crofts at Waggmore (altitude, 1000 feet); Wagg (altitude, 700 feet); Aultibea (altitude, 480 feet); Braenaheileish (altitude, 350 feet); and on the Berriedale Strath a croft at Millery (altitude, 350 feet). The arable land in connection with these old crofts cannot have exceeded in the most favourable case more than 10 acres, that of Waggmore certainly not more than 3 acres. But I am certain that on account of the want of access and of the change of the seasons, none of these lands could now be cultivated to profit. So far as I can learn, these crofts have not been cultivated for at least the last eighty or one hundred years. At Badrinsary, in the late Mr Horne's time, there were six small tenants. These were transferred to ground much more suitable nearer the shore, and the land which was then occupied by these six small tenants is now held in part by the Duke and in part by the Newport small tenants. This enlargement of the Newport holdings was made by the present Duke, with a small addition to the rent.

Taken as a whole the crofters on the Langwell estate have much more land to-day than they had forty-five years ago. Berriedale Strath is nearly entirely occupied by their sheep, though they have not the right to graze there, little or nothing being said to them, if they do not allow their stock to stray too far into the forest.

The Chairman.—Then do you say that the crofters have access on tolerance to the Berriedale forest?—I do.

No application for fixing fair rents was made to the Crofters Commission from Langwell and Braemore estates.

Braemore.

Wick. Joseph Harling Turner.

No removals have taken place on Braemore estate since it was acquired by the Duke of Portland in 1881. In the year 1849, I believe the then proprietor made arrangements with the tenants of three small holdings, viz., Braeval 596 feet, Brecklett about 600 feet, and Corriehoich 693 feet, to give up their crofts, and these then became part of the farm of Braemore. Corriehoich and Braeval are now occupied by two of the Duke's gamekeepers.

In 1860 the western part of Braemore was afforested, but it only remained a forest for a few years, when it was again let as a sheep run at a rent of £400, and carrying a sheep stock of 2000. When purchased in 1881 the ground other than that occupied by Mr Mackay and the crofters was put under deer. The area of the crofts has been considerably enlarged without any extra rent, and the buildings have with one exception been rebuilt.

I am informed by some of the tenants that within the last few years the climate of Braemore has very much changed. Potatoes were usually a safe crop, but for the last four years it is doubtful if a boll of potatoes were eaten at Braemore which grew there; and in 1892 about 40 acres of corn were sown, which, I am informed, did not yield two bolls of meal.

When Langwell and Braemore were occupied wholly as sheep farms, there were fifteen shepherds and two gamekeepers employed. Now in the game department alone there are from eighteen to twenty men employed all the year round, while in the shooting season there will be over forty extra hands employed on the estate as gillies, &c. These men are preferentially drawn from the Duke's Caithness estates. Over and above these men one shepherd is employed by the Duke all the year round, and he has extra assistance for three months in the autumn. Mr Mackay constantly employs six men, besides occasional labour.

For the information of the Commissioners I beg to state that in 1880 the rental of the Duke's Caithness properties (exclusive of Sandside and Keiss, but with the rental of Braemore added) was £5951, 5s. 8d., and since that time a sum of not less than £41,149, 0s. 11½d. has been expended on improvements alone, exclusive of money spent on Langwell and Braemore Lodges, as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
On new buildings, . . .	15,042	13	1
Repairs of buildings, fences and roads, ...	22,316	18	0
Drainage of farms and crofts, .	3789	9	10
Total, . . .	41,149	0	11

Over and above these sums, the Duke has paid in subscriptions and donations, principally for Caithness objects, £2485, 16s. 10d., and for pensions, £1647, 16s. Besides, he has expended for miscellaneous purposes in connection with the estates for the same period, £8828, 15s. 5½d.

The abatements allowed to the tenants since 1880 amount to £4382, 11s. 4½d.

The gross rental of the Duke of Portland's property in Caithness in 1880, allowing the same valuation as is now entered in the County Valuation Roll for the land presently occupied by the proprietor for shootings, &c., was £9063, 5s. 8d., and the rental for crop 1892, with the same allowance for land occupied by the proprietor for shootings, &c., is £8026, 7s.

The Duke of Portland's instructions have always been to employ as far as possible the crofters on his estates to do any carting, &c.; and during the last three years they have received at Langwell and Braemore for carting and peat-cutting, £584, 5s. 5d. For the shooting season alone one crofter last year drew £51 for two horses' work, and this year he will draw about the same. Anything the crofters may have to sell in the way of farm produce is, as a rule, purchased from them. At Langwell the Duke has paid for hay

Wick.
Joseph Harling Turner.

£149, 14s. 2d., and at Braemore, £96, 18s. 5d. within the last three years.

This last summer certain additions and alterations have been made at Langwell House, and the contractors paid the crofters in the district for carting, £130; and over £280 have been paid for local labour by the contractors. At all times the Duke has been only too pleased to help the crofters to improve their position.

In August 1891 a few of the people started to make tweed, his Grace undertaking to purchase all they could make, and there has already been paid £115, 18s. 7d. for spinning, dyeing, and weaving.

For the three years ending 31st August 1892, the expenditure in connection with Langwell and Braemore establishments has been £12,393, 10s. 4d., and every penny of this sum which could reasonably be expended in the north of Scotland has been so expended, Caithness receiving £4867, 8s. 11d. of that amount.

In connection with the game department I find that the cost incurred is a little over £2000 a year. All meal and other feeding stuffs required for the dogs are purchased in the county. No game, except in an uncommonly good season, is ever sold, and this is only done to prevent waste. The greater part of the deer killed, and the rabbits shot, are given away to the people in the district.

In my humble opinion the people of Caithness, and especially those on the Duke's estates, are very much better off with Langwell and Braemore under deer than they would be were it under sheep or otherwise. A much larger number of people are employed on the estates than there would be if it were not a sporting property.

On Langwell and Braemore alone we employ regularly, over and above gamekeepers, four gardeners, twenty-three labourers, four joiners, three masons, six farm labourers, one shepherd, two grooms, and one cowman, and their average wages can be taken at 3s. a day. I do not hesitate to say that it would make a difference to the county of over £10,000 a year if the sporting interests of Langwell and Braemore were seriously interfered with. The rateable value would very much decrease, crofters would get little or no employment, and, if the place were let, I venture to state that no one would ever dream of spending the amount of money the Duke of Portland does in the district and on his properties generally—money expended not on sport alone, but money expended in such a manner that it finds its way into the pockets of all classes.

Swiney and Lybster.

These estates are almost entirely devoted to crofters. They extend to 8968 acres. The number of crofters is 162, and they have 1405 acres arable, and nearly 400 acres of pasture, not to mention the common ground, which extends to over 3000 acres. There are four farms on this property, the rentals of which are £40, £80, £87 and £100, and having from 60 acres to 150 acres of arable land. The crofters' holdings may be taken as having on an average 9 acres of arable, and the average rents will be about £5, 10s.

The Crofters Commission recently fixed the fair rents of crofts on these properties, but even then the utmost difficulty is experienced in getting partial payments of a considerable number of the judicial rents.

To help to promote the fishing industry at Lybster, the Duke of Portland has expended on the harbour over £16,000, and the gross return obtained from the harbour is on an average £280 per annum, while it costs about £140 a year to keep it up.

Watten and Munsary.

We have here to deal with properties of quite a different character from the other parts of his Grace's estates. There is a large tract of arable and pasture land in, and independent of the hill ground, which is occupied by six crofters and nine farmers. The crofters occupy about 100 acres, and the remainder is divided into nine farms, varying in size from 50 acres arable to 1140 acres arable, with hill and pasture land attached, the rental of the farms being £1549, 12s. 8d. for 1800 acres arable and 7715 acres hill; the crofters paying £66, 16s. 3d. for 51 acres arable, 53 acres hill pasture and some moorland. This, however, includes the rents of joiner's shop, meal-mill and smithy. The number of heads of families employed on the farms is thirty-five to forty, so I am informed by one of the tenants, viz., Mr John Davidson, Old Hall, Watten.

22,220. Mr Sutherland.—Are we to have an opportunity of seeing you at a future time?—Certainly, if you so desire, I shall be very pleased.

22,221. It would take me half an hour to go over the whole of that long statement?—I should be delighted to give you any chance of cross-examination that you may deem necessary; we wish to give you the very fullest information.

22,222. I would like to say, in regard to the information, that in my opinion you have given us already very complete information; you have given us information that no other agent has done as yet; you have given us a rental of the property, and given it in a way that we have never had before in similar cases. But your statement took 25 minutes to read, and I cannot keep all that in my memory.

22,223. The Chairman.—We will consider your statement carefully, and, of course, we will not invite you to come back from Kilmarnock to be examined upon it unless it is necessary.

22,224. Mr Sutherland.—In view of the contingency of your not being called again, as suggested by the Chairman, there are some things which I should certainly like to ask you at the present time, and I will not detain you long. For instance, you raised the general question as to the value to the community of deer forests versus occupation by the people, which is a question of wide policy, and one which opens up a great deal of debatable matter?—I quite understand that, but I am quite prepared to stand cross-examination upon that at any time.

22,225. The Chairman.—Of course, you quite understand that if any of our number think it advisable to put questions to you, you are to attend when called upon?—I shall attend, no matter whether I may have to come from Kilmarnock.

22,226. Mr Sutherland.—I will not put you to that trouble. You stated some historical matter which, of course, could not be of your own personal knowledge?—No.

22,227. You said there was a sheep stock of 3200 on Langwell before it was made into a deer forest, and you said the death-rate was very high?—Very high indeed.

22,228. I suppose you are aware, as a matter of history, that Langwell was selected out of the whole of the north of Scotland for the first experiment of rearing Cheviot sheep, in Sir John Sinclair's time?—I am not aware of that.

22,229. And it was supposed, at the time the experiment was made, that it was made in the most favourable place; it was a question at the time whether the experiment should be tried in the Highlands at all, and it astonished me to hear you state that the death-rate there was high. What is your authority for saying that the death-rate was abnormally high?—My authority is the old keeper, Donald Ross, who has been there for forty-five years, since the year 1848.

22,230. Do you know what the percentage of the death-rate was?—I believe Mr Ross considered, from the observations he made at the time and from his personal knowledge, that the mortality was from 15 to 22 per cent.

22,231. And you consider that a high mortality in a ewe stock?—Yes, I consider it a very high death-rate in a farm like Langwell.

22,232. You know the dangers to which a ewe stock is exposed which other stock has not to contend against,—there is lamb bearing, and the diseases of udders, as well as those connected with lactation?—Still, I think any sheep farmer would consider that a very high death-rate.

22,233. And was that one of the reasons why the sheep were cleared off and Langwell was turned into a deer forest?—No, I would admit at once that the Duke of Portland, when he purchased the property, did so with the object of turning it into a sporting estate.

22,234. Then you are probably aware that the Langwell sheep had the reputation of being the best in all Scotland?—I am not aware of that.

22,235. That they fetched the highest price, and had the best pedigree; is that not within your knowledge?—I rather think the Sandside sheep excelled them.

22,236. Well, they were as good at all events as any in Scotland. But you say it was not in consequence of the failure of sheep farming that the deer forest was created?—Donald Ross tells me that he lost 1000 sheep the first year out of his 3200.

22,237. There might have been an exceptional snowstorm that year. But you admit that it was not because it was a failure as a sheep farm that it was converted into a deer forest; the Duke of Portland bought it, you say, with that express purpose?—Most decidedly.

22,238. I can only take up a few points at random in your paper at the present time. You made certain statistical statements with regard to improvements on the estate. What did you say was the annual rental of the estate?—I think I said £5000 odds.

22,239. I mean of the whole of the Portland estates here,—£18,000, was it?—Adding the valued rental for the ground which the Duke occupies, I think it is about £9000.

22,240. Then you said there were certain sums expended on buildings. What buildings, might I ask, were these? Can you differentiate between any of the classes?—Every croft on Braemore, with one exception, has been entirely rebuilt at the Duke's expense.

22,241. How many crofts are there in Braemore?—Five.

22,242. Was the sum spent on Langwell House included in your total expenditure?—No, it is not.

22,243. You said £15,000 was spent on buildings. Would you refresh my memory as to the time during which that was spent?—Since 1880.

22,244. That includes the expenditure on Langwell House?—No, it does not, it is exclusive of that.

22,245. Do you refer to the present Duke of Portland?—I refer to the present Duke of Portland.

22,246. What were the other buildings?—The buildings on the whole estate have been overhauled.

22,247. What proportion of the £15,000, do you say, has been spent on holdings under £30 of rent?—I prefer not to answer that question just now, because, seeing I have only lately had charge of the Duke of Portland's property, I don't think it would be fair to myself or to you that I should answer it. I should think that in all probability the crofters got a larger proportion spent upon their holdings than the large farmers.

22,248. Larger absolutely, or in proportion to their holdings?—Larger in proportion to their rental, I mean; they got a very much larger proportion.

22,249. Their rental being small, and the rent of the others very large?—That is the case. I know of cases where we spent over £100 on a croft yielding a £2 rent.

22,250. Is that a representative case?—I know several cases,—I daresay I could get several cases where that has been done.

22,251. £100 spent on a crofter's house?—Yes, I know cases of that sort; on Braemore we spent £300, in some cases where we were not getting above £7 of rent. If I had an opportunity of going over the books I could give several similar cases.

22,252. But these are exceptional cases?—I am sorry to say that it is representative on the Duke of Portland's estate in one way.

22,253. Then that would mean that you would have an expenditure on crofters corresponding to the number of crofters on the estate multiplied by £100?—Oh no, I beg your pardon. The crofters on the estate have got a very large proportion of that £15,000 spent on their buildings.

22,254. Did they get half of it?—I should think in all probability they would get a half. Wick.

22255. You stated that there had been abatements amounting to over £3000, I think, given in the last thirteen years. Did I understand you to say that was for crofters only, or for all the farmers as well?—All the farmers too; but there also the crofters rank far more largely than the farmers, in proportion to their rentals. The large farm rents have been very well paid, but the crofters rents have not. Joseph Harling Turner.

22,256. Have you not had occasion to reduce the rents of the large farms?—Yes.

22,257. Or grant them abatements?—Yes.

22,258. And were the other reductions given to the crofters in consequence of the Crofters Act of 1886?—The Duke anticipated in many cases the Crofters Act.

22,259. By how many years?—I should say two or three years. In the case where crofters got their abatements from the Duke, they fared very much better than where they got them from the Crofters Commission.

22,260. Were the reductions given because of the Crofters Commission being appointed?—No, I am certainly of opinion that the Duke would have given them the abatements independently of the Crofters Act.

22,261. And the agreement in time was a mere coincidence?—They were getting abatements before the Crofters Act came into force. I think they got abatements from the time the Duke entered into possession of the property.

22,262. You also referred to the subscriptions and pensions, and to the encouragement of tweed-making, and you widened the scope of your statement when you said you thought the people of Caithness would be very much better with the land as a deer forest than otherwise?—I think so, most decidedly.

22,263. Is the hill of Morven in the property?—Yes, it is the highest point in the Duke's property.

22,264. You did not give us the expenses of the lawsuit regarding Morven in any of your figures?—No.

22,265. Have the people of Caithness access to Morven?—No.

22,266. Had they before?—No, they had not. They have access to Morven now on asking liberty to go, when it is not the stalking season.

22,267. Had they not access before?—They believed they had, but they found they had not.

22,268. But we had; I am speaking from personal experience?—Unfortunately the Court of Session thought differently.

22,269. The people did not go to the Court of Session?—Yes, the case went to the Court of Session.

22,270. But it was not the people of Caithness who took it to the Court of Session?—I am sorry to say that it was some of the people of Caithness who took it there.

22,271. Is that one instance of how they are better off with the land as a deer forest?—I leave that for you to judge.

22,272. You said that the assessable value would be decreased by this land being devoted to any other purpose than a deer forest?—Yes.

22,273. And that thereby, I suppose, local taxation would be increased?—Yes.

22,274. How long is it since the Berriedale deer forest came to pay any local taxation?—If you refer to the Valuation Roll, or to the Assessor, he will tell you at once.

22,275. You are, no doubt, aware that it is only quite recently that such land as the Berriedale deer forest has been assessed at all?—Of course I am talking about the future; I say it would affect taxation in the future.

22,276. That is to say, if land were made productive by its being brought into a state of agriculture, its value would be decreased?—Of course I deny the fact that Langwell could be brought into a state of agriculture.

22,277. And one of the reasons you assign is because of its great elevation?—The principal part of the forest is at a great elevation.

Wick. Joseph Harling Turner.

22,278. You stated something about Brae-na-h-eaglais and Altbea and Wag [Uamhag]?—Yes.

22,279. You said something about the altitude of Brae-na-h-eaglais?—Yes.

22,280. Is it higher than Langwell House?—Oh, considerably. However, I have got the plan.

22,281. So have I; would you be astonished that, according to the plan, it is not so high?—I will take it at once off the plan; of course, the situations are entirely different. The one is on the strath, and the other is on the top of the hill.

22,282. And you are aware that very successful agriculture is carried on in the county of Caithness at a considerably higher altitude than Altbea?—I believe it is, but under different circumstances.

22,283. What are the circumstances?—For example, if there is a very heavy snowstorm at Brae-na-h-eaglais, the whole place is snowed up, and there is no means of access.

22,284. Is there not a road?—There is, but it is the private property of the Duke. It was made by the Duke for sporting purposes.

22,285. When was it made?—In 1863.

22,286. Would not that road serve as a means of communication, if we are talking of the future?—It might, but I should not say it would without a process of law something like the Morven case.

22,287. The policies of Langwell House are 400 feet above the sea; Altbea is about the same?—Excuse me, I think you are wrong; I think it is nearer 250 for Langwell House.

22,288. But the grounds are at 400 feet?—Of course, it was Langwell House that you were comparing.

22,289. An altitude of 400 feet so near the sea as Altbea would not be any obstacle to successful cultivation? Then you were kind enough to give us a great deal of statistical information, but you gave us no information concerning what we are here for?—I say we have 40,000 acres under deer.

22,290. But can you help us in any way by showing us the land that in your opinion is fit for the purposes contained in the terms of the remit which the Chairman read out?—I think that would be rather presumption on my part. I have given you all the information I could; I shall show you the land itself, and allow you to judge for yourselves whether it comes within the terms of the remit.

22,291. At present you are not in a position to tell us of any such land?—I certainly think there is none on this property.

22,292. And you are doubtless here (and I am not by any means blaming you for it) for the purpose of convincing us that there is none?—I hope to be able to show you that there is not; I hope you will find it so.

22,293. But without casting any reflections at all, you are here with the object of making an ex parte statement, and you have made an ex parte statement?—No, I do not agree with you. Mine is not a statement entirely from the landlord's point of view; it is a simple statement of facts. I say there are the books at your disposal, and there are the facts and statements which I have made, and you must judge for yourselves.

22,294. It is just an ex parte statement, however, in the same way as those on the other side are?—Of course, you may look upon it in that light.

22,295. The Chairman.—Has there been a large expenditure by the Duke of Portland upon crofters' houses since he came into the estate?—Most decidedly.

22,296. May we take it that a large number of crofters' houses have been repaired or reconstructed?—Yes.

22,297. And has that been done at the exclusive cost of the Duke?—In most cases it has, but I believe in some cases the Duke made an arrangement whereby he gave so much towards the repair, and the crofters paid the remainder. If you would allow me I would ask the ground officer at Swiney to put me right on that point. [Mr George Gunn.—His Grace has given from £5 to £7, £10, £13, and even £25 to tenants to help them to build on a croft, without charging a penny of interest.]

22,298. Is that money to be repaid?—I believe that, should the crofters leave their holdings, this money will be withheld from any melioration.

22,299. As a question of melioration?—Yes.

22,300. But were the improvements made on crofters' buildings by the Duke done in many cases without any raising of the rent? [Witness]. Most decidedly they were.

22,301. In every case?—I won't say in every case; but, generally speaking, the rent of the improved croft is to-day lower than it was at the time when the improvements were carried out.

22,302. And when the improvements were made, no addition was made to the rent?—In most cases it was not. [Mr Gunn.—None whatever.]

22,303. The reductions made by the Crofters Commission were trifling in comparison to the reductions made on other estates in the county?—That is so.

22,304. Comparing, for example, the Portland estates with the estate of Clyth?—I believe that is the case.

22,305. You say that £1647, 17s. is expended per annum by the Duke on pensions. What classes of people get these pensions?—There is a man here, for example, an old servant, who has £100 a year of a pension. They are given to all the old workmen who have been constantly employed on the estates.

22,306. Pensioners are those who had some employment on the estate?—Yes. There are plenty of old men on the estate just now getting 3s. a day, who anywhere else would not get 6d.

22,307. I am very much in the position in which Mr Sutherland feels himself, that your statement requires farther consideration at our hands; and we take your assurance that you will attend again if called upon?—Most decidedly.

22,308. Mr Hector Sutherland.—Would you kindly explain to the Commission the facts concerning the alleged "evictions" of Braemore?—In the year 1818, according to a Report I have here, there were fourteen tenants on Braemore. They occupied the following places:—Braeval, now occupied by one of the keepers; Corriehoich was under the same tenant as Braeval; there was Achnahavish, which is still occupied as a croft; Achinellet, still occupied as a croft; Oldinellet, still occupied as a croft; Brecklett, now part of the farm of Braemore; and Cairnfin, also part of the same farm,—there were two tenants in Cairnfin. Then there was Abbey,—I don't know about that; there was West Cairnfin, and Cairnfin again, and Clashbuy, these are in Corriehoich. There were fourteen tenants in Braemore in the year 1818, and now there are five tenants and the Duke's two keepers and Mr Mackay.

22,309. Mr Maccallum.—I think you stated that there were some arrears of crofters' rents on this estate. May I ask you whether any portion of these arrears arises upon the fair rent that was fixed?—A very large proportion of the arrears due to the Duke of Portland at Lybster and Swiney is from those who went before the Crofters Commission.

22,310. The Chairman.—I understand that that was the meaning of your statement?—That is so.

22,311. Mr Sutherland.—Was that owing to the fact that the Crofters Commission reduced the rents in less proportion than the Duke of Portland?—It is owing to the fact that they think they are still too dear.

22,312. You said something in your paper about Achnacraig and Badbea, and the holding of Joseph Grant; you said there were evictions there, I think?—Not evictions.

22,313. Well, a restriction of the holding. I think you said it was added to a farm?—It was added to Ausdale.

22,314. Does that not rather look like giving unto him that hath?—You will see the ground yourself; I daresay you know it well, it is but a small portion altogether.

22,315. Would not that rather suggest that it should be added to the neighbouring croft?—I think you know the situation of Badbea.

Wick.
Joseph Harling Turner.

22,316. Yes, and I think no person should ever have been on Badbea?—I think the same reasoning would apply at Achnacraig.

22,317. I don't think it is the most desirable way of improving the condition of the people to take away from them what they have?—That was done before 1845—eighteen years before 1845—and one can hardly tell what the reason was.

22,318. You said another holding at Badbea, that was left vacant, was never applied for?—That is true.

22,319. I would be astonished if any person did apply for it.—So would I.

22,320. But I think there was a suggestion that it ought to be given to new crofters?—I am very sure we would be only too pleased if we could do anything to help the condition of the crofters at Badbea.
